BUILT IN 1881 for $2,600 the Cultural Center served as a basketball court, newspaper office and meeting place for generations of Cass Cityans. It will be padlocked Dec. 31 and sold as soon as practical.

WINDOWS and walls are crumbling. The state fire marshall's office says the building is unsafe.

End of an era! Township to close Cultural Center

The Cass City Cultural Center, once a hub of activity in the community, will sink into the oblivion reserved for places and people whose time has come and gone.

The building, constructed in 1881, will be padlocked Dec. 31 and the Elkland Township Board will sell the building that has be-come a white elephant. The decision was reached Monday night at the regular meeting of the board at the Elkland Township Fire

Attending the meeting to outline problems connected with the building were Mike Weaver and Lynda McIntosh, Cass City village council members, and Lou LaPonsie, village superintendent.

ing that the township owns.

This year the village budgeted $3,000 while revenues were $200 in 1983 and $50 so far this year. The township budget was $2,000, Art Randall, treasurer, said.

The amount of operating loss is not the primary cause for abandoning the building.

The condition of the building and repairs necessary to meet state-mandated safety regulations is. A recent inspection by Lt. R.G. Haley, State Fire Mar-shall's office, Flint, revealed that neither the basement nor the second floor can be used and he says that the building is not structurally sound, especially the second floor. The Under the agreement floor has settled or pulled away from the wall at least floor had already been abandoned for reasons before the inspec-

There is an even more serious problem with the building, LaPonsie told the board. Within a year the law will require the building to be barrier free for handicapped persons.

Because a ramp into the building is not feasible, the alternative would be installing an elevator, thought to be far out of financial reach.

Board members wondered if perhaps the Cass Historical Society might be interested in taking over the building.

Jack Esau, a member of the society, said that it would be impossible. We are mostly a group of older persons, he said, that meet a few times a year with a very limited budget.

Since the society is not interested, it is likely that the property will be sold to the highest bidder after it

The board voted to wait until the end of the year before acting because the Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts use the facility five days a week and the grace period is designed to give them time to find new quarters.

Hunting season opens Thursday and as usual we'll publish a picture of the first person who checks in with a buck. After lucky number one it will take a trophy type rack or some other unusual feature to merit a picture. It never occurred to me until a handicapped friend pointed it out when discussing the election. I drove by a couple of times, he said, but didn't stop because there was no place to park. There is no place reserved for handicapped parking at the Elkland Township Hall.

• Stacey Wilson, a sixthgrader, boarded the Detroit city bus that would take her to St. Brigid School on Schoolcraft Ave. She was carrying a $1 bill for bus fare and two $20 bills folded together to pay her school tuition. The worst thing pos-

Even a three-year-old sible happened. Instead of can punch-vote. All you the dollar bill, she dropped to count the thousands of dollar bills that pour through the system every day. Stacey obviously didn't have a prayer in school of ever seeing her two $20 bills again. But Sister Sweeney, the principal at St. Brigid's, gave it a try anyway. She contacted sev-eral Department of Transportation divisions and ultimately found a sympathetic ear attached to John Proctor, a transportation district superintendent. He started a search in the right place, and the two twenties were found and returned to

"I believe that it is people like Mr. Proctor who continue to give us faith in our city despite what outsiders might say," Sister Marie told me. And she told Proctor: "I would like to shout this 'Good News' throughout our city so others could know that there are still many good, dedicated, honest people in city positions. It is people like you that make me glad that I live and work in Detroit."

And John Proctor received a poem from Stacey Wilson: "Roses are red, Violets are blue, I want to say thank you, God bless you, we love you.'

Some things are worth a lot more than $40.

Passed through Minden City the other day as the bulldozers and the backhoes were busy digging up the streets.

It's a familiar sight in small towns these days. Gagetown and Owendale recently went through it as communities have been forced to establish sewer systems to avoid pollution.

That scene has to have been repeated thousands of times across the country. It brings home to me the vast amounts that the Federal government spends.

The lion's share of the money for this work is dis-hed out from Washington, yet you hear very little about this expense.

As a conservationist, the thought here is that the money is well spent. Whatever we can do to protect the land and the air for the generations that follow is worth it.

It's worth it, but it is mind boggling. That's because the money spent here is not abstract, not just a figure on paper.
When a bulldozer starts work everyone has at least a hazy idea of what it costs to run that machine and hire the men to do the work.

You look at the money spent in tiny Minden City or for the Industrial Development Park in Cass City and it blows your mind when you consider that this kind of spending is nation wide.

Intellectually, we all realize that the amount spent on pollution control is like a bucket of sand at the beach compared to funds poured into national defense The trouble is the billions spent on defense is abstract. The money we see expended to dig a ditch is not. We all can relate to It's probably true that more people endorse spending for defense than they would for pollution control.

It would be interesting to see what kind of results would be obtained if the voters were asked to pay, say 20 mills, for defense. It's sure that they pay more than that now without really thinking about it.

It's the opinion here that most of the hawks would become more dove like if it were possible to vote on whether to pay or not to pay.
Many would feel all of a sudden that having enough atomic bombs to destroy the world a dozen times is adequate and that we really don't need any more.

Personally, I would feel great if I could register one other firemen waited for solid no vote to the ever in- about 30 minutes for a Decreasing money thrown troit Edison crew to arrive away to the Pentagon each and put the electric line

When Kathy Neuman opened the doors to her new store, Kid's Village, recently she was realizing a life-long ambition.

store is Neuman's first attempt at retailing. She has lived in Cass City for seven years with her husband, Larry. They chose Cass City because Mrs. Neuman worked in the dental office of Dr. D.E. Rawson and he works in Saginaw. They moved to the community from homes in Sebewaing and Pigeon.

The Neumans have two. children, Allyson, 6 months, and Ryan, $2^{1/2}$ years. One of the reasons for opening the children's store was the trouble she had finding clothes for her

The store handles name brand clothing in sizes infants through 6x-7. In the short time we've been open, Mrs. Neuman reports, there has been a lot of interest in our baby shower registry program.

Before a baby shower is held the expectant mother registers at the store and persons attending can then be advised of what gifts are needed. For registering, the expectant mother receives a free gift.

The store has scheduled its grand opening Friday and Saturday.

UNITED WAY president Arthur Holmberg paints the new total of $12,500 for the Elkland-Novesta United Way fund drive as of Tuesday. The goal for the two township areas is $16,000.

Commissioners sharpen budget cutting knife

At a public hearing Tuesday, the Tuscola County commissioners presented a proposed general fund budget for 1985. The budget, made by commissioners Royce Russell and Kenneth Kennedy, is based on total anticipated funds of $4,970,093. This is $392,583 less than the $5,362,676 that the county had for 1984.

According to the report, the county will have a proiected total revenue of $4,912,117 for 1985, an increase of $147,485 over 1984's projected revenue of $4,764,632. But the projected fund balance that will be carried over from the 1984 budget is $57,976. This is $540,068 less than the $598.044 that the commission had in the fund balance for the beginning of 1984.

According to the budget, the biggest overrun for a county funded budget for 1984 was the Child Care -Probate Court, which began the year with a budget of $220,000. Before the year was over, the commissioners had more than doubled the budget. The projected budget to finish the year for the child care fund is $479.584. For 1985 the commissioners have budgeted $380,000 for child County commission chairperson Donna Rayl said that the budget overrun for probate court was the "straw that broke the camel's back.

The Sheriff's Department has requested a 1985 budget of $1,138,579, but the projected 1985 budget recommends $1,060,879. In 1984 the department started the year with a $1,044,771 budget. The projected budget for the rest of 1984 is about $53,000 more than was projected.

According to Rayl, a majority of the cuts will be made in the overtime for deputies. The county Medical Care Facility will also feel the budget cutting knife with a recommended budget of $150,000. This is $76,809 less than they had requested for 1985. It is also less than the 1984 budget of $195,000.

Although one of the smaller budgets, the soil conservation department will receive one of the largest percentage budget cuts. They had requested a budget of $7,800 for 1985, the same as for 1984. They have a budget recommendation of $3,800, less than half of their

New books at the library

PIECES OF MY MIND by Andrew A. Rooney (nonfiction). Rooney can celebrate a wastebasket, dither about weeding his library, ponder the demise of the icebox, quake his way through the flu and worry about Christmas. Big issues sometimes involve him; more often he discusses the small annoyances, pleasures, frustrations and paradoxes visited on everyman U.S.A. Whatever he turns over in his mind is brought forth with rueful wit, a sense of the ridiculous and the down-to-earth notion that we are fellow sufferers. This new collection of some 100 reflections on our crazy but sometimes wonderful world shows that Rooney hasn't lost his touch turning the ordinary into something

THE REST OF US: THE RISE OF AMERICA'S EASTERN EUROPEAN JEWS by Stephen Birmingham (non-fiction). Birmingham writes of the largest group turn-of-the-century Russian Jews, who by 1915 accounted for one-quarter of New York City's population. Poor, Yiddish-speaking, strange in their ways, the newcomers flocked to the Lower East Side, where they created a noisy world of peddlers' pushcarts and began their phenomenal rise into the American mainstream. He focuses on the greatest successes - from the entrepreneurs David Sarnoff, Samuel Bronfman and Helena Rubinstein to the gangster Meyer Lansky - who soon "outpowered" even their unsympathetic coreligionists from Germany. Throughout there is the larger immigrant experience - the flight from Europe, the tenement lives, the move into better neighborhoods ("the Grand Concourse via City College") and suburbia.

MOURNING INTO DANCING by Laurel Lee (nonfiction). Walking through the Fire and Signs of Spring, Lee's earlier inspirational journals, recorded how she coped with major crises: cancer during her pregnancy and her husband's defection while she was hospitalized. Now divorced (twice), her cancer in remission, she carries on as writer, lecturer on the Christian witness network and single parent of three. The current journal takes her through a second ill-fated marriage, to a producer of religious shows who "knew the zip codes for America." The demise of that marriage left her financially bankrupt, emotionally spent but, so she maintains, spiritually strengthened.

Plenty of deer await hunters

Area deer hunters can expect to find as many deer this year as they have in past hunting seasons, according to Bud Jarvis, wildlife biologist for the Michigan Conservation Department, Caro post. He said that deer hunters can expect a good deer herd in the Cass City area and surrounding areas.

Jarvis said that in Huron County, from Bad Axe east, and in the northwestern townships of Sanilac County, deer hunters can expect as good, if not better hunting than last year.

He said that in the southern townships of Tuscola County the deer herd is not as large as in the northeastern part of the county.

Jarvis said that their prediction of the deer herd is

"If that is any indication, we have more deer this year than last," Jarvis

He added that because farmers have not harvested all of their corn yet, hunters will have more difficulty in finding the deer this year.

The Great Lakes states will be the country's next economic "sunbelt," California engineer told a recent public hearing on Michigan's infrastructure.

Wood crafted wall hangings are specialty of Jerri Kitchen

The canvas that Jerri different forms since she Kitchen uses for her paint-became interested in painting hobby has taken many ing when she was 12.

JERRI KITCHEN puts the finishing touches on one of the

TWO OF the many Care Bear wall hangings that Jerri

Kitchen has made for friends, family and for sale.

many different woodcraft wall hanging designs that she cals on a racing car that her brother-in-law used to own, and she has painted decorative scenes on the windows of her parents' store in Caro.

Kitchen has now turned her hobby to painting homemade woodcraft items such as ducks, miniature rocking horses and the popular children's Care Bear collection.

Kitchen's husband, Bob, an employee of Wesley's Milk Co., Cass City, cuts the designs for her projects out of plywood and pine. After Bob is done sanding off the rough edges, it is Jerri's turn to take the piece of wood, paint it, and add the details that will make the wood come to life.

Unlike others involved in making hand crafted wooden wall hangings, Kitchen designs her own pattern instead of purchasing the designs. She said that it is easy for her to draw out the design to be cut, and that way she is able to add her own personal touches to the design. The personal touch shows on the bottom of the wall hanging Care Bears, where she paints the name of the child that will receive the gift.

"I could do this all day," Kitchen said about painting the Care Bears. She added that a majority of the woodcrafted items are given to friends and family.

When it is for someone that I know, it is a lot more personal, and I enjoy it a lot more," she said.

Kitchen is preparing items for the Arts and Crafts Bazaar to be held at the Colony House Nov. 24. Several of Kitchen's wall hangings and knickknack items are for sale at the Nothing Ordinary gift shop in Cass City.

Kitchen said that she found out how popular the Care Bear design was after she made two of them for her girl friend's children. She said that her friend took them to work to show them to her friends and ended up with an order for nine more Care Bears.

Kitchen said that she wants to start painting wooden cutting boards with a pattern that matches people's dishes so that a person can have a matched set. She is also waiting for tole painting classes to be offered so that she can learn how to paint the country style figures.

Kitchen started painting the wall hanging plaques after she was laid off from General Cable in February and was looking for something to do to fill her free time. She added that if she was ever going to try to set up her own business, she would still want to operate out of her home, where she could still have the personal touch for her work.

Farm Bureau helps 73 candidates get elected

Michigan Farm Bureau's political action arm, AgriPac, scored a 90% success record in the 1984 general election, with 73 of its 81 endorsed "Friends of Ag-riculture" winning their campaigns.

"I am elated with the results of the 1984 election," said Jack Laurie, Tuscola County dairy farmer who chairs AgriPac. "I think the results, especially here in Michigan, substantiate the fact that Farm Bureau members are on the right track in being involved in endorsing and supporting political candidates who are friends of their indus-

The Michigan State University board of trustee races were of particular interest to Farm Bureau's political action committee. Laurie called the election of Branch County farmer Dean Pridgeon "an important step toward a bright future for MSU and for agriculture.

Federal farm legislation, which will be written by Congress in 1985, is the top concern of Michigan farmers, according to Laurie. His 20-member committee is charged with the responsibility of preparing a slate of policy recommendations for presentation to 509 voting delegates for their action at the Michigan Farm Bureau annual meeting, Nov. 27-30 in Grand Rapids. The committee met at Farm Bureau Center in Lansing this week to study said.

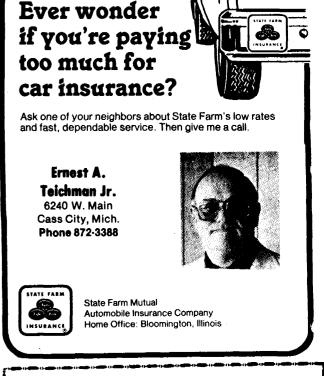

and correlate the nearly 1200 resolutions submitted by the organization's county units.

"Because of the efforts Michigan Farm Bureau and the American Farm Bureau Federation put into discussions of Farm Bill '85 over the past six to eight months, and the fact that encouraged every county Farm Bureau to be involved in developing policy on this issue, nearly two-thirds of our counti made significant input regarding what the new federal farm program should include," Laurie said. "This was the area of concern that, more than anything else, surfaced in the county resolutions.

"There is also a great deal of concern over water rights, which is an annual concern for farmers and one that hasn't been reso. ved yet. We see much concern, and rightfully so, about solid waste management--how will we dispose of the waste from our society? Are we going to do it in a solid waste disposal site in an agricultural area or is there a better alternative? Our members feel they must have input into decisions on these two critical

Expert area hunter tells how it is done

For many deer hunters, the opening day of hunting season will be their first day back in the woods since last hunting season.

According to Department of Natural Resources statistics, their chances of taking a buck are one in seven.

For Larry Hartwick, a veteran Cass City area deer hunter, by the time that hunting season arrived, he had already picked the area, the tree he will hunt from, and the buck that he wants to shoot.

Hartwick's statistics, 23 deer in 20 seasons of hunt-

Hartwick hunts both the bow season and the gun season. He can legally take one deer from each season.

Hartwick weighs all of the variables before he decides when, where and how he is going to hunt. "It isn't a matter of just picking a spot," he said. "It takes time to find the right spot. Most people aren't willing to spend that much year Hartwick's quarry is a 10-point buck with an estimated 20-inch wide rack. Hartwick said that he has been watching the buck since it was a year and a half old. The buck, now fully mature, is three and a half.

For this deer, and others that Hartwick hunts, everything has to be just right before he decides to go out for the day. Because of the location of the tree that he hunts from, the wind has to be primarily from the south, so his scent will not be blown into the area that the deer will be approaching from.

"You can't have your scent blowing towards a deer. That is probably the most common mistake that hunters make," he said. "It is especially critical in bow hunting because of how close the deer has to be." He added that a deer can smell a human at about 200 yards. This is well outside of the 15-20 yard range that he considers ideal to shoot

Because of previous ex-perience with the deer, Hartwick knows the deer will be approaching from a feeding area late in the afternoon or early evening. Hartwick added that he

for more than one or two consecutive days because he feels that his scent will be built up in the area. Like most deer hunters, when bow hunting he wears the camouflage to help him with the background. Hartwick said that the maximum height that a hunter should be in a tree stand is 10 to 12 feet. He prefers to be about six to eight feet above the ground. Another important factor in choosing a tree stand is to be sure that there are other trees in the area so that the hunter will not be silhouetted against the open sky. He said that the deer will not recognize that it is a man in the tree, but they will know that something is not natural, and they will avoid the area.

Hartwick prefers a tree stand, legal for bow hunting only, over a stand on the ground. He said that deer will not go through a woods looking up into the trees. They are concerned about danger on the ground. If a hunter is going to build a ground stand, Hartwick will not hunt the same area said that it should be built from natural cover that is

> "I don't like the idea of taking a bunch of logs and piling them up because it isn't natural. If you are going to do that, it should be done three or four weeks before season to give the deer a chance to get used to it," he said.

Hartwick said for bow hunting he likes to set up about 15 to 20 yards off a deer run for the ideal shot. With a shotgun or rifle, 20 to 30 yards is best.

He refuses to shoot at a deer unless he has a shot that he is sure will kill the deer instantly. He said that the deer should be approaching him at an angle.
That exposes the rib area.
He will aim for an area just behind the front shoulders so the arrow will pass through the heart and both lungs. If the arrow hits the mark, within four or five seconds the deer will die. He added that because the arrow is so sharp, unless it hits a large bone, the arrow will generally pass through the deer.

"It is like getting cut with a sharp knife...They don't even know that they are hit," he said.

Hartwick said that a deer will change its eating habits as the availability of food changes. This is because of farmers harvesting the crops that the deer feed on. He said that they may change areas as often as four times a year.
"You have to pay attention to the crop structure every year," he said. There are some locations that are good year after year, but they may be good for only a week or so."

"I look for the most isolated spot that has easy access to food and water, with heavy cover," Hartwick said. Corn and alfalfa fields are his two top choices to find deer feeding in.

He added that wooded areas that have been recently clear cut, and have grown up with poplar and aspen trees are good areas because of the heavy growth of small trees that offer good protection for the

the bulk of the large deer, will bed in quite heavy terrain," he said. "That is how they got to be large deer.

When the rifle season begins, Hartwick will travel to the isolated areas in the northern part of the state.

"I don"t like to hunt around here during gun season. There are just too many people," he said. He feels that for the most part, hunters in the area are "perfectly safe," but that he would rather hunt in an tougher," he said. area where there are fewer people around.

Hartwick has been waiting for several days for the ideal shot at the 10-point buck he has set his sights

"He didn't make it through two seasons by being stupid. When gun season starts he will disap pear," Hartwick said.

Cold weather gets harder to take

With winter coming on, why would anyone want to stay in Michigan?

Yvonne Burleson said that she does not plan on staying in Michigan, at least during the winters, too much longer. She is hoping to move to join her father and family in Tucson, Ariz., when she and her husband retire.

"I was born here, and I like to see the changing of the seasons," she said. She added that winter is for young people and she has seen her share of the cold weather.

Burleson, who works as a crossing guard for the Cass City School District, said that winter is the hardest part of the job. This is her ninth year as a crossing guard.

When she was younger she said that she enjoyed the winter weather on the family farm. She said that her family would go down to the river and go ice skat-ing and tobogganing, but now the warmth of Arizona sounds better to her.

"I guess that I am getting too old for winter," she said. She added that Saturday she talked to her father in Tucson and he said that it was cool outside. It was 70 degrees in Tucson Satur-

She added that she will miss the sweet corn and tomatoes that are grown in Michigan.

Encouraging Progress Against Hazardous Waste

It is estimated that more than 255 million tons of hazardous waste are generated annually under federal and state regulation. That amounts to a ton of waste for Volunteer groups are urging Congress to encourage private industry and government to find the safest methods of hazardous waste disposal.

This was just one of the findings of a recent three-day seminar attended by 150 members of the General Federation of Women's Clubs (GFWC), "Cooperation of all segments of society—industry and concerned citizenswill be needed if we are to deal effectively with hazardous waste. We as individuals have a responsibility to learn all we can about the generation of hazardous waste and the pros and cons of the various methods of disposal," explained Jeri Winger, International President of the GFWC.

The seminar, sponsored by Shell Oil Company, offered participants the opportunity to meet with their senators and congressmen to discuss their views on hazardous waste management. The GFWC, which is the largest and oldest nondenominational, nonpartisan, international service organization of volunteer women in the world, is committed to working toward finding rational solutions for the complex problem of hazardous waste.

Last week we left Fred and Sally, the Atlanta couple, bound for retirement some 30 years out. They are certain to be rich, rich, rich, if they keep making their $4,000 deposit in their IRA plans for just the next five years.

Remember? Their $4,000 put into zero-coupon gov-ernment bonds (CATS and TIGRS) will give them $131,950 a year at age 65. This week we have a plan to make them even richer. Truly, theirs will be golden years. At age 32 now, their combined income is $70,000. They put away $4,000 of that in IRA's, leaving $66,000 taxable.

They are a frugal pair, drive a small car, have no champagne tastes, no children, and have a fierce desire to save their money. I think they can stash away another $6,000, at least, every year. Not forever, though--just the next five years, so the horizon isn't too far off.

This $6,000 investment now is planned not to pay off when they're 65, like the IRA accounts, but when they're only 60 years old. So we'll buy 25-year zerocoupon tax-exempts. These yield around 11%. There is no tax now, or later. And no capital gains tax when they mature, either.

The $6,000 now invested at age 35, matures at age 60, and then is worth

Next year, buy some more, at age 36. They'll be worth $87,251 at age 61.

And so on for five years. Every year, then starting at age 60, they'll have bounding interest, at a high $87,251 in money coming in, until they're 65.

At age 65, their IRA's start maturing for the next five years, and give them

Retirement provisions at GE and at Delta, Fred and Sally's employers, will be dishing out pensions in those years, too. And they can pick off Social Security at age 62 or 65, whichever they choose.

It boils down to providing this nice couple, who work hard, and save money wher they're young, incomes of around $100,000 a year after taxes from age 60 to age 70. And after taking early retirement at age 60. And all this, mind you, for sticking to just one five-year plan starting now, when they're

These sky-high interest rates so widely deplored in America aren't all that bad. It depends which side of the fence you're on.

The young ones don't remember when banks paid 2%, when government bonds paid 2½%, when tax free bonds paid only 2%. Those were the rates right after the war. There wasn't that much incentive to save in those days.

I can't resist another layer of icing on this cake for Fred and Sally. I am suggesting they dredge up $1,800 right now and buy some zero-coupon taxexempts at 1.8c on the dollar. (An issue I'm looking at in the Blue List of offerings happens to be some Washington, D.C., Housings, with FHA backing. They mature in 2025.

Fred and Sally will be 76 then, and sitting under a palm tree in Florida. Their $1800 in these bonds will have grown to maturity then and will be wort! $100,000. the whole
