The move comes in response to cries for tax limitations following SEV increases statewide earlier this year. In Tuscola county, SEV rose an average of 16 per cent countywide and nearly 25 per cent in Elkland township.

According to Rep. Loren Armbruster (R-Caro), the bill is now on the House floor, ready for discussion.

There are a lot of pros and cons concerning this bill and I think they should be studied thoroughly before any action is taken," Armbruster said, adding that he supports the

It's also probable that the bill will undergo several amendments before being voted on by the full House.

The bill is a substitute for a piece of legislation passed earlier this year in the Michigan Senate.

Sunday storm smashes Ubly area barn

High winds ripped apart a 40 by 64-foot barn and toppled trees and power lines Sunday afternoon at the William Sweeney farm on Morrison Road, 101/2 miles northeast of Cass City in Huron county.

Witnesses at the scene described the storm as a tornado, although the twister remained unconfirmed.

The storm snatched up the barn, scattering it over more than an acre, while causing only minor damage to a tractor and several pieces of farm machinery inside the structure.

The winds snapped a 125year-old pine tree in the front yard of the Sweeney residence, damaging a screenedin front porch. A power pole in front of the house was also broken, causing power loss

The storm toppled several huge trees nearby. Sweeney was not at home when the storm struck around 3:30 p.m. There were no animals in the barn and no damage loss was available at press time. Sweeney said part of the loss would be covered by insurance.

Elsewhere, a 10 by 50-foot building, used to house golf carts at Rolling Hills Golf Club, was demolished by Sunday's high winds. Owner Grant Hutchinson said several cars, including his own, were damaged by flying debris from the building.

A small private airplane on the ground at the airport just north of the golf course was totally destroyed when winds flipped the aircraft. No one was injured. The plane is reportedly owned by an Otisville man, Hutchinson said. He said winds were clocked as high as 50 miles an hour at the air strip.

A large tree was torn down in front of the home of Mrs. Edith Hoffman at 4907 N. Seeger Street, across from Cass City High School. No one was injured.

Scattered damage was reported throughout Cass City, confined mostly to down tree

He said fluctuations in employment in those cities are quickly reflected in county rates, since many area workers are employed in Bay City and Saginaw.

Jim Ware, village councilman and one of the prime movers at the Cass City Recreational Park, asked me how I liked the new basketball court that is in the spot where the pool used to

It's a good facility and one that is getting a big play from the youth of the community and I told Jim that I felt it was very

I couldn't help inserting the needle a little just for kicks, though, and I also told Ware that it didn't really replace the Jim, of course, is among the first to agree.

Here it is June 16 as I write this and I haven't turned on the air conditioning even once. That's not as unusual as it seems. Most times June is not all that hot. Scanning the issues a year ago about this time I read an article in this trivia and guess what it was talking about. Excessive rain.

Is it my imagination or is the Blackbird population really exploding? I always call them-Starlings, and in truth I don't know what they really are.

Except that they are pests. In Bay City 25 years ago they became so thick downtown that the city was unable to control them any way other than cutting down the beautiful shade trees where the birds roosted. There were literally thousands of them there.

Golf Coach Tom Woody should be licking his chops over the prospects of adding Jeff Prieskorn to his links team next fall as a Freshman.

Prieskorn, 14, entered a boys' tournament at Saginaw last week and finished first in his age group with an 80. The tourney attracted 179 entries in all age groups to 17 years old and Jeff finished fifth.

Now it's on to Lansing for further competition.

If I were to ask one man in town to be a program chairman I'd select Fritz Olson. He filled the job for Rotary for a month and each week came up with programs that aren't usually available for small luncheon meets.

Olson has a wide circle of friends, many with important posts in interesting occupations, and he twisted their arms to get them to drive from Flint, Saginaw and more distant points to talk here.

Clyde Wells, portside swinging golfer, hits fluorescent orange golf balls. He can spot one of those in a field of tall grass about as soon as other golfers can find a white ball smack in the middle of a well trimmed fairway.

Still I'd guess that the colored balls won't catch on all that much. The balls are called the "blinder" and they do leave you sort of goggle eyed when you see one teed up for the first time.

FRANK LENARD, (center) new director of the Thumb Area Manpower Consortium, is welcomed by chairman Maynard McConkey (right) and outgoing director Roy Allen. Lenard began his new duties Monday.

Consortium approves 3 work programs nower Consortium approved three sets of contracts to spend over a half-million dollars to help train and put to work unemployed adults and youth in the three-county area during a meeting held Thursday at Wildwood Farms.

The approvals came in spite of objections raised by board member Leonard Hool of Sanilac county, who wanted to see statistics from the Human Development Commission regarding the success of their programs over the years.

The contracts were awarded to HDC of Caro and totaled $526,467. Consortium funds will be channeled through HDC for an Adult Work Experience program, a Youth Work Experience program and classroom training for fiscal year 1976, which begins July 1.

Hool's objections centered on the fact that the Consortium had no figures from HDC on their performance record in past years.

Every time they (HDC) come before us, the philosophy is discussed and not the results," Hool said. "I think what's needed is a set of statistics. It's the responsibility of the agency to give us those statistics."

In other business, the Consortium authorized $3,000 be spent for office equipment and supplies. The Consortium, headquartered in Bad Axe presently, is scheduled to relocate in Cass City July 1.

FROM THE

Lditor's Corner

If you were to measure President Ford's record on the protection of our natural resources on a scale from one to 10 as seen with the eyes of a conservationist his number would be 11.

The new Secretary of the Interior was confirmed the other day over the near unanimous protests of every conservation minded authority in the nation.

The new secretary's record in the west was appalling to all who feel that an unspoiled environment is a national heritage worth saving. The appointment was in line with other recent decisions by the administration. When Ford vetoed the strip mining bill he did the coal operators a favor. In his veto message the president said that the bill would have cost 36,000 jobs and led to higher electric bills. Several administration ex-Sitting on the outside trying

It's hard to imagine it when the coal industry's profits on a whole were up 340 per cent last year. When companies like Consolidated Coal Co. scored and scored big. . .to the tune of 7,800 per cent increase in profits.

The fight among those who feel that the preservation of our environment is worth sacrificing short term gains for is not new and not restricted to national politics.

It even touches little old Cass City from time to time. How many years ago was it that the town was in divided camps over the preservation of the trees adjacent to Main Street? Nothing was more bitter than that fight. Looking at it now a half dozen or so years later you can see that there was merit to saving the trees. Why else would the Chamber of Commerce be spending as much as it can scrape together to plant trees along the main stem?

Was the dozen or so extra parking spaces worth it?

I'd guess that a poll along Main Street today would reveal basically the same sentiments that prevailed when the issue was hot and heavy here. Half would believe it was the right way to go, the other half feel it was wrong.

There would be changed opinions of course. One of them would be mine.

When the issue surfaced here I was on the fence. I really didn't know what was "right".

If the question were put to me now I'd side with the tree lovers. I also side with the critics of strip mining. There's no correcting the damage wrought by wrong decisions that result in the rape of our natural resources. I'd rather pay a couple of bucks more for energy than risk any deterioration of the world in which I live and we spur production regardless of will be leaving to future be grateful I don't have to rent 2 rooms at the Holiday Inn, one for Marcia and her drier. Rain brings woes for area farmers

Get a group of area farmers together these days and chances are good the main topic of conversation will center on rain. Too much rain. Too much rain that's kept corn and bean crops from being planted. Too much rain that in some parts of the county has washed away entire fields.

Yet the rain continues to come and there isn't any early sign that it's going to let

The Cass City area is one of the hardest hit parts of the county, according to William Bortel, County Extension Director, Rainfall amounts have varied from place to place in the county, making it difficult to come up with accurate readings, he said. But one thing is certain. If it doesn't stop raining for a little while, some farmers are going to be in trouble. 'Bean-wise, I think we've still got some time," Bortel indicated Tuesday. "Chances are good some of the best beans in the county haven't even been planted yet. I would say that if we can get the remainder of the corn and beans in by June 20, we've still got a chance of having a good crop year.

June 20 is Friday. If it's still wet by Friday, both bean and corn crops could be headed for serious trouble, he said.

Much of the corn that isn't in yet is in the Cass City area, Bortel said. The eastern part of the county has labored under wetter than average conditions all spring, dating from the time of the April blizzard

In Michigan and in the midwest corn belt, farmers are already looking for reduced corn yields.

"Before planting began, many corn farmers were looking at potential yields of 100 to 120 bushels to the acre," Bortel said. "Now that's down to between 75 and 80 bushels in some areas."

Michigan's corn production is small compared to the midwest corn producing states. In the Thumb, beans is the crop most farmers look to for a successful year and it's here that wet conditions are holding things up.

Some bean fields have been reportedly wiped out in the Unionville area, washed away by heavy rains. Bortel said a few farmers have committed themselves to replanting operations, while others discuss it.

But replanting takes time and is expensive. A replanted field is not nearly as profitable as a field that has to be planted only once.

DAIRY FEELS EFFECTS

Dairying in Tuscola county has also fought recent heavy rains. Hay crops are being hampered due to wetness. While actual number of bales probably won't be reduced significantly, the quality of hay will be, Bortel indicated.

Normally, hay can cure enough for baling in one day, Bortel said. However, wet conditions have extended that time up to three days or longer. With the long wait, quality is lost. Dairymen electing to make "The problem has been that you'll get a good drying day that will hold until around three in the afternoon," Bortel said. "Then it'll cloud up and start to rain.

When that happens, there's nothing to do but start over and hope this time the hay will dry out, he said. "All we can do is hope we get some dry days soon," he

KETCHUM'S KNAPSACK

The lister

By Jim Ketchum

Any prospective bridegrooms reading this column should make sure their brideto-be isn't a lister. A lister it someone who makes lists. Lots of lists.

My wife is a lister. A quick trip through our house will uncover lists of things for every conceivable occasion. If it weren't for lists, my better half couldn't function.

There's a list of things to do on our nightstand nearly every night. Alice sleeps next to the stand because as soon as the alarm goes off in the morning, she can grab the list to see what must be done.

Heading the list is getting up. Now this seems pretty obvious from my side of the bed, but not to her. Everything that must be done must be on a list someplace. Otherwise, she says, it won't get done.

We started planning this summer's vacation last January. That's when the first list of things to take with us appeared. Topping the list was the baby. Now you have to admit it's pretty tough to forget a six-month-old baby.

You automatically know when she's not around because everything gets quiet. Uncannily quiet. No squawks, squeals or squeaks. Just quiet. Yet my wife thought it would be smart to put Katie on the list, just to make sure she'd be with us.

Her recent air hop to her college reunion came following dozens of lists on what to wear, what to take and how to take it. She made a list of foods she left for me while she was gone and a list of places she could be reached.

I really wonder how well and appreciation for your lists really work for her, since everything eventually gets done anyhow. She isn't the type to do one thing until it's the success of our Open House done.

She must get bored quickly, because she likes about six listed projects going at once, floating from one to another until eventually each one gets

I can do that without a list. Not my lovely wife. A list for everything and everything on the list. That's her motto.

Saturdays aren't immune to getting listed either. In fact, that's her favorite list day. When I see the paper and pencil appear, I generally try to find something to do anyplace but in the house. If I don't, I'll get a carbon copy of the list and my marching orders.

There's no real effective way to combat a list freak. I've tried hiding pencils, paper, pens and anything that could become a list. Nothing works

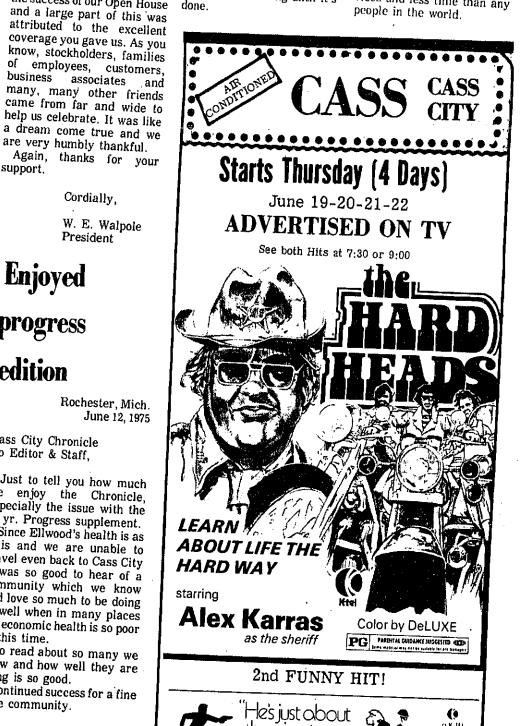

I can tell where she's been and where she's going by checking out whichever list I happen to find in any particular room. The car even has a list in it. I'm not sure what it's for, but it's there.

Taking away her lists would be the same as taking a junkie off his supply of drugs. I've seen what happens when she can't find a list and can't make a new one. Her eyes get all watery, her hands shake and she spends a lot of time sitting in the corner, chewing a pencil.

But even though she's a lister, she's all right. As they used to say in those prewomen's lib Geritol commercials-"My wife; I think I'll keep her."

It would be unrealistic to expect that talking sense about B12 shots will have any immediate deterrent effect on the quarts of this claret-colored cure-all that are being needled into quivering buttocks across the nation with such relentless regularity. B12 shots have become the front-runner to fill the role once honorably occupied by "a tonic to build me up" and have acquired the same persuasive ring of therapeutic authenticity which was summoned up in susceptible minds by a prescription for.

"beef, iron and wine." Although B12 does not have the earthy assurance of beef and iron, it has somehow, like wine, lodged itself into the popular mind as a cure-all of downs and ups, blues, butterflies in the midriff, the all-gone feeling and the "I'm coming down with something" syndrome. Working on the theory that if a little is good, a lot is better, it is usually given in what are referred to as "massive" doses. Since B12 in its one authentic role is effective in amounts measured in micrograms (onethousandth of a milligram), a massive dose is hardly enough to cover the point of a B12 is, in fact, a very important, albeit very limited, biological entity. It is what two distinguished Boston doctors found, without realizing at the time the entire importance of their discovery, when they came upon the fact that there was something in liver which could cure pernicious anemia. They were awarded a Nobel prize, and pernicious anemia, which up to that time had been uniformly fatal, became a curable disease.

Vitamin B12 is essential for cell multiplication and for normal functioning of the nervous system. Symptoms of its deficiency may be vague and include fatigue, irritability, numbness and tingling of the extremities, and problems with thinking. There may or may not be anemia along with these symptoms, special variety and sometimes can be quite severe. With such a range of non-specific symptoms, it is not surprising that B12 shots found a place in the treatment of patients who are vaguely ill, worried but well, or are -just-anxious-to-have--more-There are only two relatively rare hereditary disorders, as well as pernicious anemia itself, in which vitamin B12 injections are required to restore a state of health. The occasional patient whose stomach has been surgically removed, the rare food-faddist who eats no animal protein whatever, and some patients with impaired intestinal absorption may also need to make up a B12 deficiency.

But most of all B12 shots have precious little to do with the vitamin's real role. Fortunately, B12 seems to have no appreciable untoward side effects. Indeed it perplexes many doctors who hold no brief for casual B12 shots, yet acknowledge the frequently therapeutic benefit of "doing something;" many patients insist such shots make them instantly better.

I expect that B12 shots will go on serving as the modern substitute for old-fashioned tonics and milk-sugar pills, but it is well to remember that lots of people "got well" with them too.

AROUND THE FARM Farm scene update

By Don Kebler

This damp, high humidity weather and excessive soil moisture have placed a strain on the crops. Oats have been slightly affected with a leaf disease called halo blight. I sent some corn leaves from fields west of Unionville to the University for identification of lesions that could be one of several corn diseases.

Wheat appears to be growing well, but on many fields, the heads are not too long. Dry beans are showing effects of the wet soil conditions with root rot already in evidence.

On the insect side of the picture, I can say we have them in what appears to be greater quantities than last year. We had a mild winter in '74-'75 which prevented a weevil is again a severe problem on most alfalfa fields. Alfalfa producers who have this insect at the time of first cutting and don't spray their stubble will lose many tons from future 1975 cuttings. There are several good insecticides to control the adult alfalfa weevil and larvae, and the best control now is made after the alfalfa is harvested.

Nearly five years ago, I placed paracitized cereal leaf beetle larvae in two fields of oats located about four miles apart. I've been annually observing oat fields on these two farms - one owned by Erwin Weber, the other by Arthur Weber in Arbela township. Last year, it appeared the cereal leaf beetle parasite had increased in numbers sufficient enough to reverse the cereal leaf beetle population explosion. This year, one has to look long and close to find any significant numbers of beetle and or larvae feeding damage.

However, oat fields bordering these two farms were observed to have much greater cereal leaf beetle and larvae populations and feeding damage on the oats It doesn't appear the Webers will spray to kill the beetles this year. Rose Chafers, those tannish colored gangly-legged beetles, are just now coming out enmasse. If you have them they'll be found feeding on most any plant foliage from roses to grapes to trees Sevin is the recommended insecticide for Rose Chafers control. One spray will not end your problems of this insect. They'll be around until fall with new adults emerging from the ground continuously. Several sprays of Sevin may be required to keep this chafer within a reasonable check. So just because you find many around after your spray, do not think the spray isn't working.

Takes clean record

Restricted concealed weapons permits easy to obtain

By Jim Ketchum

If you own a handgun, it isn't hard to get a restricted concealed weapons permit in Michigan. All it takes is a relatively clean criminal rec-

Over the past three years in Tuscola county, a total of 366 restricted permits have been issued. A restricted permit allows a person to carry and use the weapon only for target practicing or hunting. More than a dozen Cass Cityans hold such permits, which must be renewed every three Obtaining a "general" permit, however, is another story. A general permit allows a person to carry a weapon at all times. In the past three years, only 30 such permits have been issued.

While courthouse records do not give addresses, names of no known Cass City residents appear as holders of general concealed weapons Restrictions tightened severely April 1, when a new general permit law took effect. The new regulation says no general permit can be issued unless the applicant has completed a gun safety class. Most general permit requests have been turned down on that basis since that time, according to County Clerk Elsie Hicks, secretary of the county Concealed Weapons Licensing Board.

The board meets the third Wednesday of each month, and is composed of Tuscola County Sheriff Hugh Marr, Prosecutor George Holmes, State Police Lt. Ward Johnson and Mrs. Hicks, who acts large sums of money or have ready access to large quantities of drugs. Most cite selfprotection as their major reason for a permit.

Restricted permits are much easier to obtain than general permits. These involve hunting or target shooting, or can involve other specified restrictions specifying where and when the holder is allowed to carry his

Mrs. Hicks said nearly 100 per cent of these permits are granted by the gun board. General permits are harder to get. Most of these are turned down for a variety of reasons from a lack of training to lack of a good reason for having the permit. Just asking for one isn't good enough, according to Sheriff Hugh Marr.

"Before we'll even consider giving someone a general permit, we have to have proof he needs one," Marr explained. "He has to bring a letter from his employer stating why he needs it. If he says he's carrying a large sum of money, we question just how large it is. I don't think it's too easy for someone to get this type of permit

Marr said a person without a felony conviction in the past eight years can legally own a handgun. But a long record of misdemeanors can kill any chance of getting a general permit

"I've questioned this before," Marr said. "We've turned them down when

Mrs. Hicks said most per- meanor record. We've always sons coming before the board told them they could take us seeking general concealed to court and force us to sign a weapons permits either carry permit, but we've never been prosecuted yet.

Marr said applications for new concealed weapons permits rise by about 10 per cent each year. He contends the system for issuing the permits works and says there aren't too many legally registered handguns in the

It's the illegally-owned handguns that cause most of the problem, he says. Over 99 per cent of all the persons with concealed weapons permits in the county are never involved in any sort of crime involving the gun, Marr said.

In the past three years, records show only one restricted concealed weapons permit which was revoked. In that case, the permit holder was convicted of public intoxication while carrying his

BACKGROUND REVIEWED

In each application, the background of the person requesting a permit is investigated. In most cases, persons seeking restricted permit involving target shooting or hunting do not have to appear in person. Criminal records, obtained through fingerprinting, are reviewed in detail. Often, it takes two or three sessions of the gun board before a permit is finally approved.

In all general permit cases, the applicant must appear in person, state his reason for seeking the permit and bring supportive evidence. There is no such thing as an automatic renewal, according to Mrs. Hicks.

Most, she added, are turned .down.

Sheriff Marr said usually a person coming before the gun board seeking some sort of permit is known by at least one member of the board. This makes it easier to determine whether or not someone should have a permit, Marr

EDUCATIONAL FUNCTION

Both Marr and Tuscola County Prosecutor George Holmes agree that the function of the gun board is largely educational.

'We're dealing only with the law-abiders at the gun board," Holmes said, "That's why we look at our jobs as educational. We try to get across what the law is concerning handguns."

He said it is relatively easy for someone with no arrest record of criminal or mental difficulty to get a restricted gun permit, although he said there are "quite a few" restricted permit refusals. Most denials, however, involve general permits.

"We try to avoid giving any kind of permit to persons without any training or experience," Holmes said.

The prosecutor, while favoring strict licensing, said he is not in favor of a total ban on handguns. "I really wish more persons would register their handguns," he said.

He said there is no way of telling just how many unregistered handguns exist in Tuscola county.

He and Sheriff Marr both said they favor strict controls. "I'd rather be on the side of too many controls than not enough." Marr said.

Here's how to get a concealed weapons permit

Here's what to do to get a concealed weapons permit in Tuscola county:

• Pick up an application from the Sheriff's office. At that time, your fingerprints will be taken and sent to Lansing, with a request for al copy of your criminal record • In the meantime, fill out the application and return it to the County Clerk's office When your criminal record is processed, it will be sent tol the Clerk's office as well With both these documents, your request will go before the gun board which meetsthe third Wednesday of each month.

 At the hearing, the board will rule on your request. It it is approved, a $3 fee will be charged when you pick up your permit at the Clerk's office. Your permit is good for three years.

outside of the county." He said the actual unemployment rate among county industries is probably closer to 10 or 12 per cent instead of the official 19 per cent figure. He cited some callbacks at Walbro in Cass City as a signal that local industry is still faring better than out-county industries. "Our situation is lots better than it was the first part of the year," Boelman said. "Our claim load probably peaked in February and March at this office and from then on, things have gotten better." Boelman said early indications are that fewer than the usual number of workers will probably be laid off during model changeover time at the auto plants this year.

"I'm always an optimist," he said. "You have to be in this business. But I'd say things are beginning to look Boelman explained the re-cently-passed increase in unemployment benefits will entitle some workers to as much as $30 extra per week in their unemployment checks. Most, however, average about $18 per week. The amount of the increase depends entirely on the former weekly wage and the number of dependents.

Unemployment benefits aim at paying laid-off workers closer to 60 per cent of their normal weekly wage, rather than 50 per cent under former rate schedules, Boelman said.

He said presently claimants are exhausting their benefits at the Caro office at a rate of 25 per day, with final extension exhaustions coming at a rate of about six per day.

By the end of June, the most recent extension of benefits will expire, Boelman indicated. After that, claimants will be without compensation unless congress votes another ard, whose services have been subcontracted from Saginaw General Hospital since last August. Bauer said Howard has held the line on expenses and has played a large role in reversing last year's gloomy situation at the hospital.

The board passed a resolution giving Howard a vote of confidence and saying it wished to continue the relationship with Saginaw General Hospital that ended several months that saw the hospital without an administrator of its own.

EXPANSION

The board also began discussing the possibility of expanding the emergency room and outpatient services. In the past year, the number of patients served in the outpatient area and emergency room has jumped from 11,399 to 12,179.

While no definite plans have yet been discussed and no dollar figures mentioned, hospital officials say the need for increased space is becoming more necessary. Officials say handling bookwork alone now takes five staff members instead of the two it originally took. Most of the expansion would probably take place in the emergency room itself and in office area.

OTHER BUSINESS

In other business, the hospital board revised its bylaws to allow physicians to sit on the board. Dr. H.T. Donahue was chosen as physician representative.

Dr. Donahue replaces Willis Campbell.

The board also adopted a different classification for voting members that makes any active hospital auxiliary

Pair pushes for improved summer rec program

Two former Cass City High School students are pulling out all the stops in an effort to rebuild an active summer recreation program for youngsters in Cass City this

If planning and enthusiasm mean anything, Karen Martin and Cheryl Kozan should

The two got together and started planning for this summer's activities last Christmas as freshmen at Central Michigan University. Miss Martin, an outstanding athlete in girls' sports in high school, will head up the recreation program, while Miss Kozan will direct arts and crafts.

Scheduled to get under way June 23, and run through Aug. 15, the program offers a wide assortment of activities in both arts and crafts, with an emphasis on team sports and getting a large number of children involved.

"Last year was a flop," Miss Martin, who has worked in the summer recreation program before, said. "I didn't want to see another summer go by without anything for the kids to do."

She said she contacted village officials late last year for permission to set up a program and discovered Cheryl Kozan was interested in it too.

"I'm in elementary education," Miss Kozan said, "and this type of arts and crafts work will tie in directly with it. I think it will be good experience.

Last year, attendance was minimal, both said. If their plans are to work, it will take a large number of students. Miss Martin is aiming at between 40 and 50 children per day.

"It's hard to come up with something interesting without a swimming pool," she said. "That's why we're going to the lake (Huron) every Thursday this summer. But we're going to try to build interest here with team sports."

She said she favors team team as well, "We'll have active and quiet games," she explained. "We'll also have tournamenttype things in volleyball, badminton, basketball, and soccer.

She said tennis will also be offered, but more on an instructional basis than competitive.

Miss Kozan said arts and crafts will center around basic skills. She plans to have students-weaving, drawing, sculpting and making things out of paper.

She wants to involve young and older children and is aiming at an art show late in the summer and perhaps an original play or a puppet

Other highlights of the summer will include a Bike-A-Thon July 8 for the special olympics. Plans call for bikers to ride to Deford and back, with each rider being sponsored by a contribution on a per-mile basis.

So far, the two girls have spent about $200 each as they whip their ideas into shape. Each will earn $3 per hour during the summer.

All students who plan to participate in the program must register Monday, June 23, from 10 a.m.-noon, at the

A new twist this year is a Junior Leader's Club. Miss Martin explained the club is designed to help interest older students in taking over the program some day. She admits the idea is new and isn't sure how successful it will be.

"I'd like there to be someone who could take over after we're through," she said.

SCHEDULE

Here is a schedule of activities for the first eight days of the program. Weekly schedules will be published in the Chronicle:

Race tight in Church loop

Church of Christ and Missionary are the early leaders in the Cass City Church League as both posted two victories during the first week of softball action.

The curtain was raised on loop play Thursday when Church of Christ met the defending champion Catholics. Paced by Don Englehart who slammed two home runs and pitched the win, Church of Christ rolled to a 9-2 decision. Tim Knoblet, ball hawking center fielder, also connected for the circuit.

In the nightcap Thursday, Missionary edged Deford, 5-4. Errors hurt Deford as two misplays by the outfield let 4 runs score for the winners.

Victim of the errors was Alvin McKee who took the loss. Gary Mellendorf went the distance for the victory.

FRIDAY'S GAMES

Friday, the Lutherans ran out its big guns to walk away from Lamotte, 10-2. Nelson Willy went the route for the Lutherans and Leland Hirsch took the loss John Hacker went four for four and Ron Nurnberger went two for four. Leland Hirsch paced the losers with two for three. In the 9 o'clock game it was Colwood over the Methodists in a free swinging game, 15-10. Lowell Smith rapped a three-run homer to help Keith O'Dell to the victory over Randy Kozan.

MONDAY'S GAMES

Missionary kept pace with Church of Christ with a win over Shabbona in a well played game, 3-2. Rod Hutchinson came up with the big blow of the game to tie the game after a hit by Dave

The tough loss was charged to Les Severance as Gary Mellendorf was the winner. The nightcap can be described very easily in one sentence. The pitching of Englehart and the hitting of Scott Hartel. Englehart pitched a no hitter and Hartel hit a home run with a mate aboard to account for all the scoring. Nearly as tough as Englehart on the mound was Al Romig who tossed a two-hitter (both by Hartel) and struck out seven.

Cass City man averts disaster at track

A 26-year-old Cass Cityan stole the show Tuesday night, June 10, at Midwest Harness racetrack in Henderson, Ky., with a feat of daring that averted a possible disaster during the eighth race.

According to published accounts in the Evansville, Ind., Courier, the incident involving John Wilson, son of Mr. and Mrs. H.P. Wilson of North Crawford Road, occurred just after the start of the race as Wilson was riding behind Sir Val Scott.

The horse shot out of the starting gate and was third going into the clubhouse corner when one of the reins broke. Sir Val Scott, a freelegged pacer, immediately
