SHORT STORY

Green Hat

By Ona F. Lathrop

3-Minute Fiction

NELL HARPER had bent over backwards to be an honest woman all her life, and no one could have made her believe that she would be hobnobbing with crime that lovely autumn day. She waited breathlessly at her farm-gate for the bus. It had been ages since she'd had a day to shop and browse around in town, but now that Tommy was in school along with the older ones, she was free to go.

"Here you are," Henry had said handing her a twenty-dollar bill that night and she'd felt like a millionaires! "But don't buy the Brooklyn bridge," he'd laughed, knowing how easy she was.

The bus was crowded and she sat next to the woman in the green hat. She settled her own navy one over her brown hair and brushed the specs from her good blue suit. It would be fun hunching in town, though she hoped she'd meet someone she knew. She'd never been one for going about the city alone.

The bus was crowded and she sat next to the woman in the green hat.

"Going shopping, I suppose?" The green hat leaned toward her in a friendly nod, noting her shopping bag.

"Why yes, though to tell the truth I'm almost frightened—I haven't been to the city for so long," she confided shyly.

"I feel the same way, dearie. I'm going in for new bedroom curtains and I hardly know where to go. Could you suggest—"

"Why, that's just what I'm looking for," Nell declared, and they began discussing curtains like a couple of kindred souls.

The bus was rumbunctious into the city now, and they got off at the best department store and went up the elevator together.

"Now isn't this nice!" Green Hat was exclaiming. "Here I've been dreading this, but with someone else, it's fun." She was a trifle blowsy-looking, but a good-hearted soul, Nell was sure. She could overlook the cheap ankle-strap red shoes and the frayed imitation alligator purse.

When the curtains were bought, it was noon. "What say we have lunch together?" Green Hat insisted. "I know a cheap place around the corner where you get spaghetti and meat-balls for a song."

Nell had pictured something exotic for lunch—Chinese food at Ming Toy's or chicken salad at a tea-room, but since the curtains had cost more than she expected, she should economize. She'd charged the curtains, so she'd have the twenty to splurge this afternoon.

"There's a ladies' room right here, too," Green Hat ushered her in. "Here, I'll hold your purse and jacket and then you can hold mine." It certainly wasn't the kind of place where a maid stepped up to watch your things and hand you a linen towel.

But when she took her own purse and the other one and went to put on fresh lipstick, she noticed her wallet was gaping. Horrors! The twenty-dollar bill wasn't there! Quickly she opened the other purse and glanced in. Yes, there was a twenty carelessly—or else hurriedly—crumpled into a corner.

Well! So that was the sort of person she had fallen in with. Henry would be furious when she told him. She was always being taken in. And she had no desire to hunch with that type—a common, cheap thief! She put the bill in her own purse.

When Green Hat came out and reached for her purse, Nell had her story ready. "I'm dreadfully sorry, but I've suddenly developed one of my migraine headaches. I wouldn't dare to eat any lunch. I'll have to go right home."

"Oh, now that's too bad! And I was looking forward to a nice time this afternoon—maybe take in a show or something. I sure am sorry, dearie. Shall I take you to the bus?"

Nell declined and fled.

At home she unloaded her packages and then went to the desk to put away her purse. There in the drawer, exactly where she had laid it when Henry gave it to her last night, was the twenty-dollar bill!

Summer Seeding of Alfalfa Advised

How about a summer seeding of alfalfa? If your seedings in wheat didn't turn out like you expected, a seeding now will help make sure there's plenty of livestock feed for next year.

County Agricultural Agent Ballweg says that good rains in Tuscola County should be a big help in making summer seedings.

Try to get the alfalfa between August 1 and 20—the sooner the better. You can make a good, firm, seedbed in fields that have been summer fallowed or wheat and oat fields that were plowed after harvest.

Have your soil tested before you seed the field. You need a pH of 7 for soil to be sweet enough for alfalfa. If the test shows a need for lime, put it on immediately and disk it in.

Milo B. Tesar of Michigan State University's farm crops department says to keep these points in mind when you make your seeding.

First, firm the soil with a cultipacker. New seedings do poorly on a loose seedbed.

If you want a short-term stand, use one of the hardy, northern-grown alfalfa varieties. If you want to leave the seeding for three years or longer, Tesar recommends the Ranger variety.

Follow the soil test recommendations as far as fertilizer is concerned. If you have no soil test, use about 400 pounds per acre of 0-20-20 or its equivalent to be sure of good fertility.

Band seed if possible. If not, broadcast behind the drill. Always cultipacker after seeding in August.

Tesar recommends seeding alfalfa without a companion crop unless the soil is hilly or when bromegrass needs to be sown with the legume. Don't seed more than two pecks of oats per acre if that's the nurse crop you use.

He points out finally that your seeding will produce much better in 1957 if you don't pasture it this year.

Figures may not lie, but some get snarled up in statistics.

Farm Management Tour Set Aug. 7

Good farm management practices are becoming the key to successful farming operations, remarks assistant county agricultural agent, Don Keblor.

Farmers have always followed some plan of management in their business. However, these practices must constantly be changed to meet the present needs.

To assist the farmers in learning new developments in management the county agricultural agent's office and Michigan State University are holding a Farm Management Tour August 7.

The tour schedule will be: No. 1 — 10:30 a. m., Ralph Brandmaier farm, 6 miles north and 1 1/2 miles west of Caro. Cash crop farming. No. 2 — 12:00 noon, Maynard McConkey farm, 1 1/2 miles east and 3 miles north of Cass City. Dairy and cash crop farming. No. 3 — 1:30 p. m., Jim Milligan farm, 3 1/2 miles west and 1 mile north of Cass City. Livestock and cash crop farming.

This will be a wonderful opportunity for all farmers to compare their farm practices to those on the tour.

Leonard Kyle, Michigan State University agricultural economics specialist will be on hand to summarize each farm operation and give usable tips on good farm management practices. Leonard will be glad to answer any of your questions.

The public is invited to attend any or all of these tour stops, remarks Keblor.

The free lunch is sponsored by the Pinney State Bank of Cass City. Members of the Women's Society of Christian Service, Cass City, will serve.

Few men are in business for fun, but many expect to make enough money to have fun.

BULEN TALKS Cars

It can be a terribly confusing time when you set out to find a used car.

There are so many places to buy a car, and so many displayed for sale. You feel like a youngster with his nose pressed up against the glass of the penny-candy counter, his one penny clutched tightly in fist.

When you come around to a new car dealer looking for a used car, the chances are you'll find a car that the dealer sold when new, has serviced since it was sold, and then took in as a trade.

This means a lot. It means that the car has been serviced by factory-trained mechanics, men who know how the manufacturer himself intended the car to be serviced and preserved.

It means that genuine factory parts have been used for replacements, there have been no gimmicks or hay-wire tricks used to "made do."

Of course, you will also find many used cars on the lot of a new car dealer that he didn't sell originally. These represent, in the main, people who've become convinced that the dealer's line of new cars are better than the kind they've been driving.

These used cars have been given a grueling going-over in the service department to see that they're fit to bear our label.

A new car dealer has a name to preserve. He got his franchise from the car manufacturer in the first place because he proved himself a pretty reliable fellow. He doesn't want to lose that good name by having a lot of unhappy customers around.

So, we think we know exactly where you should come when you're setting out to find a used car.

A check of the used car lot will reveal one of the finest selections we have had for quite a spell. For those interested in Oldsmobiles, we have a very nice 1953 88 4 dr. with two tone paint, and in very good condition. For our Chevrolet minded customers may be suggest the 1954 Bel Air 2 dr. sedan? This is particularly nice from bumper to bumper and both inside and outside. Truly a fine car, and of course, both cars carry our OK used car warranty. Drop by today if possible, tomorrow for sure!

Seed Your Lawn in August, Says Agent

August is the month for lawn seeding in Tuscola County, according to Assistant County Agricultural Agent Don Keblor. The best time to seed is between August 15 - September 1.

Grasses grow best during cool, moist weather, and this area gets that kind of weather most often during September and October. By planting in August you get the rains and still make sure your grass seedlings have enough growth before winter comes to survive the cold weather.

Another point in favor of fall planting is that the grass has very little competition from weeds.

Here are some good recommendations to follow: Kentucky bluegrass does best on soil that is high in both organic matter and fertility. Red fescues do better on red and brown clays, on sandy soils and in shady areas.

If in doubt as to the type of seed to use, try a 50-50 mixture of bluegrass and fescue. If the soil is high in fertility, the bluegrass will predominate, and if the soil is low in fertility, the fescue will take over.

Use one to two pounds of seed per 1,000 square feet. Divide the seed into two equal portions, seed one-half while going the length of the lawn, and the other half while going across it.

Put on a high nitrogen fertilizer, such as 12-6-4, just before seeding, and rake it in lightly. Apply the fertilizer at the rate of 10 to 20 pounds per 1,000 square feet.

Grass seed mixtures containing nurse grasses like redtop and rye will start much faster than the pure seed mixtures. But the nurse grasses become coarse and competitive once they are established. Keblor advises using the desired grasses alone. So just be a little more patient, and look for your grass seedlings two or three weeks after seeding.

Sheep Breeders' to Hold Field Day

The purebred Oxford flock owned by Ford and Mae Hulett near Armada will be featured at the Annual Thumb Sheep Breeders' picnic on Saturday, August 4, said Alfred Ballweg, Tuscola County agent. The Hulett farm is located just west of Armada on Center Road. The program beginning at 10:30 a. m. will include sheep management and wool marketing demonstrations and discussions by Graydon Blank, Animal Husbandry Department, Michigan State University; Selton Harvey, manager, Michigan Cooperative Wool Marketing Association, Jackson; John Miller of the Michigan Livestock Exchange, Detroit; and C. E. Puffenberger, secretary, American Oxford Record Association.

Exhibits will include several other purebred breeds from the area and several cross breeding programs with Western ewes. Tables will be available for a family picnic at noon with ice cream and coffee furnished by the Thumb Sheep Breeders' Association.

Lack of Nutrients Means Low Yields Some Farm Crops Near Starvation

The wise farmer can "write his own" insurance against low or declining prices by following the simple policy of giving his soils a full feed of nutrients.

Despite this fact, the nutrient "cupboard" is bare on many Midwestern farm soils, according to the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee. As a result, it says, many farm crops are only a jump ahead of starvation. This nutrient famine results in poor yields, high costs and low profits.

The committee points out that wheat and corn yields are only about half as high as could be produced with reasonably good soil management and the use of heavy amounts of fertilizer. Hay and pasture production is less than half the potential production.

Hungry soils now dragging along at low production speed can be restored to healthy, high profit production by a sound system of soil building, says the committee. By getting bigger yields per acre on fewer acres, profits could be increased and at the same time, total overall production reduced. The higher yields per acre would mean lower costs or production per bushel or ton, the committee points out. This would help a farmer get more net return, even with lower prices.

Management Could Cut High Pig Mortality

The "appalling" mortality rate that prevents 30 per cent of pigs farrowed from reaching the market could be lowered by better management practices.

Donald E. Jasper, dean of the School of Veterinary Medicine in the University of California, believes hog raisers can cut production costs significantly by measures aimed at the common swine diseases.

"Many management factors in disease are just plain lack of care and sanitation," he told farmers attending a swine session during a Farm and Home Conference. "Hog houses, waterers, and feeders need thorough cleaning and disinfecting. Viruses and bacteria, for example, may hide under dirt and later infect new hogs."

Replacement stock frequently brings disease into a herd, he added. Growers should raise their own replacements or bring them from known disease-free sources. Imports should be quarantined for three to four weeks and should always be blood tested for diseases such as brucellosis and leptospirosis. Careful clinical examination should be made for atrophic rhinitis, which is spread by carrier hogs.

Parakeratosis is a disease increasing in California, although not yet common, which seems caused by an upset in the utilization of zinc. The disease causes cracks, thickening, and abscesses in the skin and eventually the pig dies.

Cleaning Brush

Brush turned by a 1/4" electric drill scrubs teat cups and gets residue that couldn't be removed any other way. No more high bacteria counts when this cleaning method is used.
