The Cass City Village Council met in a rare, lengthy closed session Monday during its regular monthly meeting to discuss employee personnel issues.

Village Manager Peter Cristiano called for the private, non-agenda assembly, halfway through the council's March gathering that lasted returned to its open meeting forum, more than two hours. Attending the session were all six village council trustees, Cristiano, village President Carl Palmateer, wastewater treatment plant Supt. Two Thumb residents were injured but survived a collision involving a semi-truck and an Amish buggy over the weekend.

Sanilac County Sheriff's deputies reported the crash occurred at about traveling northbound on the shoulder a.m. Sunday on M-53

"The initial investigation revealed that...a 57-year-old North Carolina truck driver was traveling north on M-53 in a 1999 Freightliner semi when he rear-ended an Amish buggy of the road," said Sgt. Mark Siemen.

Deputies learned through their investigation and interviews that the driver of the truck was self-distracted while driving and did not see the buggy traveling north in front of him and was unable to stop, colliding with the buggy," Siemen reported.

Upon impact, the horse and buggy were separated, and the horse continued to run north, dragging parts of the buggy until it collided with a second vehicle that was parked roughly 1 1/2 miles farther down the road, according to the officer.

"Both subjects in the buggy sustained injuries from the crash," Siemen said. "The male subject was transported to a Cass City area hospital for treatment of minor injuries. The female in the buggy was airlifted from the scene by FlightCare (Helicopter) to a Saginaw area hospital for treatment of serious injuries.'

Siemen noted the horse also suffered injuries and its condition was being evaluated.

The driver of the truck, William Patterson of Cherryville, N.C., was not hurt.

The accident remains under investigation by deputies, who were assisted at the scene by the Elkland Township Fire Department, troopers from the Michigan State Police post in Caro, and Marlette Ambulance

It's hard to imagine a world in which people are not using science, math and technology on a regular basis. Whether it is in the workplace, school, or our personal lives, most of society comes in contact with some form of science, math, and/or technology multiple times each day.

Beginning next school year, Cass City Junior/Senior High School will not only continue to build science, math and technology skills; it will also offer four new classes whose curriculums will incorporate a variety of new learning experiences. Three of these STEM classes will be offered at the high school level, and one will reach out to junior high students.

"STEM stands for science, technology, engineering and mathematics," said junior high science teacher T.C. Gruber, who will be teaching the seventh and eighth grade STEM Robotics class.

Words

by Melva E. Guinther

My sister Peggy got me interested in playing "Words With Friends" via Facebook, sort of an online Scrabble game. It's a lot of fun, although it's frustrating when you have no vowels, or nothing but vowels, to work with. You can swap your letters, but lose your turn in doing so. Then your opponent has an advantage.

Some of the gals I play against come up with words I've never heard of, words like suq, qi, nidi or umiaqs. I've discovered that you don't necessarily need a "u" in order to use a "q." My Scrabble and Crossword dictionaries are in a box somewhere like so many things I haven't located since we moved. I really need to find them.

I had always considered Scrabble a sort of simple game with which to pass time. But some folks make it a complex venture. They study strategies and moves to enhance the value of their words. I don't think I want to get that serious about it.

Words have always fascinated me, though. Using language distinguishes man from beast, at least it should. Some people make it hard, based on their vocabularies as well as their behavior. I believe individuals with a broad vocabulary make a better impression and are more highly regarded than those without.

Of course, words can also be meaningless, for example: "Your call is very important to us;" "Easy Open;" "Tear along dotted line." If you take those expressions seriously, you've never spent an entire morning on hold, or struggled vainly for 10 minutes trying to open an easy open package before finally getting the scissors or a bigger tool.

Since moving to Ohio, we've come across some expressions that we hadn't seen in Michigan. Riding with our daughter one day we spotted a road sign, "Calming what that meant, we encountered Food and chasing squirrels seem to the first of many speed bumps, except down here they're referred to as speed "humps." I suspect a speed hump is a smidgeon higher than a speed bump. At least it seemed so, and they did indeed calm traffic after that first jolt.

Another sign that caught my interest is in front of a neighborhood school, "No idling. Children breathing."

People in Ohio also pronounce names and places differently than I would. The city named Belfontaine to my thinking should be "Bel-fon-TAIN." It sounds French and elegant. Ohioans call it "BELL-fountain."

I'm still struggling with how to pronounce Olentangy. There doesn't appear to be a Bad Axe or a Paw Paw in the state, however.

Sometimes I wish my dog could talk. I suspect that most of what that, our vocabulary would be just she'd say would be food related. fine.

be Shadow's passion. However, there are times when I think she might have something to say on other matters. For instance, what is she thinking when she issues that audible sigh or groan when I turn the light on after she's gone to bed. I'd like to hear that translated into words – I think.

One more note on words: That old saying that "words can never hurt me" just isn't true. Most of us can recall hurtful words uttered decades ago. I suspect that if people thought or cared about the impact of their words, there would be a lot fewer of them. Some of us would be rendered speechless.

I often think of a prayer from the Psalms, "Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable in your sight, oh God." If we could strive for

Why not host meet for the community?

It appears the law will prevent the Cass City Board of Education from placing the future of the former Campbell Elementary School in the hands of district voters, but we still think it's a good idea.

School Supt. Jeff Hartel recently reported that, according to the school's legal firm, it's against the law to move the responsibility of a fiduciary decision from an elected group of people to the people who elected them to make such decisions.

However, that opinion, should it stand, doesn't mean school officials can't still solicit public input on whether to hang on to or sell the school building that has now been closed for two years.

Why not host a community meeting for the purpose of asking district residents what they think?

Taxpayers who have strong opinions on this issue and are willing to devote an hour or so of wind, while gravity (another best friend) pulls me their time would be able to offer their input, and an open forum would give the entire board an opportunity to see how what they've heard "on the street" stacks up against opposing views.

Up until now, board members in favor of selling the former school have said they're hearing from voters who support their position. Likewise, trustees opposed to the sale say they're hearing another story altogether during their discussions with district residents. That comes as little surprise, but carries no weight when it comes to determining how the community at large feels Sure, a town hall-style meeting is hardly scientific, but it might be the next best thing to a vote and would cost very little.

When it comes right down to it, the board and residents must weigh the value of keeping a school that may or may not be needed in the future, versus selling the property and possibly facing a lack of space in the future, although enrollment figures aren't expected to rise dramatically anytime soon.

Keeping the building means continuing to pour $20,000 into utility costs annually, plus any repairs that are needed in the years to come, presuming the district is unable to lease the space for income to help offset utilities.

Based on the estimates Hartel recently shared with the board regarding razing the older portion of the structure, it's a foregone conclusion that no one wants to spend that kind of money simply to recycle the building.

As we said, a community meeting is hardly scientific, but it would at least give the officials entrusted with this decision a better sense of what the electors would like to see happen with a former school building that has served the district well.

Slices of Life

Stepping away from the treadmill

All right. Enough's enough already. I give up. I'm throwing in the workout towel, hanging up my tennis shoes and reaching for a thick slice of pizza – with extra cheese, please.

It's become too much. Diet and exercise. Exercise and diet. I've been traveling the road to fitness for weeks now – my commitment is beyond monumental – and today I stepped on the scale to see the same old familiar numbers staring back at me. Again.

My scale has become a permanent fixture fixated on my failure to lose and even though they say numbers don't lie, I'm crying foul. Something is amiss. I am doing all the right things for all the right reasons. My goal is health. I want to be strong, live long. Is it wrong to want to look good and have a svelte waistline while doing so? Apparently so, because while my efforts feel substantial, the results are anything but.

Diet and exercise. Who knew two unassuming words could be so difficult and overwhelming and all-encompassing? After a certain age (which shall remain nameless) if you don't want to sag in places that shouldn't sag, fitness and health become essential components to your life's focus. Ugh. I'd rather focus on cheese.

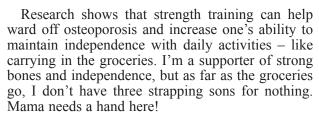

Unfortunately, cheese is not included in the dietary regime of this health-conscious amphibian. I'm practicing the Kermit plan, and it ain't easy being green. Green tea (antioxidants), green smoothies (super-nutrition) and a green salad (fiber) are part of my daily fodder. Green M&M's (yum) are not.

Life is far from fair.

One of the most unfair bodily functions known to humankind is a process called metabolism. Metabolism – not to be confused with cannibalism - is the rate at which we convert the food we eat into energy used by our bodies. People have different rates of metabolism. After the last few months, I believe mine is practically nonexistent. Experts say this is to be expected because after a certain point in life, it is natural for one's metabolism to decrease to the rate of a slow-moving slug.

In other words, I'm running uphill, against the downward. This helps explain why my waist and weight sit at bigger numbers than they ever were meant to be. The only remedy? Diet and exercise! Where are my pom poms when I need them?

Experts recommend aerobic activity to benefit the heart. I walk – because it is the closest thing to non-exercise that gives one an aerobic workout. I figure it's sort of like getting the benefit of a workout without really working out. I don't want to take this exercise thing to the extreme. I'll earn my 26.2 in another lifetime, although I harbor sincere and wholehearted envy toward those of you with the flashy stickers in the back windows of your

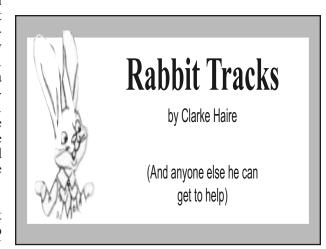

We are told there are numerous benefits to maintaining a strong core. A core is key to being centered and balanced. It also trims the tummy. I'm trying to bolster my core, but I'm not convinced I have much of one. Maybe it's hanging out somewhere with my metabolism. I'd like to look like a core, but I'm afraid my body more closely resembles the shape of a fully-intact apple.

Stretching before and after your daily fitness routine helps maintain flexibility, which enhances overall health and well-being. Not to brag, but I mastered the art of flexibility years ago. Remember those three sons of mine? Their antics help me maintain the epitome of flexibility – without ever having to touch my toes.

The effort required to eat right and stay in shape can be exhausting. I'm currently suffering from a diet hangover – or too much of a good thing. That's why I'm taking a spring break. I'm not giving up completely. I'm going to stay calm, and step away from the treadmill, regroup, eat a piece of cheese (or three) and get back on the scale tomorrow.

Or maybe the day after that.

We'd like to offer kudos to the folks at Battel's Sugar Bush, and not just because the family has earned its reputation for producing the tops in home-grown pure maple syrup in the Cass City area since 1882.

Sue Stuever Battel recently reported that Battel's has become the first maple syrup operation in the state to be verified by the Michigan Agriculture Environmental Assurance Program (MAEAP).

MAEAP is an innovative, proactive program that helps farms of all sizes and all commodities voluntarily prevent or minimize agricultural pollution risks. The organization was developed by a coalition of farmers, commodity groups, state and federal agencies, and conservation and environmental groups to provide a venue for farmers to become better educated about management options in order to help protect and enhance the quality of natural resources.

Area residents who participated in Revive Ministries' Hunger Action Month Balloon Launch last fall may find this note interesting: according to a recent post on the ministries' Facebook page, a hunter in Canada has made contact with the local group to say three of the balloons tangled themselves together and made the journey several hundred miles across from Sault St. Marie intact and into his tree blind.

By the way, the fundraiser, held last September, resulted in the sale of more than 430 balloons and generated enough cash for Revive officials to purchase some 2,600 meals for needy families in the area.

Cass City DPW Supt. Gary Barnes reports his crew has spent the majority of its time this past month plowing and hauling snow. Barnes says this winter Cass City has received approximately 56 inches of snow and village workers have hauled away 1,557 loads of snow and used 250 tons of salt. By comparison, last year at this time the village had accumulated about 31 inches of snow and used 140 tons of salt.

Rawson Memorial earns certification as a QSAC library

The Library of Michigan recently awarded Rawson Memorial District Library, Cass City, a certificate of completion for meeting the Essential Level requirements of the Quality Services Audit Checklist (QSAC).

To earn certification, Rawson Memorial District Library officials demonstrated competence in seven categories of achievement, including human resources; governance/administration; services; collection development; technology; facilities and equipment; and public relations/marketing.

"We are proud that Rawson Memorial District Library has done such good work in providing services deemed 'essential' by the Library of Michigan," commented Lyle Clarke, who serves as chairman of the Cass City library board. "By focusing efforts on these key areas, our library has shown a strong commitment to customer service."

"Two years in the making, QSAC represents the work of more than 100 library directors, trustees and staff members who together created measures of quality for our state's public libraries," said Michigan State Librarian Nancy Robertson. "The staff of the Rawson Memorial District Library is to be commended for achieving a vital milestone in library service.'

The QSAC was made possible by the institute of Museum and Library Services through LSTA (Library and Services Technology Act) funding. The Institute of Museum and Library Services is an independent, federal grant-making agency dedicated to creating and sustaining a nation of learners by helping libraries and museums serve their communities.

Reporter's notebook Spam. Love it or hate it? by Tom Montgomery Editor

Folks in my generation didn't grow up with computers, but we knew Spam when we saw it — it came in a familiar blue and white can and occasionally appeared in the menu at home in one form or another.

Yup, I'm talking about the decades-old mystery meat that could be eaten as is, baked or fried. Well, assuming you were able to successfully open the can lid with the attached metal key, without slicing your hand on the razor sharp edge.

Spam's still around but, of course, not everyone likes it. Still, you have to respect the longevity of a meat product that has the shelf life of a Twinkie and is far less healthy to consume.

Being the astute investigative reporter I am, I couldn't help but dig a little deeper, and this is what I found, according to the website, The Daily Meal:

Spam (or, officially SPAM) was introduced by the Hormel Foods Corporation in 1937. At the time, the fact that meat could be kept fresh for years by canning it was quite novel.

The canned ham has kept a low profile since a massive publicity campaign launched following World War II, living out its lengthy shelf life in the canned foods section of supermarkets and convenience stores while hanging on to its cult following and fending off canned-meat competitors such as Treet.

According to the website, some 44,000 cans of Spam, or roughly 33,000 pounds, are produced every hour worldwide, to be consumed in more than 40 countries.

And, Spam isn't really a mystery meat. In fact, Hormel officials have always been straight forward about what goes into those cans — pork shoulder and ham, salt, water, sugar, potato starch and nitrates. In other words, basically the same stuff used to make hot dogs.

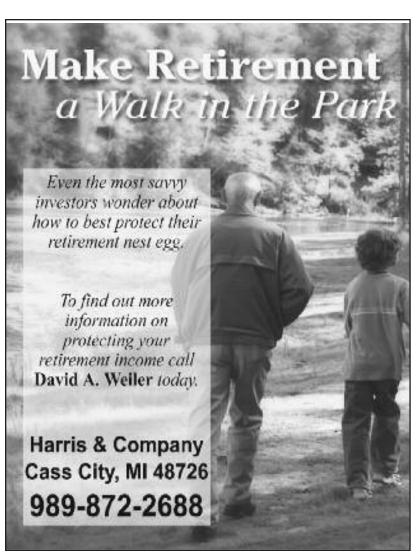

In all, there are 14 varieties of Spam available around the world today, including Turkey Spam, Teriyaki Spam, and Spam with bacon (now there's a surprise), chorizo or cheese. There's also a Spam spread and a hickory smoke-flavored Spam.

Now the bad news: Spam is incredibly unhealthy in large servings. One tin equals nearly 100 grams of fat, more than 1,000 calories, 240 milligrams of cholesterol, and 4,696 milligrams of sodium — nearly double the USDA's recommended daily allowance.

For those hungering for more information about Spam, take heart: you could always plan a trip to the 16,500-square foot Spam Museum in Austin, Minn., this summer, or plan a trip to Shady Grove, Ore., home of the annual Spam Parade and Festival.

You hear a lot of negative stuff about the United States Postal Service, but let me say that the post office came through for the Chronicle last Saturday. It all began when a package that was due for a printing job failed to get mailed when it was scheduled to be shipped. If mailed Friday by United Parcel it could not arrive until Monday. We checked with Cass City Postmaster Bill Zinnecker to see if it could be mailed and arrive Saturday morning. Not to Cass City. But Zinnecker went to work and after calling around worked out a deal that the package could be at the Flint post office Saturday morning. By the distribution of improved seeds and the gathering of data in regard to the adaption of same to conditions in various sections. 4. By the holding of farmers' meetings and exhibitions of farm products and by the dissemination of scientific knowledge as applied to Michigan agriculture through such means as may be most efficient. The club officers and members desire to include as many farmers in the organization as are interested, no restrictions being made to the townships in which they reside. THE GIFT OF GOD IS ETERNAL LIFE THROUGH JESUS CHRIST OUR LORD — Romans 6:23

Advocate Santhany ready for retirement

70s — and get teased on occasion about my left leaning, I cannot express adequately the respect I have for the majority of law enforcement officers I have worked with and the admiration I have for them, knowing what they go through every day,7 Santhany added.

"On the other hand, it is disheartening to be aware that in spite of everyone's efforts, the problems continue and, in some areas, such as child sexual abuse, the problems worsen," she said. "Jobs in criminal justice and victim advocacy can be all-consuming, leaving little emotional energy for the other things in life. Some call it compassion fatigue. It does take a Santhany began her career as a victim advocate in 1992 at the Thumb Area Assault Crisis Center in Caro. "During that time, I helped develop a volunteer victim witness program started by Tom Kern, the sheriff at the time," Santhany recalled.

"Victim witness volunteers is what the Michigan Sheriff's Association originally called the sheriff-sanctioned volunteer groups," she explained. "I'm guessing that name was a little too obscure, so they eventually changed it to victim advocate volunteers. We still utilized the volunteer base after I was hired to coordinate the program. The past few years it has been slowly phased out, partially due to the use of the Chaplain Corps in some death cases.

"After receiving funding from a federal COPS (Community Oriented Police Services) grant, I was hired by the sheriff's office as a full-time victim advocate coordinator. After the first year, and for the past 18 years, funding has been provided by the VOCA (Victim of Crime Act) fund, which is comprised of fees assessed to convicted criminal perpetrators," Santhany continued.

"During the majority of my career, I was on call 24 hours a day, seven days a week to respond to suicide and accident scenes, assisting with death notifications, and going to the hospital with domestic violence or sexual assault victims," Santhany, who worked with 300 to 400 crime victims a year — three quarters of them victims of domestic violence. "I was also in the office at the sheriff's department eight hours a day, assisting with personal protection orders, attending court hearings and responding to whatever new case or crisis came up on a daily

In the process, Santhany racked up nearly 700 documented hours of specialized training related to domestic violence, sexual assault and other areas of victimization and criminal justice. She also earned Advanced Level National Advocate credentials through the National Association of Victim assistance.

As for her future, Santhany intends to remain in her hometown.

"I was raised here, although I have lived in other states and other areas of Michigan. I moved back about 25 years ago and raised my own children here," she noted.

And while her schedule will likely take on a slower pace now, she doesn't anticipate boredom in retirement. "I have always had a creative streak and am turning a hobby into a small business, creating unique lamp shades and accent lamps," she said. "I also have siblings and children and grandchildren in various states I am looking forward to spending a little time with. "My parents...Bob and Barb Stickle, were teachers here and still reside in Cass City," she added. "If heredity has anything to do with it, I will be busier and more active in retirement than the years I spent on

The Problem of Suffering

The problem of suffering is a challenge to the faith of many. Some ask: "What kind of God would allow these terrible things to happen in our world?" As we witness mudslides, missing airliners, military invasions, civil war, economic recession, and conflict on every front, we can understand the question. However, a proper perspective on human suffering shows us God is not the problem, rather, He is the solution.

The cycle of sin, suffering, and death begun in the Garden is now coming to a climax in world history. What we are experiencing today is not God's intention for man. It is the consequence of our choice. Graciously, our caring Father loved us enough to rescue us from the eternal destruction we caused. He not only came to seek and to save that which was lost, but He entered into our suffering. The prophet Isaiah stated this fact 700 years in advance and predicted the work of Christ when he said: "Surely our griefs He Himself bore, and our sorrows He carried;" Is. 53:4.

Man's suffering was not and is not God's fault – but it is God's concern. And, as we enter the Easter season, that love and concern is once again remembered by His great sacrifice on our behalf. You see, our need is not less natural disaster, less war, and more money. Our real need is a right relationship with a holy God who is offended by our sin. Our real need is to be at peace with our Creator. That peace comes at a price: Hebrews 9:22 "...without the shedding of blood there is no forgiveness." Amazingly, the Father did not require our blood to bring reconciliation, but that of His only Son, Jesus Christ. Isaiah foretold it: "But He was pierced through for our transgressions, He was crushed for our iniquities; the chastening of our well being fell upon Him, and by His scourging we are healed," Isaiah 53:5. His suffering at the cross was the doorway to the resurrection and eternal life for man.

So, as we contemplate the problem of suffering in our world, we must also contemplate the answer. It is found in an all powerful God who not only sympathizes with our distress, but has the solution for it. John 14:27: "Peace I leave with you; My peace I give to you; not as the world gives do I give to you. Do not let your heart be troubled, nor let it be fearful." Why not pray for God's peace through His Son today? Blessings.

Nichole Maurer, who will teach the high school STEM Robotics class, added, "It's a real-life application to what goes on in industry.

The high school STEM Robotics class is available to sophomores, juniors and seniors. Students interested in the class must meet certain prerequisites. First, they must show proficiency in the area of science per the ACT, PLAN, or EXPLORE testing. Next, they must have obtained a C or better in their science courses.

Eligible high school students who meet the prerequisites will be given an introduction to robotics, data logging and robotic programming through hands-on STEM activities. Students will work collaboratively to construct a robot that will execute basic functions.

By the end of the one-semester class, groups of students will be able to construct robots that can perform complex functions. Maurer has experience using the STEM Robotics materials. "As an engineering student at Kettering, we used the same type of LEGO controllers that we will be using in the

The excitement and anticipation for the upcoming STEM classes flows from the students, staff and administration of the Cass City Public Schools.

Hartel said the skills learned and honed in the STEM classes will provide future benefits for the students. "It's going to be a plus that kids will be working together on projects. It's going to give them a chance to practice problem solving.'

Cass City Junior/Senior High School Principal Chad Daniels is also looking forward to the new class offerings. "I'm excited about doing STEM; it opens up the curriculum to activities that enhance critical thinking," he said. "That will benefit our students both now and after they Also returning from Cass City's GTW champion 400-meter relay team are Victoria Mathewson and Spry. Mathewson, a sophomore, is a proven performer in the 400-meter dash and Spry, a junior, is battle-tested in the 200-meter dash. Both girls earned all-conference honorable mention honors last year in their signature events.

Milligan returns for her final season and will be called on to add depth in the distance events for Cass City, as will returning sophomore Ilana Blattner. Returnee sophomore letter winner Jordan Raymond should help the Red Hawks in the sprint relays.

Newcomers around the track for Cass City will include Lauran Russell, Hope Wilson, Jordan Pawloski, Josephine Loomis, Claudia Riddle, Karasten Warford, Chvenne Novinski, Samantha Mathewson, Becka Warford. Katherine Woodruff, Eri Sonobe and Natalya Chizhova.

Turning to the Cass City boys' team, Coach Jon Zdrojewski has 10 runners with experience around the track under their belts and 19 rookie runners on his 2014 roster.

Among the letter winners are sophomores Bransen Stimpfel, Jose Torres and Keith Lounsbury, who are tapped as the Red Hawk distance specialists, while senior Brennen Winter should prove hard to top in the 300-meter hurdles and 400-meter dash.

Ethan Montei, Daymon Tabako and Lucas Baker enjoyed success last year in the field events and will be point winners for Cass City in the shot put and discus events.

Rounding out the Red Hawk returnees are Fred Leeson, Deivin Vermeesch. and Brendan Karwowski.

"Because of the weather we have not been able to see who will be running what events," said Coach Jon Zdrojewski. "I've got 2 relay teams entered in every race. It has been awhile since Cass City has been able to do that.'

While Coach Zdrojewski will certainly miss 2013 graduates Garret Ferguson, Bobby Beyette, Austin Baker, Nick Karwowski and Jake Quinn, he has a long list of first year performers who could help ease the Red Hawks' graduation losses.

New for the Red Hawks this year are Ian Habicht, Gene Hulburt, Alex Jeffrey, Austin Walter, Travis Williams, Kyle Schmotzer, Evan Craig, Chase Denniston, Adam Michalski, Darren Miller, Joel Patera, Ethan Hulburt, Parker Haire, Jack Stern, Adrien Hartsell and Hoyt Merchant.

Severe winter conditions result in heavy fish kill

Fish kills are a common sight throughout the state following extreme winter conditions.

The Michigan Department of Natural Resources (DNR) reminds everyone that after the heavy ice and snow cover melts on Michigan's lakes in early spring, it may be common to discover dead fish or other aquatic creatures. This year's severe winter, with heavy snow and ice cover, will create conditions that cause fish and other creatures such as turtles, frogs, toads and crayfish to "Winterkill is the most common type of fish kill," said Gary Whelan, DNR fish production manager. "Given the harsh conditions this winter with thick ice and deep snow cover, it will be particularly common in shallow lakes and streams and ponds. These kills are localized and The fish actually suffocated from a natural causes, call the nearest DNR typically do not affect the overall lack of dissolved oxygen from office or Michigan's Pollution health of the fish populations or fishing quality.

Winterkill occurs during especially long, harsh winters similar to the one experienced this year. Shallow lakes with excess aquatic vegetation and soft bottoms are particularly prone to this problem. Fish and other aquatic life typically die in late winter, but may not be noticed until a month after the ice leaves the lake because the dead fish and other aquatic life are temporarily preserved by the cold water.

'Winterkill begins with distressed fish gasping for air at holes in the ice and often ends with large numbers of dead fish that bloat as the water warms in early spring," Whelan explained.

Dissolved oxygen is required by fish and all other forms of aquatic life. Once the daylight is greatly reduced by thick ice and deep snow cover, aquatic plants stop producing oxygen and many die.

The bacteria that decompose organic materials on the bottom of the lake use the remaining oxygen in the water. Once the oxygen is reduced other aquatic animals die and start decomposing, the rate that oxygen is used for decomposition is additionally increased and dissolved oxygen levels in the water decrease even more leading to increasing win-

Michigan turkey population growing the coming turkey season, but did you know how far Michigan has really come in the turkey world?

For the first time in history, wild turkeys can be found in every county of the Lower Peninsula, plus several areas of the Upper Peninsula. In 1977, only 400 birds were harvested during the season, and today harvest numbers are over 30,000 birds. This success didn't just happen overnight, but over the last half-century.

At one time in Michigan's history, turkeys were very plentiful, although over time they vanished from every county in Michigan because of unregulated take and loss of habitat. Many efforts to re-establish the population were made from 1919 through late 1983. Michigan biologists took notice of Pennsylvania's success and received birds from that state in 1954, matching the Pennsylvania habitat with an area of southern Michigan. The area chosen was the Allegan State Game Area.

Through the 1980s, wild turkeys were relocated from Iowa and Missouri to establish the southern Michigan wild turkey populations. Turkeys also were taken from southern Michigan to northern Michigan in order to help achieve the statewide success we experience today. Just getting the birds there wasn't the only concern – year-round food and cover for turkeys also needed to be provided.

We know effective private-land management is key to turkey survival in areas that receive higher snowfall," stated Rex Ainslie, DNR regional wildlife supervisor. "We are lucky to have great cooperation with so many turkey supporters.'

In 2013 alone, over 70 landowners – with the help of the National Wild Turkey Federation (NWTF) and the DNR – have put in over 450 acres for an annual winter food source, such as corn or other grains and crop mixes that with-

Spring is here and folks are thinking about stand winter conditions. Crops are not harvested and are left standing through the winter to provide a food source that turkeys can reach. Although a turkey can go up to 14 days without food, trees that hold their fruit through the winter and permanent unharvested crops provide a food source that is readily available above the snow.

'With winters like we had this year," said Bob Garner of Three Corners Chapter of the NWTF, "the private-land turkey food plot program is even more important for a great spring turkey season."

DNR wildlife biologists from across the northern Lower Peninsula have been working with turkey enthusiasts such as the NWTF, Michigan Wild Turkey Hunters Association (MWTHA), private landowners and the U.S. Forest Service for over a decade. These partners have been able to adapt new techniques and maintain a high level of performance for the program.

"I would recommend this great opportunity to someone who wants to make a difference during the winter for turkeys," said Garner.

NWTF members can get grain seed for winter plots from the NWTF Conservation Seed Program, where outdated corn from large seed companies is distributed to NWTF members for only the shipping and handling fee, approximately 10 percent of the retail cost.

'This program allows NWTF members to make a significant contribution to wild turkey winter survival in the Upper Midwest," said Rick Horton, NWTF Midwest conservation field supervisor. "Ideal plots are planted near woody cover, where large concentrations of turkeys roost in the winter.'

As part of the new license structure, funding will be dedicated for public and private landowner turkey enthusiasts to create out-

A special thank you to the Owendale Fire Department for honoring William's 50 years of service.

What a wonderful surprise for William and our entire family.

A very special thank you to Alan and Brenda for the research and process in securing the proclamations from President Obama, Governor Snyder, Mike Green and Terry Brown.

The cake Angie made was not only delicious but decorated beautifully.

Our thanks to Julie Warack for being present to capture the evening in photos. Thank you to all of the Fire Department volunteers who risk their lives in assisting their community in need. God bless and protect all of you and your families. William, Norma, Karla,

Kristina, Kendra & Kellin.
