The frontispiece of the Review of Reviews for May is a reproduction from a recent Washington photograph of the United States supreme Court. The picture is of more than ordinary interest because of the present prominence of the individual members of the Court in connection with the income tax decisions.

A. G. Boney, with as much enterprise as ever, has about decided to erect, this summer, a double, brick store on his frontage at the corner of Leach and Main Streets. He may defer building until another season but in any event, we rejoice, with all alike, in contemplation of this big improvement to our Main Street.

Wilson Harrisou, the tailor, now occupies a corner in Jos. Wallace's harness shop, and C. L. Robinson, the laundryman, comes to the front and will utilize all of the building of which he has only had a part. Charlie is doing a rushing business in the laundry line and also intends handling wool and cloth for the Lexington Woolen Mills.

While at Ypsilanti last week, A. A. Hitchcock had the pleasure of meeting James Kelley, well and favorably known to our people. Since leaving Cass City, Mr Kelley has made some "coin" in the clothing business and has traveled some abroad. He at present is a senior student in the State Normal. "Jim's" many friends will be pleased to learn of his success.

The editor of the Review of Reviews gives his testimony, based on personal observation, to the success of the South Carolina liquor system. "Drunkness and disorder," he says, "have decreased to a remarkable extent; and whereas the negro laborer was accustomed to spend his week's earnings in carousing on Saturday night and Sunday he is now spending more upon his family, or else saving his money to buy land."

Mesdames Aie, Edgar, Frost, and Weydemeyer attended the W. C. T. U. annual county convention held at Unionville last week, Thursday and Friday. Mrs. P. R. Winegar, as county president, occupied the official chair. The organization now has eight unions in the county with a membership of 192. These were well represented by delegates and a very enthusiastic convention was held which will doubtless produce results beneficial to the worthy cause of temperance.

Morgan McBerney, the sixteen-year-old boy of John McBerney, who was operated upon last week Wednesday for appendicitis, died Saturday morning. At the time of going to press last week it was thought that he would withstand the shock, but, as is now known, conditions were too unfavorable. The funeral was held from the house Sunday afternoon, Rev. Baxter officiating. The parents, brothers and sisters have the deepest sympathy of all.

A young man feigning a sore hand, "did up" some of our business men yesterday, but about the time the marshal was notified, said young man "smelt a rat" and made tracks. It was discovered that he had two companions waiting for him south of the depot and the trio made away at a good smart pace. As Marshal Ramsey had no conveyance and thought it useless to give chase he allowed them to depart in peace. Look out for them.

The law provides that: Any person who shall at any time within the state of Michigan, kill or rob the nest of any robin, night-hawk, whippoorwill blue bird, brown thrush, wren, martin, oriole woodpecker, bobolink or any bird of song or rob the nest of such birds shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction thereof, shall be fined $5 for each nest robbed, or confined in the county jail ten days or both fine and imprisonment at the discretion of the court. Boys take warning.

Chas Warren who lives above the ENTERPRISE office, has been reduced to somewhat straightened circumstances by a prolonged siege of nervous prostration. Some of our citizens incidentally learned of this and, with their usual generosity, have been assisting him in various ways. This is a practical charity as Mr. Warren has always been an industrious man, until sickness rendered him unable to work, and is deserving of assistance. We have learned from actual personal experience that Cass City people have the faculty, in a large degree, of making themselves agreeably friendly to strangers and those in affliction. May it ever continue thus.

A great alternation is about being made in the condition of our sidewalks. The committee having such matters in charge made a tour of inspection on Monday, and notices are being served on property holders for the repairing of old walks and building of new ones in nearly every part of town. Segar street is to be widened from Garfield Avenue south to the city limits and a side walk laid on the east side. These improvements must be gratifying to every loyal citizen, and if such improvements can be continued together with the healthy growth we are enjoying, we predict that very soon Cass City will be one of the most picturesque towns to be found in the Wolverine State.

The wool season has opened and Cass City is blessed with a sufficient number of competent and careful buyers. The firm of Lamb & Fairweather, which has conducted a successful business here for several years, will have its headquarters at the Rink this year. Mr. Fairweather will be the active member of the firm and his business qualifications need no comment. Under the able management of Jas. N. Dorman the Woolen Mills will be prepared to handle an unlimited quantity of wool and Chas. L. Robinson will do business for the Lexington Woolen Mills with headquarters at the laundry. The farming community will find it to their advantage to visit Cass City with their wool crop.

According to an understanding with our county town, which has held good for a number of years, this is "our" year to celebrate the "glorious fourth," and it is now high time to begin preparations in order to arrange a program in keeping with the reputation and capabilities of our fair village. As Cass City forms a "part and parcel" of the Thumb Driving District, races have been spoken of in connection with other sports, but whatever form the program may take no time should be lost in getting to work. As soon as possible a meeting should be called and committees appointed to advance the interests of the demonstration and with such an abundance of good material to select such committees from the work should swing ahead at a lively pace. "Naph sed."

Our school board met on Monday and arrived at a decision not to re-engage Prof. J. P. Smith for the coming year. No particular reason has been given for his dismissal and it would appear from the strength of the petition circulated in his favor, that the populace wished him to remain, but the board has decided otherwise. Several applications have already been received for the position, and we can but hope that a capable principal is secured from the number. Henry Stewart resigned the secretaryship of the board and N. Bigelow was appointed to fill the vacancy. We learn, however, that Mr. Bigelow finds it impossible to act in such a capacity, owing to the fact that his time is fully occupied with other duties. This is to be regretted as we doubt if a more suitable person could be found, and we hope that some arrangements can yet be made which will enable him to accept the appointment.

It is to be feared that unless our temperance friends bestir themselves, Cass City will lose its reputation as a temperance town. All must be aware that the majority of our present council are in sympathy with the liquor traffic. If not they should awake to that fact at once. This was demonstrated recently when at a special meeting of the council the liquor bonds were reduced from $5,000 to $3,000. Some difficulty has been experienced in the past in securing bondsmen at $5,000, making it evident that the council wished to make it easier for the dealers to secure bondsmen and engage in the nefarious traffic. No liquor bonds were presented to the council until Monday evening, May 6th, when the bond of Maggie Sheridan, as principal, and Michael Sheridan and John Benkelman as sureties, were presented, accepted and approved. The only negative vote was made by Trustee Campbell. Trustee Striffler was absent. As we understand the license law, all licenses expire on the last day of April, and yet our saloons were not closed although no bonds were presented or license obtained previous to May 6th. This certainly is an open violation of the law and it rests with the electors whether it shall be tolerated or not. We chanced to be in Caro on May 1st and noticed that all saloons except two which had procured their licenses, were closed tight. We notice in other towns saloons were ordered to close or stand prosecution. But as far as we can learn no such steps were even hinted at in our town. Probably the strongest reason for this quietude is the fact that our saloonkeepers are men that are respected in all their business transactions, and it is to be sincerely regretted that they are not engaged in a more honorable business. However, the question presents itself forcibly: Is this sufficient reason for allowing the laws of the state to be openly violated? If the law is an imposition, repeal it. If a righteous one, let it be duly respected and kept and all violators punished.

Those having the management of affairs in hand report that Lee E. Joslyn, of Bay City, High Chief Ranger of Michigan, and Rev. C. E. ## CAMP FIRE STORIES.

GOOD SHORT SKETCHES FOR OLD WARRIORS,

The Brave Often Escape in the Hour of Danger—Horrible Fire Episode—Lincoln and Hamlin—First Skirmish of the Thirty-ninth Ohio.

It has often happened that the bravest men escape in the hour of peril. I shall never forget a bright morning in June, 1862. We were in the valley of Virginia. The night before we had sunk the night of the battle of the Seven Days. I shall never forget a bright morning in June, 1862. We were in the valley of Virginia. The night before we had sunk the night of the battle of the Seven Days.

When the sun rose in the East, the sky was glowing with its presence. The slumbering world awoke. The leaves were dripping wet with pearly dew. The clover blossomed in the fields through which we marched. The scene was one of peace on earth. But the demon of strife came down on it. I saw the column advancing. Braver men never faced death. First, a single rifle shot was heard; another, and yet another. The whole forest, into which the troops had entered, was on fire. The cannon thundered forth its voice. Men were falling by the score. One figure I distinctly saw in advance. He rode a chestnut-colored horse. The horse was a warrior as well as the rider. I admired the rider in time of peace. He was my friend. I had never before seen him in battle. The leaves of the trees rolled down over his shoulders as though touched by a heavy frost. Ten thousand bullets cut the branches and leaves from the trees about his head. The rider was calm, and quietly led on his troops. Many fell to rise no more till God's trumpet calls them forth. But still the rider held his place. He seemed to be clad in invisible armor. Last year some of us who had been in that battle met together. What strange questions were asked. I asked him how it came that he escaped death in the place he was, and he replied: "A soldier is never so safe as when he is in the front line of duty." Another asked: "Oh, Gen. Kiefer, what became of the sorrel horse?" The general answered him minutely, telling of the horse's life. I liked that soldier. He cared for beasts as well as men. W. F. Meloy, D. D., in the United Presbyterian.

Our First Skirmish.

When the three-month boys were called, the Thirty-ninth Ohio was in the field, and like all fresh soldiers, were eager for a fight. We were encamped in Virginia. Our pickets had been posted, and at less than a signal we would be in arms. We were in hostile quarters; the Confederates might make their appearance at any time, which we were in hopes would be the case, so we could show them what was in us, and send them away with something to think about. After we had been in camp several days, we were one night, and were dreaming of our happy homes and how the old folks would open their arms when we returned home covered with glory. Our dreams were abruptly broken by a signal to be up and in arms. Every man jumped as though shot from a cannon, and in less time than I can tell it we had formed a line and were ready for any command. Silently and cautiously we moved out, ready to fire if any of the Yankees showed themselves. After moving several paces in the direction pointed by the sentinels, we saw a Johnnie loom up in the darkness quite distinctly, and before the command could be given a dozen ignis sent their contents into the peaceful figure dressed in a "blue shirt" leaning against a tree. We could see him tremble, sway back and forth, but he held his ground, and did not even change his position. Another volley was sent with no better effect. So eager were we that a long, rank fellow, with a musket and fell headlong toward the supposed enemy, and in another moment was in the rear. Discouraged, we determined to wait till morning, and just as the sun was peeping over the Virginia hills, an investigation was made, and to our horror we found that we had shot the poor man out of his shirt, for there hung a reliable old shirt that one of the boys had hung up after the evening's wash. This was my first engagement. I served the three months, and the following three years, but I never felt braver than on that particular night.

Indiana's Monument.

Indiana is building a "soldiers' monument." It has been the work for a number of years. The movement was originally started by the G. A. R., and the monument was intended to commemorate the work of Indiana during the war of the rebellion. It was so stated in the act of the legislature making an appropriation to the object. By some means, after the work of erection had progressed for a year or two, some one connected with its management concluded to extend its scope, and work in a few features of the Mexican war. It was decided that somebody's statue should be added to the group of figures, to especially represent the state in the war on our southern neighbor, and now the legislature is wrangling over whose statue it shall be. Some want Governor Whitcomb and some the late General Mansson. Whitcomb was governor at the time, and Mansson played a subordinate and minor part in that drama. Indiana furnished two brigadier generals during the Mexican war, both by the name of Lane, both of whom afterward became distinguished in civil life. One was a senator from Oregon, and the other from Kansas, Henry S. Lane, who afterwards became governor of Indiana and represented the state in the United States senate, was also a conspicuous officer in the Mexican war. General Mansson served creditably in the late war, and might well be taken as a fitting representative of Indiana's soldierly in that struggle, but to set up claims for him for services in the earlier war is by many characterized as a little ludicrous. Whitcomb is worthy of honor for his eminent services to the state in a civil capacity, but to connect him with any war borders strongly on the humorous.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

Keeping Up the Dairy. Every farmer needs to keep his dairy up to the required number, as it is usually necessary each year to dispose of a certain number of cows, according to the size of the herd, from those that are getting to be old or that may fall from some other cause to be profitable to retain, writes E. R. Fowler in Texas Stock Journal. This must either be done by raising heifers on the farm or by purchasing the cows.

In a comparatively few instances perhaps the latter method might be preferable, provided the right kind of cows could be obtained at reasonable prices, but the majority of farmers must or should depend on raising their own dairy stock. This should be done more cheaply than the cows can be purchased, especially at the present time, and there are other advantages that should be taken into consideration. These are the raising of the heifers in a proper manner and their adaptation to the farm, which could not come from frequent changes of ownership.

The first step in this business is to get the kind of heifer calves needed for the dairy. They should be selected as far as possible with particular reference to the kind of work they are to be required of them, either as milk producers or butter makers. If they cannot be obtained from the herd then they will go to look around among those having good dairies for such as are wanted. Next, the heifers should be fed on good hay and clean water, and particularly in winter and spring when the weather is shifting and unfavorable, and a large proportion of the calves raised are started at this time of year.

Now how shall they be fed? It is now desirable to have heifers commence giving milk at two years of age. To do this they must be well cared for from the first. They must be kept in vigorous health and steadily growing. Their food should be such as will foster the growth of muscle and bone, rather than fat. Within the past quarter of a century, by a proper method of treatment, heifers are as good at two years old as they used to be at three. Milk is the natural food for the young calf and this should be supplied in sufficient quantities, neither too large nor too small.

With the Jersey calf it is particularly necessary not to over-feed for the first few weeks, otherwise the results will follow. After a little, skim milk may be gradually substituted for that fresh from the cow. In cold weather this can be had sweet, and if the Swedish or cold deep setting system of cream raising is practiced, and the milk had sweetened into a portable creamery. To make up for the fat of the milk removed in the cream it is well to make a little gruel of porridge from middlings of oil meal and add to the milk. This will give the meal for each calf at a feed is sufficient at first.

A very important matter in the feeding of skim milk is to have it sufficiently warmed. Here is an advantage claimed for farm separators, in that the milk can be fed almost before the animal heat is gone. But I can see no difficulty where the cream is obtained by cold deep setting, as it can be easily warmed to any desired temperature. We are raising a December calf on milk from a farm separator, and the addition of middlings as described above, and it is doing nicely, there being no trouble from the scours.

A young farmer in Windsor county, Vermont, is making a business of raising veal entirely free in its own right, setting alone, and milk being added. To most farmers this would seem impossible, but there is no doubt in the matter.

How Successful Farmers Operate This Department of the Homestead—Hints as to the Care of Live Stock and Poultry.

Keeping Up the Dairy. Every farmer needs to keep his dairy up to the required number, as it is usually necessary each year to dispose of a certain number of cows, according to the size of the herd, from those that are getting to be old or that may fall from some other cause to be profitable to retain, writes E. R. Fowler in Texas Stock Journal. This must either be done by raising heifers on the farm or by purchasing the cows.

In a comparatively few instances perhaps the latter method might be preferable, provided the right kind of cows could be obtained at reasonable prices, but the majority of farmers must or should depend on raising their own dairy stock. This should be done more cheaply than the cows can be purchased, especially at the present time, and there are other advantages that should be taken into consideration. These are the raising of the heifers in a proper manner and their adaptation to the farm, which could not come from frequent changes of ownership.

The first step in this business is to get the kind of heifer calves needed for the dairy. They should be selected as far as possible with particular reference to the kind of work they are to be required of them, either as milk producers or butter makers. If they cannot be obtained from the herd then they will go to look around among those having good dairies for such as are wanted. Next, the heifers should be fed on good hay and clean water, and particularly in winter and spring when the weather is shifting and unfavorable, and a large proportion of the calves raised are started at this time of year.

Now how shall they be fed? It is now desirable to have heifers commence giving milk at two years of age. To do this they must be well cared for from the first. They must be kept in vigorous health and steadily growing. Their food should be such as will foster the growth of muscle and bone, rather than fat. Within the past quarter of a century, by a proper method of treatment, heifers are as good at two years old as they used to be at three. Milk is the natural food for the young calf and this should be supplied in sufficient quantities, neither too large nor too small.

With the Jersey calf it is particularly necessary not to over-feed for the first few weeks, otherwise the results will follow. After a little, skim milk may be gradually substituted for that fresh from the cow. In cold weather this can be had sweet, and if the Swedish or cold deep setting system of cream raising is practiced, and the milk had sweetened into a portable creamery. To make up for the fat of the milk removed in the cream it is well to make a little gruel of porridge from middlings of oil meal and add to the milk. This will give the meal for each calf at a feed is sufficient at first.

A very important matter in the feeding of skim milk is to have it sufficiently warmed. Here is an advantage claimed for farm separators, in that the milk can be fed almost before the animal heat is gone. But I can see no difficulty where the cream is obtained by cold deep setting, as it can be easily warmed to any desired temperature. We are raising a December calf on milk from a farm separator, and the addition of middlings as described above, and it is doing nicely, there being no trouble from the scours.

A young farmer in Windsor county, Vermont, is making a business of raising veal entirely free in its own right, setting alone, and milk being added. To most farmers this would seem impossible, but there is no doubt in the matter.

The Detroit Tribune of May 1st, said editorially "Prohibition is despotism." Prize fighters consider it despotism to say they cannot pound each other where and when they please. The gambler says this is not a free country or my house would run unmoested. The keeper of a brothel avers that he has, or should have, the right to keep just such a place as he pleases. We expect such argument from the unthinking, but a paper like the Tribune should be cursed to the "ragged edge" for it is the unprincipled advocate of a business that must wither and die as honesty increases and intelligence spreads.

"There are a great many people who honestly believe that a high license is the best way to control the liquor traffic. We do not believe in village prohibition. It was a failure in Holly ten years ago. Let us see what success other towns have before we try it. It is largely a matter of doubt and speculation in regard to enforcing the laws. Caro Advertiser of April 25th. Why, Dear advertiser, being honest doesn't change facts. Your views are in accord with every saloon keeper in your town. A legal warrant to sell is just what they want. They don't care how high the license if they can get plenty of custom. If the price of tobacco was to advance the consumer would pay it all, not the dealers. So with your high license to drink. The dealers adulterate the whiskey to the extent of the tax. One barrel often makes five of the death liquid. A whisky-slinger would no more dare to drink the "Hemlock" he sells over the bar than he would dare to ask God's blessing on his work of destruction. Just let every town take your advice and wait for some other place to try village prohibition and the saloon won't find any fault. Now that's heavy advice for an advanced journal. Just tell your minister not to tackle the devil or his works till somebody else tries him first and finds out how hard he is to whip. Failed in Holly! That was because it had faint backing, such as the Advertiser. During the Fenian raid in Canada some years ago, a faint-hearted sheet of the Dominion said: "We are afraid the Fenians will destroy us, we wish we could do something to defeat them." Well said old "Kanuck" who had more sense than education. "You can help a lot by just keeping still and not discouraging those in the right. You are giving strength to the enemy by your weak words." Would it not be well for some sheets that claim to be on the moral side of the questions of the day to learn a lesson?

The dehorning of cattle has been practiced in this town all the spring thus far, and a good many have lost their horns whether it is a benefit or an evil unto them by so doing. But if it is a benefit and a blessing to them to lose their horns or not, would it not be better for farmers to raise the hornless kind. There are some good breeds of cattle that never raise any horns, why not raise that kind of cattle instead of those that grow horns and save trouble and expense in dehorning. We cannot help but think that would be the better way of doing.

ALEXANDER KING, ASSESSOR.

Persons who sympathize with the afflicted will rejoice with D. E. Carr of 1235 Harrison Street, Kansas City. He is an old sufferer from inflammatory rheumatism, but has not heretofore been troubled in this climate. Last winter he went up into Wisconsin, and in consequence had another attack. "It came upon me again very acute and severe," he said. "My joints swelled and became inflamed; sore to touch or almost to look at. Upon the urgent request of my mother-in-law I tried Chamberlain's Pain Balm to reduce the swelling and ease the pain, and to my agreeable surprise it did both. I have used three fifty-cent bottles and believe it to be the finest thing for rheumatism, pains and swellings extant. For sale by T. H. Fritz, Druggist.

CASEVILLE.

From the Critic.
Hubbard's bank will move to its new quarters about May 13th.

Flach & Conley's sawmill started up last Monday morning with full force.

The woods are full of trailing arbutus and large quantities are shipped out by express.

The band serenaded Gene Hall last Monday night. Gene has been very low all winter and his recovery is doubtful. We hope the warm summer days will bring him some relief.

Rev. Wm. Whitfield, formally of Onard, Sanilac County, who preached at Hayes and Casoville last Sunday, has been engaged by the Presbyterian church board to preach in this circuit for the ensuing year.

Our telephone line works to perfection and several new subscribers will be added at an early day. An exchange will be located in the new postoffice as it is completed. W. J. Moore has a good telephone and one that "speaks" for itself.

J. Gillingham have completed their new fish house adjoining the ice house. It is 20x40 feet in size. They will repair the dock in front of it and will bring their boats as soon as they commence fishing operations. Casoville is to be congratulated on the acquisition of this firm and we hope they will find no occasion to regret their move.

If Supt. Sanford could see his way clear to make it pay, a train to run exclusively between Casoville and Cass City, making connection at the latter place with all passenger trains would give us the service we desire. Such a train would do away with the necessity of running the freight through to Casoville as it would easily handle all work of that kind between the above places. This would restore our noon mail service and would, we believe, give perfect satisfaction to the patrons of the road both north and south of Cass City.

That Tired Feeling

It is remarkable how many people there are who have That Tired Feeling and seem to think it is of no importance or that nothing need be done for it. They would not be so careless if they realized how really serious the malady is. But they think or say, "It will go off after a while."

We do not mean the legitimate weariness which all experience after a hard day's work, but that all-gone, worn-out feeling which is especially overpowering in the morning, when the body should be refreshed and ready for work. It is often only the forerunner of nervous prostration, with all the horrible suffering that term implies. That Tired Feeling and nervousness are sure indications of an impure and impoverished condition of the blood. The craving of the system for help can only be met by purifying the blood. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the one great blood purifier. It expels all impurities, gives vitality and strength, regulates the digestion and makes the weak strong.

"In the spring I felt very much run down—no strength or appetite. I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla and my appetite improved and I did not have that tired feeling." H. R. Squires, East Leverett, Mass.

Endorsement FROM BATTLE CREEK.

(From the Battle Creek Moon.)

Mostly every reader has heard of the 1st Michigan Cavalry: a famous old regiment indeed, with a record that every page of member may well point to with pride. Our representative called on Mr. John H. Johnson at 71 Kalamazoo street, the other day. He told of the hardships of the rebellion and how an injury received during the war has caused him years of untold misery and suffering. We will let him tell it himself. His interesting story was as follows: "I was severely kicked by a horse in the lower part of the back. The injury did not yield to medical treatment, although I went to the hospital, and I have suffered more or less at times, intensely, ever since. During severe attacks I would be confined to my bed, almost unable to move; my kidneys were so bad that I was forced to use a catheter to urinate. I tried everything that I heard of with little or no relief, and so year after year has passed with suffering and no apparent change of help. During a bad attack which confined me to my bed I read of Doan's Kidney Pills; my confidence in everything was so shaken that, although a box of the pills cost me $1.00, I bought a box and tried them. The result of their use has been so good I wish to be known: after the first box I was very much relieved, and continuing their use I am now able to attend to my work, and feel better than I have for years; have little use for the catheter, and wish to say that Doan's Kidney Pills have done more for me than all the medical treatment of any kind I have used during the years I have suffered."

"The lame and aching back, the weary, worn-out feeling, the headache, backache, sideache are all indications that the kidneys are not working properly; it is easy to cure this evil," says Mr. Johnson, did by taking Doan's Kidney Pills, price 50 cents, for sale by all dealers, or mailed by Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. CHAPTER I

EVERY time it moved it moaned. On calm summer days when the sea was smooth it seemed to rest in peace, as if meditating in silence on its griefs. When gales swept over the water from the southwest it rocked in restless, uncertain motions and mingled a dismal voice with the roar of the surf, the tolling of the fog-bell, and the cries of the seabirds as it moaned and moaned in perpetual reiteration as if it had a tale to tell, but could only mourn over it in fitful inarticulate sighs meaning much and saying little. On calm days and nights, when there was only a gentle swell moving in from the Atlantic, it spoke slowly at intervals, like a child that sobs over some little grief that is past, but not forgotten.

To the fishermen it was a commonplace affair. An iron buoy anchored in mid-channel just at the entrance of the little port,—at once a guide and warning. Within the buoy was a curious arrangement of valves, air and water-chambers, and pipes. On top was a steam whistle. When the buoy swayed on the waves the water entered its hollow chambers dived to one side, and the valves opened to admit air to fill the vacuum caused by the moving water. When the wave passed and the buoy keeled over in the opposite direction the air-valve closed, and the water within, rushing back to its first position, forced out the imprisoned air through the whistle, and it spoke, in a harsh and mournful note. The sound began as a murmur, swelled out to a discordant forte, and then died away in a despairing sigh. At the next roll of the huge iron mass it moaned again in the same manner. If it rolled one way the right-hand valve opened and admitted a supply of air; when it rolled the other way the left-hand valve opened; and thus it kept up its dismal crying at every wave that swept beneath it. The note could be heard for more than a mile, and sailing-masters bound into the little harbor listened for it through the darkness, through fog and storm, as a guide to port and a home.

To the under side of the great iron buoy was secured a chain that extended down through the green water to a massive rock below, a rock whereon the hopes of a lifetime were wrecked and lost long years ago. On yachting parties sailing out the port the moaning buoy had a depressing effect. Its unending moan seemed to be for the young life whose fate was bound up in some strange secret lost in the sea. They listened to its note, floating faint and sad over the blue water, and wondered if they would solve the riddle of that life, if ever knight would come to redress a grievous wrong.

It is said the boys knew all about it, and would tell everything, if it could speak. Being merely a buoy, it could only moan.

Two miles to the west by north stood the harbor light. It was a short round tower of brick and painted white. At the top was the black lantern, its shining windows decked in yellow curtains by day and opening a lurid eye on sea and land by night. The light-house, too, was said to be familiar with the lost secret under the sea, and every night appeared to look furtively all around the horizon as if revolving something in its mind and yet not daring to speak of it. It could only look askance at the world and wait. There was behind the light-house a small white house with a little garden, grass-plot and picket fence. Everything was orderly, neat, and comfortable, as befitted the residence of an official of the United States government. There was also besides the house a wooden structure, half trellis, half tower, in which hung a bell. Beneath the wooden cage where hung the bell was a long pendulum and a chain and heavy weight, these being parts of the clock-work whereby the bell was rung when gray fogs crept up from the misty Atlantic.

The light-house stood at the extreme point of a miniature Cape Cod at the southeast end of the island, and in the bay formed by the curving arm of the cape was an anchoring-ground for the fishing-boats and yachts that used it for a summer harbor. Along the shore of this bay were the few scattered houses of the little village. On the south side towards the sea stood the big yellowish-green hotel and the fantastic cottages of the transient guests who made the cape their summer pleasure-ground.

By some oversight on the part of the officers of the United States Coast survey, the exact position, latitude and longitude of the light-house and the port were not put on any of the official maps. Neither were there any sailing directions printed giving the right course to take to enter the port or find the moaning buoy. It is really not important, because he who steers by "the light that never was on sea or land" can find any port where life and love have found an anchorage.

The buoy was known to the fishermen and visitors at Wilson's Holl as "the two-fathom buoy." It was painted in alternate horizontal stripes of black and red; and everyone knows that the Light-House Board by these marks meant to say that the buoy marked an obstruction in mid-channel, and that the navigator in entering port might pass on either side of it in safety. It also stood as the mark of a terrible obstruction at the entrance of a fair young life. He who would come to the knowledge of all she was and all she did and said must steer carefully and pass by on either side the moaning moments of a mystery and heavy sorrow. Two fathoms deep in her young heart lay the unspoken secret of her life and the sea.

Could there be any connection between that prosy buoy and a young girl's life and love? Wait. Everything comes ashore at last.

People wondered why old Capt. Breeze Johnson gave his daughter such a strange name. Capt. Johnson, retired Sandy Hook pilot, and now keeper of the light-house, best knew what the three letters that made his daughter's name meant—if they meant anything. She had never been baptised; the name had simply been given to her by the old Captain, and apparently for no reason whatever. There were those in the village who said it was an "outlandish heathen name anyway, and not fit for a sweet young thing like old Capt. Johnson's darter."

Merely three letters—Mai. Mai Johnson. The old man, her father, pronounced it as if spelled "May," so, for those who never saw it written out, it seemed a proper and rather pretty name for a young girl just touching seventeen.

As for Mai herself, she thought it curious spelling merely some pretty conceit of her father's fancy, and wore her name with becoming pride and dignity. It was her name, and it never entered her young heart to ask what it meant. The old man knew in part, and so did the moaning buoy, but one would not tell, and the other spoke only in moans no man could understand. The season had fairly opened. The white steamboats had already begun to make their daily trips to Wilson's Holl from New London, Conn. The procession of vessels continually drifting along the horizon to the north-east, bound east or west between Long Island sound and the Vineyard, or turning southeast past the cape and making for the open sea, had largely increased. Already a yacht or two had anchored at the Holl, and the yellowish-green hotel and fantastic cottages were open and expectant of summer boarders. There was a broad piazza at the front of the hotel, where the guests sat to view the sea spread out before them; and here, on a bright morning early in July, sat two ladies—mothers of grown-up daughters, and women prepared to look at the world in a certain calm expectation of anything that might happen to the advantage of their blooming girls.

"Did you see the arrival last night?"

"No. I understood the barge came over from the steamboat-landing with only a man. I was not interested."

"You would have been, had you seen him."

"Have you learned his name, my dear?"

"I examined the hotel register after breakfast, because he sat next to our table. Rather good-looking—fine eyes—and very gentlemanly, of course. A man that many girls would like, though I must confess I did not."

"What is his name?"

"Tell you as soon as I come to it. It's a little singular, because I hear his mother, who was a widow for many years, has married again—married very well, too, for her, and for the young man, too, for I hear he has nothing and spent it all in Paris."

"And who was she?"

"His mother? Oh, I don't know; but she first married some person by the name of Yardsstick."

"Yardsstick?"

"Yes. Curious name—pronounced Yedstick, with the accent on the first syllable, and spelled with an ie. Royal Yardsstick is his name."

"Then she added, in a lower voice,—

"Here he comes now."

A young man about 28 years of age walked slowly out of the open door of the hotel. He was dressed in white flannel, and seemed very much at ease with himself and the world. He gazed round with an air of calm assurance on the few ladies and children scattered over the piazza, and then looked out over the garden, the path along the bluff, and the blue sea beyond. The view did not seem to interest him in the least, and he looked a trifle bored, as if he wondered why he should be cast upon such a charming and uneventful shore. Seeing the top of the light-house, he sauntered down the steps and took a leisurely pace along the path that followed the shore on top of the sandy dunes that bordered the broad beach.

"I do not like him."

"Why not, dear? I'm sure he's very handsome."

"Disappointed,—or has been. Comes down here for rest-cure. I shall tell my Milly to decline an introduction."

"It may not be asked, dear."

"Well, I must say I don't see why not. Milly is not as handsome as your Clara, my dear, but she's very bright, you must admit."

"Milly can take care of herself."

"Perfectly; but I shall decline any advances,—if made; and I hope they will not be."

"Why not?"

"I do not know. I do not like him; that's all."

The young man wandered aimlessly along the path on the bluff, as if in no haste. Well might he linger, for at his feet lay the broad beach, now creamy with breaking surf, and, beyond, the blue sea sparkling in the sun and stirred by a salt and fragrant breeze. To the left the sandy dunes, here and there dotted with patches of bronze-colored grass and dark wax-berry-bushes stretched off towards a fringe of small pines and oaks. Before him stood the quaint tower of the light-house. With all this charming scene and beautiful day, he was gloomy and silent. Why had his mother insisted on his coming down to this dreary place? He had not needed rest; he wanted money. If he had that he would leave this stupid country and once more cross the water to charming Paris. He looked over the sea that he had crossed only three days before with a little sigh of regret,—regret for past pleasures, regret for things done that could never be undone.

"And here I must stay for two weeks or more, till they come down here for the summer,—or till she lets me have some money."

Just then he reached the neat wooden fence that stretched across the end of the cape and enclosed the plot of land belonging to the government and on which the light-house stood. Just where the path met the fence there was a stile or low place in the fence, with a big yellow boulder for a step over the gap. He paused here a moment debating whether he would enter the government grounds or return to the hotel, when the door of the little white house opened, and a young girl stepped out on the flat blue boulder that served as a door stone and came briskly towards the stile. She was neatly and plainly dressed, and wore a large white sun-bonnet that half hid her face. She seemed preoccupied, and did not observe the stranger by the fence till she was close to the stile.

"Allow me to help you over, miss."

She paused abruptly to see who spoke, and found young Mr. Royal Yardsstick at the stile with one hand offered as if to help her over. The next instant she stepped easily and gracefully over the stile, and said: "Thank you, I can help myself."

"Beg pardon, miss. I'm a stranger here. Can you tell me the name of this light-house?"

"I can. I live here—with my father."

"He was not accustomed to this particular phase of the Massachusetts female mind, and was vexed, though he took care not to show it.

"What is it called?"

"Hedgefence Light. Good morning, sir."

With that she moved away towards the hotel with a free and vigorous step, as if quite able to take care of herself.

Mr. Royal Yardsstick had a new sensation. Never before had he met with quite this kind of rebuff. Women commonly bowed down to him, or he thought they did. And those who he imagined declined his acquaintance had always left an impression that they had been pleased to meet him—once.

"She has gone to the hotel on some errand. From the lay of the land, she must come back on this path. I may as well look about here for a little while and see what happens. I'll go into the light-house,—I always did enjoy light-houses,—and see what sort of a creature the father may be."

The young man watched the retreating figure as it followed the path on the bluff. Here was a girl of character and with a mind of her own. How different from one he knew in Paris!

"If Julie had been like that, I shouldn't be in this hole—figuratively speaking—and I might never have seen Wilson's Holl, which would be a blessing."

By this time he had crossed the little yard, and, mounting the great door-step, he knocked at the green door of the house.

"I wonder what the father is like?"

To his surprise, the wooden door with green panels, promptly opened wide, and a blond curly-haired giant in brown overalls stood before him.

"Ah! Beg pardon. Do you allow visitors to the light? I'm greatly interested in such things."

"Visitors admitted to the tower only from twelve till one. Read the notice on the tower."

With that the door was quietly closed in his face.

THE BLIND LOVE THE MUTE.

Mysterious Old Woman and Sightless Girls Doing the Art Institute.

They tell a story over at the Art Institute on the lake front about an old woman who goes there on free days leading a blind girl, says Chicago Tribune. The old woman totters in her steps and her face is wrinkled. Her attire is not shabby, but it is severely plain and doesn't belong to this generation. The girl has a face as white as marble and her blind eyes are unusually full. Her mouth is expressive and a singularly sad smile nestles about it. Somebody who asked the old woman one day tells that the twin live on Mohawk street and that the girl has been blind since she was 4 years old. She is now 12. The girl always, since she was old enough to know, evinced a passion for art. At one time she undertook drawing, but had to quit it. They say she plays naturally and sweetly. But her strong like is art in sculpture. The old woman leads the child among the statuary and reproductions of the various rooms, mentioning, of course, anything new. The girl has learned the location of the principal works, and after they have been in one room for awhile the girl will say to the woman: "Let's go into the room where —," mentioning what it is she wants to "see," as she expresses it. One of her favorites is the group of Amphion and Zeus chaining Dirce to the bull. Some one told her the story one day, and it seemed to fascinate her, and she asked several curious questions about it. But after they have wandered about the rooms most of the day the girl nearly always says to the woman: "Let's go and see the child that is listening to the sea." The work is in one of the corridors, and has been noticed with interest by thousands. The child said one day when she was told that the figure was listening to the murmur of the sea, and that it appeared to please her, "then she must be blind." Several people have asked the woman her name, but she evades the inquiry, and when the child is questioned she nestles to the woman and makes no reply. It is believed that they are mother and child.

The Culture of Politeness.

M. Brunetiere of the French academy contributes an article on "Education and Instruction," in which he makes remarks that are worth quoting, to the effect that the first interest of the French community being to endure and to continue on the same lines, the treatment of the young must be to a certain extent subordinate to this general theory and not wholly based on the individual development of the boy and girl. French politeness, for instance, is an integral attribute of France as we have always known her, and has partly molded her literary expressions and contributed to the wide diffusion of her language. "Thus the well-bred man is he who controls himself in the interest of others. The idea of a certain amount of constraint is still at the base of continental education. . . . To breed up or to train a child is to habituate it to repress such of its movements, to restrain such of its moods, to keep to itself such of its sentiments as might annoy or alarm others. The general interest, which in the sphere of manners is the interest of the world, is therefore recognized as superior to that of the individual, and as sufficiently important to require each of us to subordinate, to submit, to bend his own nature, and so we come to the formula of individual constraint in favor of a social gain."

Just Like Him.

"Mom," said a boy to his mother, "where's the blacking?"

"I don't know," said the boy's mother, "unless Philip had it."

Philip was the boy's elder brother. The blacking outfit was kept in a blacking-stand in Philip's room; he had found it pretty cold in his room that morning and so he had taken the things out into the dining room and blackened his shoes there, and when he got through he had left the things there.

"Just like him," said Philip's brother, and then, not finding the dining room quite warm enough to suit him, he gathered the things and went and blacked his shoes in the kitchen, and when he got through he left the things there.—New York Sun.

A Millionaire Anarchist.

There was a millionaire among the anarchists recently expelled by the federal council of Switzerland. He was an Italian, named Borghetti, and a temporary resident at Lugano, and a great anarchist center in Europe. Borghetti is only 25 years old. He was dressed very simply, but kept open house for his fellow revolutionists, who frequently had recourse also to his purse. Borghetti's father, who did not share the anti-patriotic and anarchistic ideas of his son, used to hoist the Italian flag on national occasions, but young Borghetti promptly replaced it with the red banner of the revolutionists.

WRITING TO NEWSPAPERS.

"Aunt Roxana" Has a Few Words of Commiseration on the Authors.

Aunt Roxana Sheldon laid down the monthly periodical which she had been perusing, and looked over her spectacles at her niece, who sat crocheting in "the other window." "Vandely," she said, "where do you suppose the folks that send these questions to the house-keeper's columns in this paper was brought up?"

"I don't know, I'm sure, Aunt Roxa," replied the niece, with a slight blush.

"Vandely," said Miss Sheldon, after another keen glance over her spectacles, "they ever sent any such questions to one of them papers?"

"Once," admitted Vandella, meekly; "when I was first married, an' mother, had died. But the answers didn't do me much good. I couldn't get the things I was told to where we lived."

"I presume to say not," said Miss Sheldon, somewhat modified. "You ought to know, for you've got to be well acquainted with your husband's folks then, an' I s'pose you didn't feel to. Cyrus orter have told you to send right on to me. Why, there's a woman here wants to know what'll kill ants, an' keep 'em out of her sugar bucket an' so on; an' they've give her a receipt that'd take me a good long spell to study out, what with 'the' of one thing an' 'sperits' of another; an' I mistrust 'twould be a useless mess when 'twas put together. I've a notion to write to that poor creature myself, only I don't know how to do it, except that she's signed her name 'Clover X.' I ain't ever met with many names begin with X outside of the dictionary, but it seems she's got one of 'em. An' don't know how to get rid of ants?"

"I had considerable trouble with ants myself," said Vandella, as Miss Sheldon once more turned her searching gaze upon her. "That was what I wrote about."

"An' you didn't know that a little piece of yaller sulphur stick—or powder, either, for the matter of that, would set every one of them little plagues out into the sand agin!" ejaculated Miss Sheldon. "An' like as not you didn't know that dough would catch rats that wouldn't pay no attention to cheese nor meat. An' I presume to say you never heard that a teaspoonful of cornstarch in a box of salt would keep it from cakin' up in lumps. An' more'n likely you—But there!" Miss Sheldon broke off abruptly, "you're a real well-meanin' girl, an' I shall feel to be easier on the folks that ask them questions after this, seem as my own niece by marriage has been one of 'em. But I don't see what Cyrus was thinkin' of—not but what you're a good girl—but I don't see what he was thinkin' of when he offered himself. But then," concluded Miss Sheldon, "men's minds are made up in such a queer way that the real important things, like ants an' rats an' so on, don't seem to weigh with 'em hardly a mite when they come to gettin' married; an' Cyrus was just like all the rest, I presume to say."

A wise little thinker of 4 years, having been taught that the body was but the clothing for this world, made a touchingly pretty remark a short time ago. Walking with her father through the village cemetery, pointing to the graves, she eyed wonderingly: "What are these for?" Her father, somewhat puzzled what to say, answered: "They belong to the people who have gone to heaven." "To the angels?" "Yes," "Ah!" commented the little one, "this is where they left their clothes."

Husband and Wife Ask for Lodging.

Accompanied by his young wife Thomas Broderick walked into a Chicago police station recently and asked for lodging. Both were weak and exhausted from lack of food and from a day spent in walking the streets. Broderick is a lawyer, having been admitted to the bar in 1891. Up a few days ago his home was in Lincoln, Neb. Mrs. Broderick was sent to the woman's annex and her husband was given a bench in the court-room.

Wise and Otherwise.

An exchange declares that the times must be very hard, for of the twenty-six letters of the alphabet, all but four are out of work.

The water wheel can only keep the machinery in operation as long as the stream which turns it keeps moving. So with advertising. If you cease to advertise you take away the power that drives business in your direction, and thus, like the wheel, it comes to a standstill.

A retired farmer, who has had a wide experience, says he always plants a bean or two in each potato hill, and never discovers a bug on the potato tubers where beans were grown in the same hill. It is a plan well worth trying, as it will surely result in a crop of beans and probably less bugs.

The editor of a cotemporary blandly remarks: Put tags on your chickens if you wish to identify them after death. We are going to do great bodily harm to the first piece of poultry that puts its scratches into our flower beds. No ten cent hen is going to destroy a fifty-cent plant for us this year, if we can help it.

Some statistician has computed the following: From a bushel of corn a dealer gets four gallons of whiskey, which retails for sixteen dollars. Of this the Government gets three dollars; the retailer, seven, the distiller, four; the railroad, one; the farmer who raised the corn, forty cents; the customer ten days or more in the lock up; and the policeman and judge get good salaries for sending him there. There are several sermons and essays on political economy lurking in this calculation.

An editor of one of our western exchanges has made the following remarkable discovery: "The stationery printed at this shop is giving the best of satisfaction. We printed statements for one of our business men a short time ago and he has already collected a small fortune. Two months ago a young man bought some paper and envelopes of us to write to his sweetheart, now he is married. Another man forged the name of a friend on a note printed here, and now he is in the penitentiary. By using our stationery one can collect old accounts, tell fortunes, make rain, change the color of the hair, have their teeth extracted without pain, find out the name of your future husband or wife, be successful in business, triumph over their enemies and be elected to office. Call early and avoid the rush.

OBITUARY.

It is with sincere regret that we announce the death of May Livingstone, which took place on May 14.

Miss Livingstone was born in London, Ontario, April 10, 1856. The family moved to Michigan in 1881, and came to Cass City about three years ago. Some sixteen or eighteen years ago Miss Livingstone made a public profession of religion, but it may be said that, like Timothy, she knew the Scriptures from her childhood. Patient and sweet in disposition, all who knew her loved her. Much sympathy is felt for the afflicted family.

The funeral services were held at the home and were attended by a large concourse of people, Rev. B. J. Baxter officiating.

Homely Wrinkles.

"One for the blackbird, one for the crow, Two for the catwren, and three to grow."—Old rule for corn-planting.

To sew leather use a sewing machine needle in an awl handle.

"All things come to him who wait," but he must not wait idly. Labor and wait.

Do not hang pictures above the "eye line." They look better low and are in reach for cleaning.

To clean zinc, wet it over with vinegar, let it remain a few minutes, then wash off.

Dip your brooms in a kettle of strong suds every week or two; they will last longer and be easier on the carpets.

"At what age were you married," asked he inquisitively. But she was equal to the emergency and quietly responded "At the parsonage."

A ruffle put across the bottom of a kitchen apron is a useful ornamentation for it stands out from the gown beneath and catches whatever falls down from the apron above.

When cleaning house it is convenient to have a stick with a deep notch in the end with which to lift picture wires and cords off their hooks. It saves much climbing up and down.

Do not pack away any winter clothing with soiled spots on it. The moths rovel in grease spots. All garments should be brushed inside and out, the spots washed off with Japanese cleansing fluid or else water with a little ammonia in it, then thoroughly dried.

To get rid of carpet bugs, make a solution of a little Parisgreen (poison) in water. Soak it in some pieces of woolen goods, dry and put them around under the edge of the carpet and tack it down.

Grease may be drawn out of wall paper thus: Scrape finely some kumlin, or potter's or pipe clay; wet to a paste with water, spread over the spot, and when dry brush off. Repeat, if the grease is not all out.

Regular polishing wax is sold for stained and hardwood floors, but a good substitute may be made by melting in a pan placed over hot water, a pound of beeswax and three pints of turpentine, adding more turpentine if a thin polish is sufficient.

Circuit Court News.

Walter L. Loranger, of Vassar, passed a very creditable examination and was admitted to the bar on Tuesday.

All cases were put over until next week on account of a death in the Judge's family, the judge being called away by telegram.

The trial of Jas. G. Hall, Frank Walton and Chas. Robinson has occupied the attention of the court for two days. These are the parties implicated in the shooting affray at Vassar wherein Marshal McIntyre was shot on Dec. 8th last. The arguments were being made yesterday afternoon but a decision had not been arrived at.

Telephone Plant.

A representative of this paper last week had the pleasure of making a visit to the laboratory and workshop of W. J. Moore, the Elmer City telephone man and electrical genius.

We were not only surprised at the amount of business he is doing but had our expectations completely upset by the general use which has been made of the lighting fluid to further and convenience all stages of the work of manufacturing and constructing telephones and electrical supplies of all kinds. Mr. Moore's shop is a perfect maze of dynamos, motors, batteries, wires, etc., at once reminding one of the stories of Edison's early days and experiments; and they are all too of his own contrivance and invention. A fifty candle power electric light enables the work to go on both day and night. A buzzing, whirring, fire eating dynamo and motor, supplies power to run machines for drilling and turning the wood and metal work. Other devices are also in process of construction. At the time of our visit a large number of telephones were being crated for shipment to Casewille, where an exchange has been put in. Mr. Moore is constantly improving his telephones and has lately made some additions and alternations which places his instrument clearly in advance of any now in use in these parts. Some features especially noticeable are the dry battery new receiver and neat and convenient wall boards and boxes. Mr. Moore has three assistants and is very busy trying to keep up with increasing orders. —Sauls Republican.

Frozen Milk.

The French industry of icing milk is an original departure in tinued commodities. The milk is frozen and placed in block form in tins and on the part of the purchaser requires to be melted previous to use. Being hermetically sealed, the commodity thus need preserves its form until it is required, when a minute's exposure to the sun's rays or to the heat of the fire is all that is necessary to reduce it to a liquid condition. —Baltimore Sun.

To Remove Ink Stains.

Ink stains on carpets or woolen goods can be removed while they are fresh by taking common baking soda or salaratus, rubbing it well into the spots and then rinsing with warm water. The same process will remove dried ink spots from cotton goods if the spot has not been wet with water before the salaratus is applied. —Jewelers' Circular.

Why She Did.

W. C. T. U. COLUMN.

Notes and Comment.

To say that high license will close up the small dives and low saloons is all bosh. You can no more legalize the liquor traffic without having dives than a sewer without an outlet. The high license "respectable" saloon is the inlet and the dive is the outlet.

Two little girls were late for Sunday school. One of them proposed that they kneel and pray that they would reach school in time. "No" said the other "let us run and pray on the way."

The Western Christian Advocate gives this "Sum For the Boys:" "If it costs $1,000 a year to carry on a church which saves five souls every year, and if a drinkshop license holder pays $250 a year for the privilege of ruining five souls, how long will it take a town having a population of 6,000, with five churches and fifteen drinkshops to get to the devil?" We pass that over to some of our high license advocates.

Mark these words: This country will never witness a revival in religion until the church as a whole gets on the right side of the prohibition question. So long as church members vote to open pitfalls to start men on the road to hell the Lord will pay no heed to the prayers of these hypocrites to save the drunkard—to pull the victims out of the pits the church members help to dig. The prayer of such people is an abomination to the Lord of hosts.
