2.-Engine wear is largely caused by the acid in unburned gasoline and can often be detected if you (a) listen for engine knock (b) look for blue smoke (c) look at the dip stick (d) ask your wifeto guit driving.

3. During combustion, the cylinder walls reach a Fahrenheit temperature of (a) 500 degrees (b) 1000 degrees (c) 3000 degrees (d) your own blood -- when your wife is back-seat driving. 4. Your shock absorbers are bad if (a) your

Now the answers:

1. (a) improper combustion, which leaves carbon particles in the exhanst. (Worn piston rings cause blue smoke.)

2. (c) Look at the dip stick. If you see little pock marks, acid Past performances count, but from unburned gasoline is probably leaking out of the cylinders,

3. (c) 3000 degrees is the correct answer -- believe it or not. 4. (b) If your springs keep bouncing. That's because the "shocks" are supposed to keep your springs from bouncing the way bedsprings do when kids jump on them.

How did you make out? Every answer correct? Okay, then away to the coffee shop with you, where you can tell the amateurs what's wrong with their cars!
