

Rabbit Tracks

by John Haire
(And anyone else he can get to help.)

Monday wasn't an especially cold day for a Michigan winter day in March. But it certainly seemed to be one of the coldest days of the year after the summer-like 70's of the day before. It was worth it, though, wasn't it?

Observed as we took a ride through the county were several persons raking lawns. It must be a labor of love. Everyone knew that winter was due to take over again and raking the lawn last week really was wasted effort.

I swear that several rakers I saw were working in lawns that already were immaculate without a leaf or foreign object in them.

It must be catching. In January, Russ Schneeberger was called for jury duty in Caro. In February, Dorothy Haire, who works next door at the Chronicle served. In March the call went to Mary Damm, Chronicle typographer.

Schneeberger was luckier than Haire. He never had to serve on a jury panel. Haire was called 2 full and 2 half days.

You know it's an illusion, but still there's always a tendency to picture movie stars as you see them on the screen.

When they are caught by a candid camera it's always disillusioning. Sean Connery, for instance, can't be that oadling, grey haired man pictured attending a social function in the metro daily this week.

He's really that swashbuckling hero, James Bond, 007, movie buffs have been seeing for years.

Snover woman listed in good condition at HMH

A 58-year-old Snover woman has improved and is out of Huron Memorial Hospital's Intensive Care Unit following a March 2 one-car accident in which she was injured when her vehicle left the road and struck a ditch.

"good" condition Monday by a nurse supervisor at the Bad Axe hospital.

Foote was traveling on northbound M-19 in Sanilac County's Argyle Township at about 8 a.m. when icy road conditions caused her to lose control of her vehicle.

Prevent bike thefts

Sheriff warns residents

Taking measures which make it hard for would-be thieves to make a living was the focus of a message recently aired by Tuscola County Sheriff Paul Berry.

In a news release, Berry warned that "more than 6.5 million crimes on a national scale are committed annually against young people. Most of these," he added, "are crimes against their property, such as theft and vandalism."

"Because so many young people fall victim to property theft, it is obviously very important for these individuals to protect themselves and their personal property," Berry explained.

He added, "Crime prevention is easier than most people think. Quite simply, it means making it more difficult for thieves to operate."

Berry recommended that area residents take the following precautions: register bicycles with a county law enforcement agency, engrave name and social security number on personal property, securely lock bicycles to a bike rack or similar stationary fixture, park vehicles in well-lighted areas and never leave keys in a car.

According to Berry, more than 500,000 bicycles are reported stolen nationwide each year, with an average loss of $146 per theft. He didn't have a local estimate, but said thefts in the county are a problem.

The Haire Net

It's no secret that Ronald Reagan has never received support here. My vote was lost in the last 2 presidential elections. It may be surprising then that he receives no demerits for not knowing (if that proves to be the case) of the Iran-Contra mess.

Anyone hiring more than a half dozen persons must rely on someone to handle some of the details. Here at the Chronicle, for instance, where some 17 persons are on the payroll, trying to handle every little detail just can't be done while retaining sanity. No remarks please.

If you feel that the president was on the right track before the scandal, he should be as high in your esteem now as he was before. He is with me. Of course, that's not saying much.

We never subscribed to the theory that reducing aid to the poor, ignoring affirmative action programs and shifting the tax burden from the national government to the states and calling it fiscal reform is the way the government should be operating. We deplore the massive spending for defense and the buildup of more and more atomic bombs and the machinery to launch them farther and faster.

It's not surprising, too, that the president made such a stirring and "just right" speech about the whole affair last week. He's an actor and can play a crowd in person or on television with a skill that can't be topped.

You have to hold the president responsible for hiring the type of associates that would foster the deal that was exposed. It's his policies that the Iran deal was designed to promote.

Besides his policies, there is another factor that has kept me from hopping aboard the Reagan bandwagon. The president has never been the "teflon president" with me. Simply put, I have trouble believing him.

When he speaks, I always have the feeling that I am being manipulated and his current positions are the result, not of conviction, but of what the latest poll indicates the people want to hear.

It all goes back, I guess, to his early history. The president went from a liberal to an arch conservative. I suppose that can be explained by factors other than expediency, but it sticks in my craw just the same.

It's like the current tax reform. It was hailed as a simplification of the former system and a significant tax reduction. What it has proved to be is a tax increase with a form so complicated that it has been abandoned before being used.

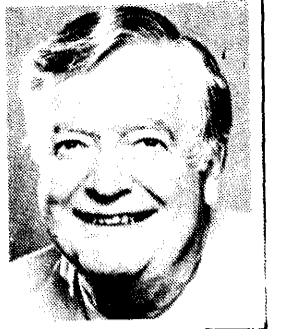

I'm not even going to mention the farm subsidy program and the mess that it's in.

What's really sad about the whole mess is the conviction that changing from the Republicans to the Democrats wouldn't bring much of a significant change except that the power would switch from Wall Street to Big Labor, and that's like going from the frying pan into the fire.

"If It Fitz..."

Good cops, bad cops

By Jim Fitzgerald

Recently, a young woman visiting a large downtown Detroit apartment building locked the keys inside her car. Her spare set was 90 miles away, so she called police for help. Two female officers soon arrived and the fun began.

That same morning, my column had been critical of a few cops who, according to a witness, had been less than adequately responsive to the needs of a man who suffered a fatal heart attack while walking in an eastside neighborhood two weeks earlier. It was the second time in four days that I'd written something likely to displease many Detroit police officers, and -- with the exception of the guilty cops -- they had a right to be displeased.

So far, the accused cops haven't been identified, and the witness requested anonymity, so dozens of patrol officers were put on the spot with limited recourse. In the interest of a well-informed public, it is sometimes necessary for the news media to quote unidentified sources regarding people -- especially public employees -- whose identities weren't immediately determined because of the excitement or confusion surrounding the incident that made their actions newsworthy.

For me, there is no arguing against the occasional need for nameless reporting. For Washington reporters, it is more than occasional. Some days it appears there would be no news at all out of Washington if the press didn't agree to withhold names. But I'm always aware that there's a certain amount of unfairness inherent in this aspect of journalism, and it makes me uncomfortable. However, the alternative -- important news not made public -- is much more uncomfortable.

Anyway, the cops answering the locked-car call wondered if the locked-out woman knew that Jim Fitzgerald the columnist lived in the apartment building she was visiting.

After several minutes of feigning innocence, the woman admitted she sees me quite often because she is a close relative. The officers were aiding my oldest daughter, whose nickname starts with T and rhymes with the nicknames of her siblings, Ferd and Nerd. Even in the big city, it's a small world.

It must be stressed that at no time, before or after they knew T's heritage, were the cops less than extremely pleasant and accommodating -- and they ultimately got the car unlocked. "You should write something real nice about Officers Morrow and Mazola," T ordered, and I herewith obey.

But meanwhile, that same afternoon, I received a phone call at home from Rick Taylor, a co-worker. In view of the two cop columns I'd written that week, Taylor correctly assumed I'd be interested in the sad little story he watched unfold on the street below his office in the Free Press building.

Two officers in a patrol car came to the aid of a drunken man lying in a parking lot. One cop put him on his feet but he fell over backward and didn't get up. The cops drove away and left him there flat on the pavement. The temperature was around 15 degrees and the wind was bitter.

Around 10 minutes later, another patrol car arrived, and the man was again put on his feet by one cop while the other stayed in the car. The man again fell over backward after taking a few steps. The officers left.

Finally, 15 minutes later -- at 4:15 p.m. Feb. 14 -- two more cops arrived, and with the aid of a Free Press printer, picked up the drunken man, put him in their car and drove away.

Taylor wondered why it took three calls before the prostrate man was taken in out of the cold. "What happens if he dies of exposure? Why didn't a police unit wait for EMS to come for him?" he asked.

If such treatment from cops isn't common -- and acceptable -- for collapsed drunks, maybe some police department brass would like to talk to the officers who left the man flat on the freezing pavement. I have the numbers of two of the patrol cars involved.

The Whittlers Den Gunstock repairs, custom finishing is Reed's craft

The art of custom, do-one-at-a-time gunstock craftsmanship is alive and well locally.

Practicing the craft is Cass City resident Steve Reed, whose workshop has been open to area hunters, shooters and gun enthusiasts for nearly 2 years.

The shop, appropriately named, The Whittlers Den, is also Reed's residence, a modest home nestled about 1/2 mile west of Cemetery Road along scenic River Drive Road.

There, the 26-year-old spends hours upon hours sanding, shaping, finishing and engraving gunstocks.

The business is "pretty much part-time," although Reed says it's been his main source of income over the past 2 years. "Most of my work lately has been refinishing and repairs," he remarked. "But I also do custom stocks."

The amount of work Reed devotes to a project depends primarily on the customer, who can spend as little as $25, or as much as $250-plus.

For $25, he'll refinish a stock—remove small dents and scratches, and reseal the wood.

A "standard" refinishing, meanwhile, runs about $85, and includes filling 75 to 90 percent of the wood's pores. "It gives (the stock) more of a weather-resistant finish because the finish is in the wood," Reed explained. "It also tends to bring out more color."

Customers can choose among 3 finishes; satin, semi-gloss or gloss.

For $120 and up, Reed will fill more than 90 percent of the wood's pores, and spend more time treating "in-letting" areas (portions of the stock where metal meets wood).

IT TAKES TIME

While Reed will spend roughly 30 hours (3 weeks) on a standard refinishing job, he'll put in 200 to 300 hours (3 months) on a custom-made stock.

"I prefer working with walnut. American walnut usually has a lot of color—that's what I like," he commented.

Reed also uses French and English walnut. He describes the 2 varieties as being harder and easier to work with.

Starting with a "blank," or stock-shaped form made of a standard-grade wood, Reed goes to work. In a nutshell, he transforms the 12- to 15-pound blank, which is 3 feet long, 2 1/2 inches thick and 8 to 9 inches wide at the base, into a smooth, contoured stock weighing about 2 1/2 pounds.

"I can see a picture of what it's going to look like before I start," he noted, adding, "I really enjoy doing it—it comes easy for me."

The work entails more than shaping and sanding. The finished product, which may include an engraved design, must be symmetrically correct. "Getting the stock to flow" from the base forward to the end without hard angles or stops isn't easy, he added.

Reed recalled his most memorable project—a Remington 600 Mohawk rifle—was a wedding gift for a friend. The parts alone cost some $400, he said, adding that the finished product probably would have sold for $1,300 when he made it 2 years ago.

Reed's wood-working skills have come a long way since he began learning the craft in his sophomore year at Cass City High School.

In 1979, a year after he graduated, Reed joined the Navy. While stationed in Hawaii for 3 years, he maintained and repaired small firearms as part of his duties, and he began doing custom work in his spare time.

Reed also learned how to make fiberglass repairs on sail and power boats during his duty in Hawaii. He learned the skills, which he now uses to supplement his income in the summer, while working at a marina.

ENTHUSIASM

Reed indicated he enjoys boat repair, but the avid hunter and fisherman expressed a more intense enthusiasm toward his work with firearms. "I've been shooting ever since I was 10 years old. I got the chance to shoot a lot of different guns," he said.

What began with a bullet collection and an interest in the history surrounding various guns has led to a varied collection of firearms.

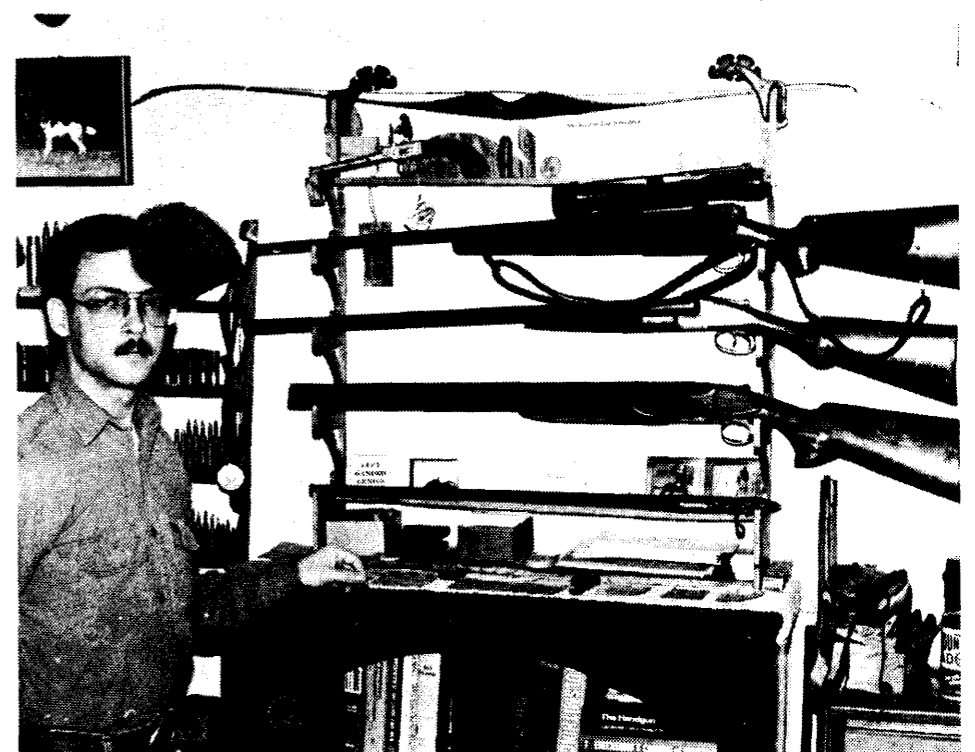

Aside from a 30-6 rifle, a 1903 L.C. Smith double-barrel 12-gauge shotgun and a 20-gauge Winchester shotgun, Reed owns a 45-caliber Colt made with parts from a 1916 Smith and Wesson, and a black powder rifle and 44-caliber pistol.

Currently, he is using one of his guns to practice his engraving technique. He has the time to polish his skills because business has been slow recently. "Usually, it's (business) best in the early spring," Reed explained, adding that business also increases during July and August.

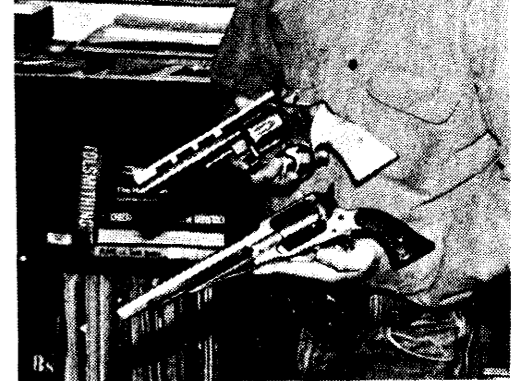

Most of Reed's customers are from the immediate area, although a few come from as far as Saginaw.

Regardless, they all give Reed the opportunity to earn a living doing what he loves to do.

"Even if I end up working in a factory, I'll still have this. It's something to do when I retire."

REED STANDS near a few of his guns: a 30-6 (top), a 1903 double-barrel 12-gauge shotgun and a 20-gauge shotgun. Also shown are a 45-caliber Colt revolver and a black powder 44-caliber pistol.

Local FB members attend meet

Area Michigan Farm Bureau members were among several Tuscola County residents who participated in a day-long informational event sponsored by Farm Bureau Thursday in Lansing.

Unionville resident Barry Hedley, Deford resident Lucille Stine and Cass City High School student Doug Marker were among persons who discussed 1987 Farm Bureau policies with their elected representatives at the state capitol.

During the morning session, participants were updated on issues the legislature will probably consider this year. In addition, state representatives and senators from the local district were invited to attend a luncheon in the afternoon to discuss current issues and Farm Bureau policy.

Ziehm escapes tragedy in South American town

Ron Ziehm went down to Ecuador as part of the Peace Corps to help the people in the South American town of Baeza with dairy farming. Thursday Ziehm found himself in the middle of a major earthquake.

Ziehm, 27, a graduate from Cass City High School, was sleeping at the time of the quake and when he awoke he found the walls of his apartment building had collapsed around him. Ziehm managed to get out of the apartment building alive, but was hit in the head with falling debris.

Richard and Evelyn Ziehm, who own a farm in Owendale, talked to their son Saturday, after he reached the safety of the capital of Ecuador, Quito, 60 miles away. Their son would not tell how badly he was injured but Richard Ziehm said he was fine.

For two nights, however, Ziehm and two other Peace Corps volunteers also assigned to the small 400-year-old town went without sleep. The only phone in Baeza was down and they had no way of knowing what to do. Ziehm told his parents that about 80 percent of the town was destroyed. One person was killed when the small village hospital collapsed and many others were injured.

After the second day, the volunteers picked up a message on the short wave radio to try to get to the capital in a Peace Corps jeep that had survived the quake.

The journey to the capital took Ziehm and the other volunteers along narrow mountain roads, some just recently constructed because of the need for traffic between the eastern and western parts of the country. The roads were 15,000 feet up, but Richard Ziehm said this was not much of a danger since Quito was 10,000 feet above sea level.

After a little over 3 1/2 hours of driving on the dangerous mountain roads, Ziehm was safely in Quito, where he and the other volunteers were given shelter at the U.S. ambassador's home. It was there that he contacted his parents on Saturday.

Ziehm told his parents that he did not think the ambassador knew the extent of damage, because he had sat and talked to the 3 volunteers about the damage to their village and what they had seen on their trip to Quito. He also told Ziehm that he would go through the channels and try to get Panama to aid the country.

Although Ziehm and his two co-workers survived the quake with only various cuts and bruises, some of the South Americans weren't as fortunate.

Ziehm said that the damage had reached further south of town into rural areas that are only accessible by helicopter since the quake.

"Forty kilometers of pipeline and road was destroyed by the quake, which started landslides," said Richard Ziehm.

Richard Ziehm said that the main export out of Ecuador is oil and the damage to the pipeline and roads will take about 4 to 5 months to repair.

Ziehm said that he plans to return to Baeza, which has been designated a regional refugee center, and will help with the rebuilding of the small town.

Ziehm, a graduate from Michigan State University's agriculture school, will finish off his 2-year tour, which ends in May. He is the first Peace Corps volunteer to enter the valley where the town of Baeza is located.

REINDEER MOON by Elizabeth Marshall Thomas (fiction). We meet the protagonist, Yanen, as a young girl, living with her family in what is now Siberia. Just a few chapters into the story, she dies and becomes a spirit who must serve the members of her lodge by finding food for them, often by taking on the form and behavioral characteristics of animals or birds. The story proceeds in flashback as Yanen relates the memories of her youth: the death of her mother after childbirth and of her father from hunting wounds, leaving Yanen and her baby sister alone in desolate country; their fearsome trek to rejoin other members of their lineage; Yanen's marriage; the rash deeds that cut her off from the people she loves and the tragic mistake that seals her fate.

A SONG IN THE MORNING by Gerald Seymour (fiction). The story begins with the arrest of a British agent, James Curwen (aka Jeez Carew), in Johannesburg. After Jeez is sentenced to hang, along with four young blacks, he is effectively abandoned by the politically wary English government. Service with the secret intelligence agency had taken Jeez from his wife and baby son, Jack, 24 years earlier. Now Jack learns belatedly of his father's fate and flies from London determined to rescue the doomed man. In Pretoria, Jack meets a white anti-apartheid teenager and his sister, who provide the explosives that Jack sets off at the prison - the climax to this unremittingly sustained drama.

POISON: an 87th Precinct novel by Ed McBain (mystery). Detectives Hal Willis and Steve Carella of the 87th Precinct embark on an investigation into the murders of three men, each of whom is involved with Marilyn Hollis, a beautiful but mysterious woman. Willis lets personal considerations intrude on his professional obligations, and he soon finds himself inextricably and romantically linked with Hollis, an ex-hooker who harbors a violent and tawdry past.

Scoliosis screening set at CC schools

Cass City School 6th, 7th and 8th grade students will be screened for scoliosis - a lateral curvature of the spine - beginning next week, school officials announced recently.

Letters and pamphlets will be sent home with students who are to be examined, school nurse Geri Tonti said, adding that a second screening has been scheduled April 8 for students with a questionable first screening.

The 2nd screening will be performed by orthopedic surgeon Dr. Douglas Pankrat of Bad Axe.

Tonti noted that parents of pupils who might have a problem will be notified immediately after the second screening with a recommendation that such students be examined by their family doctor, pediatrician or orthopedist.

"Studies show that 7 to 10 percent of children in this age group are developing scoliosis, and 2 to 3 percent will require treatment," Tonti remarked. "If this condition is detected early, progressive deformity can be prevented."

Additional information on the screening procedure is available by contacting Tonti at 872-2433.

Sad ending to great season

Sandusky upsets Hawks in triple overtime

It was a case of who was ahead when the final whistle finally sounded and Monday night it was the Sandusky Redskins who were leading at the end of the third overtime in the opening round of the district basketball tournament in Cass City. The score was Sandusky 73, Cass City 68.

It was a sad ending for a gallant bunch of Cass City seniors who hoped to add the district toga to the Thumb B Association championship won in the regular season.

It was a close, hard fought battle from the opening gun and during the long game the score was tied or changed hands 13 times. It was a whistle happy contest and the 2 officials took the game out of the hands of the players as 3 players from Sandusky and 4 from Cass City fouled out.

A particularly devastating call for Hawk fans came in the opening seconds of the third overtime. Dave Miller was forced to leave the game when he was bumped and slid along the floor and became tangled with a Sandusky player and was called for his fifth foul. After that the Redskins took control to win the game.

However, the Hawks had plenty of opportunities to win in the first 2 overtimes and in the regular game.

The Hawks battled back in the fourth quarter after slipping behind midway in the third period, and trailed by 5 points, the biggest margin that separated the 2 clubs all night. It was the seniors that sparked the rally that moved the Hawks briefly in front in the crucial fourth quarter. Dave Bliss, Miller, Mike Kelley and Dan Ware led the charge that pulled Cass City from 5 points behind early in the quarter to a 2-point lead with 1:22 left in the game.

Don Corey, a tough shooting, ball handling guard, kept the Redskins in the game with key buckets in the last period. Both teams missed a chance to put the game away in regulation when the front end of one and one foul was missed. The Redskins were saved by Brian Nelson, who pumped in a rebound to tie

In both the first and second overtime periods, Cass City proved that ball control was not its strong point. Cass City led 58-55 on pretty baskets by Miller and Bliss with 45 seconds left and had the ball. A turnover resulted in a Redskins' basket and Mike Randall missed the front end of a one and one after Sandusky had fouled quickly to preserve the clock. Corey came to the rescue again with a basket with 2 seconds left to send the game into the second overtime. Randall put the Hawks briefly in command when he sank both ends of a one and one in the second overtime and the Hawks were in front again. Steve Schiller then grabbed a rebound for his only basket in overtime to tie the score with 3 seconds left. Miller's shot from 25 feet bounced off the rim as the whistle sounded.

Sandusky jumped off to a 4-point lead in the opening moments of the final overtime. But the Hawks fought back as Randall hit a layup on a feed from Bliss and Ross connected for his only bucket of the night.

But that was to be the last time the score was to be tied. Brad Bracken hit a short shot to make it 68-66 with 22 seconds left. Corey added a free throw and when Cass City deliberately fouled, they added to the margin and kept the ball. Jeff Sontag added Cass City's final basket on an uncontested layup to make the final 73-68.

The Hawks played some fine defense in the first half to make up for a stone cold shooting night. The defense was responsible for more than half of the 9 field goals the Hawks made in the first half.

The inability to hit baskets carried over to the free throw line as the Hawks converted just 26 of 43 for 60.4 percent. Sandusky hit 15 of 22 for 68 percent. Miller closed out his career with another fine game, leading all scorers with 24 points. Bliss scored 15 and Kelley netted 11 and was a strong rebounder all night. Corey led Sandusky with 21 points and Mike Haupt scored 14 on set shots from 18 feet.

Sandusky will play Vassar Wednesday night in the second round of the tournament. Cass City's fine season ends with an 18-3 record.

Whew! JV remains undefeated

Hawks top Spartans in league final

Cass City tuned up for the district tournament and kept its Thumb B Association record unblemished with an easy, 75-45, win at Imlay City Friday.

The Hawks, who have been in the midst of a playing slump in recent weeks, snapped out of it against the Spartans with some tight defense and a balanced offense.

For all practical purposes the game was decided by half time. Dave Miller, who is rapidly closing in on the 1000-point career mark, made his final regular season game a good one.

The plucky senior paced the first period attack with 4 buckets as the Hawks raced to an 18-7 lead.

Miller continued his offensive assault with 8 more points in the second period and the Hawks continued to apply the pressure on defense. At the half, the Hawks were coasting, 38-15.

Jeff Sontag carried the offensive load in the last half, when he scored 10 of his 14 points. Coach Ron Nurnberger was able to play his bench extensively in the game and for the first time this season every player dressed scored.

As might be expected from the final score, Cass City dominated the statistics. From the field, Cass City hit 27 of 47 shots for 57 percent while Imlay City hit just 17 of 43 for 39 percent. From the charity stripe, the Hawks were 21 of 34 for 61 percent and the Spartans 11 of 17 for 58 percent.

Led by Miller and Dan Ware, Cass City dominated the boards. Ware and Miller were credited with 9 boards each and the Hawks snared 51 rebounds while Imlay City picked off 27.

tions of local fans by going undefeated.

The last win was one of the toughest. Cass City trailed by a point with just seconds remaining and scored the key basket to preserve its unbeaten record. The score was 55-54.

Lakers take districts; Hawks eliminated early

It was a quick day for the Cass City spikers and Coach Lisa LeValley when the team lost in the third match of the day to Sandusky at Saturday's Class C volleyball district tournament held in Mayville.

"Nobody had a good day," said LeValley, whose team lost, 17-15, 6-15, 13-15. "It's an awful way to end the season. We had beaten Sandusky before."

The Elkton-Pigeon-Bay Port Lakers won the districts and will be playing at the regional tournament at Goodrich Saturday. The Lakers will be playing Atherton, which is ranked fourth in the state.

The most exciting match of the day came during the semi-finals when Unionville-Sebewaing Area and Lakers faced off for the final match of the season. It had been a toss-up as to which team would win the districts, but the Laker spikers proved tougher that day and beat the Patriots 7-15, 16-14, 15-5.

The finals against Sandusky were child's play for the Lakers and they quickly put them away 15-7, 15-5.

The top hitter for the Lakers was Julia Sturm, who has gotten a full ride to the University of Michigan because of her volleyball skills. Sturm had 27 good hits for 33 and 19 of those were kills. Sturm also was the top scorer for the day with 17 service points.

Jackie Ginter, who was the top setter, played with the flu against USA, but didn't play the final game. She had 67 sets and 37 of those were assists for kills.

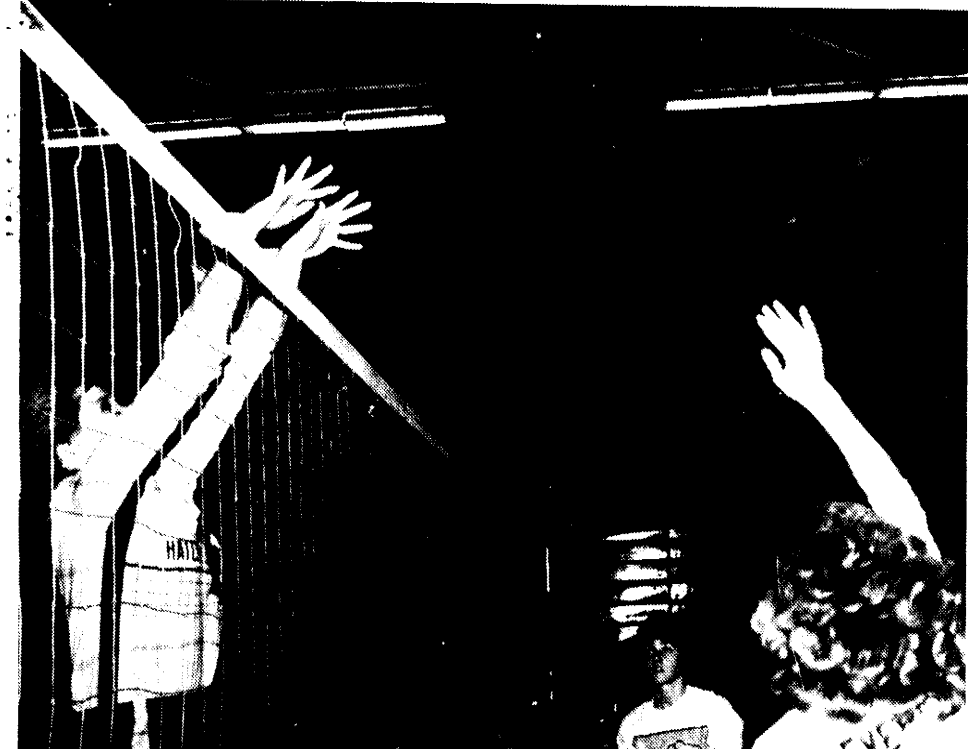

Another top hitter was Cathy Wurst, who had 23 for 27 good hits and 13 kills, before the day ended.

"We were one of the favorites to win," said first year Laker Coach Francie Novar. "We should do well in regionals if we play well. We've been practicing real hard this week." Last time the Lakers went to the state tournament was 2 years ago. They were stopped at regionals last year.

Before the Red Hawks could get into districts they had to battle the Bad Axe Hatchets in pre-districts on March 4. They beat them quite easily in straight games 15-7, 15-6, but LeValley was skeptical even then on how her team would perform at districts. "If we had been playing a better team we would have lost," said LeValley. "We were on our heels, not on our toes."

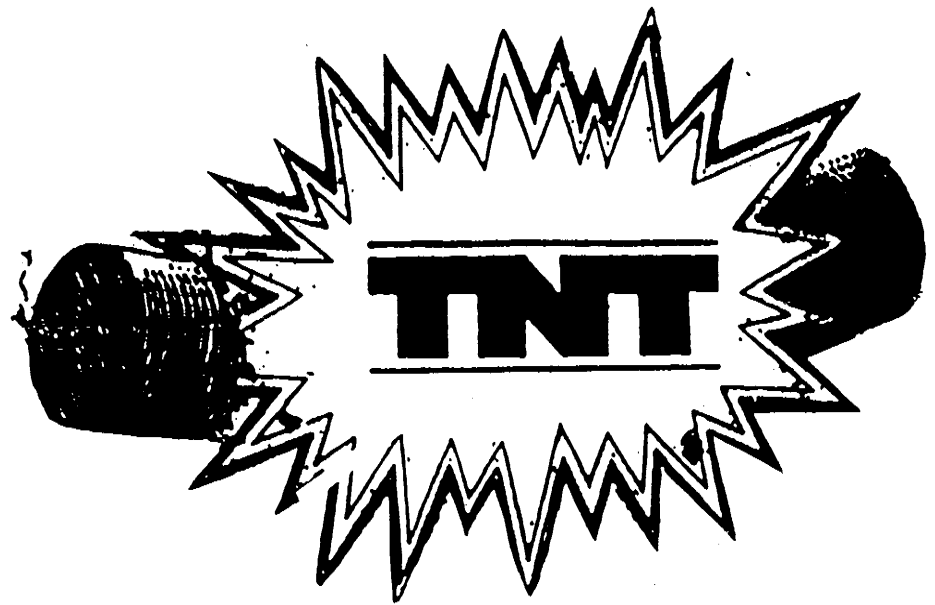

LeValley had hoped that her team would play a tougher game since they were up against better teams, but that was not the case in Mayville. "When the girls are down, they're down and when they're up, they're up," LeValley said.

"Serving was bad, communication was bad, movement was bad. I can't think of one individual that had a good day. There was no excuse for it. This whole season their playing has been inconsistent."

RED HAWK spiker Brenda Severance sends a ball past a Bad Axe Hatchet, whose attempt to block it is futile. The Hawks beat the Hatchets in a pre-district match 15-7, 15-5.
