HEALTH TIPS

Symptoms of Reye's Syndrome

An 11-year-old Cass City boy is one of three Tuscola county youths to be afflicted with Reye's Syndrome so far this year.

He was diagnosed as having the disease at Hills and Dales General Hospital, then transferred to Detroit Children's Hospital, where after three days of treatment, he was sent home.

As of early this month, there had been 39 Reye's Syndrome cases reported in the state, with at least four children dying from the disease.

The disease most often affects those 10 and younger, but sometimes afflicts young adults.

According to the National Reye's Syndrome Foundation, these are the symptoms:

Viral disorder -- The majority of cases are preceded by a viral disorder, such as the flu or chicken pox, the effects of which last from a few days to one week. In rare instances, Reye's is not preceded by a virus infection, but starts abruptly.

Recovery period -- There is a brief recovery period from the original viral disorder lasting from a few hours to several days. During this time, the child is not usually sick but not well either.

Vomiting -- Violent, relentless vomiting is almost always the first serious sign of Reye's syndrome, except in infants. The hands and feet may be cold and clammy. Temperature may be normal or even subnormal. The pupils may be dilated, that is, the dark part of the eye remains expanded even in bright light.

Behavior change -- The child becomes irritable and negative, wanting to be left alone, and is unusually annoyed if anyone speaks to him or touches him. He may want to sleep all of the time, feeling very fatigued or simply "washed out." He may be glassy-eyed with prolonged staring. Many parents describe a hostile look on their child's face and often they become combative. During this period, the child may also develop twitching and jerking movements (seizures).

Disorientation -- The child becomes generally confused, seemingly lost in time and space. For example, he may find his way into the bathroom, but will not find his way out. He is able to carry out simple requests, such as "brush your teeth," only with the most deliberate and basic step-by-step instructions. This period can last a few minutes or several hours.

Hostility -- The child becomes generally hostile and unable to recognize family members and familiar surroundings. He is frequently combative and aggressive, kicking, lashing out and biting. He may moan and scream incessantly and abnormally, and no measures of reassurance will quiet him. He may demonstrate unusual strength. It may take several adults to restrain him.

Coma -- The child enters the semi-comatose state, responding sluggishly and only after vigorous prodding. Soon, deep coma develops with no response. Death, if it is to occur, follows usually as a result of swelling brain tissue, and this can occur the first day or as long as several weeks later.

Average time from the period of vomiting to death is 3-5 days.

The above is the usual progression in cases of Reye's; however, symptoms, time intervals and sequence may vary.

3 attend pre-med conference

Brian deBeaubien, Deborah Page and Melanie Particka of Cass City were among 190 high school students from throughout Michigan who attended a pre-medicine conference at Alma College Feb. 27.

The conference was planned to alert high school students to the realities of the pre-med curriculum, medical school admissions and the career opportunities within the profession.

The program included discussions of how to prepare for medical school as an undergraduate by Dr. Frank Bernier, dean of admissions for the Michigan State University School of Osteopathic Medicine, and two Alma College seniors already accepted by the University of Michigan School of Medicine.

Two Alma graduates now in medical school talked about the demands of their studies and another Alma graduate, now a practicing physician, discussed professional experience. Professionals in other fields also outlined opportunities in areas such as hospital administration, public health and physician's assistants.
