MICHIGAN MIRROR NEWS BRIEFS

"Is this a private fight," asked the proverbial Irishman, "or can anybody get in it?"

That might have been the question asked by Michigan businessmen and manufacturers as they waded into the Governor Williams-State Legislature Donnybrook in the closing days of the legislative session.

Faced with the prospects of going $11 million farther in the red, the House general taxation committee considered a 2% processing tax as a last-minute attempt to make up the losses in revenue which had been brought about by the governor's vetoes of several tax measures.

The tax would have levied a 2% tax on everything that goes into industrial processing or manufacture.

All the tools an auto maker buys to change models, all the tin cans a packer uses to package the season's crop of fruits and vegetables, all the machinery a print shop buys to replace worn-out equipment or to expand would be taxed.

The bill would have wiped out the industrial processing exemptions in the sales tax law, but, not being a "sales tax," the take wouldn't be subject to the split-up with local governmental units and schools.

It was a sweltering afternoon when Rep. Louis Anderson of Charlevoix, chairman of the tax committee, rapped for the public hearing to come to order.

But, more telling than the weatherman's efforts, was the heat generated under the collars of the scores of citizens who crowded around the speaker's rostrum in the House.

Although they showed such restraint in their presentation that Rep. Anderson was moved to compliment the witnesses on it, spokesmen for Michigan business groups used incisive phrases to convey their complete disapproval of the proposed law.

Joseph Creighton, representing the Michigan Manufacturers Association, charged flatly: "Michigan's problem is a political one more than a financial one. Business is willing to go along on a long-range taxation program: it made no objection to the increase in corporate franchise taxes. But we refuse to be the sacrificial goat on the political altar of a governor who refuses to admit that a tax on industry is a tax on the consumer."

But the witnesses had more than verbal stilettoes to throw at the governor. They had bludgeons of facts to swing at the committee.

Detroit industrialists protested that they must compete with firms outside Michigan who wouldn't have to add such tax to production costs. "With this extra handicap, we won't be competitive. And if we're not competitive, our workers won't get the pay check they get now."

They warned of the danger of industry having to price itself out of the market. "There is an erroneous belief that profits effect prices. Actually, prices determine profits and prices are set by competition."

Steel spokesmen pointed out that their products were selling well below ceiling prices. "Competition brings prices down, not the OPS," they said.

The pyramiding effect of the tax came in for strong criticism. Two per cent levy at each step of production would mean a sizeable tax on the finished product. For, no matter what any politician says, the only person paying any tax is the ultimate consumer.

A Grand Rapids spokesman pointed out another danger. An out-of-state firm, planning a $10 million plant in his area had halted all planning until the fate of the bill was settled. The 2% levy would have raised the price of that plant beyond reason.

"It is foolish for the State to finance the Department of Economic Development to attract new industry here if the Legislature is going to scare it away by an unfriendly attitude toward business," they said.

Other industrialists pointed out that the increased franchise tax, reassessed property valuation and extra real estate taxes to pay off local bond issues was already raising taxes by dangerous amounts.

"Why, this tax would cost more than the proposed State income tax," protested Creighton.

It took little deliberation by the committee later that evening to kill the proposal.

Committeemen's private opinion was that it's better to forego the golden egg rather than to kill the goose that lays it.

Michigan may make a President this year.

At least it's in a key position to make a Republican Nominee.

When the GOP band wagon starts rolling in Chicago Monday, Michigan delegates may well be in the driver's seat. They're going to the convention determined not to lose out on the strategic position the state delegation holds along with California and Pennsylvania.

They go ostensibly unpledged and—also—ostensibly—in perfect harmony. The result is that Michigan can make a swift jump when its leaders detect that the moment has come to start the parade for Taft or Eisenhower.

The state that makes the first break to developing a landslide is never forgotten when the successful candidate remembers his friends in the traditional political manner, patronage and prestige.

The delegation is probably sharpening its parliamentary procedure these last few days before the convention. It was a parliamentary move that kept Michigan off the Dewey bandwagon four years ago.

Michigan went into the convention waving the banners for the late Sen. Arthur Vandenberg. The senator wasn't very interested in the Presidential nomination; he was deep in his important work on the bipartisan foreign policy. So his campaign never caught fire.

On the second ballot the tide turned for Dewey. Former Gov. Kim Sigler was chairman of the delegation and sensed the shift. He wanted to swing his pivotal votes. At the end of the second roll-call, Sigler asked Congressman Joseph Martin for two minutes to "correct" Michigan's vote. That meant to hold a hurried caucus to swing the block to Dewey.

Martin called Sigler out of order and Michigan missed its try.

DISEASE GERMS

So you're afraid of germs? You don't think they do you any good?

Well, they do — providing you're not sick — because far from being evil creatures we couldn't live without them.

But germs or bacteria cannot ferment, or decompose living tissue because bacteria feeds only on decomposed matter.

But when the process of growth or life have interference, bacteria starts working against you and illness results. Tuberculosis, for example.

And why tuberculosis? Because due to a lack of nerve supply, an area of lung tissue frequently breaks down and cells begin to die providing an excellent breeding and feeding ground for bacteria.

The point is that bacteria did not cause the disease—bacteria developed and multiplied as a result of the disease.

What caused the lack of nerve supply?

Probably a vertebral misalignment blocking the flow of vital nerve energy over the nerves supplying the affected lung.

Chiropractors are skilled in locating and adjusting such misalignments.

Insure your health with frequent chiropractic care by calling DR. B. V. CLARK, at 148 W. Lincoln Street, Caro, or phone 370 for an appointment.—Adv.
