DNR sets 26,738 acres for oil, gas leases in county begin sprouting in Elkland township after the uncoming sale of state oil and gas lease rights Aug. 18 by the Department of Natural Resources. The DNR announced this week that of 170,081 acres covered in the pending lease rights sale, the largest lease offerings are in Tuscola county, where 26,738 acres of DNR land will be up for Much of the land is located in the Cass City area and includes 359 acres to be developed in Elkland town-

Under terms of the sale, offered--development non-development. Under a development lease, oil companies could drill directly from the surface in search of natural gas or oil.

Non-development leases give oil companies the right to draw off oil or gas deposits but denies direct surface drilling. Drilling would have to take place on adjoining land on an angle into DNR land, according to Robert G. Wood, DNR Lands Division

All 359 acres to be offered in Elkland township are development lease properties. The largest single area two types of leases will be chunk of land up for lease is ship, and 164 non-develop-

4,784 acres in Ellington township, all non-development. According to DNR officials, 1,750 acres will be offered in Kingston township, with all but 180 acres non-development, with another 1,190 acres, all non-development

In Elmwood township, 160 non-development acres will be put up for bids. Leases are also scheduled in Sanilac and Huron count-land, in Novesta township.

A total of 1,261 acres of nondevelopment land will be up' for bids in Greenleaf township, with 1,187 acres (non-development) in Austin town-ment acres in Evergreen township. Argyle has 40 acres earmarked for development leases and another 729 acres for non-development.

In Huron county 80 acres in Grant township will be leased for development, with another 28 in Brookfield township. An additional 40 acres in Brookfield township will be let under non-development leases.

Revenue from the lease sale will go into the state's General Fund, with part drawn off for the Game and Fish Protection Fund where those lands have been purchased from that fund.

Wood explained that once the highest bid on each description has been approved by the Natural Resources Commission, the bid must be approved by the state administrative board before an oil company can go ahead with development. In addition, a geological survey permit must be obtained and an Environmental Impact Study must be submitted before such a drilling permit could be issued, Wood

The sale could mean an economic boom for the area if substantial deposits of oil and natural gas are found under Michigan's Thumb....

"The oil companies certainly wouldn't have asked to be allowed to bid on these leases if they didn't think they had some chance of success,' Wood said.

Wood explained that parcels such as the Deford State Game Area are considered for non-development leases, due to their ecological make-

"By leasing them on a non-development basis, we are already making some iudgement on their suitability for drilling," Wood said.

"All the lands being offered have been subjected to a field review to safeguard environ--mental-values-in-addition-tothe initial zoning classifica-tion in offering lease rights under existing policy," Wood added.

Wood said once non-development lands are leased, oil companies will probably move to lease oil and gas rights from neighboring private lands.

No one is yet calling the leases in the Thumb the beginning of an oil boom. But if part of the search is successful, it could have profound effects on the economy in the Thumb.

There are a few operating oil wells in the Thumb, primarily in Wisner township. unknown and will be until test wells are drilled to find out if there really is oil and gas down there.

Other Tuscola county townships where DNR lands will be up for lease bids are Millington, Watertown, Vassar, Fremont, Juniata, Denmark, Wells and Indianfields. The lease sale, approved by the Natural Resources commission in June, is set to take place at the Lansing Civic Center. The most recent sales were held in 1974 and 1972.

A total of 38 Michigan counties will be involved in Estimates place pool costs at $200,000, council told

The cost of Cass City's proposed municipal swimming pool has been pegged at $200,000, according to figures made public at Tuesday night's Village Council meeting held at the Municipal Building. The figure falls more than $4,000 below a cost estimate quoted in 1973 for the project and has been reduced for two reasons, according to Trustee Dr. D.E. Rawson.

First, the figure covers only the pool itself. By constructing the bath house using a construction supervisor, the village could probably save money over contracting the whole job, Rawson said.

Secondly, competition is reported fierce among construction firms, and bidding is expected to be brisk.

Village President Lambert Althaver pointed out that Cass City saved nearly 35 per cent on the cost of constructing the new facilities building by contracting it out locally under a construction superintendent.

the pool and equipment and authorized the signing of a contract.

Additional funding needed to complete the project won't be decided until bids are in and until authorities know exactly how much to expect from the Helen Stevens estate, which will finance the lion's share of the project.

According to plans reviewed Tuesday night, the proposed pool measures 25 yards by 25 meters, with depths varying from three to Council moves to begin sewage treatment update

Cass City Village Council got its first look at proposed wastewater treatment plant expansion plans during its regular meeting Tuesday night at the Municipal Building and learned it could take a local outlay of nearly a half million dollars to complete

Council heard a report from Jim Hubbell, consulting engineer, who placed a ballpark figure of $2 million on a new facility to handle existing sewage disposal needs.

Hubbell said Cass City's share in such a program would total 20 per cent, with 75 per cent coming from federal monies and five per cent from state funding, making the village share around $400,000.

Council gave Hubbell approval to begin working on a facilities plan, for which federal and state reimbursement would also be available under step one of a three-step federal Water Pollution Con trol Act.

Reimbursement of such a study under the act should be in the neighborhood of $5,000 to $8,000, Hubbell said.

Once step one is completed, step two calls for preparation of a construction plan and step three involves actual construction.

The present facility was built in 1935, with an addition in 1953. According to village authorities, the present facility runs over its capacity at certain peak hours during the Plant Supt. Nelson Willy explained no untreated sewage flows into the Cass River, however. It all receives treatment, but not the full amount at peak hours, he said.

By moving on step one of the program, council hopes to get a head start and possibly be moved up on the priority list for funding of such projects. Presently, Cass City stands 100th out of 567 projects in the state. By starting step one now, instead of waiting for the grant to be approved, the village could be in a position for the two subsequent grants before other communities with higher priorities, Hubbell explained.

Village President Lambert Althaver emphasized that the present plant is in compliance with state statutes and that the situation is not desperate. He expressed concern regarding how Cass City's share of the funding would be raised.

Council made no decision on how to fund locally, but most trustees seemed to lean toward general obligation bonds which would require a vote of the people.

Hubbell said the State Water Resources Commission wants to get construction: funds allocated by the end of September, 1976, and that by moving quickly on step one, the village would have a better chance at a piece of the federal and state pies.

An application for a step one grant is expected soon by village authorities. Council is expected to take another look at the project at its next meeting.

AMBULANCE SERVICE

The future of ambulance service in Cass City was discussed by a delegation representing Hills and Dales existing service.

Hospital Board President Jim Bauer, administrator Randy Howard and Roger Little made the pitch for council participation to help secure federal funding to upgrade local ambulance Little asked council to act as a sponsoring governing body to make the grant application, along with continued financial participation in its operation.

He explained that the program would be funded on a 70 per cent federal and 30 per cent local basis.

Little warned that under pending state legislation, Cass City could be left without ambulance service. He said as a private operator, he could not afford to continue offering the service under the proposed law without government help, due to stiffer regulations regarding equip-recommended that a committee of council take the problem up with Elkland township authorities and the hospital board to seek a solution. He said council would be willing to do what it could, but added that the jurisdiction falls more with the township than the village

"If It Fitz..." Another lost week end

BY JIM FITZGERALD

(Jim Fitzgerald is on vacation. This is a summer rerun, reprinted by demand of the National Screwdriver Assoc., - and 十).

Constant readers (Mother and Aunt Madeline) will remember my report on that Monday when a co-worker asked me what I'd done over the week end. "I softened the water," I told him. "That doesn't take all week end," he said. "It does if you do it with a hammer," I said.

Well, this will be a similar report on what I did last week end. I changed the license plates on my car.

I was armed with a screwdriver. I've been changing license plates for 25 years and a screwdriver has always been sufficient unto the task. But not this time, Not with the tricky, flippy plate-holder that hides the gas cap on my merry lousy Oldsmobile.

Honest I thought I'd lost my mind. There were 2 screws with no slots for the screwdriver. What type of horrible mutation is this? I asked myself after skinning several knuckles in a vain attempt to carve my own slots.

I have cried real tears while attacking - slotted screws with a + screwdriver. I've worried about violating the Carpenter's Code of Ethics while using a - screwdriver on a + screw.

But never before, dear God, have I thrust a screwdriver into a screw and found no slot. Could it be a nail? Whoever heard of nailing a license plate to a car?

I looked at the flip side of the plate. Both screws were screwed into nuts. After thinking and cursing for several minutes, sitting there on my cold driveway, I hit upon the answer. I would have to unscrew the nuts, rather than the screws.

You can't do that with a screwdriver, + or -.

"I need a monkey wrench," I said to myself, wondering where I might borrow one. My do-it-yourself carpenter's kit is limited to 2 screwdrivers, a hammer no one can ever find, and a rusty saw borrowed from my father-inlaw 14 years ago to shorten a Christmas tree.

It took awhile, but I finally found a neighbor willing to lend me a monkey wrench. By this time it was getting dark out and my wife appeared on the scene with news about dinner. She looked at me and the monkey wrench and the license plate.

"What you need is a pair of pliers," she said, making public a secret suspicion which had been slowly prickling my skin as I discovered there was no room behind the license plate for both my hand and a monkey wrench."

It was then that I began to blubber and roll down the driveway. By the time I regained my composure, my wife had located a pair of pliers. Back to the job.

Unless I crawled into the gas tank and reached back up the spout, it was difficult to get decent leverage on the nuts. The plate hadn't been changed in 2 years and the screws were rusty. I finally loosened the nuts but the screws simply spun around with the nuts. Clearly it would be necessary to hold the screws firm while unscrewing the nuts. But how could I hold the screws firm when there were no slots for the screwdriver? My sobbing became uncontrollable. "You need 2 pairs of pliers and another person," my wife said. She was right. She dug up another pair and she held the screws still while I finally nuts changed the plate in the moonlight. She then helped me into the house where I collapsed in a state of shock for 4 hours.

That's what I did last week end and I really don't give a damn what you did.

Family robbed at gunpoint

near Cass City

Sandusky State Police said this week chances are slim that two rifle-wielding bandits who terrorized and robbed a Port Huron family near Cass City early Friday morning will be apprehended soon.

Police said Raymond Jewell, his wife and their three children were held at gunpoint and robbed of $11 in cash and their camper truck at Sanilac County Park No. 3 on M-53, about eight miles southeast of Cass City.

Police said the family was awakened when the bandits fired several shots in the air from a .22 caliber rifle. The family was unharmed.

The camper was found a short time later parked at the M-53-Severance Road inter-

Jewell told police the robbery took place around 4:30

Police said it took the family over an hour to get from the park to a telephone to summon help. A State Police spokesman told the Chronicle Monday no new information has been uncovered about the robbery or the suspects. The spokesman said chances of finding the pair remain slim unless they strike again.

CHECKING OUT how their garden grows at Provincial House are (from the left) Isaac Teller, registered nurse, Floyd Reid (seated), Walter Walsh and Harvey McMullen. Several residents have spent time each day tending to the garden since last spring. Arlan Brown provided the black dirt, Maynard Helwig plowed it and Albee Hardware donated seeds. The 10 by 15-foot plot features corn, potatoes, tomatoes, beans, turnips, radishes and lettuce.

Ubly man arraigned on assault charge

FROM THE

I'm full of old bromides today.

I'm sending a couple along for free to Sen. Charles O. Zollar, a Republican from Benton Harbor. The first is that sometimes even fat cat politicians start talking when they should have been listening. (slightly second twisted) is that you back a politician into a corner and he'll come out smelling, but not like a rose. Ol' Charlie O. evidently was talking for the voters back home when he came up with this while discussion of the new Michigan business tax bill was before the Senate:

'This bill will not bring one industry into Michigan, will not create one job, will not take one family off welfare", Zollar pontificated to his fellow solons.

"I want a solution, not an excuse. If you vote for this bill you are voting for an excuse. not an answer.'

Now that's leadership for you. Here's a man that's dead set against this tax. (I'll bet he's 100 per cent behind the American flag and motherhood, too.)

How was poor Charlie to know that fate would do him

A double dose of bad luck I call it. Here's a man whose name, through no fault of his own, starts with a "Z". He votes at the very end of the roll call vote.

That's bad enough. But worse than that, a perverse, unkind fate made his colleagues go and vote on that bill so that when it got right down to him it was still undecided.

His was the vote that counted. You couldn't have any worse luck than that, could you?

Anyway, it was time to fish or cut bait. (Another bromide). Charlie didn't hesitate . he cut bait.

He voted for the bill. According to one political observer he did it to support Gov. Milliken and the party

In political horse trading that is common enough in all levels of our government. Charlie must have piled up plenty of points there.

Maybe he'll be assigned to a study group to see if gambling is good for Michigan and visit Las Vegas, England and The Riviera.

The only trouble is what if he returned and denounced gambling as bad for the State, bad for the people and just an excuse instead of an answer? Maybe rush out and look for casino locations?

Most voters expect a little hot air from their elected officials. Campaign rhetoric is accepted, if not condoned.
But it takes a lot of guts to make an about-face like this one. It's unfortunate that it comes at a time when it adds a little more fuel to the fire that is raging in voters' minds about our system today. A fire nearly already out of control. When the chips were down, Zollar found his solution. The rest of us are still looking for ours. I can't think of a bromide silver screen.

Since Archie Bunker, Kojak and a gang of other prime-time TV characters have decided not to clean up their acts, they'll all be seen after 9:00 p.m. next fall.

That's because the television industry, in its infinite wisdom, has decreed that from 7:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m., only good, wholesome, "fam-_ily__shows_should_be_shown_

Part of this is in response to criticism that TV inundates viewers with too much violence and sex. That's why Walter Cronkite comes on at 6:30 p.m.

From now on, it's strictly "The Waltons", "Lawrence Welk" and Doris Day reruns until after the kiddies have gone to bed. After that, all sense of shaping our morals ends, replaced by what a lot of viewers really wanted to see in the first place-violence and sex.

This move to clean up the airwaves has been launched in the name of public decency and an effort to upgrade us culturally as a nation.

There's no way on earth or around a channel selector that you'll succeed in cleaning up anything. This "family viewing" period only helps reinforce the double standard Will Rogers described as "laughing one way and voting another"

Network executives will probably learn to their chagrin that in spite of clamoring for family shows on the tube, their greatest audience will probably turn on after 9:00

If that happens, it means advertisers, who pay the freight, will shy away from that early evening block in favor of going with the popular favorites shown after

Don't misunderstand me. I'm not promoting violence and sex. I'm probably the most non-violent character you've ever met. I've also never seen an X-rated movie and I really have no plans to

Glaspie set for capitol internship

Cass City will have its own representative in Washington, D.C. for the month of August. And it won't cost taxpayers a dime or a trip to the polls.

Kim Glaspie, 19, son of Mr. and Mrs. Grant Glaspie of 4195 Maple St., will be spending a month working as congressional intern for Eighth District Congressman J. Bob Traxler, and to hear Glaspie tell it, he can hardly Glaspie's month-long assignment in Washington will be financed through the LBJ Congressional Intern Program, designed to placecollege students on the staffs congressmen and give them a first-hand look at how government operates.

The program finances expenses only and Glaspie will not go on Traxler's payroll. But money isn't the important part of the program.

"I'm looking forward to being a part of Congressman Traxler's staff," Glaspie said, smiling. "I've been interested in politics ever since I was 12 years old and I've wanted to get involved in it somehow.'

Glaspie, whose political hero is the late John F. Kennedy, said he contacted Traxler's office earlier this year regarding a possible job as a Congressional page, but learned that those jobs are earmarked for high school age students.

In the meantime, however, Traxler urged young Glaspie to check into the Congressional intern program. Glaspie did and was accepted. He sees the upcoming month as especially important as a learning experience. He is a political science major to door, introducing themat the University of Michigan and would eventually like to take up a political career.

During his stay in the nation's capital, Glaspie will work the regular 9:00 a.m.-6:00 p.m. staff hours. He will also probably be assigned a staff project to be completed by the end of his stay.

While he isn't sure what the project will be, he's hoping it will involve something directly related to the Cass City area. Possibly, he said, he may work on some phase of the fight to keep rail service coming to the village and the Glaspie's interest in politics isn't something new. During his years in high school, he became involved in local and national campaigns, and served as treasurer for the student McGovern for President committee.

If you haven't guessed it by now, Glaspie is a Democrat. He's been working so far this summer at Rolling Hills Golf Course prior to beginning his junior year at the U of M.

He's excited about politics and says last year's Presidential impeachment and revelations of corruption in government haven't turned him off from politics. If anything, it's heightened his interest.

"I think part of what's happened has been good because it's made people more aware of who they elect to office," Glaspie said. "I think people are going to want to take a closer look at their candidates from now on."

He says he thinks campaigns are most effective when candidates go from door

Grant voters millage

Grant township voters approved three mills for three vears for road maintenance in a special election held Tuesday. Township Clerk Donald Reid said unofficial returns showed the tax passed by a 31-7 margin. A total of 38 votes were cast.

Reid said the additional millage will be spread on 1975, 1976 and 1977 taxes.

selves and letting voters get a good look at them.

Glaspie's enthusiasm for the political world comes from home. Both of his parents have been actively involved in local politics for many years in Cass City and Elkland township.

Their son sees a revival of the two-party system in Tuscola county and the Thumb and wants to learn all he can about it.

When he left Tuesday for Washington and his new job, Glaspie wanted to become active in politics. He was confident that after a month in the nation's center of government, he wouldn't change his mind.

KIM GLASPIE studies a map of Washington, D.C., as he prepares for a month as a Congressional intern working in Eighth District Congressman J. Bob Traxler's office. Glaspie was scheduled to leave Tuesday for his assignment.

Space flight didn't excite

An era in manned space flight ended last week with the Apollo splashdown in the Pacific. Following its historic link-up with a Russian Soyuz spacecraft, the Apollo program came to an end. No more manned space flights are scheduled for at least four

Did this final venture into space excite you? Mrs. Jean Fisher of rural Cass City said she thought it was all right, but it just didn't measure up to the excitement of the first manned moon landing back in

"I don't think there will ever be quite the thrill there was when they took the first step on the moon," Mrs. Fisher said. "This flight was good because the astronauts and cosmonauts got together. But it really wasn't too

She agreed that probably the most exciting flight was Alan Shepherd's first suborbital launch back in 1961. "We've followed most of them pretty closely on TV over the years," she said. 'But we did forget about the splashdown Thursday.'

AROUND THE FARM Tips on drying shelled corn

By William Bortel

Probably the most important stage of corn harvest is the drying operation followed by proper storage. If stored properly, grains can be kept for several months, even years, with little or no quality loss. But last year, many growers suffered large losses because of improper drying. Factors contributing to good temperature and condition of the grain. Visible and invisible kernel damage increases as the kernel moisture increases at harvest. This type of damage is not a problem for high moisture corn storage except that it increases acid treatment requirements. But when corn is dried, damaged kernels increase possibilities for mold growth, increase drying costs, result in more broken storage are moisture content, kernels and fine material. You can reduce kernel damage in the field by: Making frequent combine adjustments in the field as conditions dictate.

 Keeping combine ground speed within manufacturer's recommendations. Avoid overloading the combine.

 Harvest as much grain as possible when it is at 26 to 28 per cent moisture.

THE DRYING

There are no short-cuts to properly drying corn. It requires 1,800 to 2,000 BTU's to evaporate a pound of water from shelled corn through a mechanical drying system.

Air temperature within the dryer is measured to determine how much moisture is being extracted from the kernel. Recommended temperatures for drying grain are 100 to 110 degrees for seed, 140 to 150 degrees for food grain, and 160 to 180 degrees for feed grains. Actual grain temperatures, however, vary with the rate of air flow in relation to the air temperature plus exposure time to the heated air. Be sure to follow manufacturers instructions for proper drying.

SOME GUIDELINES

Overheating causes the greatest damage to farm-dried grain. Many operators try to speed up the drying process by raising the air temperature, particularly for high-moisture corn.

But this will only cause burning, uneven drying and more kernel damage. When drying conditions are poor, lower the drying temperature. This will slow the process but will improve the quality of the grain.

Make sure you maintain the proper grain depth when operating a bin dryer Air flow falls off as depth increases. Variation in the final grain moisture between the top and bottom layers results from the combination of air temperature, air flow and grain depth. An in-bin dryer is a low-volume drying unit. You cannot increase the volume by overloading.

If drying results are not satisfactory, reduce grain depths and drying temperatures (better quality is gained below 100 degrees than above), Uneven drying can occur in any type of dryer from uneven air distribution in the plenum chamber, plugged perforations in the floor or wall of the dryer or from outside wind pressure.

New dryers should be checked for hot or cold spots by grain sampling or feeling the grain on dryer surfaces

Milligan, 23, of Bay City-Forestville Road, and his father, James A. Milligan, 61, who farm between 700 and 800 acres four miles north of Cass

They inaugurated the new round baling system this spring and to date they have nothing but praise for it. They and Edwin Karr, Cass City area farmer and Elkland Township Supervisor, own the only two round balers in the

The Milligans started using their new system earlier this spring and so far find it saves time, energy and money.

-The-machine-produces-a bale roughly equivalent to 30 normal size bales, Dave Milligan explained. Each round bale weighs between 1,300 and 1,400 pounds and measures five and one-half feet wide and five and a half feet in diameter.

"The real big advantage we've found is that it saves labor," Milligan said. "One man can bale a field where with the old system, you needed lots of extra help. You spend all day doing nothing but baling, and you don't have to put up with breakdowns with wagons or elevators or anything like that."

Milligan says he can bale about three times as much hay with the new system as he could with conventional baling. Once the hay is baled and in the field, however, it still must be hauled to a storage area. He said he is still waiting to take delivery on a loader that should speed up this end of the operation as well

Another advantage with the round baling system is that they don't have to be stored. Each bale is placed on the ground without any covering of any kind.

"I understand they figure there's about an eight per cent loss factor because it's stored outside," Milligan

But that's minimal compared to the saving in man-hours consumed in simply storing the hay. This also means that in the future, a new barn, for instance-won't need a hay mow.

The Milligans made their decision to switch to the round baling system earlier this year. Their operation faced a shortage of storage space for hay following a fire that destroyed one of their barns three years ago.

They'd seen the round baling system demonstrated and felt it could work on their farm. They also found the cost of a new baler, $5,800. was only about $400 more than a conventional hay

They made the decision and so far haven't regretted it.

"We're real happy with it," the younger Milligan said. "It only uses about a quarter as much twine as the conventional baler and we've found it doesn't use any more energy to operate than our old

To accommodate the larger bales, Milligan said he plans to construct special feeders to take one bale at a time. So far, the 30 dairy cattle and 85 beef cattle consume about one round bale of hay each day. Milligan said he and his father investigated the possibility of going to a stacking system for hay. Such a system produces a bundle roughly eight by eight by 12

He said he was not impressed by the one system he saw in operation, believing it left itself open to too many mechanical breakdowns. • He's convinced the round baling system is the wave of the future.

"I can see most farmers eventually going to it," he said. "To me, it's just a better system all the way around." Milligan said he and his father plan to continue using mit (1) Adults Only-Expires In 10 Days the conventional baler as well as the new system. That way, they can put up extra hay for

> "If we get a deep snow or lots of ice and get our round bales covered up, we can use hay out of the mow," he explained. "And by next spring, if we have extra hay left over, we can sell it."

He said he doesn't plan to cover his round bales, which imit (1) Adults Only-Expires in 10 Days / are lined up in a large rectangle behind the barn.

"You can spend time putting plastic and tires and dirt around them and when the first good wind comes along, you've got plastic all over your farm," he said. "They say there's no mold with these round bales and that there's no real need to cover them." As far as the baler itself is concerned, Milligan says he thinks it's more maneuverable than his conventional baler and has less of a tendency to tip over. The Milligans are drawing hay from 120 acres of their farm this year and so far have put up about 440 large round

The system is a far cry from haying as Milligan's father knew it.

"Back when I was young we loaded it onto a wagon and stacked it by hand," he said. "It sure was a lot different back then."

Milligan's son says since they've started using the new system, numerous passing cars have stopped along Bay City-Forestville Road to watch the operation.

So far at least, the Milligans are happy with their investment in what they consider the best way to put up hay. One thing is certain-it beats using a pitchfork.

HAY STACKING SYSTEM

Those aren't giant size loaves of bread that have popped up at the Allen Merchant farm this year. Those are stacks of hay, made with a new machine that puts the equivalent of 85 or 90 regular bales of hay into one huge pile. Merchant purchased the machine following first-hand experience with one last fall.

"I was looking for something that would salvage corn stalks," he explained. "I wanted cheap feed for my beef cattle and corn stalks Sales Net was it. Once I saw what the stacker would do, I went for

That's the big reason Merchant bought the stacker-it saves labor and stacks everything-hay, straw and corn

Merchant farms 2,700 acres and draws hay from 55 acres.

So far, after one cutting, he says he's satisfied with the results. The machine gobbles up hay from the ground and eventually produces stacks seven feet wide, 15 feet long and 10 feet high. Each stack weighs three tons.

Moving a load of hay that large takes another special machine--a carrier that pulls each stack onto a flat bed using chains. Merchant says this is one drawback in the stacking system. "You do have some problem hauling hay any long distances," he said. "You also have to let each stack settle a little while before you try to move it. We found that out right away.' Once the hay is settled and in place, however, the advantages of the system take over. The stacks are stored outdoors. As they age, they form a protective layer outside, guarding the inner hay against wetness and mold. The compressed hay also wards off spontaneous combustion, Merchant says. One thing is certain-a hay stacking system is definitely geared for the large operator. Merchant said his stacker alone cost $12,000, and that ain't hay, he agreed. He sees large beef cattle operations ideally suited for a hay stacking system, since the animals can feed directly from the stack in the farm yard.

"The dairyman won't go for it though, because most of his animals are fed indoors," Merchant observed. "For him, conventional bales will probably still be the way to Merchant believes conventional balers won't be replaced completely in the foreseeable future. "They've still got their place, especially when it comes to transporta-

Merchant likes his system because it allows him to gather hay on days which would be too wet for conventional baling. So far this year, he's produced 45 three-ton stacks. One stack lasts the 24 cows on his farm a week.

"So far, we haven't had any trouble with it at all," he said. "We just hooked onto it and took off.2

The stacker does the work of four men operating a conventional baling system, Merchant said. It operates by picking up the raked hay and depositing it into a large bin. Once the bin is filled, a plate under hydraulic pressure compresses the hay and creates room for more. The procedure is repeated

Walbro sales, earnings show decline about three times before a chain drive moves the stack out the rear of the machine.

Merchant likes the idea of being able to stack corn stalks with the same machine. In fact, if it wasn't for this feature, he probably wouldn't have gone to the stacker in the first place.

Judging by how well the stacked stalks kept last winter, Merchant figures the investment will be well worth it when it comes to hay. Overall, the amount of labor saved over a conventional baling system along with fewer chances for mechanical failure make the stacking system look like the answer. "We'll know for sure next spring how it works," Merchant said.

POSING BESIDE large rolls of hay produced by a new having system at their farm are James A. Milligan and son, Dave. The Milligans like the new system that eliminates the need for inside storage and saves time and labor.

The Sightmobile is manned by local Lions Club members trained to operate the sophisticated equipment in the mobile unit.

There is no charge and no donations are accepted. The Sightmobile was purchased and equipped through Lions Clubs in District 11-D.

DESTINY: THE MINOR LEAGUES?

Headed for the "Majors" - that's his dream. But don't count on it, even if he stays in

For in thousands of cities and towns across America we know that baseball isn't JUST the major leagues. We know boys on their way up . . . and men on their way down . . . and fellows who have gone about as far as they can go. A real ball player is one who gives his club his best-in any league.

How close this comes to a fundamental conviction of the Church!

Christianity gives a man solid footing for his faith in God and in himself. To achieve the full potential of our God-given talents is primary; to fulfill every dream is secondary. The Church promises no man earthly success. But it helps us to appraise the gifts God gave . . . to use them honestly and unselfishly. And, startlingly, it points the way to new goals, far beyond our dreams.

The problem of caring for young problem drinkers is not unlike that of caring for their elders who drink too much, but is complicated by the difficulties inherent in caring for adolescents, who are in general a neglected segment of the population -- too old for the baby doctor and too young for practitioners who care for the full-fledged grown-up.

That is why an increasing number of pediatricians and psychiatrists, recognizing this vacuum in medical care. now treat adolescents almost exclusively.

Underlying psychological disturbances are common among adolescents. They worry about their developing bodies; they worry about their special problems with the pimply eruptions of adolescent acne. They need help at the time of the onset of menstruation, and they are often dislocated by the challenge_of_their_emerging sexuality.

And the stress of the "new morality" is far more apparent to them than the promised liberation.

Thus it is that more than anything else, these youngsters need a doctor who is not only knowledgeable and competent, but even more important, is one to whom they can relate. They need one who can listen and who is strongly committed to their age group. There are not many doctors that meet these requirements.

The Cass City Merchants are nearing the end of the season in the Thumb Travelling League and eyeing the State District, Class D, tournament that opens Saturday.

They are still alive in the double elimination league play-offs and will face the winners of the Sebewaing-Frankenmuth game Thursday night in Reese at 7:20 p,m.
