

Chester Sieradzki only Cass City gridder named to 22-man Thumb B All-Conference team

Chester Sieradzki, a bright spot in a bleak season for Cass City, was named to a linebacker spot on the All-Conference Thumb B team as selected by the coaches.

Sieradzki was a repeat selection on the 22-man squad dominated by Caro with six selections, four on the offensive eleven and three on defense, nearly twice as many as any other team.

The Hawks also placed five men on the honorable mention defensive list. They were Scott Hartel, end; Mark Phillips, and Russ Schweikart, interior line; Steve Izydorek, linebacker, and Jerry Toner, back.

On offense Hartel was named at end; Dave Brooks, at tackle, and Ed Stoutenburg, back.

School Board takes stopgap measures to keep Intermediate building open

SOME 100 OWEN-GAGE voters turned out Tuesday night to hear Supt. Glen Sanford explain the upcoming bond issue for the proposed $2.66 million junior-senior high school building. District members will decide the issue Dec. 3.

A stopgap solution to the oil crisis at the Cass City Intermediate School has been arranged by Supt. Donald Crouse, but if another source of oil is not found all elementary schools and the intermediate school will close some time next year.

Crouse said that he has arranged with Standard Oil to borrow oil from the quota allowed to the DeFord and Evergreen schools. The quota is based on the amount used last year.

Normally the Intermediate School uses a number four oil but can burn a number two which is more expensive and is the type used in the furnaces at the Elementary schools.

Crouse explained the emergency measures to the Cass City School Board at its regular session at the high school Monday night. The high school burns natural gas and no problem is anticipated there.

Meanwhile, the board mulled turning down heat and other measures to stretch supplies as long as possible.

It was tacitly agreed that if a gas shortage becomes acute, the school bus trips for athletic events would be discontinued. No official board action was taken.

The board also accepted low bids for tires and landscaping while rented land for farming without asking for bids.

The board okayed leasing the 50 acres of land authorized for purchasing by the voters this year for future expansion, to Dick Donahue for $25 an acre.

Supt. Crouse told the board that the school had a "deal" with the Donahues when they agreed to sell the land to the school that would give Dick Donahue "first chance" to lease the land for crops while it awaits development. The board is not legally bound by this, Crouse added.

The normal low bid routine was followed for the purchase and service of tires. Fred's Service was the low bidder.

Three quotes for landscaping the high school ground were received. The bids cover the south and east sides of the building. Oscar Brooks was low with a bid of $4,969.50, almost $2,000 less than the second low bidder.

ticket takers had no written guidelines to follow before the action Monday by the board.

Trustees also authorized two mercury vapor lights for the Campbell Elementary School. The light will illuminate the entrances and help light the yard. The lights at DeFord and Evergreen were discussed and it was generally agreed that there has not been a problem there.

There has been a discipline problem at Evergreen School. One so severe that Michael Sharp, a first year teacher, abruptly resigned.

He will be replaced by Mrs. Barbara Tuckey at least until the end of the first semester. The problem stems from three students and Supt. Crouse said that steps are being taken to correct the situation. It's possible that the children will be sent home for awhile, he told the board.

OTHER BUSINESS

The two high bidders for two school buses failed to honor their bids so the next high bidder, from Flushing, bought both units for $1601. It was agreed by the board that the price was still a good one.

Because of shortages, orders for three new buses for the 1974-75 school year will be placed now. Wayne bus bodies will cost $70 more per unit, Crouse said.

A work schedule for salaried secretaries was authorized. The secretaries get nine holidays, plus five other days off, in addition to regular vacation periods, the board decreed.

Dean Hoag was appointed to represent the board in place of Mrs. Prieskorn on the special education advisory committee.

A new American literature text was approved for the second semester.

Elmwood landfill closing postponed

Elmwood township will be able to continue using its present sanitary landfill until Tuscola county develops its own county-wide solid waste disposal system as the result of a meeting with health officials, the Department of Natural Resources and the village of Gagetown held Tuesday.

According to township Supervisor Milton Hofmeister, Elmwood will continue to use the present facility with minor changes until the county completes work on a county-wide disposal system of its own.

Last week, Elmwood township learned its landfill would be closed within 20 days by the DNR because of underground water pollution from the site. At that time, the township approached Gagetown officials asking permission to use its own landfill.

At Tuesday's meeting, DNR officials learned of the county plan currently under study and decided to allow the Elmwood landfill to continue operation.

Presently, the county is considering a one or two-site landfill area which would service all communities and residents of Tuscola county.

DNR officials decided on this course of action after it was determined that Gagetown's landfill might not pass new and more stringent landfill requirements.

Principal to decide ring sales policy

The principal at Cass City High School will decide who will have the opportunity to sell rings to students at the school, it was decided Monday by the school board.

In order for competing firms to show samples of their class rings they must first be approved by the high school principal. Rings are purchased by students, not with taxpayer funds. It was one of four ring rules approved by the board.

Another is that a class has the right to vote a "class ring" by majority vote. Bids can be received on a challenge basis. To challenge, firms must convince the principal that a change in the program is desirable.

If a change is made it will be a collective decision of the student representatives and the administration.

Girls falter, lose 51-19 in Frankenmuth game

There wasn't much you could say about the play of the Girl's Basketball Team Tuesday, Nov. 6, against Frankenmuth that was outstanding. The girls sustained a 51-19 shellacking from the Eagles at Frankenmuth, playing what Coach Kally Maharg described as a dismal and disappointing game.

"The game was a total disaster," Coach Maharg said. "It was dismal and the play was slow, especially in the second half. It was just a bad game."

The Hawks kept within striking range throughout the first half, trailing by five points at intermission.

The roof fell in on the girls in the second half, however.

Tool box reported stolen last week

Cass City Police reported Tuesday a tool box and tools valued at $125 was stolen from a truck belonging to Walter Zawilinski, 7788 E. Cass City Rd., sometime late Friday afternoon.

Zawilinski told Cass City Police he parked the truck for a short period of time next to the Cass Tavern before the tools were stolen. He said he thought the theft must have occurred at that time.

The theft was discovered Tuesday morning. Police are continuing to investigate.

The fellow who tells everyone he keeps his wife guessing is probably dancing with her.

as Frankenmuth poured on the pressure. The Eagles relied on their second string much of the last period, nailing down a victory for them and a defeat for the Hawks, running Cass City's conference record to 2-5 on the season.

One bright spot in the debacle was Kelly Gee who continued to shine on defense.

Top scorer Elaine Stoutenburg canned only seven points, far under her normal output of about 20, according to Coach Maharg. Nancy Koepfgen scored four points in the losing cause.

The JV contest was closer, but the girls came up on the short end of a 34-18 score against the Eagle JV's. The Hawk juniors had defeated Frankenmuth earlier in the year, but were not successful in making it two in a row.

Pre-trial examination was set for Dec. 10 and bond was continued at $500.

Bilicki is charged with the Oct. 2 breaking and entering of a house in Wells township and the theft of a quantity of alcoholic beverages.

North Branch man gets 4-15 years in Jackson

A North Branch man was sentenced to from four to ten years in Jackson Prison for the Aug. 24 breaking and entering of Hogan's grocery in Kingston.

James Putman was sentenced by Tuscola County Circuit Court Judge James P. Churchill Monday.

Putman was apprehended by Tuscola County Sheriff's deputies.

Thomas A. Bilicki, Caro, was arraigned before Judge Churchill on a charge of breaking and entering and larceny in a building. He stood mute and a plea of innocent was entered in his behalf.

Owen-Gage voters must decide what they want at polls—Sanford

About 100 persons turned out Tuesday night to hear the Owendale-Gagetown School District present its case for the proposed $2.66 million school bond issue set for a Dec. 3 vote.

Supt. Glen Sanford addressed the gathering which had assembled at the Gagetown gym and explained the need for a building, some of its costs and answered questions following his presentation.

Sanford told the group part of the answer to the district's present needs is the construction of the building which would house grades seven through 12. Cost of the building alone was placed at $1.9 million, with the balance of the bonding funds to go for renovation of the elementary buildings in Owendale and Gagetown.

He explained the proposed structure would contain rooms for specialized activities such as industrial arts, band rooms, home ec rooms and separate boys and girls gymnasiums.

Sanford explained further that, as a part of the building program, the present high school built in 1913 would probably be torn down and replaced with a causeway connecting the present elementary section built in 1951 with the gymnasium.

"All this is going to cost a lot of money," Sanford said, "and if it's too much, in your opinion, then you should vote no. If you think it isn't, then vote yes."

He responded to criticism that the building as proposed is expensive for a district the size of Owen-Gage by explaining that help for construction could be gotten through the school bond loan fund, a state-financed agency.

According to Sanford, the district, in order to qualify for funds from the state under the program, must levy seven mills on debt retirement plus 10 per cent of the difference between that seven mills and what the debt retirement millage would be without the fund.

He said additionally the district could realize some $60,000 in the second year of the present three-year state school aid bill through a section which will make grants available to districts building new facilities such as Owen-Gage.

Millage for Owen-Gage utilizing the school bond loan fund should run in the neighborhood of 7.8 mills for debt retirement, according to Sanford.

"I know it's a lot of money and the building can be cut down if you want to make sacrifices," Sanford said, "but this is what you've got to do if you want this

Chamber irons out plans for Christmas season

Members of the retail division of the Chamber of Commerce ironed out most of the details of an ambitious Christmas promotion Tuesday morning in a special meeting held at the hotel under the direction of President Dorothy Stahlbaum.

While the over-all program is complete, details remain to be ironed out. The final touches will be added at a special meeting Tuesday, Nov. 27, at 7 a.m. at the hotel. All retailers are urged to be present, Mrs. Stahlbaum said.

There will be a mystery shopper, with prizes galore, free shows, Santa in town with gifts and candy and a host of other special events. Full details of the Christmas program will be in the special Christmas shopping edition scheduled for publication next Wednesday building."

Sanford said a site for the building has not yet been selected, but did reveal that negotiations are under way for a parcel of land in section 26 of Brookfield township and some sort of agreement may be forthcoming within a few days, he added. He did not elaborate, other than to say he personally favors this centrally-located site between Owendale and Gagetown.

Sanford characterized the vote, in which the district members will have their first chance to decide a building question since it was formed, as an opportunity to tell the board what it wants in no uncertain terms.

"We have about 1,180 voters in the district," he said, "and if at least 900 don't show up at the polls, I'm going to be disappointed."

He said the larger the turnout, the better consensus the school board will have in deciding what to do, should the issue go down to defeat.

"We know we can't ram a program down your throats if you won't swallow it," Sanford said. "It is your decision, not mine."

Sanford was questioned regarding curriculum development.

A LITTLE CHRONICLE WANT AD gets Big Results

More deer killed by area drivers

With deer season scheduled to open Thursday, motorists are having more luck than hunters in finding and killing the elusive white-tails. Four more of the animals fell victim to car-deer collisions last week in the Cass City area.

Thursday, a car driven by Randy Kelley, 18, of 6655 Third St., struck and killed a deer while traveling south on Kingston Road, three-quarters of a mile south of Deckerville Road. Kelley told Tuscola County Sheriff's deputies the deer jumped from the west side of the road into the path of his auto before he had time to stop. He escaped serious injury in the accident which occurred at 11:10 p.m.

Friday, a car driven by Alan Grigg, 20, Sandusky, struck and killed a deer while traveling east on M-46 a half mile west of M-24. The driver escaped serious injury in the accident that occurred at 6:20 p.m.

Two Deford men escaped serious injury Saturday and Sunday in separate car-deer collisions. Saturday, a car driven by Roy Ollila, 38, 5972 Howard Rd., Deford, struck and killed a deer while traveling east on M-46 near Cat Lake Road. He told investigating officers the animal ran out from the south side of the road into the path of his car before he had a chance to apply his brakes. This mishap took place at 10:05 p.m. Sunday, an auto driven by Hazen Reavy Jr., 39, of 7174 Gilford Rd., Deford, struck and killed a deer while traveling east on M-46 at Sheridan Road. He escaped serious injury in the mishap which took place at 4:10 a.m. Sunday.

OTHER ACCIDENTS

Two other minor accidents were reported by the sheriff's department. Friday, a car driven by Randy Whittaker, 21, of 4953 E. Akron Rd., went out of control and struck a mailbox while traveling north on Cemetery Road north of Kelly Road. Police said Whittaker lost control of the vehicle after a skid and struck a mailbox owned by Millard Ball, 3640 Cemetery Rd.

No ticket was issued and no one was injured. The mishap took place at 6:55 a.m. Saturday, a St. Clair Shores man lost control of the truck he was driving, flipped and landed in a ditch along Cemetery Road near Severance Road. Milton Phillips, 39, told Cass City Police, who investigated, that he was traveling north when the truck went out of control and landed in the ditch. Phillips escaped serious injury in the mishap. The truck sustained minor damage.

The mishap took place at 6:00 p.m. Jaroch said the fire is believed to have started from a mechanic who was welding near the paint department. Officials said fumes from the paint were ignited by the welder, spreading flames throughout the entire building. Loss included two cars that were being repaired, tools, a quantity of paint and the gasoline pumps. Under ground gasoline storage tanks were untouched by the flames. Also escaping damage was a house trailer located next to the gas station. The Ublly Fire Department fought the blaze for two hours. The fire began at 10:55 a.m.

Fire destroys gas station

November 7

No one was injured Wednesday Nov. 7, when fire destroyed the Partaka Sunoco Service Station, located about seven miles south of Ublly on M-19 at the Cass City Road intersection. Ublly Fire Chief Lambert Jaroch placed the loss on the building and contents at $27,000, with $7,000 on the station and $20,000 on contents.

Jaroch said the fire is believed to have started from a mechanic who was welding near the paint department. Officials said fumes from the paint were ignited by the welder, spreading flames throughout the entire building. Loss included two cars that were being repaired, tools, a quantity of paint and the gasoline pumps. Under ground gasoline storage tanks were untouched by the flames.

Rabbit tracks

By John Haire

And anyone else he can get to help!

Vic Guernsey gets around the country pushing fuel pumps for Walbro Corporation as a company vice-president. As a former newsmen he's interested in the paper business which means, in part, the paper shortage. He called to tell me that when in Chicago he noticed that a Chicago paper, feeling the pinch, cut out classifieds in its Thursday editions.

Since he once published a weekly sheet, I didn't have to tell him that the want ads would be the last, the very last, to go from the Chronicle pages.

It's simple. No classified, no Chronicle.

For the life of me I can't figure out how a return to daylight savings time in Michigan would save an ounce of energy. I'd like to be shown. After all it's dark when you get up and dark when you go to bed with daylight savings time longer than it is with Eastern Standard Time.

Over the years the Chronicle has served as an unofficial lost and found department. We've been custodians for everything from money to baby rattles.

Wearing apparel is frequently left. This week it was a green suede glove looking for a mate.

Many times items, sometimes of surprising value, are never claimed. If you've lost something give us a ring, you might just get lucky.

There are scads of honest folks around who don't believe finders are keepers.

Rapping with State Senator Al DeGrow, Republican, Pigeon, last Thursday, DeGrow had been seriously considering trying for Cong. James Harvey's seat in the House when it became available but is now 99 per cent sure that he will not.

The attractive feature of running, says DeGrow, is that office holders can run without fear of losing their seat. Michigan is not without a little clout in the oil embargo crisis with Canada. At this writing our neighbors to the north were holding back oil owned by American concerns and stored in Canada.

Most folks don't know that a Canadian oil pipe line runs through Michigan. It serves Sarnia and is as much in our control as our oil stored in Canada.

Incidentally, DeGrow says, he's been receiving lots of letters from constituents. Most have a solution to the shortage... and it's stopping whatever the person writing has no interest in.

Sports like snowmobiling are very frivolous in the eyes of non-snowmobilers. DeGrow said wryly.

It's early copy time again. The Chronicle will be out before Thanksgiving, with its annual Christmas shopping edition. All news and ad deadlines will be advanced as usual.

OWEN-GAGE VOTERS WILL decide Dec. 3, whether or not to approve the sale of bonds for construction of this new Junior-Senior High School building. The structure, designed by Wigen and Tinknell architects, is estimated to cost $1,950,000 to construct, with the total bond issue to be $2,660,000. This issue represents the first secondary construction program proposed by the board of education since the combined district was formed.

Over 200 new children's books bought in '72-73

Over 200 new children's books have been purchased in the last year by Rawson Memorial Library, according to Librarian Mrs. Barbara Hutchinson. She made the announcement in conjunction with National Children's Book Week, Nov. 12-19.

Book lists and complementary book marks commemorating the book week are available at the library. The theme of this year's week is "Live, read."

National Children's Book Week began in 1919 to help foster good books for children.

One questioner asked Sanford why there had been no JV football team this season and would a new building guarantee such extra-curricular activities. Sanford replied that the program was dropped due to a lack of interest. Another questioner stated that 23 students had gone out for JV football and asked if this and lack of facilities are all reasons for the problems, adding that for the district to make a success of a new building, it must at least hold a steady enrollment.

Presently, kindergarten enrollment is down by eight students, while other enrollments are holding fairly steady, showing declines in some classes, he said.

"If the number of students on tuition in other districts increases, then it will cost more on a per child basis to build and operate a new building," Sanford said. "It can't work unless the voters support it. Curriculum can't improve without voter support."

He acknowledged it would take more operational mileage to run the proposed building and further agreed it would place Owen-Gage near the top of Thumb schools in terms of expense of operation and indebtedness.

Presently, the district is levying one mill to retire a $340,000 debt which will be paid off in 1987. The new structure would take some 29 years to pay off. Sanford said this is standard operating procedure in most building programs.

and lack of facilities are all reasons for the problems, adding that for the district to make a success of a new building, it must at least hold a steady enrollment.

Presently, kindergarten enrollment is down by eight students, while other enrollments are holding fairly steady, showing declines in some classes, he said.

"If the number of students on tuition in other districts increases, then it will cost more on a per child basis to build and operate a new building," Sanford said. "It can't work unless the voters support it. Curriculum can't improve without voter support."

He acknowledged it would take more operational mileage to run the proposed building and further agreed it would place Owen-Gage near the top of Thumb schools in terms of expense of operation and indebtedness.

interest. When you don't have that, it is hard to keep it going." Sanford challenged the group to turn out in large numbers on election day. "Either prove the board right on this question or prove it wrong," he said. "But do it decisively."

FROM THE Editor's Corner

Let's get it on the record right now. This is not a moral issue. Not this discussion.

It may well offend your morality that boys and girls live in the same buildings in our colleges. You may believe that it's wrong for girls to room in a fraternity house with a fellow in the next room.

That's a personal thing. But it does seem to me that it's also a symptom of the times. We've gone overboard on this equality business.

I can't see how it makes a woman more equal to cohabit a dorm or a frat. I can see how it would make it darn uncomfortable for both sexes.

All the court decisions in the world won't change the fact that there is a difference (thank goodness) between men and women.

A woman in a "men's only" room is inhibiting. Just the same, I imagine, as a man getting a hair cut in the neighborhood beauty shop.

Don't tell me that the gals talk the same in front of a man as they do in a "ladies only" shop as they wait for their hair to dry.

The latest in the siege for equality is the Supreme Court test of "men only" restaurants.

The libbers are claiming that this restriction deprives women of business opportunities because they are barred from the business discussions in many restaurants of this type.

Some women who work in offices are finding it demeaning to be asked to bring a cup of coffee to the boss.

That's what I mean by overreacting. Before the Chronicle bought a coffee pot we bought our coffee from a restaurant. All of us went and fetched that coffee. Far as I know it never bothered anyone. For sure, it didn't bother me.

The latest court test will lose, even if it wins. Let's say that the courts rule that whether women eat with men or don't eat with men is worth the State's consideration and rule that it is illegal to keep them out.

That will give the American Civil Liberties Union a big ego boost. Something to talk about.

After the fanfare is over things will be little changed. Men's only restaurants will cater to men and most women won't enter... won't want to enter.

Like the experiments in boy-girl mingling at colleges, the women's lib moment has its fickle moments. This latest effort is one of them. But it won't change anything and I'm thankful for it.

Commissioners take police car bids

The Tuscola County Board of Commissioners accepted bids Tuesday on four sheriff's patrol cars, referring the bids to committee for study and recommendation.

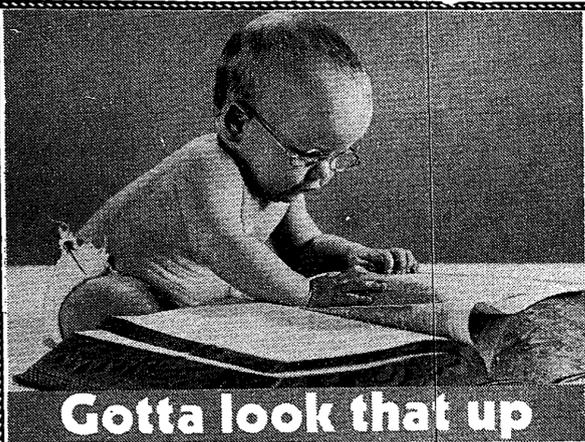

Bids were made by three Caro auto dealers and ranged from a low of $14,300 to a high of $16,796.00. Four vehicles, three 1972 patrol cars and one 1970 patrol car, are to be traded in and a total of $800 for the four was offered by the bidding dealers.

Bids were taken on four Ford patrol cars at $3,910 each or a total of $15,640. Trade-in brought the figure to $14,840. Four Mercury patrol cars from the same dealership were bid at $4,199, or $16,796 for four. Trade-ins brought the figure to $15,996.

Another bid placed the price of four Pontiac patrol cars with trade at an even $15,000.

A third dealership bid four Oldsmobile patrol cars with trade at $15,350 and four Chevrolet at $14,300. No date was set by the commissioners for action on the bids.

Following introduction of the newly-initiated members, Robin Fairbanks of Rescue, Mary Detwiler of Caro and Donas Erdert, First Messenger, the Bethel was closed in regular form.

Gotta look that up

Man has a hunger for knowledge. It first shows itself in childhood and prompts incessant questions and exasperating experiments.

But it continues all through life. Recently, on discovering something you didn't know, you murmured to yourself, "Gotta look that up . . ."

Upon this basic hunger for knowledge, the Church's program of religious education is planned. That's why we urge parents to foster a Christian atmosphere in the home. It is also why the Church provides religious instruction long before secular education begins. And it accounts for continuing emphasis on youth and young adult activities in most congregations.

We adults haven't outgrown the hunger for knowledge. Most of us recognize that our scientific and material progress points up the crucial need for spiritual standards to believe in. God has vital truth to impart to men. The place to look it up is your church.

Sanford reviews Owen-Gage problems, goals

By Jim Ketchum

About the only thing that still bothers Glen Sanford, Superintendent of Owen-Gage Schools, is the time he was tagged out stealing third base in his high school championship baseball game.

"Sometimes I still wake up nights and play that inning over and over in my mind," Sanford will say. "That was a real mistake."

Other than that, the easy-going former principal and superintendent of Meridian Public Schools in Sanford near Midland, takes the rest of life in stride. This includes the present problems of education in the troubled district which will vote Dec. 3 on whether or not to approve a $2.66 million bond issue to construct a new junior-senior high school building.

Sanford, in his second year as superintendent of the beleaguered district, approaches this problem in the same philosophical manner he approaches every other problem he faces.

Sanford came to Owen-Gage in 1972, succeeding Allen Fennell. He took a pay cut to come because, he candidly admits, he wanted to be a superintendent. While admitting the district he inherited had definite troubles, he refuses to accept the notion that the district is in financial difficulty.

"We were in the black last year and the year before," he explained as he sat, hands behind his head, at his desk. "We didn't have money problems. What we had was a lack of programs which take additional revenue."

Sanford said he knew when he came to Owen-Gage that the job could definitely be a "non-permanent position." He had been told of the sentiment in some parts of the district for leaving to join more prosperous districts and of the divisive campaign of almost five years ago to dissolve the district.

Sanford realized the only way to work effectively under conditions of polarization was to detach himself personally from the battles as much as possible. So far, he has managed to walk the fine line that divides factions within the district and maintains that he has not made a lot of enemies.

"Whatever comes out of this election as far as the school goes doesn't make any difference to me personally," Sanford said. "I represent only one vote in the district. But I don't want to try to push a program down people's throats if they don't want to swallow it. I think we as a board are offering voters a pretty darn good program. But if they don't want it, I'm not going to force them to take it."

This does not mean Sanford is unconcerned about the future of the district. He would like to see the new school building erected from an educational standpoint.

"It's a good, sound proposal," he added, "but if the people don't want it, it won't go at the polls."

Sanford said he's perfectly happy at Owen-Gage and said he sees a definite future in Class D schools. He believes they can offer the educational opportunities similar to those of larger districts and wants to make Owen-Gage work.

He said he holds no bitterness toward those persons in the district who are currently seeking legal ways to leave Owen-Gage and join adjoining districts such as Cass City and Lakers.

"They're doing what they think is right and I'm trying to do what I think is right," he said. "I can't be bitter about it, even though I think they might be making a mistake. It's their decision."

He said he also holds no bitterness over the fact that about 40 former Owen-Gage students are now enrolled in Cass City schools, providing that much more state aid for Cass City and that much less for his own district.

"I don't like to see it happen for a lot of reasons," Sanford said. "But, again, it's their decision."

He philosophized that no matter in what school district voters live, they have to pay school taxes for building and operation. Leaving Owen-Gage won't solve that, he stressed. He would rather have those persons stay and try to work out the problems at home.

Sanford looks at the present building question as a necessity of life for those who want Owen-Gage to continue as an independent district. He compared it with having to do something you really don't want to do but must.

"I don't like paying 46 cents a gallon for gasoline to drive to Caro," he said, "but I know if I don't buy the gas, I'm not going to get there. And I'm sure not going to walk. It's the same way with the building. I don't like to ask for more taxes and millage to build a new building. But we need the building and raising millage and selling bonds is the only way to do it. We have to pay the price if we're going to buy a building."

Looking down the road, Sanford said there are two alternatives if the bond issue fails. One would be to present another bond issue as soon as legally possible. Another would be to investigate re-submitting the 1969 proposition to dissolve the district.

"Whatever happens, it's going to cost tax dollars," Sanford said. "If we build or if we split, the property owners are still going to have to pay school taxes. The question is where."

Through all the controversies that beset the district, Sanford tends to divorce them from his personal life. The collection of books in a bookcase behind his desk include the Bible, "I'm OK, You're OK," and Michigan Statutes.

"Amazingly enough, the job doesn't get me down," Sanford said, evaluating his performance in the job. "I'm a naturally argumentative person, but I tend not to argue on the job. I believe what's your business is your business and what's mine is mine."

"There are some things in the job I don't always like to do, like raise taxes. But I have to do it if I'm to do my job."

Sanford likes working in Owen-Gage but added he could find a job elsewhere if the need arose. He declined to predict how the vote will go on the bond issue.

"I swear I talked to more people who said they'd vote yes than actually did," he mused. "I'm out of the predicting business."

Sanford feels the bond issue won't come down to dollars and cents proposition.

"People will vote their sentiments," Sanford observed. "That's the way it's done and that's what we'll have to live with."

Veteran's Day recalls 55 years of forgotten sacrifices

By Jim Ketchum

Monday was celebrated as Veteran's Day by most branches of government with the exception of the post office. For most Cass Cityans, it was just another day with the added inconvenience of not being able to transact any county business.

It was 55 years ago that World War I, the war to end all wars, clanked to a less-than-decisive conclusion in the trenches and on the fields of barbed wire and blood. Since the signing of the armistice in that railroad car at Compiegne, France, another world war, two undeclared wars and the atomic bomb have taken untold lives.

For those dwindling few who still survive the action of 1917-18, Veteran's Day is still special—still important. Most of them still earnestly believe in what they accomplished. A few look with bitterness at what they consider wasted service.

They originally christened it Armistice Day—the day the killing stopped. It remained so until after the end of World War II when it was renamed Veteran's Day to honor dead from both actions. Then there came those dead from Korea and now Vietnam.

The day was marked by a conspicuous absence of any organized celebration or remembrance. No parades, no flag-raising ceremonies, no oratory from politicians, preachers or poets.

It was just another day in Cass City. Someone was overheard to say upon finding a bank closed, "What day is this?"

No small amount of confusion erupted this year over when to celebrate the holiday. For the post office, it was Oct. 22. For other government employees, Monday was set aside.

A few persons journeyed to Elkland township cemetery to place flowers on the graves of those who either served in combat or were killed in action. An occasional American flag fluttered in the chill of November.

But, for the most part, it was just another day.

Vernon McConnell, 2977 Dodge Rd., remembers that his outfit was engaged in combat between the Meuse and Moselle Rivers preparing for a drive on Metz when word of peace came.

"The word passed through the lines that a peace treaty had been signed," McConnell recalled. "We even heard they'd signed an armistice, but it sure didn't sound like it. The shooting went right on until the last."

The armistice was signed at a little past 5:00 a.m. on Nov. 11, but did not take effect until 11:00 a.m. The shooting and killing went on until that hour, with many trying to go down in history as the man who fired the last shot of the Great War.

"With the shooting going on, it seemed strange that there would be peace," McConnell remembered. "Some of the French asked us why we weren't celebrating. Well, you couldn't celebrate while you were being shot at."

McConnell served in the Army from September, 1917 through April, 1919.

Another set of memories come to other soldiers of the conflict, but for most persons today, World War I is nothing more than oddly-dressed men moving rapidly on old film to the strains of a player piano.

Much of the meaning of the day is now gone and the veteran, largely through the unpopularity of the Vietnam War, has become as forgotten as the songs soldiers sang as they trudged off to troop ships and to the trenches.

Today's veteran finds more unemployment and discrimination waiting for him because he fought an unpopular war. In 1918, to be a veteran assured a man of a job and a future.

Today, to be a veteran assures nothing.

Veteran's day was just another day in Cass City Monday

VETERAN'S DAY. . . just another day for many.

"Amazingly enough, the job doesn't get me down," Sanford said, evaluating his performance in the job. "I'm a naturally argumentative person, but I tend not to argue on the job. I believe what's your business is your business and what's mine is mine."

"There are some things in the job I don't always like to do, like raise taxes. But I have to do it if I'm to do my job."

Sanford likes working in Owen-Gage but added he could find a job elsewhere if the need arose. He declined to predict how the vote will go on the bond issue.

"I swear I talked to more people who said they'd vote yes than actually did," he mused. "I'm out of the predicting business."

Sanford feels the bond issue won't come down to dollars and cents proposition.

"People will vote their sentiments," Sanford observed. "That's the way it's done and that's what we'll have to live with."

Sanford looks at the present building question as a necessity of life for those who want Owen-Gage to continue as an independent district. He compared it with having to do something you really don't want to do but must.

"I don't like paying 46 cents a gallon for gasoline to drive to Caro," he said, "but I know if I don't buy the gas, I'm not going to get there. And I'm sure not going to walk. It's the same way with the building. I don't like to ask for more taxes and millage to build a new building. But we need the building and raising millage and selling bonds is the only way to do it. We have to pay the price if we're going to buy a building."

Looking down the road, Sanford said there are two alternatives if the bond issue fails. One would be to present another bond issue as soon as legally possible. Another would be to investigate re-submitting the 1969 proposition to dissolve the district.

"Whatever happens, it's going to cost tax dollars," Sanford said. "If we build or if we split, the property owners are still going to have to pay school taxes. The question is where."

Through all the controversies that beset the district, Sanford tends to divorce them from his personal life. The collection of books in a bookcase behind his desk include the Bible, "I'm OK, You're OK," and Michigan Statutes.

Cass City schools, businesses respond to call for energy conservation by 'dialing down'

America's ever-deepening energy crisis continued to expand this week with its effects reaching nearly every home, school and business. Many Cass Cityans responded to President Nixon's call Nov. 7, by turning down thermostats, driving slower and watching fuel gauges on oil tanks and automobiles anxiously.

The problem hit Cass City last week when school officials revealed that supplies of number four fuel oil for the Intermediate School have been terminated. No other source presently is available and the school faces a Dec. 1 shutdown unless another source is found.

Supt. Donald Crouse said Thursday several proposals were under consideration and the subject would be discussed at the board's regular Monday night meeting.

Among the suggestions put forth would be absorbing as many students as possible into existing buildings and running half-day schedules. This, Crouse said, is not really a practical solution because it would increase school bus runs by 50 per cent, placing added strain on already scarce gasoline supplies.

Crouse said converting the present heating plant in the Intermediate building to another oil or coal could not be accomplished quickly enough to meet the current crisis.

"Whatever happens will have to be decided by the board," Crouse said.

He added that other buildings in the system are not presently affected by the crunch. Enterprise Oil Co. which supplied fuel to the school announced last week it no longer could meet the demand.

Village operations have not yet been affected, according to Supt. Lou LaPonsie. He said so far the village has received no word regarding cutbacks of gasoline or diesel fuel for vehicles and has had no problem heating village buildings.

Cass City presently operates three cars, five trucks, a grader and a loader, the latter of which runs on diesel fuel. LaPonsie said no problems have yet been experienced procuring fuel for the coming winter.

"We're keeping our fingers crossed and not rocking the boat," he added.

Elsewhere, some businesses are taking fuel conservation measures. Dick Hendrick, owner of the Cass Theatre, said he plans to operate the furnace at the theatre at lower temperatures and, if conditions warrant, will close off the lower seating section and usher patrons to the balcony.

"This way, we can take advantage of the rising heat," Hendrick said. We can seat up to 120 persons upstairs and, if it looks like a slow night, we could do that."

He added that cleaning operations will be moved to Monday night at the theatre so that the heating plant will not have to be turned on during the week when the theatre is normally closed.

"As long as the temperature doesn't drop below 50 degrees inside, I'm safe," he said. "If it goes much lower than that, the big screen will start to warp. I hope we can get by like this for a while."

Dick Erla of Erla's Food Center and Packing Co., said the possibility definitely exists that stores such as his might have to curtail hours in the near future to conserve fuel. Presently, he said, thermostats in the store are set at a high of 65 degrees.

This is slightly lower than in past years when settings ranged from 65-70 degrees.

Erla's store and packing operation are all fueled by natural gas and, should a curtailment be announced, Erla said, it would result in layoffs in sales and pulling trucks off the road.

"If our gas had to be cut off," he added, "that would end the operation just about completely. I've been preaching to my help to turn down the thermostats."

Erla said he cannot believe that there is really the fuel shortage claimed to exist and tends to place blame on the administration for present conditions.

"I lived through the days of World War II and even then, things like fuel were not as supposedly scarce as we're told they are now," he said. "If there is such a shortage, someone is going to have to take the blame in Washington."

At Walbro Corp., no contingency plans have yet been made, according to Vice-President Lambert Althaver but the firm will continue to watch conditions as they develop.

"When I came in to work the morning following the President's speech, I made sure the thermostats were turned down," Althaver said, "but other than that, we don't know just what our next moves will be."

He said the energy crunch has made the firm more cautious as far as expansion is concerned and forces the company to reevaluate its goals, with regard to sales and marketing.

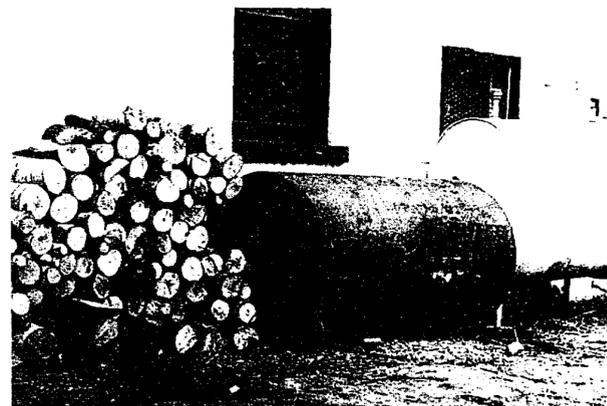

"We want to conserve energy, but we also want to do all we can to keep things going and keep people working," Althaver added. "I'm sure everyone here will do what they can to cooperate to save energy."

Althaver said the energy shortage will benefit those products the firm produces to save fuel and will probably have an inhibiting effect on those products used primarily in recreational vehicles.

A special Governor's Task Force on Fuel Supply is currently working to obtain fuel for persons unable to find sources on their own. Persons needing fuel who are not able to secure supplies can call (517) 373-8250 between 8:00 a.m. and 5:00 p.m. Monday through Friday, according to Richard K. Helmbrecht, director of the program.

Persons are urged to make every effort to obtain fuel through private sources before contacting the Task Force.

MANY PERSONS ARE looking to alternative sources of fuel in the wake of the nation's energy crisis, as is this person who has stacked wood beside two oil barrels.

For Emory Balmer

Selling firewood goes from hobby to thriving business

EMORY BALMER doesn't split wood like this anymore.

What began as a hobby a couple of years ago has turned into a booming business for Emory Balmer, 5558 Robinson Rd., thanks to the nationwide fuel shortage.

The business is firewood, and Balmer is having trouble keeping up with the demand. Customers come from as far away as Alma, Pontiac and Detroit as well as the Cass City area to purchase the oak, hickory and white ash Balmer sells.

Last year, he had only one customer for his firewood. This year, however, things have radically changed. Dealers from Detroit, where firewood now sells for $50 a cord, contact Balmer regularly to buy his stock.

These dealers, however, usually want wood for a cheap price, according to Balmer, and he usually turns them down, preferring to sell to local customers for $20 a face cord.

"A fellow from Alma came by the other day and took two face cords," Balmer said. "Most of my wood is going to Cass City and Caro."

Balmer retired from Pontiac Motor Division in 1969 after 38 years on the job. He and his wife moved from Fostoria to their present location soon after. The firewood business began around two years ago.

Balmer explained he buys standing timber from farmers who want to clear woodlots for farming. He said most of his wood comes from the Brown City and Yale area.

He then trucks the wood back to his home, cuts it and splits it into cords and sells it from there. He makes free deliveries in the Cass City area.

Among the tools he uses to cut fireplace wood are two chainsaws, a sledge hammer and wedges and a $595 hydraulic wood splitter. The wood splitter is a recent addition and makes quick work of any size log placed on it.

It utilizes the hydraulic principle to push the log against a sharpened wedge which, in a matter of seconds, splits it neatly.

"I had an old lumberman ask me one day what that thing was when I had it sitting in the back of my truck," Balmer chuckled. "When I told him it was a log splitter, he couldn't believe it."

Balmer enjoys the firewood business because it keeps him active. He has suffered three heart attacks since 1961, but jokes about them.

"You have to live with it," he smiled, "you might as well make the best of it and joke about it if you can."

His health problems don't keep him from the business of cutting trees and splitting wood into cords. Currently, he has about a 15-cord supply with more waiting to be cut.

The only worry he has is that he might have to burn some of it in his own house if the supply of fuel oil dwindles or is cut off. An old potbelly stove stands ready in a shed behind the house which can be pressed into service if necessary.

Mrs. Balmer also contributes to the effort of selling firewood. She has her own chain saw and likes to run the hydraulic splitter.

Between the two, they should keep area fireplace owners happy and warm this winter.

INSTEAD, HE USES this hydraulic splitter which makes quick work of logs. Balmer, who sells firewood, says his business is booming this year, due to the nation's energy crisis.

Ugly school board votes to hold bonding election

The Ugly Board of Education voted Monday night to set April 2 as the date for a school bond election for the construction of a new elementary school. The action was taken at the board's regularly scheduled meeting.

According to Supt. Doug Brownrigg, the building would have 20 classrooms, along with an office, library and multipurpose room containing some kitchen facilities.

Presently, the school architect is compiling a cost update on the proposed structure according to Brownrigg. The proposition was turned down previously in March and October of 1971.

Brownrigg said the board has purchased a 60-acre site south of the present Ugly High School where it hopes to construct the building.

At the meeting, Mark Tenbusch, school business manager, said the bond issue is again being sought because of the need to reduce overcrowding in the schools.

He noted that the school's enrollment has doubled in the past 10 years. This year, Ugly recorded the largest enrollment increase of any school in the Huron Intermediate District, he added

In other business, the board voted to reduce the price of a half pint of milk from 10 cents to six cents. The action was taken because of the four-cent milk reimbursement program of the federal government that went into effect Nov. 1.

Legion Auxiliary in regular meet at Cultural center

Twenty three were present Monday evening for the monthly meeting of the American Legion Auxiliary held at the Cultural Center. During the business meeting with Mrs. Doris Kinkman president, members authorized the payment of district dues and a contribution to the United Fund drive. Mrs. Elgene Keller reported 41 memberships paid for 1974. The Seventh District association meeting was announced for Sunday, Dec. 9 at North Branch. Games and refreshments followed the business meeting. The December meeting will include a Christmas party. The door prize went to Gertrude Erla.

The end of the Thumb's largest Oak

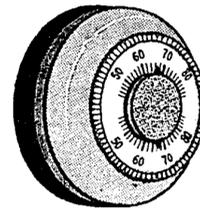

STEVEN PAPP says that the only reason he could cut this massive tree with this saw is that it was rotten at the bottom. The tree was 12-feet around at the stump where cut and will be cut into 8 and 10-foot logs.

THIS OAK TREE is estimated to be well over 100 years old. It is part of a timber stand being logged on the Elton Hurford farm, about 2 1/2 miles northeast of Owendale, by Steve Papp of Cass City. It's worth over $200 as lumber. It's the largest tree in the Thumb and Papp says in lumbering all over the State he has found only two larger.

THERE ARE MANY WAYS TO CONSERVE NATURAL GAS AND THE PROPER USE OF THE THERMOSTAT IS ONE OF THEM.

- DURING THE DAY, SET YOUR THERMOSTAT AS LOW AS YOUR COMFORT WILL ALLOW. IN REALITY, IT MAY BE HEALTHIER THAN KEEPING THE HOME TEMPERATURE SET TOO HIGH.
 - WHEN YOU GO TO BED AT NIGHT, LOWER THE THERMOSTAT FIVE DEGREES. WITH THE WARMTH OF YOUR BLANKETS, YOU CAN ACTUALLY BE JUST AS COMFORTABLE AS YOU WERE DURING THE DAY.
 - IF YOU TAKE A WINTER VACATION OR LEAVE FOR A WEEKEND OR EXTENDED PERIOD OF TIME, TURN YOUR THERMOSTAT BACK TO AT LEAST SIXTY DEGREES.
 - MAKE SURE YOUR HUMIDIFIER IS WORKING PROPERLY. IMPROPER HUMIDITY WILL AFFECT THE OPERATION OF YOUR THERMOSTAT AND RELATED HEATING SYSTEM.
- THE ABOVE SUGGESTIONS, IF PRACTICED, WILL SAVE NATURAL GAS AND MONEY TOO.

NOTICE THE ROTTEN stump, says Steve Papp. The tree should have been harvested about 20 years ago. If it had been about nine feet of lumber would have been saved. Papp says that the loss in dollars because of rotting was about $40.

Death sentence, yes

A recent telephone survey conducted by the Bay City Times indicated that of 16 persons contacted, 10 favored a return to capital punishment for murder.

The first survey among those contacted was by the Bay City Times, which reported that 10 of 16 persons favored a return to capital punishment.

A recent Supreme Court decision nullified capital punishment as a cruel and unusual punishment.

One person who would favor a return to the use of such devices as the electric chair is James Winchester, 4055 Dale Rd.

"If a man is convicted and has been proven guilty beyond any shadow of a doubt, then I think it would be all right to use it (the electric chair)," he said.

Winchester said if its use had not been stopped, some victims of murder might still be alive. He added that some of these crimes might have been avoided had the person known the would not be forgiven.

Winchester said that if the person who committed the crime had known the person would not be forgiven, the person would not have committed the crime.

Police probe theft of $200 shotgun

A shotgun and scope sight valued at $200 was reported stolen from a trailer home in Huntsville Trailer Court Wednesday, Nov. 7.

The weapon was thought to have been taken sometime in the past month.

Tim Brinkman, owner of the gun, told Cass City police he had kept the gun in a closet and a scope for the weapon was in a drawer in the bedroom. He added that the trailer was not locked and someone could have entered.

Both Brinkman and Mrs. Betty Allen, who lives in the trailer home, were told to look for the weapon. Mrs. Allen said she had not seen the gun since it was reported missing or detected.

The weapon is a three-shot automatic with a side mount scope. The scope was not on the gun at the time of the theft.

The incident remains under investigation.

Demand forces educators to educate more family doctors

Nearly everyone wants more family doctors, except a hard, but shrinking corps of medical educators who now must face up to needs of the public or see state appropriations threatened. Legislative committees have been increasingly insistent that medical schools show interest in supplying doctors who plan to enter family practice. Sen. Garland Lane (D-Flint), chairman of Capital Outlay committee and a member of Appropriations committee, and Sen. Alvin J. DeGrow (R-Pigeon), chairman of a special committee to study the state's medical needs, have pressured medical schools toward adding family practice departments to their organizations.

The pressure results from knowledge that unless family doctors are produced, monies for new medical buildings might be very slow in coming. And while some medical schools have shown interest in this problem, the interest accelerated when DeGrow's activities accentuated the public need and Lane did some personal checking to see what medical schools are doing about it.

Things are looking up for the family which needs medical attention, but it will still take time. At a meeting of both senate committees which was attended by representatives of medical schools, Lane defined the situation.

MSU, which has shown the most interest and the most progress right along, is now establishing in the College of Human Medicine a family practice department to be known as such. The MSU College of Osteopathic Medicine had previously satisfied senators that it is active in producing family doctors.

Wayne State's College of Medicine, which had given lip service to this idea until about four months ago, now indicates it will be organized with methods to encourage family doctors through residencies and college organization by Jan. 1.

U-M, which appears to consider its real role that of training specialists and maintaining advanced research programs, is still talking somewhat vaguely. Its representative stated that the University of Michigan should have a program in a year or two.

LOST IN THE SHUFFLE?

Much hard work by a special committee headed by Sens. William S. Ballenger (R-Owosso) and Patrick H. McCollough (D-DeARBorn) went into a detailed report on political ethics and election reform. Unhappily, from an attention standpoint, the report was issued about the same time as the governor's statement on the same topic.

While many of the committee's proposals parallel Miliken's, others go into fine, but important points.

In addition to rules for lobbyists and conflict of interest for public officials, the senate report deals with new and stronger laws which would require public bodies to keep their meetings open to the public. It would permit closed meetings only for a few topics (collective bargaining, property transactions, personnel problems unless the person involved asked for an open meeting). But all final action by the group must be done in a public meeting and any votes taken would be officially recorded and available to the public.

The senate committee report also sets rules for campaign finance, defining conditions under which donations can be given or received, and requiring more detailed records

It is easy to give lip service to improvements suggested by both the governor and the senate committee when it is apparent the changes serve public interest. But the changes would also make it harder for public officials who prefer to operate in the dark—or at least in dimness.

One needs only to watch what happens to the legislative bodies when these reforms are considered to get an idea who wants to see these proposals become law and those who do not. It is easy to draw conclusions about which type of person will provide better government service to the public.

REFORM IN THE WIND

What with Watergate, former Vice-president Spiro Agnew and, closer to home, State Sen. Charles Youngblood (convicted of a felony), an erosion of confidence in government comes as no surprise.

Gov. Miliken, who has long talked of crises in confidence, speaks of this problem in a special message to the Legislature on ethics and election reform.

"In the aftermath of Watergate and the recent courtroom scene in which a Vice-President of the United States was penalized for a felony involving a long-established pattern of political fund-raising, we must examine our own patterns," the governor says.

"We must move rapidly and decisively to prove to the people of Michigan that this state's politicians are kept out of the reach of temptation and corruption by stringent laws that move their financial dealings out of locked files and into the public record."

Miliken proposed full disclosure of all political contributions, complete disclosure of campaign expenditures and annual disclosure by all candidates for statewide office and the Legislature, of their financial holdings and sources of income over $1,000.

He also came up with recommendations for changes in Michigan laws regulating lobbyists and open meetings.

On the latter topic, he said: "We have learned in Lansing as well as in Washington, that one of the best means of assuring accountability of public officials is through the watchdog mechanism of the media.

"We need to strengthen Michigan's 'open meeting' law in a manner recognizing that it is the policy of this state that setting of public policy is public business and may not be conducted in secret."

LONG, LONG GENERAL ELECTION

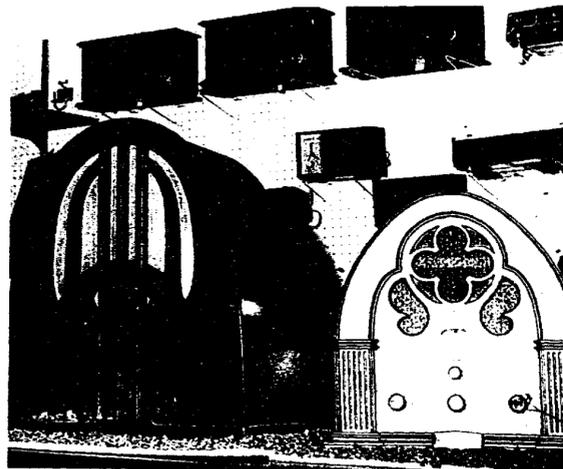

Is the general election campaign too long?

Gov. Miliken thinks so. He's recommending moving the fall primary from the first Tuesday in August to the second Tuesday following Labor Day in September.

"General election campaigns are too long," he contends. "They are too long for the candidates who are forced to spend more money and exhaust themselves in seemingly endless campaigning. And they are too long on the voters."

Cass City AARP meets Thursday

The Cass City AARP held its regular meeting Thursday with 49 members and guests present.

Rev. Melvin R. Vender, pastor emeritus of the First Presbyterian Church, conducted a memorial for Helen Stevens, who was a charter member of the Cass City branch.

Mitchell Tottis of Flint, Garry LaLond of Bad Axe and Ernest Bender of Caro, all from the Dept. of the Treasury, explained and gave instructions for preparing a 1973 Homestead Property Tax Credit Claim.

The annual Christmas party will be held Thursday, Dec. 13, at 12:30 p.m. in the Cultural Center. Mary MacIntyre is in charge of the program.

Ella Croft, Donna Wermette and Leona Stevens are in charge of arrangements.

It's a poor rule that won't work both ways—money talks, but it just won't listen.

DNR to establish deer checking stations in Thumb - state

In an effort to check more locally killed southern Michigan deer, the DNR is setting up checking stations in each county. Trained personnel will be available at each station to gather biological information for each animal. A colorful cloth patch will be awarded each successful hunter.

It is not necessary to bring the entire animal to the check station. Just the head and horns will be necessary to determine the age of the deer. The hunter should also bring his 1973 deer license.

A spokesperson for District Court said Tuesday no new date has been set. She added the reason for postponement came when a state lab technician who was scheduled to testify could not appear. Presently,

Cass Cityan's trial postponed

The scheduled non-jury trial of a Cass City man in Midland County District Court on charges of marijuana possession set for last Friday has been postponed.

Keith Elton Brown, 6451 Main, had pleaded innocent to the charge of possession after he and a companion were arrested Oct. 17, while driving at a high rate of speed on M-20 near Midland.

A spokesperson for District Court said Tuesday no new date has been set. She added the reason for postponement came when a state lab technician who was scheduled to testify could not appear. Presently,

KETCHUM'S KNAPSACK

Here's to Uncle Larry

By Jim Ketchum

Going up north won't be the same anymore, now that Uncle Larry is gone. Uncle Larry died last week and with him, I guess, died much of the reason for packing the car on Fridays after work and driving some 180 miles.

Uncle Larry lived in Copemish, population 406, not far from Frankfort and Traverse City. He had been born in the little town 75 years ago when the little town was considerably bigger and possessed a seemingly brighter future.

He had been born there and it is where he came to die a little over 10 years ago, escaping the pollution, grime and pace of Toledo. He sought quiet and solitude, broken only by a neighboring rooster or the lonely wail of a train whistle on the Ann Arbor line that rolled past his house trailer.

Uncle Larry lived alone and he died alone, not found until the next day by a neighbor who regularly checked on him. That's the way he wanted it, in a way. He enjoyed the solitude and the peace that the preceding 35 years had not brought.

Uncle Larry was a carpenter by trade until emphysema attacked his lungs and forced him out of the business in which he was an expert. His next occupation was locksmithing, and he was a whiz.

He could open anything. I have watched him open a lock with picks and watched him file a key for the same lock by hand, one groove at a time until the job was done.

His infinite patience allowed him to operate this successful business in his retirement in the northland. He was the only locksmith within a 20-mile radius for most of his years in the area.

Uncle Larry spoke with pride of having done all the lockwork at Crystal Mountain Lodge, some five miles from his home. Everyone knew where to come when they needed a key or a lock.

Immediately after arriving overseas, the re-deployed units drew combat gear and vehicles from prepositioned storage sites in Germany and moved to the exercise area to begin the seven day field maneuver.

The exercise, conducted by the Joint Chiefs of Staff and NATO, focused on the procedures and techniques for receiving, equipping, assembling and employing units after they arrive rather than on rapid deployment of troops from the U.S.

BETTER HEALTH

TV violence and children

BY DR. WALTER C. ALVAREZ and DR. WILLIAM J. WELCH

Probably every concerned parent wonders occasionally what ill effect the violence and crime depicted so often on the television screen will have on his or her children. These parents have probably heard what some researchers have pointed out -- that the youngster graduating from high school today has spent many more hours in front of the television set than he has spent in school. He started watching TV before he started school, and he was watching it on week ends and during summer vacations after he started attending school.

I have often wondered, when watching the description of an airplane hijacking or a bank robbery, if some poorly balanced person was watching the show and learning how he himself could carry out a similar crime and perhaps get a million dollars for his efforts.

I have on my desk a book entitled "The Early Window," in which Robert M. Liebert, John M. Neale and Emily S. Davidson have collected a volume of information and facts on just this subject.

In the beginning of their book they point out that in 1966, a movie called "The Doomsday Flight" was shown, in which a bomb was placed on an airplane by a man who then telephoned the airline and demanded money before he would reveal the bomb's whereabouts. The Airlines Pilots Association had objected strenuously to the showing of the film, fearing that someone would try the same thing in real life.

Sure enough, a bomb threat was received before the program was over, and four more were made in the next 24 hours. Eight more were received during the following week.

The authors cite other incidents: a 7-year-old boy was found sprinkling ground glass into the family's lamb stew -- an idea he said he had gotten from a TV program; two Chicago boys tried to extort $500 from a firm through a bomb threat -- again, an idea they said they got from a TV program.

A 9-year-old boy got the idea of getting rid of his teacher (who had given him a bad grade), by giving her a box of poisoned candy for Christmas, from a TV program in which a man disposed of his wife in that way without getting caught. A 6-year-old son of a policeman asked his father for real bullets so he could make his little sister "die for real", as he had seen on television.

The authors say that this type of case study does not prove conclusively that the television viewing had caused these children's behavior; they might have behaved similarly even if they had not watched television.

But many people today are making studies which show scientifically how much the behavior of young people is affected by what they see on television. Hopefully, these studies will pressure the television industry into improving and becoming a more helpful force in the lives of our children.

Some people argue that when children view aggressive acts on television, this will make them feel less aggressive, because they will thereby be "purged" of their own aggressive feelings.

However, in one study, pairs of nursery school children were shown a film, then left alone to play in a room where they could be observed as they chose various toys. The children saw both an aggressive film (a Woody Woodpecker cartoon) and a nonaggressive film (about Little Red Hen), about one week apart.

If seeing fantasy aggression had made them feel less aggressive, their toys and play would have followed that pattern. This wasn't so.

They were more overt after viewing the aggressive film, and tended to fight more with their companions and to choose more violent types of toys, such as toy daggers. I have read of a number of such studies.

Other studies have shown how television can be used for good effects, such as helping children to get over fears of certain things. Children who were very fearful of dogs were shown movies of children playing happily with dogs, and afterward were more willing to play with a dog.

Children who were fearful of the dentist were shown a film in which a boy climbs fearlessly into the dental chair and has a dental examination and cleaning; his 4-year-old sister in the film watches fearfully at first, but when her turn comes, her fear has subsided. This movie helped relieve the fears of the children.

The authors conclude that "We have seen that television has a great -- though largely unrealized -- potential for educating and teaching positive lessons to our young. What keeps it from doing so?" The writers suggest possible answers to this question, and give some ideas as to how this can be changed.

Today, they say, young children especially are essentially intruders, outsiders, unexpected guests (in the television audience. By the age of two, a child knows how to turn on the TV set, and by three, he is in the habit of watching it regularly.) They are voyeurs of a scene intended for other eyes, eavesdroppers on words meant for other ears.

"The Early Window" is published by Pergamon Press, Inc., Maxwell House, Fairview Park, Elmsford, N.Y. 10523; $6.50 paperback; $9.50 hard cover.

"If It Fitz . . ."

Remembering the depot

BY JIM FITZGERALD

Kissing her good-bye wouldn't have been the same. And where would the high school band have stood as it played me off to war? I'm talking about romance in the railroad depot.

The Grand Trunk line is going to restore passenger service from my old hometown, westward to Chicago. But there is a problem with the ancient depot in Port Huron. It is no longer usable.

"We're looking at the possibility of using a mobile office trailer or a prefabricated building as a station," a state official said.

That's terrible.

Some of my greatest memories are tied to that old Grand Trunk depot. . . . Dad was a traveling salesman. Mother took us kids to the depot to meet his train. It was a swell time. There was an unspoken agreement that Mother would wait until we got home before she squealed to Dad about how many times I let the furnace go out, or forgot to haul the ashes out to the curb (I was 2 years old, but Mother had a whip). The depot was for enjoying.

I remember the huge window sills. A kid could stretch out full and look down the track for his dad's train. There was a magnificent, head-high urinal in the john. I could have taken a shower in it. The floor was palace-marble, the ceiling was higher than a mountain, and voices echoed like in a Ken Maynard canyon.

And there was that great luncheon room where the sandwiches were already made and wrapped in wax paper. I always wanted one of those sandwiches but Mother said I'd spoil my dinner (gruel, served in an old tomato can on my cot next to the furnace).

Mostly I remembered when Dad's train screeched to a stop. I would run up and down the platform, trying to spy him through a window. Which car was he on? Which kid would see him first? There he is! And I got a hug and a quick rub against his whiskers. Mother and my sisters got big kisses on the mouth. Then, on the way through the depot, Dad might muss my hair and ask me something about the Detroit Tigers. It was a real nifty time.

In later years, the old depot was my portal to World War 2 and back. Several furloughs began and ended there; oh joy, oh misery. Her name was Norwegian and the kisses were sweet but she married another. Glenn Miller and Frank Sinatra put it to music.

There are more memories. I also used the depot to go to college, and to go to my first newspaper job. But enough nostalgia. If you're over 40, you get the point. . . .

Some things change and some don't. Dad died but I still have Mother to kid about the gruel. I'm growing old, but there is still a little boy inside of me. He is the part of me that remembers echoes in the depot and scratchy whiskers and Dad asking if Hank Greenberg hit a home run yesterday.

I'm glad that little boy didn't have to welcome his father home in a mobile office trailer, for gosh sakes.

David Aumann completes training course

David Aumann, 6446 Garfield, inspection supervisor, Walbro Corporation, completed the Unit II course Friday in Wittenberg University's Management Development Program.

The week-long programs concentrate in four areas—behavioral studies and motivation, communications and leadership, management functions and methods, and economics and personnel relations.

Developed in 1951, the Wittenberg Management Development Program consists of a series of five-day on-campus courses. During the past 22 years more than 750 different companies representing a wide variety of industrial, commercial, and medical concerns have released over 14,000 supervisors from their normal responsibilities and sponsored their participation in the management course.

The program is designed to provide foremen and supervisors with an opportunity to match their technical proficiency with an equal degree of management competency.

AROUND THE FARM

Traveling around

By Don Kebler

Last week I had many experiences while traveling around the county.

While in the Cass City area, contacts were made for future program developments. With any success at all, the people will have swine, home grounds and soils seminars between now and spring.

Around the Vassar, Richville, and Reese area, some plans were made for a soils seminar and we had a real fine Swine Facility Open House Tour at Delmar Bierleins. Plans have been completed for having the annual Thumb Poultry Short Course again at Unionville with the first of four sessions scheduled for Thursday, Dec. 6.

In Caro an initial contact was made to see if a home grounds seminar could be held for the Caro area, and I looked at a shrubbery problem, also.

During these travels I saw several fields where the operator had broadcast his fall wheat and disced it in. Two of these fields were real noticeable from the road as there were alternating equal width strips of good and poor growing wheat. These fields were in beans this year. After bean harvest the field was topdressed, seeded, and disced.

Investigation brought to light the heavy growth was over the less hard, compacted soil of the bear rows. The disc planting further loosened this bear row area soil and buried the seed to a proper depth. The soil between the bear rows was hard. The disc did not stir or loosen this soil or bury the seed as deep, with the result there was poor germination and growth.

Another interesting item occurred when I visited Duane Houthoofd and observed him ridging his soil prior to next spring's corn planting. Duane subsoiled and worked his ground prior to the ridging operation. I'll be watching the effects of this next year.

Income tax, estate planning and farm management consultations are again on people's minds. In conversation with these people, I tell them the important role the Tellfarm Record Keeping and Business Analysis System plays in answering these and other questions.

I'm encouraging new enrollments now because a prior 1974 enrollment will give the cooperators a complete up-to-date inventory and depreciation schedule for his 1973 year's income tax reporting at no extra enrollment fee.

I see both father and son, and brother to brother partnerships which could put Tellfarm to good use. These partnership operations qualify for a single enrollment and both partners receive their own individual income tax reports. In other words, partnership operations of two or more partners can have Tellfarm for the price of one.

Mrs. Lavara Laming, 51, died Saturday at Hills and Dales General Hospital after being hospitalized one week. She had been in ill health the last seven months.

Mrs. Laming was born in Greenleaf township Jan. 17, 1922, the daughter of the late Charles and Esther Kittendorf Morrish.
