

Possibility of employee walkout at hospital looms larger

The possibility of an employee walkout at Hills and Dales General Hospital began to loom larger this week as negotiations toward a new contract between local 2642 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees and the hospital board bogged down.

Union officials released a statement Monday charging little or no cooperation from the hospital board and accusing the board of deliberately refusing to hire anyone to replace employees who quit.

Local President Joanna Miklovich said Tuesday that, while no strike vote has been taken by the rank and file, a state mediator is scheduled to arrive in Cass City Thursday in an attempt to work out a settlement.

The basic bone of contention surrounds a proposal to settle without retroactive pay. The board has originally offered a settlement which requested a six-month moratorium on pay increases with no provision for raises retroactive to March 31, when the old contract expired.

Presently, the union is continuing to work on a one-month extension of the old contract. One union official said it is unlikely another extension would be approved by the membership.

The rank and file rejected the non-retroactive pay proposal unanimously. At this point, no new negotiating sessions are planned before Thursday.

Ms. Miklovich said Tuesday the board has asked the union to take a 10-15 cents-per-hour cut in wages. This has also been rejected, she said.

Union officials have not made a specific wage demand to the board, but generally say they want parity with other area hospitals. They contend present pay standards at Hills and Dales run about 15 cents per hour under other hospitals.

The union contends their present membership of 64 at the hospital is down by nearly a dozen persons from a year ago. According to the union statement, the administration has refused to hire any new personnel to replace those who quit.

They say in many instances, registered nurses and licensed practical nurses are hired instead. They do not belong to the union.

The last negotiating session was held Friday with no progress reported. Under established procedure, a 30-day notice would be required before a strike could begin.

"It takes two sides to negotiate and we the people of Local 2642 are ready, but the administration (board) at the hospital has refused," the statement said in part.

"We do not want to strike. We have asked for mediation to be brought in and the governors panel if necessary," the statement continued.

"We feel we can resolve our problems before a strike occurs and we definitely want to do this, but in order to do this, we have to start negotiating a new contract."

The union also charged morale at the hospital is low, and said it should not be held responsible for any financial problems at the facility.

One union spokesman who declined to be identified said in all likelihood, most functions of the hospital would probably come to a halt if a strike were called.

Union members work primarily in housekeeping, dietary and office areas.

This is the second contract negotiated with the board. The first was inked last year and expired March 31.

BOARD POSITION

Board President Clinton Hou said Tuesday the primary concern of the board presently is to get the hospital back on an even keel by implementing changes in the facility's operation.

"Some drastic things have to be done to get things going again and we feel that this (no retroactive pay) is the least harsh," House said.

"It's silly to delude oneself that just because it's contract time, we must automatically increase wages," House said. "This is a difficult time and I believe the matter should be resolved through negotiations. I don't think the Cass City Chronicle is the place to conduct those negotiations."

He said to simply put aside an amount of money for six months and then give it out in increased wages cannot realistically help solve the hospital's financial squeeze.

He added that getting more doctors into the area to use the facility is a prime concern, one which can help the financial situation at the hospital.

PICKETERS COULD REPLACE visitors at the front entrance of Hills and Dales General Hospital if present negotiations fail to produce a contract settlement between the hospital board and AFSCME Local 2642.

Detroit man new owner

Jim Gross relinquishes reins at meat market after 32 years

By Jim Ketchum

When you decide to sell a business you've invested 32 years of your life building in a small town, chances are you would like to sell it to someone who could carry on in your tradition.

Jim Gross of Gross Meat Market is sure he's found the man. Gross, who has been at least a part owner of the homey market on Main Street since 1941, has sold the business to Hans Schuchmann, who has been in the meat business since he began as an apprentice in his native Germany at the age of 15.

Schuchmann comes to Cass City from Detroit, where he operated a successful meat business for six and one-half years. After spending 18 years in the Detroit area, Schuchmann decided it was time for a change, and happened to hear that Gross market was for sale.

"When we saw the town, we knew this was for us," Schuchmann, who does not look his 38 years, said Monday as he delved full-swing into the business.

"We like the country very much," he explained, speaking of his wife, Helga, and two daughters, Karen and Monica. "We looked around the town here and really liked what we saw. Besides, this is a better place to raise kids and send them to school than the city."

Schuchmann began his training as an apprentice in Frankfurt.

"It's the only thing I know," he said. "It's what I love to do."

In his years in the business, he has learned nearly every cut of meat that exists and manufactured his own lunch meats in Detroit, along with numerous other cuts and types.

He plans to expand that aspect of his new business in Cass City, once he becomes established.

His store in Detroit was about as large as Gross Meat Market, but both he and Gross agree, the type of clientele is different. In the city, most of the trade was volume.

In Cass City, the major concern is building a steady clientele and getting to know customers. Schuchmann's friendly smile and warm greeting to customers should make this part of the job a cinch.

Schuchmann said he heard that Gross Meat Market was for sale through a friend, came to see it and liked what he saw. He said he plans to keep things pretty much as they have been at the store.

While it was not an easy decision to pull up stakes and move from a large metropolitan area to a rural community, Schuchmann says it was the thing to do and credits Cass City itself for selling them on the idea of moving.

"If it wasn't for the fact that this is such a pretty town, I don't know if we would have made the move," he said.

For his part, Gross formally ends a business he has operated in Cass City situated in the Thumb of Michigan which he loves.

Gross had graduated from the University of Toledo in accounting in 1933, a rough year to begin a career at the depths of the Great Depression. After turning down an accounting job, Gross went to work for Swift & Co. as a salesman for $15 per week.

That was a low wage even for a college graduate in those days, Gross said, but he was lucky to have that.

Around this time, a series of strikes swept Toledo in which the National Guard was called out and several persons lost their lives. Eventually, the violence spread to the meat business, hitting primarily at truckers and sausage makers.

As a salesman, Gross said he and the rest of the sales staff had to roam the streets of Toledo collecting accounts. Gangs would frequently follow, slashing tires.

At one point, Gross remembered, deliveries had to be hidden from strikers. Even a load of paint for the processing plant had to be disguised.

About this time, Gross moved out of town and was given a company car for his sales work and was assigned to the Saginaw area.

"It actually worked out perfectly," Gross said. "A few years before, a group of us took a trip to Harbor Beach and drove around the Thumb. I said back then that this would be the place I'd eventually like to be located. Well, when I found out the entire Thumb was my territory, I was happy as could be."

As time passed, Gross decided to settle in his territory, choosing Cass City. By 1941, he turned in his salesman's briefcase and bought into the meat market on Main Street. He and Fred Maier jointly operated the establishment until Maier's retirement after 51 years in the business.

In his years in the business, Gross has added and expanded. He constructed an addition to the rear of the structure, modernized freezing capacities, added electric cutting tools and added a grocery line.

In his 32 years of business in Cass City, Gross said he never has regretted the move.

"I fell in love with this country the first time I saw it," he said. "I always said this was where I wanted to end up and it all worked out just perfectly." He married the former Kate Wallace, sealing his ties to the area.

His health in recent months has forced the energetic Gross to slow down a little.

"I've only got one pace and that's fast," Gross said.

As far as retirement plans are concerned, Gross said he likes to fish and will probably catch up a little on his favorite pastime. He owns a cottage in Huron county and, presumably, this will take a little more of his time as well.

"I think every leaf in Huron county landed in that yard," he laughed.

Retirement will also mean more time to spend with his family which includes three daughters and six grandchildren, "five girls and a boy," Gross stated proudly.

While Gross may officially be retired, chances are he'll be seen popping in and out of the store.

"I'll really miss seeing the people each day coming in here," he reflected.

Meanwhile, it's a sure bet that Hans Schuchmann will be doing his best to maintain the successful Gross Meat Market that has served Cass Cityans for over a generation.

Only 7 voters present

Elkland votes pay raises for three board members

Saturday was the day for annual township meetings throughout the county. Budgets were approved and issues of importance discussed in each. Here is a rundown of activities:

ELKLAND TOWNSHIP

With only seven township electors present, Supervisor Edwin Karr was voted a 17 per cent pay increase, along with nine per cent pay boosts for Clerk Ferris Ware and Treasurer Arthur Randall.

On the motion of County Commissioner Maynard McConkey, electors approved a yearly salary of $4,500 for Karr and $3,000 salaries for Ware and Randall. Karr's salary represents a $651 pay boost, while Randall and Ware will each receive $251 more.

Electors approved a proposed general fund budget calling for revenues and expenditures of $86,363.93. This compares with 1973-74 revenues of $66,960.99 and expenditures of $72,096.37.

Karr explained a primary reason for last year's imbalance stems from a $21,000 loan from the general fund to the special fire hall fund. He estimated this year the special one-mill tax levy for the hall will carry the hall and no designation from the general fund will be necessary.

Federal revenue sharing for the township is estimated at $13,000, up slightly from last year, while income from state sales, income and intangible taxes should total $24,500, up over $3,000.

State equalized valuation on the township is $17,689,950 for 1974, compared with $15,043,800 for 1973. This should bring in $29,188.25 in property taxes, against $24,822.27 last year.

In the special fire fund, total revenue and expenditures were placed at $14,485 in the new budget, up nearly $2,000 from last year. A large area of revenue increase will be in fire run and stand-by charges. These are estimated at $7,000 and $7,485, respectively, each up over $2,000.

Firemen's pay was increased to $4,400 from $3,946.72.

A sinking fund of $4,000 for new firefighting equipment will also be established. Karr said this should help alleviate last-minute panic when a fire truck must be replaced. Estimated life of such a piece of equipment is 15 years and current replacement prices range around $45,000.

On roads, some $37,000 is planned to be spent on construction and maintenance, financed from a special one-mill levy and the general fund. Plans call for $19,000 to be spent hard-surfacing Dodge Road in cooperation with Elmwood township, while $18,728 will be earmarked for maintenance.

Discussion was also held regarding possible renewal of the one-mill road levy when it expires in two years. Some electors felt Elkland township had not derived much benefit from the tax, saying most of it had been spent in other poorer townships.

Former County Commissioner Ed Golding Sr. said a tour of the county's bridges showed the poorest townships had the worst bridges and said generally the spending had been justified.

John Zinnecker asked the township board what had been done to repair a mausoleum in Elkland cemetery which he felt was ready to collapse.

Treasurer Randall replied that an inspection of the structure by the board showed it to be sound, while it did show need for new plaster outside.

He said attempts will be made to get in touch with the owners with regard to repairing the structure.

EVERGREEN TOWNSHIP

Evergreen township voters also approved salary increases for township officials. Supervisor's salary was increased from $1,000 to $2,000, while treasurer and clerk were raised from $700 to $1,000.

Voters also voted to donate $200 to the Rawson Memorial Library and $200 to the Cass City Recreational Park.

Voters will decide in the August primary whether or not to continue the 3.0 mill assessment for road improvement two more years.

Township electors also turned down a contract from the Sanilac County Road Commission for brining gravel roads in front of homes this summer, at a cost of $1,350 to the township.

This would have been paid either through taxes or by individual home owners.

Anyone interested in brine applications can contact Supervisor Lawrence Hyatt.

The township junk ordinance was discussed and it was agreed that the board enforce the ordinance.

The major concern in the ordinance is old cars. One unlicensed car is permissible. Some 25 persons attended the meeting.

ELMWOOD TOWNSHIP

Just eight persons attended the Elmwood township meeting where a proposed budget of $26,050 was approved.

A proposal to raise a half-mill for roadwork will be placed on the ballot.

Federal revenue sharing will total $7,600, all of which will be placed into road maintenance.

While salaries of most township officers remained the same, trustees' pay was raised from $10 to $15 per meeting.

NOVESTA TOWNSHIP

While no formal budget was established, Novesta township voted to contribute $200 to the Cass City Municipal Park and $252 to Rawson Memorial Library.

Clerk Henry Rock said no new road construction will be undertaken this year. Graveling of roads will be the main concern, he said, adding that no exact amount has been determined for this purpose.

The township will continue to meet the second Saturday in the odd months—January, March, May, etc.

Twelve persons attended the meeting.

GRANT TOWNSHIP

Grant township voted to continue a special 1.3 mill assessment for general purposes and approved placing a 1-mill special assessment for roads on the August primary ballot.

The township also approved the spraying of brush along roadsides. While no cost figures are yet available, according to Supervisor Mrs. Concluded on page 5.

FIRE OF undetermined origin leveled the Sheridan Township Hall four miles west of Uby early Sunday morning. The fire was reportedly out of control by the time a passerby spotted the flames. Uby fire chief Elmer Brahmer said that no alarm for firefighters was sounded in Uby because the building was beyond saving when it was discovered.

"If It Fitz . . ."

Golfing with DiMaggio

BY JIM FITZGERALD

Cass City's own Jim Fitzgerald, who has been a regular on the waters and it may come back spread with caviar. That's how I got this sunburned nose.

Many years ago I removed a thorn from the paw of a high school freshman. "Go forth and write me some school sports news," I told him, and he did. Thus was Chuck Werle launched on a career of journalism that took him from the Lapeer County weekly to the Milwaukee Journal.

And today he has realized the dream of every newspaper reporter. He is out of the newspaper business and is a public relations executive in Miami, Florida. He has a home with a pool and his name is engraved on hundreds of memo pads.

"C'mon down," he phoned the other week. "You can play in our Tony Lema Memorial celebrity-pro golf tournament on Marco Island. Enjoy a week of great fun and marvelous weather. You and your wife can stay in the most luxurious hotel you've ever seen. There'll be a big dinner-dance with Harry James playing."

Which sounded pretty good. And then he added the magic words: "Be our guest." My wife and I were on the next plane south, already telling strangers about the virtues of Dellona Corp. owner of Marco Island and Werle's employer.

We had to switch planes at the Miami airport and that's when I first began to fear my visit would make Chuck wish he'd taken his thorn to Blue Cross. We missed our flight to Marco Island. There was another flight a half hour later and we missed that one, too. The reason was a breakdown in the airport's electronic communication system. The Marco Airlines clerk was paging me loudly throughout the airport but I couldn't hear him. There was a busted loudspeaker in the bar into which my wife had dragged me.

Chuck had asked Bill Gentry, head of Marco Island public relations, to meet our plane. Fortunately, Bill used to work for the old Detroit Times so he naturally has a keen understanding of the pitfalls through which an intrepid newsman must often splash while pursuing an assignment. "Don't worry," he phoned Chuck in Miami. "He's a newspaperman and it's a freeloader. He'll be there by cocktail hour." I was.

The next day, bright and early at 3 p.m., I went out to practice for the big golf journey which was just 48 hours away. My first drive was so powerful it went over a fence surrounding a power plant. The gate was locked. My 2nd drive petered off into a lake where 2 haughty ducks didn't even flinch.

I switched to a pitch and putt course to practice the finer points of my game (and to protect my dwindling supply of golf balls). I blasted out of one sandtrap and into another - the Gulf of Mexico beach. While I was battling my way back on the course, chipping over sunbathers, 18 golfers played through. My wife fell down laughing when she noticed one of the athletes leaving me behind was an old man on crutches. "Yes, but he has his nurse caddy for him," I explained.

My dismay became complete when I learned people would be paying $7 a head to watch the tournament. And I would be playing with such touring professionals as Jerry Heard, George Archer and Bobby Nichols. And such celebrities as Joe DiMaggio, Joe Garagiola, Garo Yepremian and Don Shula. And each player would be introduced on the first tee, over a microphone, while hundreds watched. And I would have to get up at 6 a.m. the morning after Harry James.

I did the only honorable thing. I inserted a thorn in my paw and limped to Werle. "Get me out of this tournament," I said, "and I promise to tell the world to get marooned on Marco Island, the finest sun-fun community on earth."

He did and I am: Go to Marco. But if you play golf, be careful you're not trampled by that old man on crutches.

Owendale youth found safe after all-night search

A 10-year-old boy from Owendale was none the worse for wear after spending

Wednesday night, March 27, huddled in a wet sleeping bag behind the Trash and Treasures

Antique Shop at the intersection of Elkton and Sebawaing Roads.

Harold Donald "Skippy" Harris was found by a passing motorist after leaving the home of his uncle following a family disagreement Wednesday night. Huron County Sheriff's deputies, along with State Police from the Bad Axe post had organized a search party and worked through the night attempting to locate him.

The youngster told searchers he was headed on foot to Bad Axe, where his father, Harold Harris, lives and works.

The boy left the home of his uncle, William Harris, in Owendale around 9:00 p.m. Wednesday following a scolding the man had given his nephew concerning his school work. Officers said the boy told them he climbed out a bedroom window and headed, on foot, east along Sebawaing Road.

He got as far as the antique shop where he spent the night in the sleeping bag he took with him when he left. He was wearing only a sweater, trousers and street shoes at the time.

Deputies were called into the case at 1:00 a.m., after a search by family members failed to locate the boy. By 4:00 a.m., Owendale firemen, state police and a tracking dog from Bay City were on the scene, along with family members.

Around 8:00 a.m., a passing motorist spotted the youth standing in front of the antique shop. The driver, Roger Keillor of Bad Axe, had heard a radio news broadcast giving a description of the boy and stopped to get a closer look.

After determining the identity of the boy, Keillor told him to get in the car and drove east on Sebawaing Road where he had earlier seen searchers. There he was reunited with his father.

Officers said the boy's clothing was soaked from snow in which he had placed the sleeping bag. A subsequent examination showed no ill effects due to exposure. The youth stays with his aunt and uncle in Owendale, where he attends school.

Varsity basketball players headed for spring sports may find the conditioning grind a little rougher this year. That's because the team's success on the court was followed by free meals on the banquet circuit.

In rapid succession the players gorged at Walli's Supper Club, Beagio's Pizza and the White Creek Club.

The players were the guests of the parents at Walli's and of the owners at Beagio's. At White Creek, Lorn Hillaker was the sponsor and the cook.

Over the years Cass City's Little League program has been outstandingly successful due in part to great adult participation.

But this could be coming to an end. Last week the organizational meeting was held and adults from just three teams showed up.

League officials are hoping it's a temporary lapse. To find out they have carded another meeting, Tuesday, April 9, at 7 p.m. at Walbro Corporation.

They urge all interested adults to attend to get the program moving again in 1974.

Percy Nugent, Edison's public relations man in the area, was doing his bit for the company at Cass City Rotary Tuesday.

He told what the company is doing and the reason higher rates are on the way.

An interesting statistic: by 1982, says Percy, a third of the electric power generated will come from atomic power.

FROM THE

Editor's Corner

Tuesday was Academy Award night. As I write this no one knows who the winners are.

For a change a show that I liked has been nominated. "Sling" is up for a host of awards.

Chances are it won't win. Shows I like seldom are award winners.

"The Godfather" and Marlon Brando last year were exceptions.

The reason that flicks that I enjoy almost never make the charmed circle is that my tastes are strictly plebeian. About as common as hot dogs and root beer or picnic dinners in the park.

I never did go for the shows that turn the critics on. "Lawrence of Arabia" was a big award winner and I couldn't make myself stay through the entire performance. "Tom Jones", that English history flick, was another.

Bread and butter shows for me are the John Wayne epics. . . when he plays the part of John Wayne, no matter what he's called in the movie itself.

Come to think of it. . . a perfect example of a show gone wrong for me was Wayne in "True Grit". The critics say he got fancy in this one and it was really a satire on the Western show.

Well. . . I didn't dig "True Grit" at all and naturally it was more highly praised than most of the countless westerns Wayne had delivered before.

I guess what I'm saying is deliver me from shows with a message. It conjures a famous line by Jo Don Looney, former Detroit Lions halfback, when the coach asked him to take a play into the game.

Coach, said Looney, if you want to send a message call Western Union. Shows with a message and shows with the big build up rank about the same with me. All of the flicks starring Richard Burton and Elizabeth Taylor come immediately to mind.

None of them was worth the time it took to see them for me. At least I don't think they were. After the first couple, I stopped seeing this celebrated couple.

I've got a sneaking suspicion that the publicity mills are grinding away to sell another turkey. This one is "The Great Gatsby".

I've got no reason for thinking this. . . just that the advance segments that have been on TV didn't turn me on at all.

Still, I'll probably be counted among the throngs that are sure to fight their way into the nation's theaters to see "Gatsby".

Why? Well for one thing David Merrick is the producer and his shows are usually among the best.

More important is that Robert Redford is one of the stars.

His four-star performances in "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid" and in "Sling" make it mandatory to see if it's Redford or the script that made the shows great.

Or whether (perish the thought, girls) it was co-star Paul Newman who was responsible for the previous box office hits.

KETCHUM'S KNAPSACK

My brush with death

By Jim Ketchum

I nearly died the other morning. My wife almost collected my life insurance and had her debts paid without cost. It came at the culmination of a particularly taxing week and nearly broke my spirit then and there.

It all began quite innocently when the alarm went off, rousing me from dreams of swaying palm trees in the land where it never snows and where the coldest thing is the ice in your lemonade.

Faced with the reality of another bleak Michigan day where we have 11 months of winter and one month of tough sledding, I wearily dragged myself from under my energy-consuming electric blanket to begin another day of jousting with the world.

My blood began flowing at its normal starting time, during my shave. I use an electric razor because it lessens the chance of slashing my jugular vein and also provides stimulation to unclog the cholesterol and start the red corpuscles chasing after the white ones.

Anyhow, with this, getting dressed and a half-hour of an all-too-cheerful J.P. McCarthy under my belt, I emerged for breakfast. My normal helping of bran flakes, toast, and orange juice which washes down my vitamin-C tablets were there, waiting for me as usual. Or so I thought.

Still not fully cognizant of the world around me, I ritualistically devoured the meal, with my pretty wife sitting across from me, smiling as I remembered it now, somewhat sinisterly.

Saving the orange juice until last, I proceeded to pick up the glass and take a healthy slug. That's when disaster struck.

Never have I tasted anything more vile or bitter in my life.

Coming up coughing and spitting, I asked what had happened. Why had she put drain cleaner in my orange juice?

"Oh, silly," she rejoined. "That's just a little grapefruit juice."

Grapefruit juice? No way could that have been grapefruit juice. It had to be industrial strength Drano at the very least. Why had she done this thing to me that was now eating holes through my tongue?

"I ran out of orange juice before the glass was full, so I filled it with grapefruit juice," she dutifully explained. "I thought you'd like it."

Still coughing and spitting, she got the idea that I didn't.

Her voice took on a somewhat sharper tone after I accused her, without saying it, of trying to do me in. I'd have said more but I knew I'd reached the limit.

You can tell that with wives. There's something in the atmosphere that says, one more step, buster, and you'll regret it the rest of your miserable life.

So I resumed clearing myself of the drain cleaner and patching up my tongue. In the meantime, she had apparently taken pity on me and made a new batch of untainted orange juice. She did get a little upset, though, when I chemically analyzed the vapor from this before drinking it.

"Just a little hint I picked up in Chemistry class, dear," I explained. She didn't seem impressed.

My tongue is pretty well healed now and the taste sensation is slowly starting to return. In another week or two I might even be up to trying a bowl of chili again, provided that it isn't made with the sawdust burger that we have to eat in place of meat.

But not right away. Sometimes I wake up with nightmares, dreaming I'm drowning in a vat of grapefruit juice or drain cleaner.

My wife just lies there and says nothing.

Problems of troubled employee studied

The problems of the troubled employee came under scrutiny recently at a series of workshops sponsored by the Cooperative Extension Service and attended by a number of Thumb area employers.

The briefings provided an opportunity for employers to become familiar with various services available in dealing with the troubled employee.

According to Lynn R. Harvey, Extension Manpower Agent for the Thumb area, employers are beginning to take a second look at dealing with problem and troubled employees. The challenge has become to identify the problems of alcoholism, drug abuse and personal problems early enough to help the employee and keep him on the job.

Firing problem employees is not the only solution because firms have an investment in each employee. Turnover, for example, will cost the employer an average of four to six weeks of a man's pay, so it may be more costly to fire the problem employee.

than to help him overcome his problem.

According to Harvey, problem employees in comparison to average employees miss at least twice as much work time, have a higher rate of job changes, a higher rate of job accidents, are involved in substantially more grievances and disciplinary actions, and receive at least twice the amount in sickness and accident benefits as other employees.

The employer is caught in the middle between turnover costs and in-plant costs involving problem employees.

Harvey said about one out of every nine or 10 employees in Thumb industry could be classified as a troubled employee and in the vast majority of these cases, alcoholism is the major problem.

He said placing a dollar figure on what troubled employees cost Thumb industry is impossible without an audit, but the cost is considerable.

A total of 49 employers from the three-county area attended the briefings which were aimed at a select group of employers. Invitations were sent to approximately 20 firms in each of the three counties.

Thus far, feedback from employers seems positive, Harvey said.

"At first, they seem to shy away," Harvey said. "They'll say we don't have any drunks working for us because we fired them all. Then as we explain what we're trying to do, they start to open up."

He said about 10 firms are presently working with the extension service in the area of troubled employees and act as a core group to which others may be added in the future.

One of the most important areas in working with the troubled employee problem is at the foreman level, Harvey said. This is probably the weakest link in the chain of identifying and helping a problem employee.

He said a development program designed to train foremen to recognize problems before they become serious is under way by the extension service.

"When we work with each industry, we want to design a program of dealing with the troubled employee specifically to the firm involved," Harvey said. "We incorporate management and unions into it and seek their understanding in such areas as work relief so that an employee can get time off to see a doctor, for instance."

Harvey added that a major breakthrough has finally come with the acceptance of alcoholism as a disease. A bill recently passed in the Michigan Legislature provides that alcoholism treatment can be covered by insurance.

Harvey said services are available in each county to assist employers in dealing with problem employees. They are the Thumb Catholic Family Service in Bad Axe, alcoholism programs related to the public health departments in Huron, Sanilac and Tuscola counties and the Community Mental Health Services in each of the three counties.

Employers desiring further assistance for their firm or agency should contact the Alcoholism Information Center in Caro at 673-7330 or the Community Mental Health Services at 673-6191.

Report series of minor accidents

Several area traffic accidents were reported to police and sheriff's deputies last week, none serious.

Two minor mishaps were reported Wednesday. At 1:35 p.m., cars driven by John Arthur McKenzie, 67, of Weidman, Mich., and Barbara Marie Wood, 41, of 3675 E. Caro Rd. collided near the intersection of Main and Downing Streets.

Cass City Police said the Wood vehicle had stopped to let a funeral procession leave Little's Funeral Home when the McKenzie auto pulled out of a parking stall headed east, striking the left front fender of the Wood auto.

No ticket was issued and neither driver was injured.

At 3:00 p.m., cars driven by James A. Winslow, 34, of Grand Blanc and Viola Delma Murchinson, 69, of 4924 State St., Gagetown, collided on Bay City-Forestville Road at Vassar Road.

Tuscola County Sheriff's deputies said Winslow was westbound on Bay City-Forestville Road when the Murchinson vehicle pulled in front of him. He told deputies he slowed down and blew his horn, but could not avoid the accident.

Ms. Murchinson told deputies she was waiting for a truck to pass and did not see the Winslow auto. Neither driver was seriously injured. No ticket was issued.

Two area accidents were reported Thursday. At 7:00 a.m., a car driven by Joanne Burda, 22, of Rossman Road, Caro, struck and killed a deer as she drove north on Cemetery Road, about a quarter-mile south of Severance Road.

Sheriff's deputies said the deer ran from the west side of the road into the side of the car. Ms. Burda was not injured.

At 8:30 p.m., a car driven by Norbert Lawrence Kapala, 41, of Mushroom Road, Deford, struck and killed a deer as he traveled west on Mushroom Road a quarter-mile west of Englehart Road.

State Police from the Caro post who investigated said Kapala swerved to avoid hitting the animal, but was unsuccessful.

The driver was not injured. Sunday, a car driven by Gregory Allan Hanselman, 21, of 153 Second St., Caro, collided with a school bus parked on Bruce Street near Elk Street in Deford.

Sheriff's deputies reported that the driver of the bus, Edna Mitchell of Cumber Road, Uby, had parked the bus on the north side of Bruce Street and had turned on the emergency flashers.

Hanselman told deputies he fell asleep at the wheel and struck the rear of the bus at about 15 miles per hour. No skid marks were found at the scene.

No ticket was issued and Hanselman was not seriously injured. The mishap took place at 5:45 p.m.

Letter to Editor

Drain problems spelled out

Cass City Chronicle
Cass City, Michigan 48726

Attn: Editor

When one submits to a telephone interview, one must trust that the reporting will be accurate and complete enough so as not to distort the facts. I tried to be precise and in fact, read to you from the "notice of letting" on the Utter Drain, Fairgrove Township.

Let's go over it again. I told you:

1. That Mr. Easlick's operator did a beautiful job on the digging of the ditch itself.

2. That the Notice of Letting reads: "all brush, trees or debris is to be kept separate from the dirt..." All of the parties involved understood and agreed at the Letting that the brush and dirt were to be kept separate. I did not tell you the contractor was to dispose of the brush, that it was to be burned at the time of the clean-out.

3. That Mr. Lounsbury admitted to me that he had made an error when he drew up Mr. Easlick's contract.

4. That this separation of brush and dirt was done until the operator reached exactly our property line. That we went immediately to Mr. Lounsbury and informed him of the situation and he promised to contact Mr. Easlick which he claims he did and Mr. Easlick was to so inform his operator.

And to clear up another point, we did not go "directly" to the County Board of Commissioners with our complaint. After three months of going repeatedly to Mr. Lounsbury, we went to our attorney and then, went to the County Board of Commissioners merely as a courtesy to inform them of the pending action, rather than for them to learn of it from the newspaper.

And when a man sits in his office and says to you "I just don't care anymore. I just can't handle it (the Drain Commissioners job) I just can't manage..." and then refuses the suggestion that he resign, then we, the taxpayers, should continue to pay this man $24,000 over the next two years?? We think not!

Very truly yours,
Leo and Peggy Marker

BE THANKFUL

Learn not to expect too many windfalls to come your way in life—an even break is about all most of us can expect.

ONE FRIDAY

When we become mixed in the routine of life, one day is like any other. This was just another working-day for most of the people in Jerusalem.

Three men died on Calvary Hill. One of them was the Galilean! Business as usual in Jerusalem. Unless we understand the whole significance of what is happening we pay little attention . . .

Do you understand what happened that Friday? Do you realize WHO hung on that central Cross? Do you know WHY He died? And FOR WHOM?

There is nothing more necessary in our lives than the deep, personal knowledge of what happened that Friday . . . and the Sunday following. Come to Church!

AGENT'S CORNER

Time to check pressure canner

Ann Ross - Extension Agent

This late winter, home-makers have contacted the Cooperative Extension Service to get the pressure gauge checked. The Cooperative Extension Service does not offer this service. We recommend that the client return their pressure gauge to the manufacturer for testing or replacement.

This does not involve returning the entire cover, this means only returning the pressure gauge. If you have a problem locating the address for your pressure canner and it is a major manufacturer, contact the Extension Office to get the address.

When canning all common vegetables except tomatoes, use a pressure canner! To process these low-acid foods safely in a reasonable length of time takes a temperature higher than that of boiling water. The reason is, organisms that cause food spoilage are always present in the air, water and soil. Enzymes that may cause undesirable changes in flavor, color, and texture are present in raw vegetables.

Now is the time to buy a pressure canner or check the safety of the present pressure canner. For safe operation of your canner, clean petcock and safety valve openings by drawing a string or narrow strip of cloth through. To check the accuracy of a pressure gauge, look at the pointer. If the pointer is loose and moves back and forth when the cover is tipped, it should be replaced. If the pointer falls away from the stop pin two or more pounds, or if it does not return within one pound of the stop pin, it should be replaced.

BETTER HEALTH

Raising children takes work

BY DR. WALTER C. ALVAREZ and DR. WILLIAM J. WELCH

Recently a Harvard University group, directed by behavioral psychologist Burton L. White, Ph.D., made a study of how to raise children, and the results were reported in the journal "Today's Health," published by the American Medical Association.

The writers say that when the child wants the mother's attention, she should respond promptly and favorably as often as possible, and should make some effort to understand what the child is trying to do. She must not give in to unreasonable requests - but should set limits for him.

As the investigators point out, there are some mothers who succeed better than others at raising happy, healthy children. For example, if two mothers are compared, it is possible to see that there are certain ways to behave with a child that will be better than others.

One mother has a well-stocked nursery with educational toys, a clean and orderly home, and an eight-month old boy in a playpen, with the television set turned on nearby. The mother, a college graduate, takes half an hour each day to teach the child the alphabet, numbers, and objects.

Another mother, Jennifer, is a high school graduate, with a home and three children to take care of; she is busy all day, and her little boy is allowed to go freely around the house, following his mother while she works. She occasionally stops and pays attention to the child; she doesn't mind the interruptions and she enjoys him.

According to the findings of the Harvard study, Jennifer's child is more likely to develop later into a competent, happy adult. The researchers are trying to find out how mothers can be the best "primary caretakers" possible, since she is the "primary learning source" for a child.

Dr. White says that during the child's early development, which he believes is critical, the mother "usually is the single most important environmental factor influencing the child's developing competence. The child isn't only dependent on her for love and protection, but is completely fascinated by what she says and does - at least at first. She is responsible for the image that the child establishes of himself and how he will relate with others."

Jennifer's method of allowing her child the freedom of being curious and adventurous in his home, and of asking his mother for help in solving problems can be helpful to the child in his growing and learning processes. It is much better than keeping the child penned up in a playpen.

In the "Guidelines for Successful Child Rearing" that the Harvard Study Group has drawn up as a result of their nine years of study, they say the mother should be enthusiastic and encouraging with the child whenever possible, and should talk to him frequently; she should use words that he can understand and she should keep adding new words.

If the child shows the mother a ball, she can say, "Throw the ball." The child does not need to be able to use words to understand them, and Dr. White says that by the age of three, the child should have acquired the ability to understand most of the language he will use in ordinary conversation throughout his life.

The sensible mother will remove from the child's reach valuable objects he can harm or which can harm him, and leave instead suitable playthings and objects which are unbreakable and cannot hurt him.

There are also some things to be avoided. Don't cage the child or confine him for any long period. Especially during his second year of life, don't let the child concentrate too much energy and attention on mother. Don't ignore your child's attention-getting devices to the point where he has to throw a tantrum in order to gain your interest.

Don't worry that your baby won't love you if you say "no" sometimes. Don't try to win all the arguments with the child. Don't try to prevent him from "cluttering" the house.

I often say to mothers who, in my office, try to keep a child from being curious about things and wanting to investigate them, "Just be grateful that he is interested in things around him. That is a sign of intelligence and curiosity."

Don't be overprotective, and don't overpower him. Let him do what he wants to do, as long as it is safe. Finally, don't spoil your child - he might think that the whole world is for him.

Menopause need not be a frightening or difficult time. Dr. Alvarez's booklet, "Menopause," explains myths and facts in an easily-understood way. For your copy, send 25 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Dr. Walter C. Alvarez, Box 957, Dept. CCC, Des Moines, Iowa 50304.

Wheat forecast good

By Don Kebler

I think we can all agree that as a whole this year's growing wheat looks the best it has for many years.

Prior to this, we had several years when our county's wheat crops really were poor in comparison. In fact, many were beginning to doubt that our existing varieties were still genetically the same as when first grown in the county.

New varieties were tried by both Michigan State University researchers and by the wheat growers themselves while others showed interest in growing spring wheat.

Even though our wheat is looking exceedingly good, Michigan State University wheat breeders will be establishing a wheat variety plot in the Thumb. This plot will be located in Tuscola county this spring and 18 varieties of red spring wheat will be grown for comparison studies.

Beside this wheat research program, our wheat producers will have seed available for at least two new white winter wheat varieties adapted to this area within the next one or two years.

It appears that considerable amount of interest will be shown for the Home Garden and Lawn Seminars coming in early April. This Thursday, April 4, the public Home Garden Seminar will be held at the Caro High School Multipurpose Room. Beginning and expert vegetable gardeners will find helpful information presented by Michigan State University Horticulture specialist, Robert Harner. This evening program is from 7:30 to 9:30. April 11, the rescheduled Lawn Seminar will be held at the Cass City High School from 7:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. Lawn enthusiasts wanting attractive lawns will be attending this county wide seminar.

If one can be absolutely sure of what they read and hear over the radio, some predictors now say that chemical fertilizer production this spring will be greater than originally believed. However, a transportation and local supply problem could exist. Regardless of this new prediction, I still want to emphasize more-than-ever the necessity of having an up-to-date soil test. If some of the forecasters are correct, the profit margin spread we saw in 1973 may well be non-existent in 1974. If this be so, the farmer will need to spread his cost dollars as thin as possible and still receive his greatest returns.

Wise fertilizer use, based on an accurate and recent soil test is just one way to stretch that cost dollar. But it's a good way, and a place to try! After all, good crop production

Baseball season is almost upon us again and with it, speculation on where the Detroit Tigers will finish in the race for the American League championship.

Many observers think the Tigers are an old team and probably won't be a contender.

However Charles Beckett of 6568 Pine St., thinks the Tigers have what it takes to win in 1974. He doesn't agree that age will hurt the club.

"It's players in that age bracket that win ball games," he said, commenting that experience is necessary on any club. "I think they will finish high in the standings and might win."

Beckett says new Tiger Manager Ralph Houk will give the club a lift and will probably institute the Machinery to set in motion a program which could eventually see Cass City as a focal point in the continuing war on alcoholism and substance abuse was discussed at a meeting of Thumb county commissioners at Wildwood Farms Thursday.

Commissioners from Huron, Tuscola, Sanilac, Lapeer and Bay counties, along with health and substance abuse officials, met to define alternatives for naming a coordinating agency to administer programs and obtain state funds under the 1972 State Substance Control Act.

This was the second in a series of meetings which will eventually recommend to the various boards of commissioners what action to take.

Under the law, each county must designate a coordinating agency in order to obtain funding for alcoholism and substance abuse programs from the state. The law also allows for rural counties to band together and name one agency to cover an entire region.

By going together, these five counties could save considerable administrative costs. By going it alone, Tuscola, for example, would have to spend a minimum of $25,000 just to fund a coordinating agency, according to Spike Johnson, director of the Tuscola County Alcoholism Information Agency.

Under a four or five-county region, presumably the state would take over total administrative funding for such an agency.

Commissioners were also interested in what kinds of actual services would develop through such a coordinating agency that would help the hard-core alcoholic and drug user in the Thumb.

If Bay county, which operates an outpatient clinic for substance abuse problems, were a part of the region, satellite clinics could conceivably be established in the Thumb. Cass City seems to be a prime geographic area for such a clinic, according to Johnson.

Its central location in the three-county area, along with existing medical facilities which could be expanded, place it as a leading candidate for such a center, once a definite multi-county region is established and an agency designated to coordinate substance abuse programs.

Bad Axe was also mentioned as another location for a satellite clinic.

Even without Bay county's participation, possibilities remain favorable for a detoxification center of some sort in Cass City.

The problem of alcoholism is not new to the Thumb. In Tuscola county alone, over 3,000 persons are estimated to be suffering from alcoholism. The increasing problem of drug abuse has added impetus to set up some kind of region under the state act.

As a combine, counties would still retain autonomy in the program and would have to approve programs through representatives in the coordinating agency.

Basically, five agencies surfaced as possible coordinators that meet requirements of the law—the Thumb District Health Department, the Bay County Health Department, the 14-county Human Development Commission, a special board made up of representatives named by county commissioners or commissioners themselves acting as a separate agency.

The group plans to take these options back to their county commissions for discussion and or approval. Plans call for a decision to be finalized by May, it is hoped.

Some commissioners at the meeting voiced concern about Thumb counties joining Bay county in such a regional program, fearing rural interests might be sacrificed. Huron County Commissioner Edmund Good Sr. asked whether the Thumb region and Bay county had that much in common.

Rex Gibson of the Bay County Health Department replied that basically, Bay is a rural county that has one large city of 50,000. He said he sees no conflict of interests, should the five counties combine to designate such an agency.

Tuscola county is a key to the entire regionalization concept. Under the law, a region can only be established among contiguous counties. Should Tuscola not go along with the rest, the program, essentially, would be dead.

Among the Tuscola representatives at the meeting, most came away with uncertainty. Commissioner Kenneth Kennedy said a coordinating agency composed of commission members or their representatives would not work because of the complexities involved in setting up staffs, hiring bookkeepers and establishing a financial base.

Other commissioners favored shutting Bay county out of the region or going with Huron, Tuscola and Sanilac as a region.

Commissioner Maynard McConkey said after the meeting he favored a four-county region, excluding Bay. He said the problems of the Thumb are basically different from those of Bay City, which he added, would use as much of available services alone as would the entire Thumb.

He said he would like to see Lapeer county involved in a region, citing the success of the Thumb District Health Department, composed of Tuscola and Lapeer counties.

"The weakness of the present setup as I see it is that we don't have enough background or guidance from the state on setting up a coordinating agency," McConkey said. "And, let's face it. As long as the state has the money, they're going to call the shots."

Farm outlook good despite shortages

Tuscola county farmers can look forward to a good agricultural year, provided the fertilizer shortage is not too severe and the month of May brings good weather.

That's the opinion of Tuscola County Extension Director William Bortel who said farmers can look forward to another profitable year, barring anything unforeseen in the market.

Bortel said between 75,000 and 80,000 additional acres of farmland in the county are expected to be placed into production if enough fertilizer can be had. He said this, coupled with favorable weather next month, can make 1974 another banner year agriculturally.

"We estimate that we should see a 10-12 per cent increase in bean acreage," Bortel estimated, "and if fertilizer is available, it could be as high as 20 per cent."

The rise in bean production is tied closely to fertilizer availability, Bortel commented. Should an extremely tight situation develop, he said, farmers in Tuscola county will tend to plant less corn and more beans, since the latter crop takes less fertilizer per acre than corn.

Another crop which shows a sign of decreased production in the county is sugar beets. On a statewide basis, estimates call for a drop of five per cent in beet production compared with 1973.

Bortel commented that many farmers feel they can make more money in cash crops other than beets, given the market as a whole. Another factor involved could also be the uncertainty of the market next fall from a fuel standpoint.

Last autumn, many beet farmers feared a lack of fuel might make it impossible to take their crop, one of the richest in recent years, to market.

Bortel commented that a larger area of concern is fertilizer, adding that for the most part, farmers are able to purchase all the fuel they need.

"The shortage of fertilizer is the real problem and transportation is the real crux of the situation," he said. "Presently, there are no guarantees at all regarding availability of fertilizer. Orders have been placed, but the lack of transportation is making the whole situation questionable."

PRICES

Bortel said he sees prices leveling off somewhat in 1974, following wild upward swings last year. He added, however, that weather conditions worldwide could change this picture completely.

With no surpluses to carry over to this year, Bortel said, prices could take off again, especially if fertilizer is not available and crops simply aren't grown.

Adding to the problem, he said, is the depressed beef market which is selling some three to four dollars per hundredweight lower today than a year ago.

In general, however, prices look favorable for the farmer.

"Last year was the first time that agriculture in general had a profitable year," Bortel said. "And whenever agriculture has a good year, business in general in a county such as Tuscola has a good year."

"You can figure that the agriculture dollar moves seven times before it goes into the bank. When farmers have a good year, they buy. Look at the farm machinery situation or even baler twine. Most of this year's supplies have already been bought."

Bortel said the buying public does not understand the basic situation involved in agricultural prices and so complains that the farmer is getting rich.

"The farmer is at the mercy of the market," he said. "For years and years, he has had to settle for whatever he could get. Now prices have climbed to a point where farmers can show a profit and can expand."

He said the farmer of today is showing a new militancy he did not show 15 or 20 years ago, due to the specialization of today's agriculture. Years ago, a farmer could lose heavily in one area in hopes of making it up somewhere else.

"Today, that isn't possible," he explained. "A beef cattle farmer either has a whole barnful of beef or he doesn't have any. When this happens, he has to get a fair price or he will simply close the doors and feed them out."

On the average, he said, food has cost less each year until last year when it took its first large jump. He added that if the increase had been spread over a long period of time, chances are it would not have been noticed.

"Because it was a one-shot deal, you had women picketing food stores and protests against buying meat," he said. "Added to that, you had government controls in the beef industry which ended up doing just the opposite of what they were designed to do. The price of beef to the farmer dropped while it remained high in the stores."

He said it generally takes about six months for price reductions to be seen in retail outlets, while it takes about two weeks for price increases to the farmer to be passed onto the customer.

In the worldwide market, Bortel sees a good year ahead, citing that European nations and Japan now have more disposable income than ever before and want to buy more and better food.

"In this instance, agriculture provides this country with the only product that will help the balance of trade situation," he said. "Other nations want the food we grow and are willing to pay for it. They can provide watches and cameras and electronic equipment for a low price because labor is cheap."

"But we still provide the food they want in a nation where only five per cent of the population is engaged in farming."

More Cass City grads choose careers over college

By Jim Ketchum

Graduating seniors from Cass City High School are apparently going to either two-year or four-year colleges in greater numbers than ever before. Yet the percentage of students from the graduating class who decide to enter the job market, go into the military or get married and raise a family is still better than half and increasing.

These are the conclusions drawn from studying statistics involving recent graduating classes from the high school, according to Curtis Cleland, guidance counselor. "While more kids are looking toward continuing their education beyond high school, their percentage is dropping," Cleland said. "At one time a few years ago, we had something like 60 per cent of our graduating seniors go on to either a two-year or four-year college. Now that figure is somewhere in the neighborhood of 42 per cent."

Increasing class size helps explain why, in spite of larger numbers of students continuing their education, a smaller percentage of the total goes on.

In 1971, out of a total of 116 graduating seniors, 30 went on to four-year colleges, 28 enrolled in two-year schools and 58 went to work.

In 1972, out of 123 graduating seniors, 29 chose four-year colleges, 10 went to two-year colleges and 84 went to work.

Last year, of 147 graduates, 31 went to four-year colleges, 19 went to two-year colleges and 97 went to work.

Cleland said he expects these trends to continue this year. National trends indicate college diplomas no longer insure a good job at high pay as they once did.

Cleland said Michigan State University sent out word to all high school counselors to steer students away from conservation work. Last year, the State of Michigan had 38 openings in the field of conservation and 3,000 applicants.

Other occupations offer similarly stiff competition, he explained. The only two which do not are special education teachers and industrial arts instructors.

Employment is one reason for the growing popularity of two-year colleges, Cleland explained.

"Many students can go into areas such as drafting, mechanics, medical technology or the like after two years and make just as much as a college graduate can—sometimes more," Cleland said.

He said an advantage of the two-year program is its length of time, its relatively small expense and its emphasis on applied training. While these schools are in their heyday presently, Cleland said he sees a time in the future when a greater demand will once more be placed on a degree person.

"Part of this boom toward two-year programs involves a backlash from parents mostly against the four-year universities," Cleland said.

The trend in vocational training has also extended to high schools such as Cass City. A total of some 120 students out of nearly 600 enrolled are involved in some aspect of vocational training.

Cleland estimates that half of the seniors who will go on to college are participating in the program at some level. But the major thrust of the program is toward the student who plans to enter the job market immediately after graduation.

Cleland said the school is pleased with the success of the co-op program especially. Of 50 students involved in the program, 19 stayed on at their job permanently.

While largely a success, there have been occasional problems. One is in the area of attendance.

"We have to engender in these kids the idea that they have to be there on time," he said. "This is partly why we want to get the kids working while they're still in school so we can help get some of the problems ironed out before they get fired."

Cleland said he sees the role of the high school as a vocational education center growing presently, although he added that this probably will not be a permanent thing as the economy continues to change.

Just what do two "typical" students plan to do with their futures after graduating in June. We talked with Cindy Doerr and Carl Russell recently. Here are their thoughts:

CINDY DOERR

Cindy Doerr is a 17-year-old with an ambition—to be a doctor.

"I at least want to try for it," she explained enthusiastically. "It's something I've dreamed about all my life. And, even if I don't make it, I'll know that I've at least tried."

Cindy's motivation is not unlike many of her friends who plan to continue their education after graduation from Cass City High School. She wants a career and doesn't plan to let anything stand in her way.

Her sites are set on Michigan State University and its emerging medical school. She hopes that the facility will be complete by the time her undergraduate work is done so that she will be able to continue her studies at East Lansing.

"I've never really disliked school," she said as she sat in the guidance counselor's office. "I'll admit my first two years weren't so hot in high school—until I settled down and decided to get to work."

Presently, she carries a 3.147 grade point average and has carried close to a 3.5 during her junior and senior years. "I just goofed around in my freshman and sophomore years," she confessed.

Over the years, however, the goal of becoming a doctor has not diminished.

"I remember when I was little and I'd see a doctor on those soap operas, I'd think, gee, I'd like to do that," she recalled. "Everytime I went to the doctor's office, I'd look at all the instruments and equipment in the room. I was really fascinated with it. I don't know. It's just something I want to do very much."

After settling down in high school, Cindy began gearing herself for the eventual trek to MSU. She concentrated on math and science courses, constantly striving to do better. She recently received an A-minus in physics, a particularly difficult course.

Going to college has never really been a question for her, she said. Her drive to become a doctor included it as a requirement and the dream has never wavered.

"I've been at Michigan State visiting a number of times and I've been there in the summer," she said. "I really love it there. I think it's a warm friendly place and I'm anxious to go."

She had been accepted by MSU and Central Michigan University, but chose State primarily because of its developing medical school and also because of her past association with the school. Her father, Donald, graduated from the university before beginning his farming career, and he highly recommended the school.

She admitted it was a hard decision in deciding which school to attend. Many of her friends have enrolled in Central, but she said reports of excessive "partying", along with the lack of a medical school, helped sway her decision in favor of MSU.

"I like to have a good time," she said. "But I think there's a time for that and a time to study. Most of the people I know who are going to State are the kind who want to get some studying done and who carry pretty good grades. I'm afraid if I went to Central, I'd get in with the partying crowd and wouldn't get anything done."

What college to attend, however, does not matter as much as going. Cindy believes it is a waste not to continue.

"This idea of getting married at 18, raising six kids, having piles of dirty laundry and dishes just doesn't appeal to me," she explained. "I don't see how anyone can settle into that. But an awful lot of kids in this class will do it."

While not holding anything against Cass City or small-town life, she very much wants to leave for her continued education. She said she may return to a small town after getting her medical degree, perhaps to practice in the field of obstetrics and gynecology.

"No one can take away from you what you get at college," she said. "You learn a lot more than what they teach in a classroom. You get to meet so many different kinds of people that it helps you grow and you can understand other people better."

Presently, Cindy is getting somewhat of a head start on her career. She works from eight to 10 hours per week at Provincial House as a dietary aide. She has four brothers, not all of whom will go on to further education, primarily because they don't want to.

What about paying for all the college?

"I haven't really thought about the money," she confessed. "I'm just interested in getting there. I'd like to be able to concentrate on studying and not worrying about whether or not I can stay in school next term."

She indicated, however, that her parents will have to foot much of the bill for awhile, at least. They make more money than most scholarships or higher education aid programs will allow.

Whatever happens, Cindy Doerr plans to be enrolled as a freshman at MSU next September.

"I can't think of anything I wanted that I couldn't get if I tried," she said.

Cindy Doerr is determined.

CARL RUSSELL

Working with his hands and literally building his future is the goal of Carl Russell, 18-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Keith Russell of rural Cass City.

Carl has no thoughts or illusions about college. It just isn't for him.

"My grades aren't really high enough for college," he said thoughtfully. "Besides, I'd rather be working. I'll get more experience that way."

The quiet-spoken senior definitely plans to begin a carpentry career just as soon as high school is done. He believes he can earn as much as someone who attended college for four years. "If you work hard enough,"

Carl was raised on the family farm just west of Cass City and has tinkered with building things all his life. He has helped his father construct sheds around the farm and last year helped construct an addition on his sister's house trailer.

Carl is presently enrolled in a shared-time program in Mayville where he is learning and literally helping build a house. He enjoys the experience and wants to put it to use as soon as possible.

He didn't want to stay on the farm, preferring the hours, pay and relative security of carpentry. The area's present building boom is another reason for working in the Cass City vicinity, which he plans to do.

Carl thinks Cass City's vocational education program is good, but could stand improvement in the area of auto mechanics, for instance. He believes the school has given him the background and training he needs to tackle the world of work without further education.

Carl admitted that if he ever got sick of carpentry, he might have a little trouble changing to something else since much of his training he in this area.

But he said he doesn't plan to get tired of it, at least right away.

Carl has four brothers and two sisters, none of whom have gone to college or presently plan to do so. He said he hasn't thought about trade school because he wants to go to work and earn some money. He said $100 per week to start would satisfy him.

With four years of shop and three years of vocational training, Carl said he doesn't feel left out from the crowd. Most of his close friends plan to enter the work force also.

Carl, who carries a 2.5 average, is determined to become a wage-earner quickly and to improve with experience. Chances are, he will succeed.

CINDY DOERR (left) and Carl Russell discuss future plans with Cass City High School guidance counselor Curtis Cleland.

Farm health standards told

Recently proposed occupational safety and health standards for agricultural workers by the Environmental Protection Agency call for two specific actions by agricultural employers: (a) the posting of warning signs in areas treated with pesticides, and (b) time limits on re-entry by workers into treated fields and the use of protective clothing by workers under certain circumstances.

The proposed new standards apply to all crops and all registered pesticides, which is a major change from last spring when "emergency standards" were first introduced by the government. Last year's "emergency standards" were primarily directed toward the fruit industry, but the new standards will cover all of agriculture, including livestock and dairy farming, vegetable growing, and general crop production. Farmers and others now have until April 12, to respond to the EPA with their comments prior to the proposed standards becoming final for the 1974 growing season.

Two Cass City gymnasts place in regionals

Two Cass City gymnasts placed 10th in the Michigan Association of Gymnastics Regional Meet held March 23 at Douglas MacArthur High School in Saginaw.

Kim Hartwick tied for 10th place on the uneven parallel bars and Patti Lautner took 10th place in floor exercises. According to Coach Ms. Brenda Breidinger, the girls competed against gymnasts who had four years or more of experience.

Other Cass City gymnasts participating in the meet included Lauri Althaver, Cindy Guernsey and Sue Priesskorn who competed on the balance beam. Dawn Stahlbaum who entered both uneven bars and floor exercise and Laurie Decker in floor exercise.

Arrest Cass Cityan Monday

A rural Cass City man was arrested Monday and charged with driving while under the influence of liquor on M-24 near the M-46 intersection.

Gerald Rawson Spencer was arrested by Sheriff's Deputy Richard Hofmeister after Hofmeister reportedly observed him leave the roadway several times and drive across the centerline twice.

The deputy first noticed the Spencer vehicle when it did not dim its lights for several oncoming cars.

At the time of the arrest, Hofmeister reportedly observed open cans of beer in the car.

Spencer was arrested for DWI, transporting an open container of an intoxicant in the car and a violation of a license restriction.

The incident occurred at 10:45 p.m.

BREAKING AND ENTERING

A Cass City juvenile was arrested Saturday night in connection with a breaking and entering at the M&M Block plant at 6141 Kelly Rd. Sheriff's deputies who investigated said they received a report of a suspicious vehicle parked at the plant Saturday night near a company truck.

Closer investigation revealed evidence of gas siphoning. Deputies, assisted by Cass City Police, found a gallon can, pieces of hose, beer and 11 fingerprints which eventually led to the identity of the juvenile.

The youth reportedly admitted taking gasoline from the plant. The investigation continues.
