CELEBRATE GOLDEN WEDDING SUNDAY

Friends to Congratulate Mr. and Mrs. N. A. Perry at Open House.

Mr. and Mrs. Nelson A. Perry, for a half century residents of this community, will celebrate their golden wedding anniversary on Sunday, April 28, at their home in Elmwood township, three miles west of Cass City, with open house during the afternoon when friends will call to extend congratulations.

When the Perrys came to this community directly after their marriage at Bancroft, Shiawassee county, on April 28, 1885, they purchased 40 acres in Elmwood, three miles west of Cass City. It was a "long jump" from the forty with its blackened logs left by the fire of 1881 and the rough ground sans buildings of any kind to the finely cultivated acres which today cover the same plot with the brick farm house and substantial farm buildings together with additional acres which constitute the fine Perry farm.

In those early days, Mr. Perry taught school in the Cedar Run, Ellington, Remington, Hillside, Dillman, Winton and Bingham districts, spending the vacations in clearing up his farm. For 12 years, he taught school in this community, and for four years previous to his marriage, he taught near Fenton. Mr. Perry was born in Livingston county 74 years ago. He is still actively engaged in his farming operations.

Mrs. Perry, whose maiden name was Georgianna Reese Topping, was born in Nevada, 70 years ago. When she was four years of age, her parents, Charles and Janette Topping, decided to move to Livingston county, Michigan. Owing to lack of railroad facilities, they went to San Francisco, Calif., and sailed to the Isthmus of Panama, crossed to the Atlantic shore and sailed to New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Perry are members of the Methodist church at Cass City. Mrs. Perry has been active in the women's organizations of that society when her health permitted, and Mr. Perry, for several years, was the teacher of the Bible class. He has served as supervisor of Elmwood township for 10 years, and held the office of school inspector and justice and other offices in the township.

Mr. and Mrs. Perry have one daughter, Mrs. Emory Lounsbury, of Elkland township. They are grandparents to nine children and have a great granddaughter.

PRESBYTERY OPPOSE GOVERNOR'S STAND

Also Disapprove Increase of Naval and Other War Forces.

The Flint Presbytery in its spring meeting held at Parkland Presbyterian church in Flint Tuesday expressed strong disapproval of the attitude of Governor Fitzgerald in his statement in which he favored closing the doors of state-supported institutions to students refusing to promise to bear arms for their country.

J. L. Cathcart and Rev. P. J. Allured attended the Presbytery from Cass City. Mr. Allured was chairman of the social welfare committee and the following recommendations of this committe were adopted:

1. That we endorse the stand officially taken by General Assembly of our denomination in May, 1934, whereby "in the name of Christ and country," it declared anew "its break with the entire war system," holding that "Christians owe an allegiance to the Kingdom of God that is superior to loyalty to their own country, that Christians cannot give their support to war as a method of carrying on internation-

ASK FARMERS TO VOTE ON WHEAT CONTRACTS

Election Will Be Conducted in Michigan Before May 25.

Michigan wheat growers and producers of that grain in the rest of the states will determine between now and May 25 whether the benefit plan for the control of wheat production shall be continued after this year, according to Geo. E. Farrell, chief of the wheat section.

All wheat contracts between the farmers and the secretary of agriculture expire at the close of the 1935 crop year. New contracts will not be offered unless a majority of the wheat growers of the United States vote favorably in the referendum which will be conducted. Both contract and non-contract signers will be given the chance to express their opinion of the plan.

Local meetings will be held in Michigan at which farmers on the local control boards will discuss the results secured with the contracts in the past two years and what may be expected in the event the plan is continued or if it is abandoned. Notice will be sent to all contract holders of the time and place of meetings and any wheat growers are invited to attend.

Total payments to Michigan farmers on wheat contracts under the plan in effect the past two years were $1,280,779 up to Jan. 31, 1935. The second payment on the 1935 crop will be made when proof of compliance is possible. This money went to farmers in 73 Michigan counties, the largest county payment being $116,637.91 to Eaton county growers and the smallest amount, $158.45, to farmers in Kalkaska county.

The election to be conducted will permit every wheat grower to register his opinion of the plan in such a way that no one will know how he votes. The farmer should listen to the arguments for and against the plan and then vote his honest conviction. An unfavorable vote will end the benefit plan of wheat adjustment at the end of this crop year. A favorable vote will be accepted by Secretary Henry A. Wallace as the request of wheat growers for benefit payment contracts to cover the 1936 and later wheat crops.

Easter Services Well Attended

Easter services in Cass City churches were well attended Sunday.

The two union services at which Easter cantatas were features marked the religious feast day here. At the sunrise service at the Evangelical church, the Cass City Music club presented "The Promise of Easter," while at the M. E. church in the evening, the choir of that congregation gave the cantata, "The King Eternal." Both presentations were highly enjoyed and reflected much credit on the two directors, Miss Veda Bixby of the Music club and Mrs. F. A. Bigelow of the Methodist church choir.

The Methodist choir has been invited to present "The King Eternal" cantata at the Deckerville Methodist Episcopal church on Sunday evening, Apr. 28. The group has accepted and are planning the necessary rehearsals for another high-grade presentation.

The Baptist, Evangelical, Methodist and Presbyterian churches will continue the arrangement for union services on Sunday evenings which have been in vogue during the Lenten season. These union meetings will continue until September. The first will be in the Baptist church on Apr. 28.

The Week at Lansing

By Frank D. Brown, Special Correspondent.

Speculation as to the ultimate failure of much of the administration's legislative program is now rife in capitol corridors and anterooms. Gov. Fitzgerald and Speaker George Schroeder (D) of the House have "locked horns" which incident is regarded as likely to have a sharp bearing on the outcome of the session.

The governor in a letter sent to the speaker has complained that many of the bills he is sponsoring are tied up in democratic-controlled House committees with no apparent reason for delaying action on them. Speaker Schroeder has retorted that the governor's program holds forth no economies in state government but is predicated wholly upon creating a huge political machine.

In a statement to your correspondent, Mr. Schroeder compared the policies of the chief executive with those of Senator Huey Long in Louisiana. "If we enacted his program as it has been presented to us the governor would become a virtual dictator with almost unlimited power over every phase of sate government," the speaker said.

The more worthy of the bills effecting governmental reform will be reported out of committees but not until they have been amended in accordance with the views of the Democratic House majority. In one or two cases substitute measures will be offered. Among those proposals to which the Democrats are particularly opposed are those setting up a finance director to dictate the spending policies of the state and the one which would consolidate the welfare machinery under one head. The latter proposal is probably the most bitterly objected to. The Washington relief authorities take unkindly to it and in event such a reorganization takes place, indications are that the federal agency will divorce itself entirely from any connection with the state in administrating relief in Michigan.

The date of final adjournment is still a matter of little consideration in either house. Lieut.-Gov. Tom Read and his senators are inclined to stay on until they have had ample opportunity to mull over to their satisfaction all the bills before them. In the House, nothing is heard right at the moment.

SUGAR BEET BENEFIT PAYMENTS HERE SOON

Expect First Checks in Caro District to Arrive About May 15.

Information in the hands of County Agent A. L. Benton indicated that benefit payments on the Government Sugar Beet Control program should begin to arrive for Caro district approximately May 15. Townships will receive their checks in alphabetical order and will probably be in the process of payment throughout the month of June. Croswell area of Sanilac county, this week, will receive their first checks; the Holland area in the western part of the state, last week, received their first checks.

John Reagh of Cass City, Wm. Smith of Colling, and H. G. Green of Fairgrove, members of the Caro district committee, this week, finished signing 1,300 government beet contracts. Four hundred of these have been approved by the sugar section officials and the O. K. on the remaining 900 will be forthcoming soon, it is anticipated by district committee members.

Three-cent Clause.

According to a statement of Arthur Tonkin, secretary-treasurer of the Caro Beet Growers' association, the Michigan Sugar Co. has agreed to strike out section 12 of the 1935 sugar beet contract thereby eliminating the three-cent a ton clause deduction from beet tonnage. He also states that the field men and sugar factory officials will strike out said section 12 upon request of the grower, or a letter to them requesting said section struck out will be sufficient to have same done. Mr. Tonkin states he has been informed that there will be no financial obligation incurred by the grower to any farmers' organization.

The annual convention of the Tuscola County Council of Religious Education will be held in the Presbyterian church at Caro on Thursday, May 16. Dr. Howard McCluskey of the extension department of the University of Michigan will be present both afternoon and evening for conference with the leaders of young people and for a public address.

High School Baseball Off to Busy Week

With the Bad Axe nine here on April 25, opening the schedule for the locals, and Akron next Tuesday, Apr. 30, and again here on Friday, May 3, against Caro, a very busy week for the home fans is anticipated. These three games are half of the home schedule of the Maroon and Grey, and will prove the calibre of the 1935 Hilltoppers.

Coach Kelly has had his athletes out fighting for their jobs since the weather has allowed outdoor practice. If quantity of material is any indication of the resulting play, Cass City should enjoy another victorious year. Among the pitching standouts are Hunter, Graham, McNaughton and Vader. Probably all of these will see service during the next week. Catching these men will probably be Ward, Arnold Reagh or McNaughton, three of the candidates for that position. For the other seven places in the line-up, many of last year's team are available and, as Cass City finished on the win side of the 500 mark, twice defeating the ultimate Upper Thumb champions during that campaign, this gives the locals every indication of a strong high school aggregation to represent Cass City.

At least the games against Bad Axe and Akron will show how the Maroon and Grey will stack up against Caro.

TIRES

An editorial from the Industrial News Review that

Every Motorist Should Read

TIRES

In reconditioning your car for the Spring and Summer driving campaign, it is to be hoped that you did not stop with the engine, the brakes, the lights. Of course, these must be in perfect shape, but perhaps you overlooked a vital safety feature in every automobile—the tires.

While your brakes stop the wheels, it is the tires that stop the car. That fact is being emphasized in this day of high speed and increased horsepower. If you go fast, you must stop quickly. And that is where a good tire comes in.

Figures obtained by the National Bureau of Casualty and Surety Underwriters, indicate that three-fourths of the cars inspected in a number of states last year had dangerous defects. Nearly 48 per cent of these defective cars were equipped with tires that were either poor or only in fair condition. A poor, even, a fair tire, is liable to puncture or blowout, and everyone knows what that means at high speeds.

All drivers have noticed the abnormal number of blowouts and punctures during the first warm days. The heat has raised the air pressure and a worn tire has blown out or punctured on a sharp obstruction or severe bump. During the winter months the dampness has seeped in through the cuts and bruises produced by thousands of miles of driving. The dampness has decayed the rubber and weakened the tire.

There were 7,120 accidents last year due to punctures or blowouts. In 480 of these accidents persons were killed and there were 27,160 skidding accidents in which 1,420 persons were killed and 30,200 injured.

Look over your tires carefully, and if they are not up to standard replace them!

Be Sure Your Tires Are Good

It will pay to discard tires if they are pretty well worn rather than chance an accident.

New modernistic lamp shades of hexagonal design and with black figured decorations have recently been placed in the auditorium of the M. E. church. Eight of these, each equipped with a 300-watt bulb, spread light in the edifice most effectively at night and are pleasing decorations when not in use. Two smaller shades are suspended above the rostrum. New upholstery in old rose has been placed on pulpit chairs.

The Ladies' Aid society of the Evangelical church will meet with Mrs. H. F. Lenzner, Wednesday, May 1, for an all-day meeting.

Where Beauty Is the Rule

From time immemorial Arles, France, has been the home of beautiful women. It is one place where feminine beauty is so general that it becomes monotonous. In the ruins of the amphitheater here may be seen the gladiators' cells and the cages in which the wild beasts were kept between their battles in the arena.

The Pampas

The pampas are the vast, grassy plaines in central Argentina. Their area is equal to the state of Texas. They are bound on the north by the forests of Gran Chaco and on the south by the steppes of Patagonia. During the rainy season, the pampas are covered with a luxuriant growth of grasses which provide pasturage for great numbers of cattle and sheep.

Microbes

Microbes undoubtedly present the greatest extremes in nature. They vary greatly in size, some being 5,000 times larger than others. They live in a temperature range of 779 degrees, some being able to live at 459 degrees F. below zero while others thrive at 320 degrees F. above it. And some apparently are deathless, as they have been found in a revivable condition in coal deposits one hundred million years old.—Collier's Weekly.

Meaning of Word "Caucus"

The word caucus originated in Boston as the name of a political club early in the Eighteenth century. Since Indian names were favorites for clubs, the word is believed to have been inspired by the Algonquin Indian word "caw-caw, was-sough" meaning "one who advises, urges, pushes on." It is now used in most English speaking countries but the American meaning is generally defined as a meeting of leaders of a party or a group to decide on policies, nominations, etc., for the party or group.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Whipping Legal Punishment

Whipping is a legal punishment in Delaware, which prescribes it for such crimes as burglary, arson, wife-beating, horse-stealing, larceny, etc. In all other states it has been abolished, except as a disciplinary measure in prisons. Detroit had a public whipping post from 1818 to 1831.

The Lowly Peanut

The peanut is not really a nut, of the pulse, or bean family. Although grown largely in this country, some are imported from China. Hazels come mainly from Asia, though they can be grown here.

The Household

By LYDIA LE BARON WALKER

THERE is one social error that all of us can avoid, and that is arriving at a house before the time set in an invitation. It is preferable to be a few moments late than a few moments early. Few things are more distracting to a hostess than to be in the hurry of last moment preparations, and be caught not quite ready to greet a guest arriving before time. There are hostesses who have the happy habit of being ready in advance of the hour when visitors should come. But for every one of these, there are hundreds of other hostesses who are ready on time but not before, and scores of others who have to scramble to be fully ready on the minute.

What is essention for the one entertaining is to be ready to greet her friends at the appointed time, knowing that the rooms, the food and the entertainment are in readiness, also. She should plan to have at least fifteen minutes to spare before arrivals begin. Unless she does there will not be opportunity for the last minute extras which are sure to crop up. A hostess who is flustered when she welcomes her guests cannot be at ease, and this tends to make her friends a trifle embarrassed. Neither of these things gives a good start to the occasion.

An Unhappy Start.

It is the early guest who so often upsets plans. The unexpected, and really unwarranted, appearance of the too-early guest is bad enough when there are servants to admit the person, and assist in taking off wraps, but when the hostess has to do everything, which so often is the case, it is difficult for her to welcome the early arrival with the cordiality she wants to express. She must not give the impression of realizing her friend has come too soon, and this means she must not appear to have things wait for her to do.

Such a situation is awkward. It need not happen if we give a little thought to it. For example, if we find it took less time to get to the house than we had expected, we can walk around the block, or wait in some store, if there is one near enough. We must save our hostess from embarrassment by some method, and allow her the opportunity for readiness. We can arrive on the dot of time set, and feel no qualms if the hostess is not ready to receive us. It is for her to be ready then, and it is correct for us to arrive then—but not before. Most hostesses, however flurried during the final moments, are ready on time to welcome punctual guests with gracious hospitality.

Good Humor at Party.

Now that the season for entertainment is in full swing, it is well to consider how to keep what the Europeans call the humor of the occasion good. That is, how to keep everyone in a gay, happy, and contented spirit. This is essential if a party is to be a success. An idea which helps decidedly toward this end is to have conversational subjects either of common interest to all, or so surprising that interest is created. This is particularly true when persons who are gathered together for the first time, or so seldom that they are entirely or partially strangers. Such an assembly occurs at club luncheons, church socials and suppers, grange meetings, etc.

Cards with controversial questions or subjects can be passed around, and different groups be given different topics. Or partners can be chosen by matching numbers, or in any of the hundreds of ways that there are, and each couple be given a conversational card. If persons are strangers this forms a basis for getting acquainted.

Painting Brick

Well-aged brick, stucco and concrete require no different paint from other exterior work. If these surfaces are not well-aged, however, they should be given special primers which usually contain tung oil varnishes. Any high quality house paint may then be used for the finishing coats. Or, if preferred, special stucco or brick coatings may be used. Ordinary brick, concrete and stucco are unusually porous. This porosity is an advantage from a painter's point of view because it allows the paint to penetrate deeply and thus secure a firm anchorage.

Bath Sponges

Bath sponges may be kept soft and sweet if washed in warm water to which the juice of a lemon has been added.

Wednesday, April 17, the American Government class visited the Federal court in Bay City. This has become an annual event which is looked forward to a great deal by all the seniors. As usual Judge Tuttle explained the points of law in his clever and amusing way. In the afternoon, the class visited the Bay county court and made several tours of the new court house. They also visited the Bay county jail and all more than agreed that "There's no place like home."

The English literature class are working to finish the writing of the school history so that it may go "to press" and be ready for sale soon. Because it is their wish that this history be a complete and authentic one, they have spent a great deal of time interviewing people, reading old records and accounts of school doings in order to gain the necessary information.

While it was begun as a project to help in the 300th anniversary of the establishment of high schools in the United States, it has developed into a "money-making scheme" for the juniors who are sponsoring its sale. It will be on the order of a handbook resembling a high school annual but not so extensive. Besides the school history, it will include an entertaining account of the school events of the year together with some of the "bright" sayings of individuals.

April 29, the American history classes are sponsoring an assembly program commemorating the 300th anniversary of the founding of high schools. It will consist of dramatic "skits" representing the schools of "the olden days," talks by alumni who will tell us what school was like when they attended, and music.

Tuseday, the American history classes took a national current events test sponsored by the Scholastic Magazine. This is an annual test and thousands of boys and girls take part in it. The ten highest papers are sent into headquarters at New York City to be ranked along with the other schools. The winners in each of the seven districts into which the United States is divided for the purpose, receive a free trip to Washington, D. C., later in the year.

Kindergarten.

Easter rabbits, egg carts, posters, and Easter baskets are the center of interest just now. We finished our Easter hats last week as well as some high hats for the boys to wear with their dress suits.

We have two bird houses ready for painting now.

Housecleaning as well as work on the operetta costumes is well on the way. If you don't think we are busy just drop in some day and hear us humming.

* * *

Third Grade.

We have two new pupils in our room. They are Leona and Jimmie Lafave from Decker.

We had an arithmetic match between the boys and girls last Thursday. The boys won by a small margin. Robert Gillies and Marie Zapfe stood up the longest.

We had 25 A's in spelling last Thursday.

Fifth Grade.

The Fair Play club gave, at its weekly meeting, a play entitled "The Board of Health." This was a short original play showing how science has made diphtheria less harmful. Gerald Kercher, Laura Tesho, Floyd Coulter and Eva Somes gave the little play.

We have studied the social life and habits of bees in nature study.

THE HOLY SCRIPTURES

LESSON TEXT—II Timothy 3:14-17; Psalm 19:7-14.

GOLDEN TEXT—O how love I thy law! It is my meditation all the day. Psalm 119:97.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Book God Gave Us.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Book God Gave Us.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Use the Bible.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Inspiration and Authority of the Bible.

I. The Origin or Source (II Tim. 3:16).

They are inspired of God, which literally means "God-breathed." Peter says "Holy men spake from God, being moved by the Holy Ghost" (II Pet. 1:21). When Paul declares the Scriptures to be God-breathed, he means that the utterances resulted from God's breath in men's mouths. Because they are God-breathed they are the veritable words of God. The holy Scriptures not only contain the words of God, but they are in verity the message of God to men.

II. The Value of the Scriptures (II Tim. 3:14-17).

1. Able to make wise unto salvation (v. 15). Salvation is alone in Christ. It is obtained through faith in his finished work on the cross.

2. Disciplines the life (vv. 16, 17). It is profitable for doctrine, which is the divine standard of conduct. In the Holy Bible alone is to be found this standard of life. Not only is it the standard of life, but of all thought. Then, too, it reproves, that is, confutes error. The way to deal with error is not denunciation, but the positive presentation of the revealing truth. It also corrects, that is, set straight many of the dislocations of personal and social conduct. The Word of God is the standard of measurement which sets straight the lives of mortal beings. Further, it instructs in righteousness and thoroughly equips the minister for Christian service. The mastery of God's holy Word is the indispensable equipment for Christian service. One who lacks this knowledge of the holy Scriptures is utterly unfit for the Christian ministry, no matter how well trained he may be in other things.

III. The Nature and Effect of God's Law (Ps. 19:7-11).

1. It is perfect. It is without a flaw. It converts and restores the soul: it turns man back to God himself to lead a life of holiness. It not only converts sinners, but restores the saints to divine fellowship.

2. It is sure. It is absolutely dependable. Man's reasonings change, but God's Word endures forever. God cannot lie. It makes wise the simple. Common men and women as to natural gifts become wise even in the rightful things of the world, because of their mastery of the Word of God.

3. It is right. The precepts and judgments of the Lord are expressions of absolute righteousness because they proceed from the righteous God and are, therefore, inherently right.

4. It is pure. There is no admixture of error. There is no compromise with that which is untrue. Because of this, it enlightens the eye. All that mars the spiritual vision is taken away. Conduct for the Christian is clearly defined.

5. It is clean. This is seen in the effects of the Word of God upon the life. The individual who is sanctified by it is clean within and without.

6. It is true and righteous. The decisions of God's Word are true without exception. The judgments of God's Word are unimpeachable. Because of these qualities, God's Word is more to be desired than the choicest of gold. Obedience thereto brings great reward.

IV. The Prayer of the Believer (Ps. 19:12-14).

The life brought face to face with God's Word is seen as sinful. The soul cries out for

1. Cleansing (v. 12). The perfect law reveals the imperfections of the life. The Word of God reveals sins of which the individual may be ignorant.

2. To be kept from presumptuous sins. Presumptuous sins are peculiarly dangerous. In the Mosaic economy no sacrifice was provided for such sins.

3. Freedom from the dominion of such sins (v. 13). How awful is the slavery of those who are in bondage to presumptuous sins.

4. That the words of the mouth and the meditations of the heart be kept in line with God's Word (v. 14). From many dangers the believer would be saved if the words and meditations of his heart were kept in line with the Scriptures!

Honor Your God

"More than conquerors" means not only to win your battles and save your territory, but to do honor to your Captain and your God, to be a credit to your cause, and so to acquit yourself in the campaign that God shall be glorified.—A. B. Simpson.

DOAN'S PILLS

CHAPTER VIII

"It's good to get home!" Gail said, luxuriously unpacking, undressing, bending her slender body double to brush her inverted fluffy mop.

"But I could live at Carmel forever!" Edith said.

And then suddenly there was Phil flying upstairs, and the thunderbolt of the news. Phil married! He and Lily married this morning, partly because Lily's house had burned down yesterday afternoon with all her clothes and all the children's clothes. And Phil only waiting his sisters' return to invite his wife and the three tiny step-sons into the Lawrence house for the time being, anyway, "until we can find some place. . . ."

Lily helped Gail get supper that evening. Wolfe, Miles, and Daniel Cass played in the Lawrences' side yard, under the willow, where Phil and Gail, Edith, Sam, and Ariel had all played a few years ago, and their father before them.

Gail was very gentle; she was conscious of an inner trembling. There was a jar, a shock in Phil's marriage, but it was a fact accomplished now, and Phil must not ever know how his sisters felt. She and Edith must just make the best of it—Lily and the children would not be under their roof for long, anyway.

The children were round, shaggy little fellows, with Celtic blue eyes and dark hair. Dan, the three-year-old, still retained a certain babyish uncertainty of outline, his wet little mouth hung open, his face, hair, hands were caked with dirt. His blue eyes were affectionate, hopeful. As he ate his supper he leaned comfortably against Gail's knee. Gail, peeling apples, found the feeling of the soft, warm, boneless little body rather disarming.

It seemed utterly unnatural for life to go on in its old grooves—the old grooves that were so incredibly the new. To dress and breakfast and walk to work with Edith every morning, leaving Lily Cass pretty and complacent in the home kitchen, simply was not a possible situation. Gail felt disturbed and nervous, she began to hate to go home.

"We can't stand it!" Gail said to Edith, lunching with her at the Woman's exchange.

"Well, why don't they find a house?"

"Oh, I don't believe they're even looking!"

"Why should they? They're perfectly comfortable, and you and I do all the dinner dishes!"

"Has Phil gone crazy?" Gail would ask gloomily. "What does he think we are, to put up with it?"

"You know what she said, after that very first night. Remember when she came down to the library and said, 'Phil and I intend to get out of here at the first possible moment'?"

"I remember. But then she told Sam yesterday that the house was as much Phil's as ours."

"Well, it isn't!" Edith said stubbornly and fiercely.

"I suppose it is." And Gail would shut her lips in that new, firm line, and knit her thick Lawrence brows until they almost met.

"What can we do, Gail? We can't go on like this."

"I don't know what we can do," Gail would ponder darkly. "No use in the world appealing to Phil!" she said more than once.

"Oh, no use at all."

"He told me that the cheapest place he could move to, with the three children—and I dare say another coming—"

"Oh, Gail, no!"

"Well, I wouldn't be one bit surprised. He told me that the only decent places he could find were sixty and seventy-five, and that he simply couldn't pay it. They ran up a bill of more than two hundred dollars at Muller's, you know, when Lily's clothes were all burned up."

"I know. Invisible stockings and fourteen dollar hats!" Edith said in the pause.

"And now that Joe Cass is dead and Lily getting nothing from her people, I suppose Phil can't afford it. We never had any too much, as it was, and Phil's simply added four more persons to the list."

"You'd think," said Edith in patient scorn, "that Phil might have seen that coming!"

"I try—I really do try to be decent to Lily," Gail said after awhile. "I try to think up things that will interest her, and be reasonable when she's helping me in the kitchen. But when I hear a thing like her telling Sam that Phil has as much right in the house as we have . . ."

Another silence. Then Gail added, very low, "Something rises up in my soul, and I feel that I could murder her!"

"I wish we could get away, Gail, you and I."

"Oh, I mean to!"

"If we could live in Carmel!"

"I know. And if we rented the corner for a gas station, and you and I had that, we could live there."

"Then that reconciles me to the gas station!" Edith said fervently.

"I suppose," Gail summarized it all somberly, "the only decent thing—the only square thing—is to make the best of it. It's one of those things that would be so darned easy—so picturesque in a book. And it's—so hard—"

The voice that to Edith was always brave and gallant faltered a little, but Gail wanted no sympathy. There was a scowl between her eyes and a gruffness in her aspect that repudiated it.

"This effort to make the best of it won't get us anywhere," she said.

Yet Edith was quite keen enough to notice the courage with which Gail carried the whole situation that night. The atmosphere, which in the three weeks since Phil's marriage had been charged with dangerous electricity, cleared. Gail was not only nice to Lily; she seemed able, with her own peculiar winning sweetness, to put herself in Lily's place. It was as if she had a part to play, and was determined to play it to its utmost limits.

For the first time, tonight, she spoke of the marriage, its suddenness and surprise. If Lily suspected some lingering trace of apology in this she gave no sign, but she brightened visibly, and the dinner table was more like its old self than it had been since the Saturday of Edith's and Gail's return.

Phil, in the fatuous blindness of love, was radiant with satisfaction, and Edith felt that he would feel that they could go on living together indefinitely—the happy family in which men are so pathetically eager to believe.

"No, he won't do that!" said Gail. "For I'm going to talk to him tomorrow, and get everything definitely settled. Then we'll only have to work toward our goal. Enough money for the smallest overhead expenses we can manage, and then you and I'll get out—out of Clippersville forever."

"I love Clippersville," Edith said dreamily. "I don't think anyone could love a place more. I always think of Clippersville as the sweetest place in the world," the younger sister pursued.

"And just the same, I'm going with you, Abigail!"

This on a Monday, the last of September. On the Tuesday, on the Wednesday, Gail looked for her chance to talk to Phil, in vain. On Thursday Gail went home to lunch to find Edith and Lily in a glory of housecleaning. They appeared to be working together harmoniously enough, and Gail walked back to the library at one o'clock moralizing in her own soul upon the desirability of making the best of things in this curious world, putting up with what could not be changed, enduring what could not be cured.

The only way to get past certain things in life is to plunge right through them, like them—or pretend you did—learn from them, and go on to other lessons.

The early October day was somber and overcast without rain, but equally without sun. Leaves were turning restlessly in the gardens; other leaves, heaps of them, were being raked into damp, somber piles that smoked in the lifeless, ominous air and scented the world with autumn. A strange hush lay over the town: something was expected, something was drawing nearer and nearer across the great range of the eastern mountains and under the pale cool sky.

Edith and Gail almost always walked home together. But Edith was not downtown today, and Gail had no need to stop at Muller's book department as usual. It was the third, the night they called the "house's birthday," and Gail—reflecting rather ungraciously that they might as well break Lily into some of the customs of the Lawrence household, since the poor little creature appeared to be only too anxious to copy her new family's ways and ideas, stopped at the hardware store and bought twelve new drinking glasses.

"Did you wish them wrapped as a gift, Miss Lawrence?"

"Well, yes," Gail said, with a whimsical twist to the corners of her mouth. "Wrap them as a gift."

"We haven't given Phil and Lily anything," she thought as she walked on. "Well, they didn't give us any warning. Perhaps Edith and I'll make some gesture—some day, before we leave. And Ariel—Mother's poet! To have no wedding, no fun, no beauty. And not to have loved us. She couldn't have loved us, to walk out that Christmas night and send us no word—never to write.

"It's a funny world. Things seem to happen to us Lawrences. But such queer things, and in such funny ways."

The two older Cass boys—they were to be Lawrence boys soon, for Phil, in his gentle way, adored his stepsons and was eager to have them take has name—the two older Cass boys were digging contentedly down at the end of the garden where the grass was sprouting green and pale in the shadow of the heavy evergreen fence. Gail waved at them as she followed the uneven, discolored flags of the path to the side door.

"Gail! Edith was hurt."

"Edith!"

"She fell. She struck her head." This was Lily. She gestured with an arm. Gail ran.

Edith was unconscious on the couch, her eyes closed. Her soft tawny hair was damp, her forehead wet. A girl—Mary Rumbold—was there, white and concerned, not touching Edith.

"I thought you were the doctor, Gail," Mary said in a still voice. "We took off her shoes," she added inconsequentially.

Gail was breathing in great spent breaths. She could not speak. Her lips moved soundlessly.

"She fell—?" asked the silent, moving lips.

"We Can't Stand It!" Gail Said to Edith.

"No." Phil was beside his sister, his arm about her. She leaned against him, suddenly spent. "No. It was the statue—the Neapolitan Boy," he said. "One of the kids—Danny—ran against it. Mary and Edith were just going out, and Ede leaned over and caught at the pedestal—and it toppled and struck her."

"How long ago?"

"Ten minutes. We telephoned you."

"Doctor?"

"He's on his way."

"Phil—Phil—" she whispered, swallowing.

"I don't know, Gail. We don't know. Lily says that one of her brothers—"

"Ah, that's lovely, Gail!" Edith said unexpectedly in a clear, low, happy voice. "Are we swimming? Green—green — green water — like emeralds—wet emeralds."

She lapsed into silence again, sighing contentedly.

"She's coming out of it; it was only a shock," Phil said, frowning, with a reassuring nod and glance for Gail.

Gail was not conscious of the passing of time. She was conscious of but one thing—Edith. She must hold Edith here, by the sheer power of that sisterly love that was the strongest love in her life.

Doctor Peters was here, and Doctor Reynolds. They wanted another opinion, a man from San Francisco. Concussion, undoubtedly, and possibly fracture, but it might be that both were slight.

"Doctor Remsinger from San Francisco is coming," Phil told Gail when she emerged, white and dazed, from the sitting room at ten o'clock. "He'll be here about three. And Doctor Peters says that if Edith goes on all right until tomorrow, she's got a good chance."

The weary eyes were raised.

"Then the only thing to do is—live, until this time tomorrow."

"Oh, thank you, Lily," Gail said, with the first honestly affectionate look she had ever given her little sister-in-law.

"Oh, Gail, if it hadn't been Danny!" Lily said, weeping.

"Poor Danny!" Gail murmured, with a steady, dry-eyed shadow of her old smile.

She went back to her post, sitting in the low chair that had been "Mother's rocker" for twenty-five years. Old Doctor Peters came and went in the quiet room. Lily was up all night; Phil and Sam kept vigil in the kitchen.

Sometimes Edith murmured. At about two o'clock she opened her eyes, looked straight at Gail, and said, in her own smiling way, "I'll tell you, Gail. I'll go first and get the cottage ready, and be waiting for you!"

"Put that comforter over her feet, will you, Lily? She doesn't feel any too warm."

Lily had been kneeling. But she was on her feet now, and as she brought the comforter a strange expression came over her face.

"Let's say some prayers, Gail!" she said suddenly, in a frightened tone.

"Ah, as if I hadn't! And she did, too," Gail whispered back. "We said our prayers together, just as we used to, a little while ago, and she seemed so sensible; just—hungry—for them."

"Phil!" Lily said quickly, running to her husband, catching him importunately by the arm. "Take Gail away—Phil—"

"Take?—" Gail echoed. She got to her feet, looked dazedly from Phil to the doctor. The San Francisco physician was beside Edith. He had straightened up—had said something to Doctor Peters.

They were trying to make her leave Edith, and she would not go. She looked from face to face, terrified. Then she was conscious of choking and of seizing Phil with both frantic hands and of trying to scream.

Then the room rocked and the world rocked, and there was nothing but blackness everywhere.

Baptist Church—Preaching next Sunday morning at 10:30. Sunday school at 11:45. Cecil Brown and Mrs. J. Bigelow, superintendents.

The union meetings of the past Lenten service have been so heart-stirring and helpful along the lines of evangelism, it has been thought by the four ministers to continue this spirit and our union Sunday night services till the period when we would regularly be in the summer Sunday evening union services. The first union service as such will be in the Baptist church next Sunday night at 7:45. The message will be evangelistic.

Prayer meeting beginning next week Thursday evening at 7:30.

Sunday was a great day in our church. A wonderful program was given by the Sunday school. The junior choir, under the leadership of Mrs. Glenn Folkert, were vested and gave a good proof of their training. The little folks made the day happy for us all; and the baptismal service will long be remembered. Eleven new members have been voted into the church, seven by baptism. We have hopes that others will soon follow. It is the largest Easter class during the present pastorate.

PRESBYTERY DISAPPROVES GOVERNOR'S STAND

al conflict, that we are opposed to the increase of our naval and other war forces as provocative to other nations, and an inexcusable waste of the people's money, that we are opposed to military training as tending to cultivate the war spirit and as distinctively anti-Christian in character."

2. That in view of recently reported interference with public assemblages for the discussion of Pacifism in certain of our state supported institutions, we favor the free and unobstructed discussion of Pacifism on the part of both faculty and students without discrimination.

3. That we express strong disapproval of the attitude of our governor wherein, (quoting Detroit Free Press of Apr. 16, 1935) he favors "closing the doors of state-supported institutions to students refusing to promise to bear arms for their country." His calling "silly theories" the fundamental Christian principles upon which Pacifism is based is inexcusable ignorance and prejudice for one in high office.

4. That we oppose any legislation which would permit persecution of those who are committed to the Christian principles of non-violence and equal opportunity for all.

5. That these recommendations shall be given publicity from our pulpits and press and that copies be sent to the governor and presidents of our state universities.

THE WEEK IN LANSING.

It they wanted to, both houses could wind-up their deliberations within four or five days but things aren't done that way. Some senators and representatives seem to thrive on the Lansing atmosphere; they prefer the limelight and night-life of the capital to that of prosaic back-home existence. The result is the taxpayers have to take it "on the chin."

Following out his original plan of taxation reform, Senator Andrew L. Moore (R), Pontiac, chairman of the upper house taxation comittee, has submitted two bills, one creating a state land office to dispose of property turned back to the state and the other, abolishing tax sales. The latter measure provides that all lands upon which the tax is not paid shall vest in the state, subject to the owner's right to redeem at any time within six months from the date of sale. At the end of six months, the land would be appraised and for the period of six months the owner would have the exclusive right to purchase at the appraised price. After the second six months had elapsed, the land would be offered for sale to any person.

Senator Moore claims for his bill the abolition of the sale of land to the tax payer and the elimination of the tax title shark. Some differences have appeared relative to his bill setting up a state land office. The state conservation department already has indicated its opposition on the grounds that that agency has handled in a satisfactory manner the disposition state cut-over land as well as commercial property in the past.

The old bugaboo, the oleomargarine tax has made its appearance during this session. The senate has deferred action until next week of a bill to place a five-cent per pound tax on butter substitutes. Sponsored by certain farmer interests as in past years, the bill is designed to remove oleo from competition with butter and thus aid the dairy industry. The always amusing part of the oleo tax argument is the fact that the farmer himself is one of the chief purchasers of the substitute.

The small loan proposition which caused Gov. Comstock no end of embarrassment two years ago is still a bone of contention. Efforts are being made to pry loose from the Senate committee the bill which would reduce the rate of interest on this type of loan to one and three-quarters percent. The small loan companies have quite an effective organization in the state and during the past two weeks have undertaken to contact the newspapers of the state as a means of preventing the present bill from ever seeing the light of day. Whether or not they are successful in their efforts remains to be seen.

The democratic minority in the Senate, led by Leon Case, is insistent that the bill shall be reported out for consideration on the floor. Threats are even being made of discharging the committee from further consideration of the bill, but this is not likely to pass beyond the domain of idle talk. Discharging of a committee happens only once or twice, if at all, during a legislative session so it really remains to be seen whether enough pressure can be brought to bear on the state affairs committee to "kick out" the bill in question.

The senators early in the week finally passed the Palmer measure which would prohibit the so-called "heart balm" suits. After defeating the bill by one vote last week, the upper house has given it a 20 to 11 approval.

Michigan State College and the University of Michigan received the "short end" of the deal in recommendations made by the House ways and means committee last Wednesday. In recommendations for institutional requirements made by the committee, the state college would receive some $300,000 less than their original request, while the university would be pared down to the extent of $1,000,000. These amounts are on a yearly basis for the next two years, both of which are claimed by the college authorities to be highly insufficient.

The senate has passed and sent to the house three measures. One increasing the state board of registration of nurses from three to seven members and requiring that registered nurses be at least high school graduates before entering their preliminary training period, was passed, 22 to 6. The opposition was apparently based on the belief expressed by several that the measure might hinder the practice of practical nursing, despite assurances to the contrary from friends of the bill. It was stated that at present candidates for training as registered nurses are required to have completed only two years of high school study.

Another bill would expose to the jeopardy of a 90-day jail sentence employers who fail to pay wages to their employes, in addition to the penalty of a fine of up to $100, already written into the law.

The third measure was one requiring self-insuring employers to pay an annual fee of $50 to the state department of labor and industry to defray the expenses of filing acceptances. The measure was limited as it passed to those employing 30 or more employes.

HIGHEST QUALITY PAINT AT BARGAIN PRICES

$2.49 Per Gal. In Gallon Cans

For a long time we felt that most people through loyalty to this community would patronize a local independent merchant exclusively if he could give them best quality, guaranteed paint at prices they could easily afford to pay.

Moreover, we felt sure they knew from observation or personal experience, that it's poor economy to use cheap paint—that it does more harm than good to the property on which it is used.

So—in order to offer the Highest Quality Paint at Lowest Possible Price, we arranged with the manufacturer of the line we handle that we should both cut our profits to the bone.

Then act at once because we can continue these close margin prices only as long as this community gives us its wholehearted support.
