A few minutes later Jimmy went past; with a tall, darkhaired girl.

But it was all over with before it had started. She never heard from Jimmy again after leaving this vacation spot.

And now it was Christmas again. And now he was here again. She had to speak to him, she had to, if she could only keep her voice steady. So she moved toward him and stopped, "Jimmy, hello!"

He looked at her, his blue eyes so cold and strange, she was frightened. "It's not customary to speak to the hired help, you know," he said as he went on past her.

A few minutes later Jimmy went past with a tall, dark-haired girl. Mrs. Mabry, one of Aunt Anne's friends, looked after them. "That's Evelyn Seton with Jimmy. Her father owns this hotel, and Jimmy hasn't a dime. He does odd jobs like caddying, waiting on tables, anything. But Evelyn wants hasn't already." It was plain now, Christy told herself. Jimmy had fallen in love with Evelyn Seton. He wouldn't marry her just because her father was wealthy. Not Jimmy. He was idealistic about love.

But a very strange thing happened. Christmas was over. It was New Day. Christy came back from a game of tennis to find Aunt Anne arranging red roses in their living room, "Has someone taken leave of their senses," she asked, "sending all these roses to you with no card? You haven't been interested in a man for months. Who sen' them do you think?"

Christy murmured throatily, ". don't know, darling." To herseli she said, "I'm too scared to think Could it be Jimmy? Oh, could it be? Why did her silly heart cling to the hope that Jimmy still loved her at least a little?

Aunt Anne went down for another game. Christy looked at the roses. Then there was a knock Christy opened the door, her hear high in her throat.

Next morning, after many thanks for the night's lodging, he was on his way to warn our neighbors.

About a month afterwards a light spring wagon drove up to our door with two men in it. The wagon was loaded with "miles" of shining wire, brass fittings, glass balls and golden arrows. In those days lightning rod agents were frowned upon by the backwoods farmers, but Dad was not hard to convince that for "a few paltry dollars" (same expression used by the old man) our home could have complete protection from stray bolts of lightning. He signed on the dotted line while the men stabled their horses and went to work hacking and hewing. Like a miracle our home blossomed out with sharp spears pointing heavenward from every gable and one from the center which held a blue glass ball, surmounted with a golden arrow, that the men assured me would always point out the direction of every bolt of

150 MILES PER GALLON

Once upon a time there was a scientist who took an ordinary car out on the highway and got 150 miles to a gallon of gas. That's right, 150 miles to the gallon—and he didn't have a magic carburetor or a car that would run on water or any Buck Rogers dream like that.

It was all quite legitimate. The only touble is it wouldn't be practical for ordinary driving. First of all, recognizing that the drag of the tires used up most of a car's power, he shaved the treads down until they were just razor sharp edges touching the road. Then he inflated them to 110 pounds pressure.

Then he put ridiculously light oil in the bearings. He accelerated the car to 20 miles an hour, threw in the clutch and turned off the motor and let it coast almost to a standstill before repeating the per-

It's impossible for you and I to get 150 miles to the gallon, or anywhere near it, but the experiment did prove that tires, lubrication and driving habits have a tremendous amount to do with the kind of mileage we get from our cars.

Some of the strangest things can help increase your miles per gallon. Racing drivers know that a gleaming smooth polish helps cut down the car's wind resistance at high speeds (wind resistance is four times as great at 50 miles an hour as at 25). A smooth polish can actually give an extra four or five miles to the gallon while travelling at a steady 50. Proper and regular lubrication is vitally important, to cut gas costs while you have the car and to assure a better price when you trade-in. If we've lubricated your car regulaly, we'll know what fine shape it's in when you came around to trade. If you're perfectly appy with your car and haven't a thought in the world of trading in that's the time to start a program of regular lubricating and serv-

One of our more prominent "Local Racing Drivers" used the coasting system to get excellent mileage and incidentally win some bets, so this system in't new. It is impractical for the average driver. And, our cars give very good mileage anyway. Economy depends mostly on the driver. Fast acceleration, high speed operation, constant slowing and speeding up, all decrease economy. You can give the same car to two different drivers and their mileage might vary ch as 5 miles per gallon.

Parks, public hunting areas, public fishing sites and other Opposite Courthouse recreational facilities often were 7-27-tf crowded to the bursting point. Growing populations and in-creased leisure time meant even heavier pressure on existing recreational opportunities and magnified the need for expansion of facilities.

Complicating this need for more and better opportunities for outdoor recreation, however, is the problem of financing these developments. Rising costs in all fields make even the present level of operation impossible without new revenues.

During the year, millions of persons jammed state parks and park managers were forced to turn away thousands because campgrounds, picnic tables and bathing beaches were filled to 6306 W. Main St.

capacity. Progress in the state parks program was marked by the establishment of two new areas-Van Riper park in Marquette FOR A NEW taste thrill try County and Muskallonge Lake park in Luce County. The state Conservation Commission also worked out plans for leasing 1280 acres of Fort Custer, near Battle Creek, from the U.S. Army for use as a recreation area. Purchases also were completed for 124 acres for Port Crescent state park in Huron County. Other land

More than 1,000,000 hunters enjoyed their sport with varied success in Michigan during the year. Hunters bagged some 000 deer in 1956, including 12,000 during special seasons designed to harvest surplus deer in designated food shortage or crop damage areas. Pheasants, Michigan's most popular game birds, were down in numbers this year because of poor nesting conditions 6471 Main St. during cold, wet spring weather, but hunters took an estimated 900,000 ringnecks. It takes large quantities of timber to keep a wood products mill like this one at Muskegon in operation. Michigan's forests are producing more and more timber each year for these mills a result of continued improvements in forest management.

It's the season for apples now and you might try this apple pie for a refreshingly different treat.

Apple Pie, Cheese Pastry (Makes 1 10-inch ple) 3 ounces crumbled American and off. You'll learn whether the lipstick fades your complexion or whether it clashes with the clothes you wear. You can also learn how the shape of the lips can be changed to your advantage.

Mouth Mannerisms

One of the first steps toward obtaining a mouth which is expressive as well as serene and lovely is to get rid of mouth mannerisms which may simply have crept up on you. Maybe you have started to bite your lips or suck them inward in moments to tenseness. At other times we tend to sulk or pout but this gives drawn-down look to the mouth which gives an aging appearance as well as an unpleasing one.

All occasions do not warrant smiles of the wide, mouth open variety, but an inward smile gives a pleasing effect which does wonders for the face. Think of something pleasing or whimsical and watch your mouth in a mirror.

Your first step in getting rid of the mannerisms is to be conscious of them. Then substitute a bad habit with a good one.

Flattering Color

Lipstick is one of the first things people notice about you. It's because of the red for one thing, and then because the mouth is a prominent feature.

To find the shade most flattering to your skin and clothes you may take a bit of experimenting with the small sizes, but it's well worth it so neither skin nor clothes fade

In general the red-red is perfect for all complexions and most clothes. Blue-red tones are good with pinkish skins or sensitive skins will have an almost transparent look.

Yellowish-red tones are fine for most dark complexioned people with some sallowness in their coloring or blondes who have tans. Cream the lips as often as you do the face so the lips won't dry out or crack. Remember, too, that a lovely smile depends on your teeth which should be cared as necessary by the dentist and
