Cecil Hayward retires in Lamotte township

36 years as supervisor 'long enough'

Thirty-six years is a long time, Cecil Hayward admits. "Long enough, I can say without hesitation," But after 36 years as supervisor of Lamotte township, that isn't the main reason why he decided to not seek re-election. At age 73, his health isn't what it used to be. He is only now recovering from an operation a year ago.

For a man who missed only two meetings in 36 years, health was reason enough to step down.

Hayward was first elected supervisor in March, 1945 as a write-in candidate, after having lived in the township only a couple of years. "I was a newcomer. I know

He was not a newcomer to the area, however. He grew up in nearby Flynn township, where his father had been supervisor for 17 years. His wife's father has been township clerk there.

He and Olive were married in 1925 in Pontiac, when both were 17 years old.

Letters to the Editor

Miller hooked on Cass City

Dear Mr. Haire,

Your article on small town living, and what happened to me last winter, plus with all the depressing lay-offs Cass City is going through . . . has prompted me to write you.

I'm from the big city of Milwaukee, so before we moved here four years ago, I was warned by many exismall-towners to be careful "Everybody knows

When I'd walk downtown and strangers would smile and say, "Hi," I would think they are too good to be true, but when I'd get home, I'd find I'd have such a friendly feeling. When I joined outside activities, I'd always feel so welcome. When I went with my husband to that first Christmas party the company gave, I left feeling like a part of them.

When our daughter joined the little leaguers, I was overwhelmed at how many and may I be half as good a parents cared. When I'd go neighbor to you as you have for a walk in the evenings, it been to me! was such a free feeling to not be afraid. I actually knew my neighbors' first names by the end of that first year!

where is all this awful

Peyton Place business? Sure, I'd hear about who's getting a divorce and whose child did something wrong . BUT, the people working together for the good of the community far out-weighed the normal "happenings" any place has! The cautiousness left me when last winter I ended up in the hospital for six weeks ... I had visitors every day.

I had phone calls galore . . 62 get-well cards . . . 27 letters . . . eight plants, etc. When I was released from the hospital, the ladies actually took turns bringing in our food every single day for one whole week! That did it, I was booked for life on Cass City.

This is my 29th house I've lived in. My parents moved a lot during World War II. NO WHERE else have I ever felt that "love your neighbor" feeling as I have right here!

Thank you Cass Cityans

Sincerely, D.J. Miller 3299 E. Cass City Road They moved to Hemans in 1942, where Hayward's brother, Russell, was manager of the Harper Elevator.

For a couple of years after that, Hayward continued to commute to Pontiac, where he worked as an electrician at Pontiac Motors.

After that, he farmed his 140 acres, divided by M-53 and rented acreage.

C. Swart sees Dutch 'invasion'

Dear people of Cass City,

Already it has been almost three months since I left you all to return to my home in Holland, and I thought it was about time to send you a little thank-you note.

You have all been wonderful people, who made Cass City my second home - far away from the place where I was born, but just as much a home!

My special thanks go to the Cass City Rotary Club, who invited me and made my year with you such a Here in Holland, I'm still an ambassador, showing slides and telling my story to clubs and people who are interested. The difference is I'm no longer a Dutch ambassador, showing windmills and talking about dikes, but now I'm an American one, showing Disneyland and talking about the presidential elections. I'm doing my best to stay active no in the Youth Exchange Program so I can give a little in to me. You will probably see more Dutch kids coming your way if all goes well. If you are as friendly and hospitable to them as you were to me, Cass City will soon be just as Dutch as Grand Rapids and Holland, return for everything it gave

Michigan together. I'm really glad I found America so much different than it is often shown on television over here. There are not only big cities with skyscrapers and a lot of criminality, but also many, many small ones like Cass City with friendly white houses and wonderful people. I still think of you all often, and hope to come back some day, so I'll say

Until we meet again!

With best wishes and love always, Caroline Swart Heerhugowaard the Netherlands

Hayward stayed in Lansing during the week and went home on week ends to take care of his supervisor duties and his farming. The legislative job was easier in the beginning because the state's lawmakers only met three months a year. Now they meet most of the year.

The job included guarding the door to keep unauthorized persons off the House floor and rounding up stray representatives for roll-call votes. He gave it up in 1965 to return to farming full-time. DURING HIS 36 YEARS as supervisor, there have been lots of changes. One which he and his wife noted -- as has everyone else -- is that taxes have increased tremendously.

They bought their 140 acres in Hemans in 1942 for $2,500 total and their first year's taxes were $100.

They own 51 acres now, worth about $1,000 an acre, and their last tax bill was Another change over the years has been in assessing. "Today, there is just so much more work. The whole structure has changed."

When Hayward started, assessors didn't have to be certified and they had a lot of discretion in deciding how much property was worth. With the aim of making the system fairer, state law was changed. Assessors, who now must be certified, must follow the state manual, which specifies how much each type of property is worth. LAMOTTE TOWNSHIP has undergone a lot of progress in the 36 years.

The population of 1,061 is about double what it was back in 1945. There are fewer (but larger) farms, but more homes.

The township fire department was started about the same time and Hayward feels township taxpayers are getting a bargain. Contracting with area fire departments, which Lamotte did before organizing its own, would be more costly. "We're a lot farther ahead to have our own depart-have lots of jobs to keep him busy. He is chairman of the Thumb Area Commission on Aging board, vice-president of the advisory council to the Board and Sanilac County Board of Appeals.

"I can't sit down. I just cannot sit down," the soon to be ex-supervisor said. "I think I can still do a fair job in certain categories." Even though he will still keep busy, he said he 15 going to miss his duties as supervisor. "I sure am."

RETIRING Lamotte Township Supervisor Cecil Hayward won't be looking at property tax records much longer. His last day after 36 years as supervisor is Nov. 20.
