The gas turbine engine, a simple and efficient mechanism that works like a windmill, is pretty certain to become the new engine for automobiles, although the most optimistic estimates put it still a decade away.

The gas turbine engine does away with the six or eight cylinders of today's automobile in which rapidly burning gasoline slaps the pistons up and down.

In a single metal sleeve about the same size as today's cylinders a roaring flame sends a rush of hot, expanding gases against a metal pinwheel. The pinwheel revolves like crazy, 50,000 times a minute, and that's your motive power.

Acceleration is smooth and fast, lubrication is simpler because the turbine has one-fifth the number of moving parts and oil is never exposed to contamination. It can burn the cheapest gasoline, or even

There are a lot of production problems to iron out yet because the turbine is still an expensive, hand-crafted and delicate instrument. But exciting news is ahead in the automobile business.

It's always an exciting day, too, when a customer we've served for years brings in his car (that we sold him new) to trade on this year's model. These cars are our pride and joy, the ones we've serviced and maintained since they were babies. They are cars we can be especially proud of on the used car lot and can keep in top shape for many years to come because our mechanics know them like a childhood sweetheart.

For some unknown reason, our used car business has seemed to be rather brisk these last few weeks. Undoubtedly you have driven past the lot and spotted a car that took your fancy and almost before you had a chance to decide on making a closer look, it was gone. Our selection is good still, but may we respectfully ask that if you see a car that appeals to you, stop right then. Conversation is pleasant, and it doesn't take long to see whether or not you can deal. From our side of the picture, we know you can deal, at terms that are sure to please you. May we serve you soon?

The wheel of fortune, Greg thought, had certainly turned for him, when the father he had never known and seldom seen, had died suddenly leaving him almost penniless. Money had never been a problem for Greg. He'd been lonely often enough, but his father's checks had always stood between him and any need for money.

While his mind worried over his problem, Greg's eyes swept the

Once again, something vaguely familiar about the little man bothered Greg. It was as though his subconscious mind was trying to prod him into remembering something -- something rather important.

Although, the little man had been at the hotel for the past two weeks and came to the beach every day, he never went near the water. At first, because of the pallid skin, Greg thought he'd been sick and was here for the sun. But, each day he took an umbrella to the end of the beach and sat under it staring back at the hotel. He always brought a briefcase as though he had papers to work on, but never opened it. All day, he sat huddled under the umbrella, nervously smoking one cigarette after another, throwing the burned-out stubs

Suddenly, Greg sat up and nushed back his sun helmet.

"Two thousand dollars," he repeated to himself. "Now, I know why the little grey man seems familiar to me."

Greg fidgeted until the relief lifeguard came to take his place. Then, he hurried to the hotel to shower and dress. Without waiting for lunch, he caught the bus to the city and went directly to the post

As he walked up the steps, he remembered the last time he'd been here. It was the day the letter came from his father's lawyer, telling him that after his father's debts were paid there were only a few dollars left. The check was enclosed.

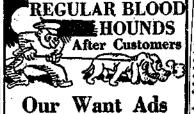

While Greg's world had spun crazily about him, he'd stood holding onto the high writing desk to steady himself. Slowly, his eyes had come to focus on the posters of men wanted.

The poster was still there. He studied the face he remembered. Take away the neat mustache and add sunglasses and the cap. There was no doubt in Greg's mind. It was the little grey man. That night, Greg felt almost sor-

Put A Wide-Awake Want Ad To Work For You

Power Sprayer Versatile Tool Choose One to Meet Your Requirements

Diversity of crop and livestock farming provide many different jobs for power sprayers. So as you shop around for a good sprayer, consider the range of jobs you expect to do with it.

Remember that a power sprayer may be used more days in a year than some of your other equipment. With a general purpose sprayer, you can kill weeds and brush, stop flies in house and barn, control pests of field, orchard and livestock, disinfect and whitewash stables, poultry and hog houses, put preharvest sprays on potatoes. soybeans and cotton with defoliants, and even put out small fires.

Spray machines are varied and constantly being improved with new features. So it's hard to get a good line on all the models available. But for agricultural use, the industry classifies them into distinct types, according to power and pressure systems.

Hydraulic sprayers are largest in number and well adapted to farm use. The spray pressure is built up by direct action of the pump on the liquid spray material. This forces liquid through the nozzles, disperses it, and takes it clear out to the object you want to

Among these popular hydraulics, the choice is a matter of convenience, simplicity, durability and economy. You should consider whether to get a low-pressure, lowvolume machine, or the high-pressure, high-volume unit which can also be set for low-pressure work and does an excellent job in handling certain spray materials hard to keep in suspension.

Hydro-pneumatic sprayers in their capacity resemble the lowpressure hydraulic kinds, but the spray material is kept in a pressure tank which is run with an air-compressor powered by a selfcontained engine.

How to Effectively Use Insecticides

You can control mange and lice on hogs with an 11 per cent BHC concentrate, entomologists report. They also recommend DDT for ticks and lice on sheep and rotenone to control cattle grubs.

One-half to one gallon of BHC in 50 gallons of water, applied twice at 14-day intervals, will get rid of profit-robbing mange and lice on your hogs. Spray each animal with one to two quarts of this mixture. Don't treat pigs until after weaning, and don't apply within 60 days of slaughter.

You can dip or spray sheep with one gallon of 25 per cent DDT concentrate in 100 gallons of water to control ticks and lice. Treat as needed. If spray pressures are below 300 pounds, add one or two pounds of detergent to each 100 gallons of water to increase effec tiveness.

Five per cent rotenone powder or 1½ per cent rotenone dust will kill cattle grubs. Use 71/2 pounds of the powder in 100 gallons of water. Spray it with less than 300 pounds of pressure. You can rub the dust in by hand on affected areas. Apply monthly from December to April.

Back Scratcher

An old tractor tire makes an excellent back seratcher when bolted securely to heavy posts set in the corner of the feed lot. Posts should be set in deep holes and crushed stone or soil firmly tamped around them.

There is no right way to do a wrong thing.

A MEMORY OF THE 1881 FOREST FIRES

If chairs could talk, this one would stand proudly on its wobbly old legs and tell many hair-raising tales about the Michigan Forest Fires (1881) which claimed 300 lives. The chair was given to a family living in the tip of the Thumb Area of Michigan by the Red Cross in its first official disaster operation. It was presented to the Tuscola County Chapter, Mich., in 1950 as a historical reminder of the Michigan disaster and has its final resting place in the National Red Cross Museum in Washington, D. C. To the left of chair is Raymond T. Schaeffer, assistant to the President of the American National Red Cross, and at right is Gordon O. DOES you hair flatter you? It it doesn't, then plan to put a little time on several aspects of hair care and see if you can't make it do something for you.

Most women who feel their hair style is unbecoming have too much hair. Maybe it's too long or perhaps it's too thick. Most hair needs thinning as well as shaping to make it look its best.

Why is hair thinned? It should be so that their hair can follow the shape of the head more closely. Then have it set and groomed to

Saginaw Fair to Open Sept. 9

With 11 judging classes repreented and $6,479.00 in premiums iding on the decision of the udges, the beef and dairy catle exhibits at the 1956 Saginaw Fair, Sept. 9-15, appear to be neaded towards establishing a new championship award on their own—"Greatest Display of Championship Cattle Ever To Be Assembled In One Show!"

Elmer Frahm, superintendent of the cattle department for this year's 43rd annual Saginaw Fair, announces that $4,984.00 of this year's blue ribbon premium money will go to the dairy breeds represented by purebred Holstein-Friesians, Guernseys, Jereys, Ayrshires, Brown Swiss, Milking Shorthorns and Red Polled. Balance of this year's premiums in the amount of $1,-467.00 will be awarded to entries in the beef breeds of Herefords, Shorthorns and Aberdeen Angus. Four special premiums will also men in the cattle department keeping their herd, stall and quarters in the neatest condition at all times during the fair. New Device Aids Seed Recovery

A new vacuum-cleaner-agitator device for reclaiming forage-crop seeds lost during combining, which has been developed through Fed eral-State agricultural research, offers commercial seed growers a way to increase seed production. reports the U.S. Department of A'griculture.

An experimental model of this reclaimer, still under development by the Department's Agricultural Research Service and the Oregon Agricultural Experiment Station at Corvallis, Oreg., has reduced shatter seed losses by 75 to 95 percent under test conditions.

Trials in 1955 with this suctiontype device showed that it should enable seed producers to boost their yields of crimson clover enough to increase returns $25 or more per acre. Similar savings should also be realized with hairy vetch and alta fescue seeds, which shatter at a high rate under ordinary harvesting methods. With some other varieties of grasses, such as sub clover, the machine should make possible an even more spectacular recovery of shattered seed, promising greater profits to producers.

In tests made in Oregon's Willamette Valley, the experimental vacuum seed reclaimer saved nearly $470 worth of sub clover seed per acre. The machine salvaged 938 pounds per acre, representing 89 percent of the estimated crop. This was accomplished in one pass over a previously combined field By contrast, harvest by regular windrow or combine methods, yielded only 235 pounds, or barely $120 worth of seed, out of an estimated crop of 1,289 pounds.
