Pre-Calving Care Boosts Dairy Gains

Dry your old cows up early and break your heifers into the milking herd gently, before calving time for the best dairy herd results, advises James G. Hays, Michigan State College extension dairyman.

Michigan farmers generally feed the same ration to dry cows that milking cows receive. If the roughage is at least 60 per cent legumes, no high protein supplement is necessary, according to the MSC dairy department. High protein feed supplement like soybean oil meal is necessary with grass roughage.

Cows cannot eat enough to cover body and milk needs for about a month after calving and therefore should have a rest before calving to get in top condition. Thin cows and heavy milkers need about eight weeks dry period before calving; fleshy cows and low producers require about six weeks of rest. This lets them build up minerals as well as flesh burned up in milk production.

Heifers about to join the milking herd should go in a month early, get used to barns and handling, and have careful attention to their bedding and their udders. Massaging udders and teats is helpful and bedding should be deep enough to keep them from hurting hocks and udders while learning to lie down.

Graining of heifers also should start about a month before freshening, Hays reminds. If they have been raised economically, they have not had grain. Good roughage, including pasture, is sufficient for a growing heifer that is in calf.

A dairy cow is the most efficient food-producer on any farm.

MICHIGAN MIRROR NEWS BRIEFS

Michigan CIO unions have a big stake in the outcome of the election Tuesday. Here is the story, as told by a former CIO employee.

The CIO role in Michigan politics is graphically portrayed in a book just published by the University of Chicago Press. The university calls it an "impartial, firsthand study of how pressure groups operate on our political party." We emphasize the work "impartial" as the author who did the fact-finding is Fay Calkins, a research assistant for the National CIO Political Action Committee, a former CIO employee. Presumably she ought to know.

Two years ago the Michigan CIO through its state "political action committee" not only grabbed control of the Wayne County Democratic organization by electing a majority of precinct captains in four out of five district conventions. The PAC actually gained control of the Democratic state convention itself, says Miss Calkins.

By putting up $200,000 of CIO Union funds to help re-elect Governor G. Mennen Williams, the Michigan PAC, led by August Scholle, affected the defeat of two-term Republican Governor Harry F. Kelly by a close margin. Now they had their own advocate in the executive office to push PAC-endorsed legislation. These measures included a corporation profits tax, fair employment practice, public housing, improved social security and workers' education - Democratic state platform planks taken directly from the state PAC's legislative program. (Note: The $200,000 expenditures was reported to the Secretary of State at Lansing.)

Miss Calkins adds: "The (Michigan) PAC did not hesitate to bring pressure for sympathetic appointments to the Michigan Unemployment Compensation Commission, the state department of labor and the Public Service commission."

Thus, election of a governor whose viewpoints coincided with those of the Michigan CIO was a feather in the hat of Messrs. Reuther and Scholle. They had a friend in the Governor's chair.

The Michigan victory was in contrast to the whopping defeat sustained by labor leaders in Ohio where Senator Robert Taft was re-elected by a record majority.

Why was Michigan successful where Ohio had failed?

Miss Calkins' conclusion is that the Ohio PAC was "exposed to public opinion as a special interest group" because of its separate precinct organization which paralleled that of the state Democratic Organization.

In Michigan, so Miss Calkins explains, the labor movement was hidden behind a broad party organization and a traditional party name.

Thus, Williams was not a CIO candidate. He was a man of liberal thinking, popular in both city and rural areas because of his democratic hand-shaking, barn-dancing ways, who appeared before the voters as a Democrat—not as a union candidate.

The key to the Michigan CIO success was Wayne County which has 37% of the state's population. By capturing Wayne County alone, the PAC was able to get control of the Michigan state convention. This was not possible in Ohio, a state of many large industrial centers. Where the Ohio labor leaders were out in the open and incurred resentment of many voters, the Michigan CIO operated behind the scenes, hidden from public view and hence less vulnerable to criticism.

These facts, as vouched for by Miss Calkins, are of pertinent interest to Michigan voters this fall for three good reasons.

First, the Michigan CIO is now attempting to extend its influence by getting control of the State Legislature. Reapportionment of the legislature has been handled to date on a basis of geographical representation in the Senate and population representation in the House. This practice is also followed at Washington in election of senators and representatives.

The Michigan CIO wants to change this by giving a handful of counties a majority control of the legislature through election of senators and representatives. This scheme is known as Amendment No. 2.

Second, the Michigan CIO would take away the following congressmen through such a reapportionment: One each from the Upper Peninsula, North Michigan above the Muskegon-Bay City line, and Western Michigan, west of about US 27. The southeastern Michigan industrial area, centering around Detroit, would have 12 congressmen instead of nine as at present.

Third, re-election of Governor G. Mennen Williams will assure a continuation of the stalemate at Lansing whereby the average legislative revenue bill, other than a state corporation profits tax, is automatically assured of a governor's veto.

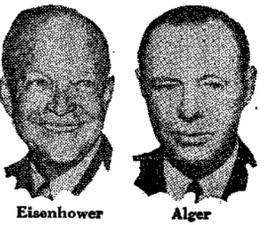

Like all elections, however, the Nov. 4 election is complicated by having many issues, some relevant and some not. Political observers at Lansing are crossing their fingers on the Nov. 4 outcome in Michigan. The election is just that close. Not for a generation have the odds been so even five days before the election. And not in that time has Michigan been so vital to the hopes of both parties.

Michigan has enjoyed the experience of being a pivotal Presidential state.

LET'S TALK IT OVER

Ed Vallender, Farm Editor
WBCM - Bay City
Local Outbreak

Last week, the disease was reported closer to home. It's enough to scare the wits out of a livestock handler or producer. The name is Vesicular Exanthema—and let's take a good look at it.

Agriculture Department officials are hoping an old public health law and new state legislation may aid in combatting outbreaks of the hog disease vesicular exanthema.

The disease, successfully confined to California for 20 years, got out of hand this summer and since June has spread to 26 states, including Michigan. Thus far, nearly 50 thousand infected hogs have been killed in an attempt to halt the spread and some 23 thousand more are headed for the chopping block.

Officials of the bureau of animal industry feel the first phase of the attack has pretty much ended. That is, tracking down and slaughtering infected hogs that were spreading vesicular exanthema from one big stockyard to the next.

Now the problem is isolated outbreaks which seem to be stemming from feeding of raw garbage to hogs. That's where the old public health law comes in and where it's up to the states to act.

U S D A can take action only "where disease exists"—and then only in regard to interstate shipments. Today, Federal quarantines restrict hog shipments from infected areas in 10 states as well as the entire state of California.

But the Public Health Law and the states can take action which could prevent spread of the disease in the first place. The Public Health Law forbids movement of raw garbage across state lines. And states can bar intrastate movement of uncooked garbage.

It is high temperature that kills the virus. When swine carrying the infection are slaughtered and sold as fresh meat, the scraps end up in the garbage pail and go on to infect hogs that eat them. The disease does not affect humans.

As Usual Public Health Officials concede however, that while their law has been on the books since 1941, Congress never got around to making funds available for its enforcement. There is not one employee working at the Public Health Service whose job concerns the ban against interstate shipment of raw garbage.

As a result, officials have had to divert four experts from other branches to put teeth into the law to meet the current emergency. They are working only at the most severe spots. Officials say while enforcement of the law has been impossible to date, the fact that it exists has enabled them to step into help now. And they say if the "Utopia" ever arrives when all states prohibit feeding of raw garbage, there would be no need for interstate regulation.

When vesicular exanthema cropped up last summer, only six states had laws prohibiting the feeding of raw garbage to hogs. Most of them didn't enforce the regulation, however.

A survey of 200 American cities in 1950 shows that from 30 to 40 per cent disposed of the garbage by hog feeding. And Federal officials believe the percentage would be higher in a larger poll.

It's generally felt that feeding city garbage to hogs is an economical way to make use of Municipal waste products. Federal experts agree, but add, that the garbage must be cooked before the menace of human and animal disease can be ended.

If Vesicular Exanthema reaches the epidemic stage—we'll get the laws.

The Candidate

Adlai Ewing Stevenson stands 5 ft. 9 in., weighs 180 lbs., slightly inclined to spread at the waist. Dark hair receding to the middle of his skull; a quick smile, a rueful laugh, eyes that are inclined to bulge. Is a serious, thinking, worrying, hard-working, self-criticizing introvert. A frugal man, he has an income of about $50,000 a year (mostly from his one-fourth interest in the Bloomington, Ill. Daily Pantagraph).

Murklands Can Be Profitable Pasture

Murklands that are normally too wet for other crops can make highly productive pasture areas if seeded to reed canary grass.

The summer months, when the water table is low, make an ideal time to clear, plow and fit these areas. Reed canary grass should be planted before August 15. If this is not possible then late fall seeding after the growing season has passed has proven satisfactory. In this case the seed lies dormant until the following spring.

Five pounds of seed per acre is the recommended amount. Fertilizer also should be applied at the rate of 300 to 400 pounds to the acre. A fertilizer high in potash and phosphate are recommended.

The seeding should be followed with a roller to firm the soil. This operation often spells the difference between success and failure of a seeding.

The new reed canary grass seedlings will need a year to become established. If annual weeds are thick, a clipping is recommended to reduce competition. The grass will furnish a long grazing period and is green when many other grasses become dry and woody.

Once in a while, not often, a man is born who isn't afraid. Then things begin to move.

When a woman is lost in happy thoughts she can usually be found in front of the mirror.

Breed Early for Top Gains on '53 Hogs

Michigan farmers have a much bigger supply of well-ripened corn this fall than last. They should be able to produce more pigs for more profit in 1953 than in 1952, suggests H. F. Moxley, Michigan State College extension swine specialist.

Last spring, farrowings were later than usual as hog raisers looked to more help from pasture and the 1952 feeds. This year, with the favorable corn supply, the smart farmer will have his sows farrow earlier to gain the returns of the higher prices for pork in August, Moxley advises. They also will boost their over-all hog production to take advantage of the feed they have.

If farmers have equipment to take care of early pigs, they should breed sows within the next few weeks to have February farrowings. Gilts to be used as brood sows should be eight or nine months old, at least 200 pounds, well-grown and not too fat, say MSC swine specialists. They should be separated from the herd, given pasture and an oat-heavy ration.

A good mixture for self-feeding would be 1,800 pounds of ground oats, 200 pounds of good 35-per cent protein supplement and 20 pounds of mineral. Three quarters of a pound of a 35 per cent supplement will supply needed proteins, minerals and vitamins.

10 Good Reasons Why You Should Vote No On Closing Sunday Amendment

- 1--It Means the First Step Towards Total Prohibition in This County.
- 2--Less Revenue for Your County, Villages and Townships. Less Money for Schools and Highways.
- 3--Sunday Closing of Bars Will Drive Business Out of This County Into Adjacent Counties. It Does Not Stop Anyone From Drinking on Sundays.
- 4--Hurts Other Business Because Tourists and Travelers Will Avoid Staying in This County. This Results in Loss of Revenue To Other Businesses.
- 5--Sunday Blind Pigs Will Spring Up in This County.
- 6--Minors Will Obtain Alcoholic Beverages in Blind Pigs.
- 7--Taverns and Bars are Licensed and Inspected Legal Establishments Paying Their Full Share of Taxes. Blind Pigs Pay No Taxes.
- 8--Taverns and Bars Believe in Moderation and Order. They Believe in the Right of the Workingman to Enjoy a Friendly Glass of Beer on Sunday or Any Day of the Week. This is the Working Man's Privilege.
- 9--It has Been Proven to be Impossible to Enforce Prohibition. Huge Sums of Money were Spent Trying to Enforce The Prohibition Law, to No Avail. The Revenue Received Now from the Legal Liquor Business Pays a Large Part of Your Tax Bill.
- 10--Prohibition Has Been Tried and Voted Out By The American People. It Was a Failure. Why Bring It Back to This Community?
