4-year battle ends

DeLaval pays Hampshires $1.3 million

Deford area dairy farmers Randy and Shirley Hampshire, winners of a milestone $1,189,000 court judgment against a worldwide milking system manufacturer, today look like two exhausted marathon runners who finished the race despite physical and mental strain.

The Hampshires are too exhausted from their nearly four-year legal and court travail against the 40th largest corporation in the country to jump with joy over their victory.

"It's not like winning the lottery," said Shirley Hampshire.

"It may seem like a lot of money to most people, but I feel that we've just won back what we had lost," said Randy Hampshire.

The court trial itself, conducted in Tuscola County Circuit Court in Caro in late October and early November, 1985, was labeled a precedent setter. It involved technical allegations by Randy Hampshire, his father, Ronald, and his brother, Kenneth, that a DeLaval Agriculture model 100 milking system the Hampshires had purchased in 1965 was defective and over a period of 17 years caused extensive damages and losses to the Hampshires' prize Holstein dairy herd.

The Hampshires charged that the DeLaval model 100 milking system sucked the milk from the cows' teats faster than it could be pumped to the milk tank.

This, the Hampshires charged, resulted in an excess of milk in the milk cup which then caused the cup to lose its massage action.

This resulted in damaging the cows' milk opening in the teat. When the teat is damaged, the cows are more susceptible to bacteria, eventually causing mastitis.

In 1965, when the Hampshires bought the new DeLaval 100 milking system, they had a herd of 28 Holstein which at the time were top producers, some individual cows producing 12,000 pounds of milk when the state average was 6,000 pounds, Randy said.

"When Dad and Ken bought the milker for $5,000 they thought it was the best they could get and expected the system to make the dairy operation, then considered tops in the county, even better," Randy said.

"I was 15 years old then. At first, when the new milking system went into operation, we didn't notice too much difference in production efficiency from our old system of milking, nor any particular problems.

"Then my father's charts showed production decreasing, mastitis problems developing with resultant large-scale culls in offspring that never would produce milk and had to be sold off at losses.

"Now my father was one of the best farmers around. He took great pride in his herd. But neither he, nor Ken, nor feed grain experts, the veterinarian or any expert we could get interested in our problems could come up with an answer as to why we were in such difficulty.

"Everybody told us the DeLaval milking system was the best, but it was still checked constantly and it was operating exactly at factory specifications.

"And it (DeLaval system) was being used by more than 40 percent of the dairy farmers across the country."

It wasn't until 1982 that the Hampshires got the first clue as to what was causing their problems, and it came in the form of a technical book, entitled "Bovine Mastitis: A Man-Made Problem," authored by Daniel Noorlander of Carmin, Idaho, in which he charged the DeLaval milking system was the culprit and explained why.

(Noorlander, an inventor and considered by many a world-renowned expert on milking systems and dairy operations, had been involved in several court-room clashes with the DeLaval firm and its lawyers but had been beaten down in every attempt.)

"My brother, Ken, read the entire Noorlander book overnight and then we started our own testing to find out if the milking system was truly at fault," Randy Hampshire said.

"We contacted Noorlander ourselves and he guided our testing. We brought in our veterinarian. When we were convinced in our own mind that the milking system was to blame, we contacted Marlette attorney William J. Drillock about bringing suit.

"Originally, when making up our mind to sue, we assessed our damages and losses at somewhere around $300,000. We weren't out to sting anyone.

"But when Drillock accepted our case, he suggested we bring in a dairy farm cost expert to assess our real damages and to find a base figure for the suit.

"Dr. Michael Behr, an agricultural economist at the University of Wisconsin, was brought in and set the Hampshires' losses at $1.3 million and this was the amount we sought in the suit."

The Hampshires did not take their legal challenge to the big corporation lightly.

"Sure it scared us. We knew we would be in for a real battle," said Randy Hampshire.

By the time the court suit was filed, both Randy's father and brother, Ken, now a precious metals dealer in Minneapolis, Minn., had left the business to Randy to operate. But both were very active in gaining evidence to bolster their case against DeLaval.

"From the time we initiated the suit until the actual trial, I got the impression that the DeLaval lawyers were considering us just dumb farmers. And they'd already won many similar cases involving the milking system.

"Now, in looking back, I think that DeLaval, which had saturated the American market with its milking equipment, took a calculated risk with us. After all, they'd won many cases before ours came to trial."

Randy Hampshire said pride was also involved.

"I think a lot of our neighbors blamed Ken and me, after Dad left, for being bad farmers and causing our own problems. But we're good farmers! We had a story to tell in this lawsuit. And this is what we won!"

His wife, Shirley, explained:

"Even if we didn't win the court suit, it would alert farmers so that they should question the harm that could occur from their milkers."

The trial before Tuscola Circuit Judge Patrick Joslyn caused little interest among spectators, interested outside parties such as dairy associations or milk producing firms.

"Outside our normal routine of court watchers and courthouse strollers, the trial didn't play before a packed house," recalled Judge Joslyn.

Perhaps the lack of public interest was due to the technical nature of the trial itself.

It took barely 90 minutes for attorney Drillock, representing the Hampshires, and Steven Anderson of Minneapolis and his co-counselor John S. Knight, of Detroit, representing DeLaval, to reach agreement on a six-person jury panel, with one alternate, to hear the case. Drillock excused one would-be juror for cause, and the DeLaval attorneys challenged two others. Judge Joslyn excused one would-be juror for personal reasons.

There were two specific questions the jurors had to answer in their verdict:

— Whether it could be proved that the DeLaval firm was guilty of negligence, and liable for damages, because it produced and sold defective equipment that caused damages and losses, and,

— Whether the statute of limitations, normally six years in a breach of contract or warranty or three years in a negligence case involving a breach of engineering defect, would be extended in the Hampshire case.

"Normally, judges rule on statute of limitation issues," said Joslyn. "But I put the question to the jurors because, even though the alleged defective milking machine was bought by the Hampshires in 1965, they claimed that the defect did not come to light until 1982, which would put their case within the statute of limitations."

The trial took two weeks. It was sparsely attended by spectators. The Hampshire family members and some

Council makes hard decision on soft water

When the salt runs out, the water softening will cease, decided the village council at the monthly meeting Tuesday, July 29.

The council decided unanimously to eliminate the municipal water softening, on the advice of Health Department official Brad Brogren and Village Superintendent Lou LaPonsie.

Councilor Elwyn Helwig explained that the system is obsolete and would cost too much to continue without extra millage.

The state does not recognize Cass City's present zeolite system which is about 30 years old, according to Village Clerk Joyce Roche, and a new system would cost from 1/2 to 3/4 million dollars, explained LaPonsie. A new system would also require a full-time operator which would mean hiring 3 men.

Without the softener, Cass City is still following all the drinking water standards of the state, LaPonsie explained.

Currently the water softening unit is only operating at 20 percent efficiency and was only at 50 percent when it was fully functional. The shutdown would save the village one mill as well as electricity and maintenance costs. "We spend $22,000 on salt," said LaPonsie. He added that the softener has been shut down for as long as 2 months and there were no complaints or comments. Councilor Nat Tuttle added that the shutdown, which will occur in about a week, may even eliminate some of the rust in the water.

In other action, the village received a letter from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency informing them that they may be ineligible for $16,527 of the $2.5 million waste water treatment project because the project was finished after the contract date. LaPonsie explained that there was a strike through the electrical supplier and the contractor was unable to get materials necessary to finish the project. The village extended the project with approval from the corps of engineers, DNR and FHA. They have 30 days to respond to the letter.

The council discussed an interest refund the village will receive from the Department of Transportation. A letter from Governor Blanchard stated that the money was saved by the refinancing of some State Truckline Bonds to take advantage of declining interest rates. The original bonds were utilized in part to make loans to local units of government for road and street improvements. Cass City is entitled to $1,827.71 from the refinancing of the bonds.

President Larry Davis told the group that the village received a memo from the state housing authority stating that the Michigan Energy Bank has been suspending until additional funding is found. Cass City has had only 2 requests for information, but no formal applications were filed he said. The MEB was aimed at helping individuals lower energy costs by paying 20 to 50 percent of the costs of installing energy conservation improvements when the balance is borrowed from a lending institution.

It was pointed out that the roof of the old Lions pavilion is in need of repair and an estimate of $1,100 was received. The Lions offered to donate $400 labor according to LaPonsie.

In other action, the council voted to accept the Municipal Trunkline. Please turn to page 5.

Better service for area

Yellow Freight terminal now open in Cass City

by Cymbre Sommerville

Ribbon cutting ceremonies Monday morning marked the official opening and welcome of the Yellow Freight truck line sub-terminal to Cass City.

The terminal which is located in the Nestle building at the end of Church Street is being sub-leased from Walbro.

Yellow Freight is a common carrier and currently services many businesses in Cass City and the surrounding area.

What the local terminal means to Cass City and the Thumb is better service to businesses and its customers because the trucks will work the Thumb on a daily basis.

Dean Hoag, traffic manager at General Cable said that currently the company uses Yellow Freight on Monday, Wednesday and Friday. The local terminal will mean "daily service, better service and we will get materials sooner," he said. Hoag added that the terminal will also be convenient. "If we run out of something we can go to the terminal and get it."

The freight will also be handled less. Before the local terminal, freight went from General Cable, for example, to Saginaw, then to Detroit. It will now travel directly from General Cable to Detroit.

Traffic manager at Anrod Screen Cylinder, Barb Englehart, said they are "tickled to death about it."

"We've been waiting for this," she said. "Almost every bit of our incoming freight is with Yellow. Now we don't have to wait every other day," she added.

Mike Murphy, materials manager at Walbro, said that right now it's a "wait and see" situation for them. He said that Walbro only uses Yellow Freight intermittently.

Marshall Distributing also uses Yellow Freight only occasionally, said sales manager Dave Asher. He said that the company had used Yellow prior to last year, but are now using a different freight company and the new Cass City terminal will have little effect on Marshall's business.

Village President Larry Davis describes it as a "shot in the arm" and an asset for Cass City.

"We're happy to be coming," said Yellow Freight branch manager Pete Marrocco. "We've wanted to service the Thumb daily and were looking for an area centrally located," he added. He said that Davis was very responsive to their needs. "He kind of sold us on Cass City," Marrocco explained.

He said that he feels having a major carrier in town will be good for business. "I'm sure Cass City would like to see more industry move in and a major carrier may help bring that in," he commented.

Currently the Cass City site is a sub-terminal of Port Huron, but Marrocco said that he feels this a good area and in time he foresees it standing on its own. "When business lends itself to another driver we will hire a local man," he commented. The terminal employs 2 men at this time.

The search for a site started last August, according to Davis but went into a holding pattern last fall because of some internal changes at Yellow. Once the changes were made, everything fell into place. Marrocco looked at various locations and came back to the Nestle building. He worked out a 2 year sub-lease with Walbro. Tom Herron stepped in and built the needed enclosed dock, said Davis.

Marrocco said that Yellow Freight has terminals in the 48 states as well as in Alaska, Hawaii and Canada. "We have between 560-600 terminals and are considered one of the top 3 common freight carriers," he said.

VILLAGE PRESIDENT Larry Davis and Branch Manager of Yellow Freight System, Inc., Pete Marrocco, cut the ribbon Monday morning, welcoming the business to Cass City. Local businessmen were present for the short ceremony. The truck terminal will be located at the corner of Church and Nestle and will serve the Thumb on a daily basis.

Meg's Peg
Sing along with MEG

By Melva Guinther

Coming from a singing family, it was good news when the American Lung Association announced that singing can add years to your life.

Vocal quality, fortunately, is insignificant, according to the association. It's the exercise of those chest muscles, heart and lungs that counts.

My family always sang, washing dishes, riding in the car, working in the garden. Some of my earliest memories are of the old Irish songs Dad used to sing. For years I assumed we were Irish, until a genealogical study by an aunt determined that our roots were actually German, Scotch and English.

Mother, Grandma and my uncles sang too.

Since we had no musical instruments, it was always a cappella, which is fine for singing around the house. Public performances without accompaniment can be risky. A piano or organ can cover a multitude of flat notes and assorted boos.

As the McConnell Sisters, two of my siblings and I occasionally made public appearances, at Farmer's Club meetings or church functions. Big time stuff. It was fun and I miss it. We sisters just don't get together often enough to hone our talents any more. But I'll never forget some of our engagements.

We all have relatively low voice ranges, which makes for great close harmony. However, it's tricky, without an instrument, to start on just the right note. If it's too high, the soprano ends up screeching, with the chords on her neck sticking out. Too low and the alto sounds like a muffled foghorn.

Once while attempting a song about a railroad, we encountered a few problems getting the right note and starting together, which is rather important when trying to harmonize. When the rendition was finally over, the emcee, an old railroad man himself, remarked that the engine had a little trouble getting up steam, but once it got on track, it didn't do too badly.

Singing with another trio at a church service, we had stumbled pathetically through the first verse, starting, stopping and starting again completely independent of one another, and were trying to get our act together on the second. Woefully, but appropriately, the words came out, "Are you in trouble? Are you distressed? Is there no singing?..."

Sitting near the back of the auditorium was a rotund little woman whose giggling laughter was shaking the whole pew. Humiliated, I vowed I'd never sing again. But I didn't mean it.

We still sing at our infrequent family get-togethers. A brother with a rich tenor voice wisely chose to marry a soprano. She and Mother are responsible for hitting the high notes.

Some of the kids endured piano lessons, so we can usually recruit a pianist now. The voices crack more often and the harmony isn't quite as fine-tuned as it once was, but we just keep exercising those hearts and lungs.

Perhaps that's why my parents are still going strong at 90 and 81.

It just may be that another golf league will form in Cass City next year. Michelle Zdrojewski has announced an organizational meeting for a league for working ladies Wednesday, Aug. 13, at 7:30 p.m.

If enough interest is shown, the organizers have tentative plans to play Tuesdays, starting at about 5 p.m.

Our restaurant review started last week won't include any of our local establishments. There's little use telling you about local restaurants when the odds are great that you've already been there.

You probably also know that prices in local restaurants are big bargains compared to prices in urban areas and especially in the northern tourist areas. "Lifetimes," a magazine published out of Bay City, picked Wildwood Farms as restaurant of the month for August.

There's a campaign on to put the loon on the endangered and threatened species list which would give it increased protection. A Department of Natural Resources news release points out that the loon's haunting call can be heard from remote inland lakes and marshes.

It has also been heard in the swamp area a short distance from the back of my house for at least the last 4 years.

Absence makes the heart grow fonder. At Cass City's all-class reunion Saturday there was just one representative from the graduating class of 1986 at the banquet.

Others may have drifted in later for the dance that followed and it's probable that a few did.

When you think about it, that's not unusual. What makes a reunion is the renewal of old acquaintances from a bygone era.

Tickets in hand, kids stood in line to try their hand at aiming peanuts down the trunk of the elephant or fishing for prizes.

These activities and 10 more were part of the annual Library Fair for children belonging to the summer reading program at Rawson Memorial Library.

Each participant was given a ticket for each book he or she read up to ten, with a bonus of 5 tickets over 10, according to librarian Barb Hutchinson.

It was a big success with over 100 participants, estimated Hutchinson.

Some of the events were bean bag toss, balloon toss, balloon busting race and the spitting contest, in which Bobby Williams was the champion watermelon seed spitter sending it 25 feet.

"If It Fitz..."

Coverage overdone

By Jim Fitzgerald

Only for one second was my attention captured by the overdone media coverage given Britain's latest Royal Wedding. And even that slight spark of interest surprised me.

Blame it on my Irish Catholic background and a populist aversion to spending public money on pomp. I've always believed there's nothing dumber than the way the British revere — and reward — ordinary people for accomplishing nothing except being born to the purple push, or marrying it.

Anglophiles often answer my snide remarks by snarling that entertainers are mindlessly idolized — and rewarded — in the United States. That's a weak argument. Granted, it may be fair to compare England's royal family with our movie and sports stars. Princess Margaret is certainly as entertaining as Prince, the U.S. singer-actor who has the artistic talent of a boulder.

But Britain also has rock idols and sports heroes; it even honors actors by giving them titles. When it comes to reacting foolishly to show business personalities, Britain and the United States are tied.

OK, the Anglophiles retort, but the United States also has royal families. The Kennedys are named most often, but the Reagans gained ground after 'son Ron parlayed his royal birth into a job at Playboy magazine.

Another weak argument. Historically, the Kennedy family is a mere blip compared to the never-ending line of royal generations pulling diamonds from the British trough. The Kennedy wealth was earned, not bestowed.

As for the Reagan monarchy, it's only fair to note that it really isn't young Ron Reagan working for Playboy. Actually, it's stealthy Attorney General Edwin Meese in disguise, getting to the bottom of pornography.

End of argument, which I win. If Prince Andrew had been married in my front yard, I wouldn't have looked out the window.

But still, there was that one delicious moment on TV, and I'm glad I saw it. It was Queen Elizabeth running after a tiny grandson as he chased a carriage.

The Queen of England looked like just another grandma.

Elizabeth doesn't run gracefully. She jounces more than jiggles. She looked funny. As funny as I looked a day earlier.

Six-month-old Tricia was visiting, and I was on the floor, teaching her to crawl. I'm the same age as Elizabeth, and equally adroit. I'm glad my old buddies from the Alibi Bar weren't looking as I pawed the carpet and protruded fanny first toward the ceiling. I had to regain my feet in several stages, ever watchful for something to lean on.

Talk about feeling foolish. An hour later, four-year-old Emily and I were in the park, pushing Tricia's baby buggy. After Emily departed for the monkey bars, an elderly neighbor spied me from about a block away. With the aid of a cane, she slowly struggled toward me.

"I want to see the new baby," she explained, out of breath.

There was no baby in the buggy. Under instructions from Emily, I — a grown man — was pushing Emily's doll around the park.

Queen Elizabeth might have done the same dumb thing under the astonishing influence of a grandchild.

It occurs to me that none of us can choose whether to be born to royalty or commoners. Also, there is considerable helplessness attached to falling in love. So I shouldn't be so tough on the crowned heads who must accept the footman's services.

They'd probably rather stay home and play with the kids.

It's easier for me to understand that than the charms of Prince Boulder, or why the Reagans didn't lock the door when Edwin Meese was left on their doorstep.

The Haire Net

It was nostalgia time one evening when the spinning dial on the boob tube stopped at a show featuring the best of Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops.

The program included some of the highlights of his previous shows and the famous artists that were featured.

Many of these famous persons, including Fiedler, are dead. Others, as they were then and as they are today, were a poignant reminder of our too human frailties. Because Fiedler's career spanned several generations, the music in the show naturally spanned the generations, too.

And the familiar melodies sparked memories of different times and former friends. Nostalgia.

There's a sadness in this, not connected with the passing years. For many of the folks of earlier times that the music dragged out of the subconsciousness haven't been that blessed by fate.

There are a couple of businessmen that fell financially, through no fault of their own, victims of changing business conditions that destroyed the fruits of a lifetime of work. There, but for the grace of God, go you.

It's a short step from here to the guys and gals that have succumbed to any of the myriad diseases that can strike anyone anywhere. Arthritis, cancer, heart. Who among us doesn't have someone stricken by these dread diseases?

Nostalgia isn't all gloom and doom. Programs like Fiedler's almost always spark memories of the good times. You tend to remember the good times more than the bad.

A couple of the selections on the show did that for me. Recalling the incident brings back the people involved. I wonder what happened to John or Joe or Sally? I'm going to look them up...someday. Most times someday never comes.

Maybe it is just as well. Let them live in memory that keeps them as good or maybe better than they really were or are.

That's nostalgia at its best.

Farmer helping farmer

Upper Thumb shipping tons of hay south

by Cymbre Sommerville
Thumb area farmers are lending a hand to the drought-stricken farmers in the Southeast. As of Friday, an estimated 30,500 bales of hay have been donated by farmers in Tuscola, Huron and Sanilac counties. That comes out to be approximately 968 tons of hay which can be utilized by the needy farmers, and the number grows daily.

The dry weather which has pummeled the region has caused over an estimated $1 billion dollars in damages to crops and livestock.

Local county offices of the USDA's Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service have been asked to coordinate the state-wide hay relief effort and are accepting calls from anyone interested in donating hay, labor, or machinery.

In Tuscola County Sally Cullimore, county executive director of the ASCS said that most of the people have contacted her first about donations. "Those who don't have hay have donated money and labor which we need as much as anything," she said.

In Reese, Wurtsmith Air Force Base sent 24 men to help load hay on trucks Thursday.

In Caro, donated bales await shipment in a building at Janson Equipment. Cullimore said she hopes to have trucks in on Wednesday or Thursday to pick up the hay and it will go to Grand Rapids to be loaded on trains. In the meantime, donations trickle in. "I have one man who has 500 bales waiting in his field," she commented. As of Friday, Cullimore said that close to 10,000 bales have been donated.

"This is a case of farmer helping farmer. These people are to be commended," she said.

The Tuscola County Farm Bureau is working with the ASCS in efforts to get the hay together and loaded. Barry Hedley said that there have been a lot of donations. "Every 100 bales helps," he commented.

The largest amount of hay is being collected in Huron County. Jimmy LaVoie, county executive director of Huron County ASCS said that they had collected about 525 tons of hay by Friday. "I probably have 1,400 to 1,500 bales sitting outside my office right now," he said. Arrangements are currently being made to have the hay sent by rail directly from Bad Axe.

"There has been extremely good support," LaVoie said. "I think it says a lot about farmers in the area. They aren't getting a penny for what they're doing," he added. There was one case LaVoie said where a farmer called and said that he had the hay ready to be baled, but his baler wasn't working. Another farmer didn't hesitate in going over and baling it for him. "They do whatever is necessary to help out," he said.

The Sanilac office of the ASCS said that they had gathered 3,000 square and 112 round bales (which weigh 1,000-1,500 pounds) by Friday.

"We're a consolidation point. We coordinate pick-up and drop-off points," said an office clerk.

Steelcase Corporation is serving as a transportation coordinator to help bring the donated hay together with the donated transportation.

All 3 ASCS offices will be taking calls in the weeks to come. "We'll be doing this as long as the people are there," said LaVoie. He pointed out that the South-east will need hay all winter because the drought has continued so long.

Anyone interested in donating hay or manpower are asked to call the local ASCS office for details.

Community helping in school auction

The Deford Christian Academy has been growing steadily since the first enrollment 6 years ago.

The school is now in need of some more space, so on Saturday, Aug. 9, at 10 a.m., the Academy will be holding an auction to raise money for an addition. The proposed family life center will contain a gym, youth area and classrooms, according to Chief Administrator and pastor of the Deford Community Church, Gerald Rodgers. "It will be for whole family ministry," he added.

The purpose of the auction is to help the school raise funds without going into debt. The items for the auction, which range from a tractor and cattle feeder to stereos and a bedroom set, were donated not only by members of the congregation but by people outside the church, said Rodgers. "It's not just the church but the community helping as well," he added.

He said that as of right now they have no cost estimates for the building program but won't do anything until they raise a minimum of $65,000. Currently the church has raised roughly $20,000 through gifts, according to Rodgers. Building will probably begin sometime in the spring or summer, he explained.

grade, and most are from the Cass City, Kingston and Caro area. The first year, Rodgers said the enrollment was 17 and they finished out the year with over 30 students. Last year 75 students were enrolled. The staff consists of 4 full-time teachers and 4 teachers aides, according to Rodgers.

The Deford Christian Academy was started because Rodgers and some parents felt there was a need for a Christian school.

Dear Boss:

Batteries recharging

Dear Boss: The paper's on the street. I think it's got five fingers on each hand, toes to match, and a nose in the middle of its face -- like a normal creation.

But boss, the day after publication, I'm wallowing in a fit of post-natal depression.

There are so many worries about. Germ warfare. Atomic weapons. Threats and promises, neither of which mean a lot. Success and failure, both imposters.

Let's face it. When you're down, you're down!

In case you didn't know where to find me the other day, when I should have been at my usual spot, in front of the bay window, the telephone cradled in my ear, a worrisome scowl on my face.

Well, I was in a saloon overlooking the local golf course, wallowing in self-pity, suffering a bout of a hangover, trying to stir up enough courage to face the world again.

I tell you, Boss, you just have to get away, once in awhile to recharge the batteries and to commiserate with your miseries.

Oh, woe is me! Oh, why didn't I ever find a lap of luxury to cradle in, like those healthy and witty retirees lining up to play in the Wednesday scramble.

All I have to look forward to is to the barge, lift that bale, get a little drunk...

TCS D reports no injuries in accident on Kelly Road

There were no injuries in a 2 car accident on Kelly Road Saturday evening.

Karri L. Spencer, 18, 6559 Kelly Road, told a Tuscola County Sheriff deputy that she looked both ways and then backed onto the roadway, not seeing a westbound car driven by Kathryn R. Connolly, 16, 6636 Kelly Road.

Also on Saturday, a Deford man drove into a ditch but was uninjured. Frank G. Skripick, 61, was southbound on Kingston Road a half mile north of Rossman Road when he gradually left the road and went into the ditch, according to the report.

Eva L. Horning, 28, 33835 Cemetery Road, was southbound on Cemetery Road when she began fishtailing and she lost control, going off the east side of the road down the embankment and over concrete boulders.

Timothy A. Kraynak, 23, Fairgrove, and Eric M. Engler, 31, 7668 Cass City Road, were southbound on M-138 when Kraynak swerved to the left into the left lane, according to the report.

Wednesday, Linda Dorland, 32, 6919 Deckerville Road, was northwestbound on East Dayton Road when she was unable to avoid hitting a deer.

According to the sheriff's department, there was a break-in at the Deford Grocery Wednesday. Harry Roth noticed that the screen had been cut with some sort of instrument and that the plywood cover over the window had been forced off.

Wally Kappan reported damage to his storage shed on South Kingston Road. All the windows had been broken out with either beer bottles or a brick, according to the report.

There was a high speed chase Friday, according to a sheriff's report. The deputy passed a white Dodge traveling westbound on M-81 east of Cedar Run Road and observed the car cross the center line as it approached.

Main Street Charlie

There must have been a couple of tears flung in the dugout last weekend after the Cass City Little League traveling team lost the tourney championship game to Pigeon, 5-3, in extra innings.

So close, and yet so far. It had to be disappointing. Yet, the young boys did this town proud.

It's a team that you can take to your heart. It seems as if it improved every game as the season progressed.

A good team is fun to watch from the bleachers. Especially if the team represents our town. Names of the individual players are printed in a story in another part of the paper.

and traveled eastbound on M-81, then made a right onto Elmwood Road. The driver of the Dodge then lost control and went into the ditch on the north side of the road.

The state police in Caro are still not releasing any information about the death of 25-year-old Pamela Spurling of Cass City. The incident, which is still under investigation, occurred on Cemetery Road north of Deckerville Road July 27.

how you played the game that counts. Another said the only thing in this game that counts is winning!

And another said winning is everything; losing is nothing.

They don't come near to describe the drama and the effort and the individual concentration needed for a group of young individuals to weld itself into a maturing and improving team.

The gritty Cass City Little Leaguers were just coming to their peak. Another tourney or two would have seen the bleachers filled with hometown rooters.

Britton slightly injured in accident on Seeger St.

A Kingston woman was slightly injured when she was rear-ended while stopped at a traffic light Friday, according to a Cass City Police report.

Tiena J. Britton, 55, of Kingston and Ronald J. Karr, 20, 3508 Cemetery Road, were stopped at the traffic light on Seeger Street 30 feet north of Main Street when, Karr told police, his foot slipped off the clutch and his car jumped ahead and hit Britton's car.

Also on Friday, a car driven by Arvilla Rhonda Jane Smith, 18, 6646 Main Street, was stopped at the intersection of Garfield and Seeger Streets when she pulled out into Seeger Street, failing to see a northbound car driven by Albert W. Jacot, 53, of Smoker.

Tuesday, July 29, a car driven by Gordon E. Patterson, 44, of Ubyly was westbound on M-81 and attempted to make a right turn from the left lane and a car driven by Nancy R. Roymand, 28, of Deford was passing on the right.

A report of damage to a school bus sometime between 4 p.m. Wednesday and 11 a.m. Thursday was reported by Charles Creason, the school mechanic.

At the time of the first U.S. census in 1790, about 70 percent of the population was of British descent.

had been working around all week and hadn't seen the damage. The incident is closed due to lack of evidence and suspects.

Feeding diseased wheat to livestock questioned

The presence of several diseases in Michigan's wheat crop has raised some questions about feeding diseased wheat to livestock.

There are no clear-cut answers, according to Extension specialists at Michigan State University. Recommendations vary according to species of livestock, the level of disease contamination and the nature of the disease. Of the diseases affecting Michigan's wheat crop, head scab, which produces several fungal poisons (mycotoxins), is of special concern.

"Mycotoxins are poisons that, under certain circumstances, are harmful to cattle, poultry, horses, swine and sheep," says L. Patrick Hart, MSU Extension plant pathologist.

Harvested grain suspected of having high levels of mycotoxins should be tested before it's fed to livestock.

"Most of the diseased wheat can be eliminated during harvest if farmers will increase the intensity of the fans in the combine so the diseased kernels are blown out the back," according to Dennis Stein, Tuscola County Extension Agricultural Agent.

After harvest, the field needs to be plowed so the diseased wheat can't overwinter and cause stalk rot and ear mold on corn.

There is no danger in using the straw from diseased wheat for animal bedding, provided the grain is removed from heads. Very few fields have any measurable level of disease contamination in Tuscola County.

Stein cautions farmers against feeding any of the screenings or grain imported from other areas for livestock feed, unless the harvested grain has been thoroughly tested for mycotoxins.

Test weight levels of wheat at harvest may indicate crop infection with scab or other diseases that reduce kernel size, but test weights don't always indicate the presence of mycotoxins. Low test weights are often indicators of other factors.

Wheat can be tested for toxins at the Cooperative Extension Service Multidisciplinary Plant Diagnostic Center, MSU, East Lansing, MI 48824. Cost is $12 per sample. A check must accompany the sample.

Ideally, the sample should consist of grain taken when the combine is unloading in the field or as grain is being unloaded from a field wagon or truck. A sample should consist of 10 pounds of grain and be representative of the entire load. If possible, the grain should be uniformly ground prior to testing.

Farmers feeding untested grain to livestock should try the grain on just a few penned animals for a week, watching closely for a reaction. Swine generally won't eat contaminated grain, but grain suspected of contamination should not be fed to breeding and replacement stock. Lightweight wheat free of contamination can be fed to hogs, but it should be mixed in feed by weight, not volume.

Feedlot cattle can tolerate such wheat if it makes up no more than 20 or 30 percent of their diet. The more severe the contamination, the less wheat should be added to the feed mixture.

Sheep are more tolerant of contaminated wheat than other livestock, but horses should not be fed any portion of it.

Lactating dairy cattle should not be fed untested wheat or contaminated wheat.

"Each year, several good livestock producers purchase feed grains that, during visual inspection, seem to be of excellent quality," reports Stein. Later, in the feeding cycle, the feed is found to have toxins which can cause very disruptive reactions in most livestock herds. The tests are easy to have done and the cost is so little, when compared to the feed or potential damage.

"It is a very good management practice, in light of the possible problems toxin contaminated feeds can cause, to require toxin tests on all feeds prior to purchase," concludes Stein.

New books at the library

SILK LADY by Gwen Davis (fiction). When the story of Fred Masters and Miranda Jay's double suicide is splashed across the nation's front pages, Lou Salerno, a detective with the LAPD, is struck by certain similarities the case bears to one in his own district. He heads for New York, believing he can prove that the newspaper tycoon and his svelte mistress were murdered. As Salerno discovers Miranda's involvement with the founder of an aerospace firm, he also uncovers evidence of a conspiracy among the company stockholders to install untested microchips in the computers of the nation's defense system. Equally shocking is the revelation that Miranda was the star of an elite bondage and domination club.

THE NUTRITIONAL AGES OF WOMEN: a lifetime guide to eating right for health, beauty, and well-being by Patricia Long (non-fiction). Persuasive, effectively reasoned and not without common sense, this book explores women's nutritional (and emotional, in an abbreviated fashion) development from the onset of puberty through old age. An editor of the Journal of Nutritional Education, Long discusses hormonal needs and changes, the body's nutritional requirements and particular aspects of each life cycle. The book also covers weight control, fitness and beauty (including eating disorders); disease prevention (cancer, diabetes, etc.), and lifestyle (eating on the run, at work or in a restaurant when dieting). Long provides more than mere tips in the careful and succinct information about foodstuffs-nutritional needs, use (or not) of vitamins, and foods to eat or avoid for stress, headaches and other maladies.

REVEREND RANDOLPH AND THE SPLENDID SAMARITAN by Charles Merrill Smith (mystery). The Reverend Randolph of Chicago's foremost Episcopalian parish has been the hero of five previous mysteries by the late Charles Merrill Smith. This sixth adventure was completed by Smith's son, Terrence Lore Smith, who intends to continue the series. The plot involves the bizarre murder of a leading citizen, the founder of Business Executives for Christ and a member of Randolph's Church of the Good Shepherd. The reverend is called upon by his good friend, Lieutenant Casey of homicide, to help solve the murder when political maneuvering inhibits his sleuthing.

MDA Swim-A-Thon tallied 91 miles

The annual MDA swim-a-thon can be deemed a success even though the number of participants was down from previous years.

Lifeguard Laura Richards said that 24 kids participated this year tallying a total of 91 miles. The goal is 100 miles.

In the past 30-35 kids would show up she said. The drop is probably because the kids are getting older and some are just losing interest.

This year swimmers raised approximately $450 for Muscular Dystrophy. The swim-a-thon, which ran from 10 a.m. July 24 to 10 a.m. July 25 has been an annual event ever since the pool opened in 1976, Richards said.

HEALTH TIPS

Quackery is dangerous

We are a highly educated nation, and we citizens generally are not naive. Yet, despite all our years of schooling and our sophistication, quackery still thrives in this country. It thrives to the tune of billions of dollars a year and countless deteriorated medical conditions because of fraudulent products or treatments.

One reason that quackery — or health fraud, as it is coming to be known — thrives is that a lot of myths about illnesses and their cures have built up over the years. Promoters of fraudulent products are quick to capitalize on these myths. Their advertisements are a study of feeding on false ideas about "simple medical treatments."

Here's an examination of some of those myths:

Myth: Quackery is harmless.
Fact: It is dangerous. Ignoring proper treatment while trying a quack product can worsen a condition, even to life-threatening status.

Myth: It is possible for a product to cure a number of serious illnesses, as promoters claim.

Fact: There are legitimate medicines that can treat more than one condition; however, there are no all-purpose cure-alls for serious illnesses.

Myth: The testimonials of people who have had success with a product prove that the product works.

Fact: Testimonials are substitutes for scientific proof. Be very suspicious of them. The symptoms of some diseases, such as arthritis, come and go, so a person may think for a time that he or she is cured.

Myth: These promoters are merely capitalizing on scientific "breakthroughs" that are being made constantly.

Fact: "Breakthroughs"

are few and far between and, when they do occur, the conventional scientific/medical community is eager to take advantage of them.

Myth: Some products are being withheld by the medical profession because they make consulting doctors unnecessary.

Fact: This is the conspiracy theory. Doctors practice medicine; they can't keep products off the market. Our free enterprise system encourages new product development; unfortunately, it also encourages quacks.

Myth: The advertising claims must be true because the government checks all advertisements.

Fact: There is no government agency — federally, state or local — that is responsible for verifying advertisements before they appear. Some government agencies can take action after an ad has appeared.

Myth: Ancient or foreign remedies that act fast are available for many common illnesses.

Fact: This idea thrives on a belief in folk medicine, and some folk may have had success with some treatments. However, the treatments generally remain untested and therefore could cause unknown side effects.

Myth: All sorts of legitimate products are sold through the mails, so it's logical that new health products be sold the same way.

Fact: Mail-order selling is an American institution, but diagnosing an illness through the mail is impossible, and selling unproven remedies by mail is immoral.

A little common sense will cut through all these myths and others. When it comes to advertisements for health products, just remember: If it sounds too good to be true, it probably is.

New Huron conservation officer

Raymond Boehringer, who has a decade of law enforcement experience, has been transferred from Menominee County to Huron County as conservation officer based at Bad Axe. He replaces Sgt. Juris Didrichsons of Sebawaing who was promoted to environmental conservation officer and is now in charge of environmental law enforcement in 14 counties. Boehringer comes to Caseville after six years with the Department of Natural Resources in Menominee County, four years in the Navy, and five months with the Menominee police department. He also studied law enforcement in college. The Huron County assignment was Boehringer's first choice because "it's a good place to raise a family." He and his wife have three daughters. They are currently living in Caseville until a new home is built for them in Bad Axe.

Kids love to go to the fair

Last week the 105th annual Tuscola County fair brought visitors of all ages to tour the exhibit barns, partake of cotton candy or climb aboard the ever-popular merry-go-round. H exhibits and walks around the grounds taking in the sites. She said her 10-month-old son Scott Curtis especially enjoyed the fair. "I took him on the merry-go-round and he really enjoyed it. He didn't want to get off, I had to pry his hands off," she remarked. Cari lives in Deford where she has resided for the last 2 months after moving from Vassar.

Big eater

A single locust can eat its weight everyday. And, in one day a swarm, which typically contains about 2.5 billion locusts, can consume enough food for 1.5 million people, says International Wildlife magazine.

McMillen mules: very smart and never out of gas

This is the story of "April" and "John," a pair of the smartest, comeliest highbred mules you'll ever come across. They'll outwork and out-think any John Deere ever made, says owner Howard McMillen.

"Look at the way they test the wind with those big ears. Why, John there can spot, and probably smell and hear, a moving deer a mile away," says McMillen.

"Yup, mules are plenty smart animals. Horses are dumb compared to mules." And, they're sure-footed. "I'll betcha John could walk a rolling log in a pond if he'd ever have a mind to. And April will never forget a hole she's once stepped into. You couldn't drive her within six feet of that hole even if you tried."

McMillen, 63, of 5558 Green Road, has owned, fed, pampered and befriended April and John since purchasing them from Bob Cook of Kingston two years ago.

"Bob broke the two mules on his farm and taught them most of the things they didn't know instinctively about farming. And he used them as workers. They can cultivate 26 acres of corn a day. And they never run out of gas," said McMillen.

"It's been a real challenge owning April and John. It's because they're probably smarter than me. They're the cheapest and easiest to care for of any animals I've ever owned. They'll never get sick by overeating. They're very hardy, rarely get sick," says McMillen.

"They do like to ramble, maybe once or twice a year. They get out of the barnyard and take off, probably to see how things are going a couple other sections away. Always make it back home safe, by themselves. I don't worry about them."

He laughed as John started shying. "Be back in a second. John just wants to get back to work for a bit," McMillen said as his team moved off towing the near century-old International Harvester No. 9 hay mower and its proud rider for another circle of a small pasture field on neighbor Don Hendrick's farm, 5054 Green Road, Tuesday, July 1.

Another neighbor, Steve Karpovich, 69, of 4953 Green Road, moseyed over to see what was going on and add a few comments about his experiences with mules, horses and antique farming methods.

The mule-drawn hay mower, steel blades of its cutter arm clattering smoothly like a well-maintained and oiled machine, drew up to a halt again. John and April content for awhile, ears straining to hear some more praise.

"Kinda like they're listening to us, ain't it," said McMillen.

McMillen doesn't cotton to the stigma attached to mules as being mean, dumb and head-strong.

"Head-strong, maybe. Balking, probably. That's because mules are smarter than a lot of their owners. Mules know what they're doing. If they shy, or go slow, or seem not to be minding, it's because they know what they're stepping into when the owner doesn't."

One trouble with owning mules, though, "they got tender feet."

McMillen re-shoes April and John about every eight weeks.

"Vickie O'Neil of Mayville, pretty little girl in her mid-20s, charges me $39 to get the mules reshod, but I furnish the shoes," says McMillen.

The three friends are looking forward to appearing at a neighbor's wedding party a few months hence. McMillen also is looking forward to visiting Amish farmers in Indiana in September. Amish farmers don't use tractors and such for farm work. They use horses and mules.

John and April tip the scales at 1,750 pounds. If all things go right, they'll live to a ripe old age of between 40 and 50. They're 13 and 14 now.

There's a big difference between highbred mules like April and John and wild donkeys out west.

"Those donkeys out west are like burros. Probably come from Spanish or Sicilian stock. They're probably kin of burros used in mines."

April and John are half-horse, said McMillen. He pointed to distinctive grayish white feathers on John's rear legs, and one area on a front leg.

"Those are probably zebra strains tracing back to pioneer heritage," he said.

April and John are just friends. They'll never breed. Something about the genes or something.

"I read sometime back where the University of Texas is doing work on artificial breeding of mules," said McMillen.

McMillen's antique hay mower, probably dating back to the turn of the century, is part of a different story.

"I've been a farmer most of my life and always sort of collected old tools and things. I bought the hay mower from John Olszak of Gagetown for $15, picked up some spare parts in Merl Winter's junkyard here and there, spent about two days dusting the old mower, oiled and greased the moving parts. Now it works good as it did when it came off the production line."

McMillen, active as a member of the Thumb Area Draft Horse Association, has slowed down a mite since his heart kicked up a fuss.

"I still try to get out with April and John two or three times a week, when I'm feeling up to it," he said. "I enjoy it. It relaxes me. It's fun."

Ubly school passes one of 2 millage proposals

Ubly School District voters Tuesday, July 29, approved a three-year 1.7-mill tax levy on a close 486-471 ballot count but rejected a plea for an additional 1-mill levy to replace aged school buses which might be dangerous.

"We are driving buses that are 13 years old, while the state depreciates buses that are seven years old," said Mark Tenbusch, school district business manager.

He said the school board will decide at its next meeting whether to conduct another election in an effort to gain money for new buses. Tenbusch reported that of the district's 13 buses, one is a 1973 model, two were built in 1974, and three were built in 1976.

The rejection on the special bus levy was 487 no votes to 469 yes votes.

GREEN ROAD neighbors Don Hendrick, left, and Steve Karpovich compare notes and anecdotes about farming with mules with Howard McMillen, as April and John listen in.

Cass City Little League finishes 2nd in tourney

The Cass City Little League traveling team concluded its season by finishing second in last weekend's tourney at Harbor Beach.

The tourney was marked by some sterling pitching and defensive play by the local team.

Cass City began with a 5-0 shutout of Uby last Friday behind excellent pitching by Greg LeValley and Billy Graham. Collecting key hits in the victory were Brad Gray, Dan Muska, Troy Benitez, John Gibson and Kevin Mika.

The second game pitted Cass City against old nemesis Harbor Beach, which had defeated the little leaguers the week before in a tournament at Bad Axe.

The locals struck early with three runs in the first inning to set the stage for a 4-2 win.

The game ended on a dramatic note. Shortstop

Ferris honor students

Two Ferris State College students from Cass City, Mary C. Leach and Thomas C. Stimpfel, were included on the academic honors list for the spring quarter.

To be eligible, a student must have compiled a 3.5 grade point average in at least 12 quarter hours of graded work. Mary C. Leach compiled a perfect 4-point grade average in the spring quarter, college officials reported.

Greg LeValley made a diving catch of a pop-up and rifled the ball to second baseman Ben Schott to double-off a Harbor Beach runner.

LeValley and Graham again shared yeoman duty on the mound.

The hard-fought win over Harbor Beach put Cass City into the championship game against Pigeon. It was a pitchers' duel right from the start.

Cass City scored first in the third inning without benefit of a hit.

But Pigeon erupted in the top of the sixth inning with four hits along with a walk to score three times.

Cass City came to bat in the bottom of the sixth, two runs down. Greg LeValley and Kent Winter drew walks to start the inning.

With two outs, and LeValley and Winter perched on second and third base, Troy Benitez took the count to three-and-two before stroking a double, scoring his two teammates and putting the title game into extra innings.

Pigeon batters iced the game in the 8th inning with two unanswered runs and took the tourney crown, 5-3, in a thriller.

Collecting hits for Cass City against Pigeon were Benitez and John Gibson. Greg LeValley, Billy Graham and Kevin Mika shared mound duties in the championship game.

Other members of the Cass City traveling team are Rodney Romain, Brad Gray, Paul Cook, John Gibson, Todd Bliss and Ben Schott.

Huron County Fair one of the oldest in the state

The 118th annual Huron County Fair opened last Sunday and will run through Saturday, Aug. 9, drawing an estimated 40,000 spectators during its week-long run.

A Thursday truck pull and a demolition derby closing day Saturday will vie with harness racing Tuesday through Friday for most-popular events' laurels. Youth livestock shows started today, Tuesday, and the auction sale of champion stock will be held Thursday.

Attendance at the fair, one of the oldest in the state, has fallen somewhat over the last several years, but attendance at the livestock judging and some other programs in the new fair arena has been up, said Wayne Henne, fair manager.

The old race horse stable at the Huron Community Fairgrounds is to be torn down later this year, said Henne, who added that one of the new improvements this year was replacement of old wooden water mains in the fairgrounds with new mains.

The old stable, that may have been built as far back as 1891, hasn't been used for years. Horse racers currently use a 50-stall stable that was built in 1980.

South Dakota usually ranks first in the U.S. in the size of its rye crop.

3rd Cass City all-class reunion successful; 930 attend Saturday

The third all-class reunion was a success, with classmates staying into the "wee small hours," according to Jack Esau.

Approximately 930 graduates of Cass City High School attended the reunion held at the Colony House Saturday.

The doors opened at 4 p.m. and class members mingled until the 7 p.m. dinner. After dinner, guests could listen or dance to 2 bands.

This year the all class reunion, which is held every 5 years, coincided with the 100th anniversary of the school. To commemorate the event, local historian Jack Esau put on a slide show. "The slides were of old places on Main Street and I had some of the old, old school which was torn down in 1926," he said. Esau said that the best turnout was from the graduates of the 1920's and 1930's. Their tables were full early in the evening.

The oldest graduate was 83-year-old Florence (Strifler) Southworth of Elkton, who received her diploma in 1919.

The youngest was Sara MacRae, 17, from the class of 1966.

There were many who traveled from other states such as Florida, Connecticut and California. Gordon Stirton, class of '34, was from Santiago, Chile. Robert Fritz made a special trip from California to see members of the class of 1953.

The family with the biggest turnout was the MacRaes. According to Esau, 8 brothers and sisters all turned out. They were Anna Marjorie MacRae, Detroit, Alexandria MacRae, Bad Axe, Lorna Karr, Grosse Pointe, Margaret Kelley, Grosse Pointe, Raymond MacRae, Detroit, Dr. June MacRae, Gagetown, Calvin MacRae, Cass City, and Bruce MacRae, Cass City.

The number of graduates was down about 300 from the last reunion in 1981, when over 1,200 people attended.

State seeks to strengthen tax enforcement methods

As a follow-up to the state's tax amnesty program, Treasurer Robert Bowman announced the agency will attempt to strengthen enforcement with results from a study of returns of first time taxpayers who volunteered payments during the 50-day amnesty period.

"There's still a lot of money out there to collect, but we believe our enforcement procedures are better than the Internal Revenue Service and among the best in the country. And this study, along with additional staff, is another step toward better enforcement," Bowman said.

Revenue Commissioner Susan Martin said the study would be the first in the nation on tax evasion using real data. She said the department will seek assistance from university researchers to analyze cumulative data.

"This will be a landmark study to help us and other states know more about these new taxpayers and could provide significant assistance in our ongoing and enhanced enforcement efforts," she said.

Officials said "thousands" of the 73,483 payments received during amnesty were from persons who had not been on the tax rolls previously. Their addition to the tax base will generate several million dollars more in revenue a year, they said.

In a related matter, Martin and the commissioners of the Great Lakes states will sign an agreement Wednesday in Chicago to exchange information and cooperate in sales and use tax enforcement actions when residents of one state purchase items in another.

"We estimate that our state loses between $20 and $50 million a year through holes in sales and use tax," Martin said.

The agreement will include the states of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Minnesota and Wisconsin.

1985 TRIAL COURT FILINGS UP 4%

The annual report of the state court administrator reported nearly 2.6 million new cases were filed in the state's 240 trial courts during 1985.

The report indicated about 90 percent of all new cases (more than 2.3 million) were filed in the state's district courts while 188,000 new cases were filed in the circuit courts.

State Court Administrator V. Robert Payant said year to year comparisons are difficult to make because the statewide collection of statistics from the trial courts has not been completely accurate in past years.

He added, however, that case filings in 1985 showed an increase of approximately 4 percent compared to the previous year.

The report noted traffic matters amounted to more than 70 percent of the district court filings. Those courts conducted preliminary examinations or accepted waivers in 39,097 felony cases and heard 88,950 small claims cases.

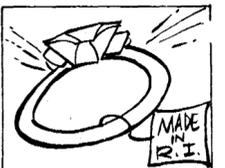

The state's six municipal courts received 26,864 new filings.

The report showed a slight reduction from 1984 in the number of cases filed in the Supreme Court, but an increase of nearly 14 percent in the filings with the Court of Appeals.

Further the report noted a slight reduction in the cases filed with the Court of Claims, a branch of the Ingham County Circuit Court which hears claims filed against the state.

Payant said the number of cases filed in the courts has put a "real strain" on local resources. "No additional judges have been added to the system in the last two years and it is only because of the increased productivity of the judges and other court personnel that we have not fallen further behind," he said.

Rhode Island ranks first in the U.S. in the manufacture of silverware and jewelry.

Major Teacher Shortage Predicted

The small baby boom will be at the secondary school level by 1990, requiring additional teachers each year.

As many as 22,500 Michigan teachers may exercise their right to retire. As many as 11,000 may retire within the next two years.

Many current teachers are already leaving the classroom to take higher paying jobs in School Administration, Business or Industry.

Other highly qualified teachers are leaving Michigan's Thumb school districts to take jobs in other school districts paying as much as $11,000.00 per year more for their services.

To maintain quality education for our young people we must retain our current teachers and attract bright young teachers to our area.

Improving salaries and working conditions are a must. Lagging 20% behind the state average in salaries must end.

good weather that accompanied the fair days, except for Saturday night.

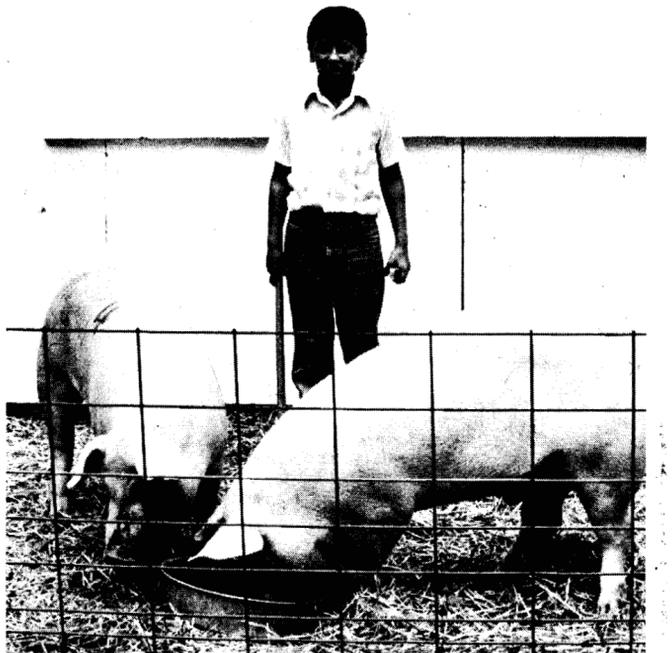

"We had pretty good attendance up until Saturday night, when heavy rain washed out the grandstand event, motorcycle racing, and we had to refund the ticket money," said a fair official.

Sieting to retire from Extension

Rex Sieting, 55, director of the Sanilac County Extension Service since 1967, is retiring effective Sept. 30.

Prior to coming to Sanilac, Sieting was county farm agent in Presque Isle County and before that a crops and management agent in Eaton County.

When he first came to Sandusky in 1967, the extension offices were located in the basement of the U.S. Post Office.

Today, his offices are located in a new building at 37 Austin street.

During his 28 years service with the extension department, he earned three university fellowships to study farming and extensions programs in South Carolina, Scotland and England; organized a dry bean co-op in Presque Isle and a soil testing co-op in Sanilac.

During his years in Sandusky, he has been active in many civic activities: served as chairman of the county planning commission; member of the county parks and recreation board; member of the Sandusky Lions Club; chairman of the Sandusky Baptist Church Board of Deacons; and is a retired Lt. Colonel of the U.S. Air Force Reserve.

Letter to the editor

History of Cass City's Economic Development

Dear John,
The recent feature article about John Easu missed the beginning of the whole first part of the Cass City Economic Development Group. In the period immediately following WWII, a few small companies, like the seat belt company in Owendale and the pallet company in Elkton were discouraged from locating their business in Cass City. When this became known, some of us realized that if Cass City was to grow and have any local employment other than farming, there had to be a group available to talk to those companies and encourage them to locate here. The only jobs then available were the 25 or so at the Nestle plant and those associated with the local stores.

Cliff Croft was the instigator. He and I and Joe Riley spent many a night on local resource and manpower surveys. Mac McLellan and Mac McCullough were also involved. We each put up money to finance the group and began working through a state agency - The Michigan Economic Development Bureau - to locate potential industries. We did not want heavy industries with their problems of pollution but companies that could fit into Cass City's situation and grow together.

We soon found that few companies were looking for us and that we had to go looking for them. An effort had been made during the early thirties to build a car (the Jaeger) in Cass City. Stock was sold etc., but the whole project was lost without any cars being produced. Because of this, many older business people felt our project could not succeed and did not encourage it. As the search continued, I was assigned the job of starting the Chamber of Commerce to work in conjunction with the Development Group. I couldn't be on the road with Cliff and Joe during business hours contacting potential leads. The Chamber of Commerce was formed and has been going ever since.

At this time, the State Economic Development Bureau was closed and Detroit Edison volunteered to take over its function in our area. When Walbro began to look like a possibility, and much work needed to be done, the group was expanded to include the Detroit Edison Representative, Herb Ludlow and Harry Little and others.

Sincerely,
Del Rawson

Hampshire decision unique

The $1,189,000 final settlement of the Randy Hampshire farm family won in a nearly four-year long legal confrontation with a giant corporation is not the run-of-the-mill "common man vs. big corporation" damage suit filed in flurries across the country currently.

It's quite common today to read in the press stories about multi-million-dollar judgments against big corporations found guilty of producing and marketing faulty products that resulted in injury, deaths or excessive damages.

"From the legal standpoint, the Hampshire suit against DeLaval Agriculture was not much different than any other lawsuit claiming breach of warranty or engineering defects," said Tuscola County Circuit Judge Patrick Joslyn, who presided over the Hampshire case.

"It was unique in that it questioned the statute of limitations on such suits, which is six years on breach of warranty suits and three years for an action claim seeking damages for neglect or defective design in equipment or engineering."

Joslyn said the trial, conducted over a two-week span in late October and early November, 1985, brought "very good lawyers in confrontation. The DeLaval lawyers were excellent, which didn't make my job as presiding judge any easier."

Marlette attorney William Drillock, a wily veteran of 30 years trial-court experience, said, "Most people will never know the difficulties the Hampshires had to face in suing a big corporation, possibly the 40th largest in the country, and winning their case."

"There was absolutely no way that the Hampshires could underwrite the cost of the suit alone."

"Before I accepted the case, I estimated at the minimum it could cost me, out of pocket, something like $150,000, plus probably a year's work for my entire firm. And, even with a good case, there was no real as-urance we'd prevail in court against the unlimited resources that a big corporation has.

"I took the case, on a contingency basis, gambling on my feeling that the Hampshires were sincere and that they truly suffered extensive damages because of the faulty milking machine."

(A contingency lawyer can earn as much as one-third of the final settlement figure if he wins the case.)

"There are a lot of handicaps to face when taking on a big corporation in the courts, especially when dealing with technical matters that require expert witness testimony."

"A big corporation can afford to hire an expert witness from as far away as Tasmania. And the defense attorney would have to bear the cost of traveling to Tasmania and taking depositions from the expert witness to prepare his case."

"The Hampshire case did give me a chance to meet, in person, Daniel Noorlander, who I think is the most brilliant man I've ever encountered. He's an inventor and a well-known expert on dairy farming and milk production equipment."

"I and the Hampshires went to Noorlander's home in Carmin, Idaho, where we took a video deposition to be shown at the trial. Noorlander would not come to Caro to testify in the court trial because he said he had been manhandled and maligned so much in previous court bouts with DeLaval."

"We had to look a far piece to come up with our other expert dairy equipment witness, Dr. Sybren Reitsma, a professor at the University of Manitoba who had once worked as a research scientist for about eight years for DeLaval. His testimony, aimed at proving the DeLaval model 100 milking system equipment was faulty, weighed heavily on the jury, I believe."

"Dr. Michael Behr, the agriculture economist from the University of Wisconsin who helped figure out the damages and losses suffered by the Hampshires over the years, also gave key testimony that seemed to sway the jury to our side."

"But overall, I think it was the sincerity of the Hampshires themselves that convinced the jury that they deserved judgment, along with the tons of evidence we presented, charts, graphs, records, video tapes that tried to explain how the milking machines, because of faulty design, caused mastitis and the resultant losses to the farm operation itself."

Drillock admitted the $1,189,000 settlement was one of the biggest of his career "but I'm presently working on two cases with larger damage claims."

As for far-reaching effects or implications the Hampshire settlement will have on DeLaval Agriculture and its milking system equipment, Drillock said he has been told that many similar cases are either pending now in the courts or are in the works.

"But each of those other cases will have to be settled on their own individual merits." His advice to others, like the Hampshires, who think they would like to sue a large corporation for damages in similar civil cases: "Think twice about the difficulties, but once you in, hire the best lawyer you can and go at it all out!"

Editor's Note:
The Chronicle, in its series of articles about the Hampshire settlement with DeLaval Agriculture, attempted to contact at least one spokesman for the corporation for comment, but to no avail prior to press time.

Taking stock

By Bill Myers

The economy will get better. Just be patient. Meanwhile, there won't be a recession.

Thus spake a wise and renowned economist to a group of us Rotarians at Traverse City, Michigan, this summer.

He was Dr. Paul McCracken, professor of business administration at the University of Michigan. The school loaned him to Washington in the 70's when he was chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors. Today, he is back on the campus, lecturing, making a round of speaking engagements and also heading up the American Enterprise Institute.

As an old bond man, I was interested especially in interest rate trends. If rates go down, bond prices go up, and we give the canary another seed on those days.

"Interest rates will go down," said Dr. McCracken. "Do you realize that today real rates—market rates minus inflation—are historically high? Six percent!"

(That would apply to top-grade corporate bonds. In fact, many tax-exempt bonds yield over 5% after inflation is peeled off.)

"Right now, the economy is sluggish," he said. "But that doesn't mean a recession. Inventories are at a reasonable level. The money supply is not tight. Then what will it take to get business rolling again?"

"I suggest the locomotive will be foreign trade that will pull the economy up to higher levels."

"If we returned to the ratio of foreign trade to our national product of six years ago, it would add 100 billion dollars to the economy. That's enough to really count. Much more a factor than building or automobiles, for example."

"Even though the ratio of foreign trade is now down it still is double that of 30 to 40 years ago," he said.

It's easy for Dr. McCracken to hearken back 30 or 40 years—it's still only half his life, I'd guess.

As a venerable man, he has learned patience and humility. He doesn't expect big changes to come overnight, and like most economists, his predictions often miss. But he makes them objectively on the basis of good sense and experience—not to please this or that set of politicians.

One of the guests asked him about the stock market.

"I could have made a lot of money in stocks over the years if I had published my choices of stocks I bought, and stocks I sold—and then advised the readers to do the opposite."

Getting back to foreign trade, Dr. McCracken said the man in this field in the future will need to be fluent in at least one extra language.

"An Australian fellow once told me, 'When buying, English is OK. But when you're selling, you better know the other man's language.'"

The tax bill before Congress?

"It's not my idea of tax reform," he said. "But it should be speeded along. Uncertainty of future taxes is hurting business now."

Bill Myers is a retired editor and investment counselor.

Juror tells why

neighbors were evident in their day-by-day attendance. It looked like a routine civil case involving negligence charges.

But what could possibly result in a flurry of similar court cases involving the big milk equipment company, which at time of the trial was headquartered in Poughkeepsie, N.Y., was in the wings of the Hampshire trial verdict.

The case went to jury Nov. 5, 1985, at 3:31 p.m. and the jury returned with its unanimous verdict in favor of the Hampshires at 2:45 p.m. Nov. 6.

The jury awarded the Hampshires 90 percent of the $1.3 million originally sought in the suit. The DeLaval lawyers appealed the verdict.

The appeal cited judicial error in the trial in that Judge Joslyn allowed a key witness, Noorlander, to testify not in person but via video tape. The appeal also challenged the jury's decision to extend the statute of limitations.

Such appeals, under today's court procedures, first must go to mediation where it is hoped agreement can be reached between opposing sides and the case settled without advancing up the court ladder. A final settlement was finally reached in recent weeks and the Hampshire case is now court history.

Joan Lupton of Fairgrove, a housewife and mother of three children with no background in farming or agriculture, was one of the jurors. She recalls the trial vividly.

"When we were in deliberation, most of our conversation dealt with the witnesses and how convincing they were," she recalled.

"The witnesses for DeLaval seemed to me to be quite nervous in giving their testimony and some things they said just didn't convince me."

"Testimony by Dr. Sybren Reitsma, a professor at the University of Manitoba, Canada, impressed the jury very much. He once was employed by DeLaval as a research expert so his testimony about DeLaval equipment was weighty with the jury."

"We were also impressed with Dr. Behr, the farm economist, who set the Hampshires' damage amount in the suit."

"At first it seemed like a lot of money. But as the years went along, the Hampshires did experience a big loss and I, personally, don't think that the amount of the judgment was unreasonable."

The jury decided that DeLaval was liable for 90 percent of the amount sought by the Hampshires, being 90 percent guilty of negligence, and it was decided that the Hampshires were 10 percent negligent because testimony brought out that the Hampshires might have been guilty of a lack of cleanliness in the dairy barn.

Also cited by Mrs. Lupton as making a favorable impression on the jury members was a video deposition by Noorlander, who would not appear as a witness in person for the Hampshires because of vicious encounters with DeLaval attorneys in previous court confrontations.

"The Hampshires had a lot of information to show us, including video film and charts and graphs and even parts of the DeLaval machine."

"I think many times during the trial the DeLaval attorneys tried to confuse the jurors with technical information that the Hampshires discredited with video evidence of their own."

"There wasn't much discussion, or confusion, in our decision to extend the statute of limitation," she said. Mrs. Lupton, in looking back at her first experience as a juror, said she recognized "We had a big responsibility. Our verdict would affect a big company and it had long-term effects on the industry. But it seemed to us, in weighing the evidence, that their machine wasn't right. And that a lot of people who used the machine for years might have suffered big losses."

"I imagine that there are a number of similar lawsuits pending against DeLaval but all we were going by is what we were told in the trial."

Implications of the far-reaching effects of the Hampshire verdict weren't long in coming.

"I've talked with many lawyers throughout the country who phoned me about the Hampshire case, both while it was in process and afterwards, indicating widespread concern over the DeLaval equipment," said Drillock.

The Hampshire case has also received much coverage in the farm publications field and Randy Hampshire said he has received many telephone calls and letters from concerned dairymen from many states "including one huge dairy operation in Wisconsin whose losses might be really big."

Noorlander, both in his book and in appearances before dairymen in the U.S. and abroad, alleges that DeLaval might be "dumping" a lot of the faulty equipment into South American markets.

Noorlander personally is leading a fund-raising drive to alert South American dairymen of the threat posed by the DeLaval equipment.

"What gets me," said Randy, "is that once we found out where the defect in the old DeLaval equipment was, we solved it by buying a $2,000 timing device that eliminated the problem."

Randy Hampshire admitted, though, he doesn't use DeLaval equipment in his dairy operation anymore.

Hampshires near to losing all

Foreclosure threatened twice during the nearly four-year legal battle waged by Randy Hampshire and his family against the giant DeLaval Agriculture milk equipment manufacturer.

The very real threat of loss of the Hampshires' 90-year-old farm properties in the Deford-Kingston areas was a daily nightmare.

"At one time we were $800,000 in debt," Randy said. "Just this spring, and after the jury awarded us a judgment, our bank, one our family has dealt with for more than 60 years, rejected our loan application for operational money," Randy said. "It hurt!"

The Hampshire farm operation costs up to $250,000 yearly to operate. There are two separate farms in the holding, one located at 2140 Clothier Road, Kingston, and the other at 7300 Legg Road, Deford. All told, there are 475 acres involved, planted mostly to hay and corn, a herd of 88 registered Holsteins, related giant silos and dairy farm equipment. He employs two full-time employees and two part-time employees.

The present-day Hampshires trace their lineage back to an area pioneer, great-grandfather Edwin Hampshire, who marked a trail from North Branch to Kingston in 1887 and homesteaded there on a 40-acre site.

Edwin Hampshire died in 1935 and the farm operations passed to Randy's grandfather, George Edward Hampshire, who increased the farm's acreage. He died in 1971 and the farm passed on to Randy's father, Ronald, who also increased the farm holdings.

Ronald Hampshire and later his sons were considered to be among Tuscola County's leading farmers and dairymen, proud of a magnificent herd of registered Holsteins, considered to be among the best milk producers ever.

Randy is a 1971 graduate of Cass City High School who went on to Michigan State University, where he earned an associates degree in agriculture in 1973. In addition, his schooling includes many courses and seminars on breeding. He is presently president of the Thumb Sire Proving Association.

Randy was a member of a bull breeding syndicate that purchased and bred Thumb Pride Perfector, the seventh top rated breeding bull in the country.

The Hampshires bred the prize bull with registered Holsteins of their own herd, which now numbers 88.

About half the offspring from the prize bull's breeding were culled because of mastitis infection the Hampshires allege was caused by faulty milking system equipment bought in 1965 from the DeLaval Agriculture firm.

The loss of what was anticipated to become a highly productive line of prize cattle was felt deeply by the Hampshires.
