Shortage of apartments problem in Cass City

By Mike Eliasohn

For the MTR from a couple of weeks ago, a group of residents in Cass City may be in for a surprise. The problem? A shortage of apartments in the area, according to some residents. More specifically, it appears that there may be a shortage of two-bedroom apartments in the city, particularly for those who are seeking temporary housing options.

Several residents have reported difficulty finding two-bedroom apartments available in Cass City, with some noting that the local housing market is saturated with one-bedroom units. This shortage has led to increased demand for rentals, leading to higher rents and limited availability.

One resident, speaking on condition of anonymity, stated, "It's tough to find a two-bedroom apartment in Cass City these days. Prices have gone up, and there just aren't that many available."

Local real estate agents have confirmed the shortage, with some noting that the demand for two-bedroom units has exceeded the supply. The reason for this shortage is multifaceted, with factors such as construction limitations and increased demand driving up prices.

As a result, some residents are finding themselves in a difficult situation, forced to make sacrifices in order to secure housing. According to a recent survey conducted by the Cass City Chamber of Commerce, a majority of residents are concerned about the availability of affordable housing options.

The chamber is currently working with local officials to address the shortage, with plans to increase the supply of affordable housing units. This includes encouraging developers to build more two-bedroom apartments, as well as exploring other strategies to alleviate the housing crisis.

In the meantime, residents are encouraged to be patient and proactive in their search for housing. The chamber is also offering resources and assistance to those in need, including a hotline for emergency housing situations.

This issue is not unique to Cass City, as similar shortages are being reported in other communities across the state. The state government is also working to address the housing crisis, with plans to increase funding for affordable housing programs and incentives for developers to build more units.

While progress may be slow, residents are encouraged to remain hopeful and to continue advocating for adequate housing options in their communities. As the saying goes, "There is no substitute for a good roof over one's head."

COLUMBIA, Brookfield work may start soon

Dedication ceremonies for the recently completed project are being planned by the Columbia County Economic Development Corp. (CCEDC) on July 28. The project, designed to provide a new water treatment plant, will be built in the village of Columbia.

The dedication is scheduled for 2 p.m. on July 28, and will be attended by officials from Columbia County, the state and federal governments, and local residents.

The project was made possible through a grant from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), which provided $4.5 million for the construction of the new plant.

In addition to the dedication ceremony, there will be a open house at the new plant from 4-8 p.m. on July 28. The public is invited to tour the facility and learn more about how the new water treatment plant will improve water quality in the community.

The new plant is expected to be operational by the end of the year, and will provide a more efficient and effective means of purifying water for the residents of the area.

The project is part of a larger effort to improve the overall health and safety of the community, and it is hoped that the new plant will serve as a model for similar projects in other communities across the country.

The largest statewide clean-up in the history of Michigan will be carried out at parks and under the direction of the Michigan Department of Natural Resources. A Conservation Corps will be used.

The initiative project is being carried out in about 50 locations in Michigan, rather than trying to cover one large area of water. The amount of work varies from place to place, but in general, the work involves cleaning up litter and debris from the parks.

The project is expected to continue for a period of time. It is hoped that the public will be able to enjoy these parks without having to be concerned about litter and debris.

The Conservation Corps will be responsible for the cleanup efforts. The corps members are being trained in the techniques of litter removal and debris removal.

The Michigan Department of Natural Resources is coordinating the project with other state agencies and local communities to ensure that the work is carried out effectively.

The project is being funded by a combination of federal and state grants, as well as donations from local businesses and individuals.

The goal of the project is to improve the appearance of Michigan's parks and to promote a sense of pride in the natural beauty of the state.

The project is expected to continue for several weeks, and the public is encouraged to participate by volunteering or by making donations.

For more information, contact your local park or the Michigan Department of Natural Resources.

People should never watch two things being made - sausages and laws. But for the second time this year the watch is again on for another lawmaking session, this one coming between November elections and the third full session of the Legislature in the current term. Before the session adjourned for the summer recess the Legislature passed both its budget bills. Both were rejected in the Senate, but in the House both were approved. The House then adjourned until the special session. The full session will begin this Tuesday.

Karr descendants trace family tree at reunion

The biennial edition of the Cass City Chronicle and a district reunion provided a forum for the Karr family to celebrate its history.

FAMILY CRADLE: William Kitchin of Van Dyke Road cuts some rye with a cradle made by Palmar Karr. John Zinnecker bought it from Jake Jonn, 97, who was five years old when his father bought it new from Karr for $5. Kitchin and Zinnecker are both Karr family members. Kitchin, 16, used a cradle as a boy, said they went out of common usage around 1900.

Multi-million dollar business now thriving in new Tuscola county locations

A new multi-million dollar business has moved into eastern Tuscola County and the chances are good that you've never even heard of them. And if you did know about them, like most of the folks from the Gagetown area the chances are equally good that you didn't know just how big Laurel Waltchers and Sons Inc. are.

The Waltchers are potato farmers. Looking at them you would probably guess that they were like any other farming business. You'd guess that they grew corn and oats, and made hay and sold it as a sideline. You'd be right. They do all that. But they also grow mounds of potatoes. And those potatoes are the key to this new multi-million dollar business.

The Waltchers plan to go with it. Both Bob and Tom plan to go with it and forget about a couple of other equipment.

There are two potato harvesters, a couple of semi-trucks, a combine, an airplant, and sprayer equipment. Not to mention the huge potato crop that will be filled with a trailer hauler and a field sprayer. The brothers' are so excited about the new potato business that they've bought a new house, and even a new truck.

Farmers have big role in water clean-up plan

Farmers will have a big role in a clean-up plan as part of the region's agriculture assistance plan. However, the plan now faces opposition from agricultural interests who are concerned about the effect of the plan on their communities. The plan, which is known as the Environment Protection District board, is set to begin in 1978.

The plan is designed to reduce pollution from agricultural sources, which are major contributors to waterway modifications and sedimentation. Farmers will be asked to make changes to their practices, such as reducing chemical use and improving land management techniques.

The plan also contains recommendations to remove the exemption for crop storage impoundments from the state law in order to ensure better management of water resources.

The plan proposes increased educational efforts to inform farmers and other cooperators with agricultural interests about the need for change. The plan also contains recommendations to increase funding for agricultural extension services and to encourage farmers to use conservation practices.

Cass City dairy farmer Paul Findlay said he supports the plan, as it can help reduce pollution and improve water quality. According to Findlay, the plan will be beneficial for farmers who want to make changes to their practices and will help prevent pollution from entering waterways.

The plan is expected to be approved by the Environmental Protection District board in early 1978. The plan will be implemented over several years, with a focus on reducing pollution from agricultural sources.

Energy use climbs

We are using up our oil and natural gas resources faster than the rate of discovery. The situation looks even grimmer for energy supplies. The need is for domestic energy sources that will help reduce our dependency on foreign oil.

This year the U.S. is expected to consume almost 20 million barrels of oil a day. The expected increase in energy consumption, combined with the leveling off of our rate of production, could lead to a dependence on foreign energy supplies.
