Defective Sidewalk.

Through her attorneys, H. H. Smith and H. P. Orr, of Caro, Mary E. Mc-Crea of Caro filed a notice with the village clerk Tuesday that she intended to hold the Village of Cass City liable for injuries sustained by falling on a defective sidewalk and that she would claim for the injuries received the sum of $2,000.

Mrs. McCrea is the step-mother of Jas. McCrea of this place and she visited at his home last May. The injuries were received on May 31, the claimant says, while she was walking on the south side of Third street, between Seeger and Oak streets, when a loose board of the sidewalk tripped her and caused her to fall. Mrs. Mc-Crea states in the notice that she received injuries to her knees, soreness and lameness in her body, and she especially noted that she had been advised by reputable physicians that she had received permanent injury to her right shoulder and by reason of the latter injury she had been deprived of the use of her right arm and has had NO LIGHTS; TWO ARE DEAD. pains in her right side, shoulder and arm continually.

State Land Commissioner Rose announces a sale of state lands in Muskegon county, for August first, when over thirty-six hundred descriptions will be offered at public auction, at the commissioner's office in the state house. This is an unusually large list for a single county, though it does not include much over one hundred descriptions of farm lands, nearly thirty-five hundred of the descriptions being platted lots in cities, villages and suburban and resort subdivisions. Later in that month, large lists will be offered in Luce and Ontonagon counties, and following that there will be sales for Schoolcraft and Chippewa. The offerings for the second half of the year upon which we have now entered will be more extensive than would have been the case if sales had not been held up during the first half or the year. That was rendered necessary by uncertainty as to the effect of proposed legislation. There were several bills before the legislature which were liable to be passed at any time, and which, if they had become laws with immediate effect would have made radical interference with any preparations for sale that might have been under way.

ing day of the twenty-third Blue Ribbon meeting at the Grosse Pointe race course was characterized by more excitement than a Blue Ribbon crowd has known in many years. A terrific condition from physical exhaustion fire, which at first seemed to threaten all the barns at the track and all the horses stabled in them, gave a record crowd of about 10,000 people a far greater thrill than they expected to experience when they arrived. One barn was burned before the fire was quenched. All horses were saved. The fire started through the upsetting of an oil stove, from which the flames communicated to some straw.

ARE ENJOINED.

Detroit's Mayor and Council Put Under Ban.

CANNOT PASS ORDINANCE.

Title and Trust Company Secures Restraining Order on Very Unusual Grounds-Street Railway Company Also Enjoined.

Detroit, Mich., July 24.—By a writ of injunction issued in the United States circuit court and served upon Mayor Thompson, Corporation Counsel Tarsney, City Clerk Gaston and the members of the city council individually, the plans of the administration for the passage of the Hally street car ordinance at Tuesday night's meeting of the council were temporarily thwarted.

The action of Judge Swan of the United States circuit court, has thus effectually tied the hands of the municipality, so far as the Hally measure is concerned, for at least six weeks to come, and has added one more to the string of injunctions in the mayor's collection.

The present writ is issued upon the application of the Guaranty Title & Trust Co., of New York, whose interest is explained by the statement that it is the owner of $25,000,000 of the bonds of Detroit United railway. The Hally ordinance, if passed, it is declared, will work a great injury to the trust company by insuring a depreciation in the value of the bonds, and thus taking away a share of the market value of the securities that are represented by a very large sum of money, it is declared.

Upon the presentation of these statements in a bill brought into the United States circuit court by Attorney Butzel, of Dickerson, Sevenson, Cullen, Warren & Butzel, Judge Swan issued a restraining order directed against the mayor, council and other city officials, and forbidding any attempt to pass the ordinance at last night's meeting of the aldermen. The ordinance provides for the payment of a three-cent fare on certain of the company's lines.

The action of the trust company was entirely unexpected and took the municipal officials entirely by surprise. It had been expected that a fight would be made against the enforcement of the measure, once it was passed, and it was considered probable that such action, started in the United States court, would entail a long delay before the ordinance could be made operative. Such a thing as the granting of an injunction by a federal court, however, to restrain a legislative body from fulfilling the functions that were clearly within its rights, so far as any ordinary legislation is concerned, had not been thought of by the men made espondents.

A unique phase of the restraining order lies in the fact that the D. U. R. is also enjoined from accepting the Hally ordinance should it be passed.

ORDERS MISLEADING.

Crooked Line of Dots May Have Caused Pere Marquette Wreck. Detroit, Mich., July 24.-A crooked line of dots in the train orders, causing four members of the crew to misread the orders, is now regarded as the proximate cause of Saturday's horrible wreck on the Pere Marquette, in which 33 people were killed and scores of others torn and maimed.

Four of the crew of the freight train which collided with the excursion special-Conductor Hamilton, Engineer Rogers, the fireman and one brakeman-read the order "Salem 9:25," when they should have read "Salem 9:10," because the line of dots from the name of the station to the figures denoting the time of arrival led to the later time instead of to the earlier.

This explanation virtually exculpates the train crew from any criminal responsibility for the wreck and also puts a quietus to the report that the dispatcher was to blame.

Justice Joslin will hold the inquest at Northville this afternoon at 1 o'clock, assisted by Prosecutor Robison and Coroner Parker of Detroit.

Ionia, Mich., July 24.—Twelve more victims of the Pere Marquette wreck were buried Tuesday.

Juvenile Court Soon to Open.

Detroit, Mich., July 24.-Judge Rohnert announces that the first session of the new juvenile court, which Detroit is to have, will be held Monday morning, but that in the meantime he will sit in chambers at room 233, county building, to receive complaints of delinquents. COUNTY CLERK TATALL TED.

Alleged He Is Short_at Lesst $45,000 in Accounts. Louisville, Ky., July 24.—William J. Semonin, retiring county clerk was arrested Tuesday afternoon on a charge of embezlement, it being alleged that he is short in his accounts as clerk of Jefferson county in a sum approximating from $45,000 to $50,000. The arrest was made at the instance of Mayor Bingham.

Mr. Semonin furnished bond in the um of $25,000.

Semonin was one of the officials whose office was declared vacant by the court of appeals in deciding the election contest cases.

He was elected as a democrat. When his successor, Phil B. Thompson, was appointed a few days ago, the accounts of the office were checked up with the result that the head bookkeeper Tuesday afternoon declared that there was a shortage of over $45,000.

There had been rumor of a shortage for two years but the books of State Auditor Hager when examined showed Semonin's accounts with the state to be correct up until July 1, 1907.

When interviewed last night Semonin stated that a full examination of the books would show that he did not owe the state over $22,000, the amount of his collections for June and July which he had the legal right to withhold until he had been given his quietus and which will be paid in full. There was no shortage in the legal or moral sense of the word, he declared.

A Useful Interview.

Mrs. Newton had been married nearly a year, but she still felt that any question of importance should be answered with Mr. Newton's aid, at least, if not by him in person. One day she rang up his out of town office, and ber voice had an anxious tone when she replied to his cheerful "Hel-

"Yes," said Mr. Newton as she paused for breath.

Mr. Gladstone made the mistake of thinking that the phrase "the land of the leal" referred to Scotland and so used it. And it was he also who, in one of his Midlothian speeches, referred to the words of the psalmist, "God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb," a text for which the devout may search the Scriptures in vain. Sydney Smith was guilty of an even more atrocious blunder when he spoke of "that beautiful psalm beginning 'Now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace." A no less curious mistake was made by Bright on one occasion when he attributed the common phrase "Cleanliness is next to godliness" to the Apostle Paul.-Glasgow News,

France's Earliest Artists. The caves of southern France are the most remarkable in the world for their wall pictures, made by prehistoric men who were contemporary with the mammoth, the rhinoceros and the reindeer in that country. Some of the pictures are engraved in the rock; some are painted with different colors. They usually represent extinct animals, such as cave lions and cave bears. A frithful representation of the rhinoceros, with its two horns of unequal length, is found in a cavern at Font-de-Gaume. The prehistoric artists made their paint of ocher of various shades, pulverized and mixed in mortars. Four phases of advance in this troglodyte art have been distinguished by explorers.

CHAPTER XVII. 70 months passed away. Winter set in. The camp was built and inhabited. Routine had established itself, and all was going well. The first move of the M. & D. company had been one of conciliation. Thorpe was approached by the walking boss of the camps up river. The man did not pretend any hypocritical friendship for the younger firm. His proposition was entirely one of mutual advantage. The company had gone to considerable expense in constructing the pier of stone cribs. It would be impossible for the steamer to land at any other point. Thorpe had undisputed possession of the shore, but the company could as indisputably remove the dock. Let it stay where it was. Both companies could then use it for their mutual convenience. To this Thorpe

The actual logging was opening up well. Both Shearer and Thorpe agreed that it would not do to be too ambitious the first year. They set about clearing their banking ground about half a mile below the first dam, and during the six weeks before snowfall cut three short roads of half a mile each. Approximately 2,000,000 feet would be put in from these roads, which could be extended in years to come, while another million could be travoyed directly to the landing from its immediate vicinity.

"Next year," said Tim, "we'll get in 20,000,000. That railroad 'll get along a ways by then, and men 'll be more

Through the lengthening evenings they sat crouched on wooden boxes either side of the stove, conversing rarely, gazing at one spot with a steady persistency which was only an outward indication of the persistency with which their minds held to the work in hand. Tim, the older at the business, showed this trait more strongly than Thorpe. The old man thought of nothing but logging. Nothing was too small to escape his deliberate scrutiny. Noth-Ing was in so perfect a state that it did not bear one more inspection. He played the logging as a chess player his game.

In the men's camp the crew lounged, smoked, danced or played cards. In those days no one thought of forbidding gambling. One evening Thorpe who had been too busy to remember Phil's violin, strolled over and looked through the window. A dance was in progress. The men were waltzing, whirling solemnly round and round, gripping firmly each other's loose sleeves just above the elbow. At every third step of the waltz they stamped Perched on a cracker box sat Phil. His head was thrust forward almost aggressively over his instrument, and his eyes glared at the dancing men with the old wolflike gleam. As he Daly. played he drew the bow across with a swift jerk, thrust it back with another, threw his shoulders from one side to the other in abrupt time to the music. And the music! Thorpe unconsciously shuddered, then sighed in pity. It was atrocious! It was not even in tune. The performer seemed to grind it out with a fierce delight, in which appeared little of the æsthetic pleasure of the artist. Thorpe was at a loss to define it.

"Poor Phil!" he said to himself. "He has the musical soul without even the musical ear"

Next day, while passing out of the cook camp, he addressed one of the "Well, Billy," he inquired, "how do you like your fiddler?" "All right," replied Billy, with emphasis. "She's got some go to her."

The work proceeded finely, and vet the young lumberman had sense enough to know that while a crew such as this is supremely effective it requires careful handling to keep it good humored and willing. He knew every man by his first name and each day made it a point to talk with him for a moment or so. The subject was invariably some phase of the work. Thorpe never permitted himself the familiarity of introducing any other topic.

He never replied directly to an objection or a request, but listened to it noncommittally and later, without explanation or reasoning, acted as his judgment dictated. Even Shearer, with whom he was in most intimate contact. respected this trait in him. Gradually he came to feel that he was making a way with his men. It was a status not assured as vet nor ever very firm, but a status for all that.

Then one day one of the best men, a teamster, came in to make some objection to the cooking. As a matter of fact, the cooking was perfectly good, but the lumber jack is a great hand to growl, and he usually begins with his food.

Thorpe listened to his vague objections in silence.

"All right," he remarked simply. Next day he touched the man on the shoulder just as he was starting to

"Step into the office and get your time," said he.

"I don't need you any longer."

'What's the matter?" asked the man. The two entered the little office.

Thorpe looked through the ledger and van book and finally handed the man his slip.

"I'll have no growlers in this camp," said Thorpe, with decision.

"By thunder," cried the man, "you"-"You get out of here!" cried Thorpe, with a concentrated blaze of energetic passion that made the fellow step back. "I ain't goin' to get on the wrong side of the law by foolin' with this office," cried the other at the door, "but if I had you outside for a minute"-

"Leave this office!" shouted Thorpe. "S'pose you make me!" challenged the man insolently.

In a moment the defiance had come, endangering the careful structure Thorpe had reared with such pains. The young man was suddenly angry in exactly the same blind, unreasoning manner as when he had leaped single handed to tackle Dyer's crew.

Without a word he sprang across the shack, seized a two bladed ax from the pile behind the door, swung it around his head and cast it full at the now frightened teamster. The latter dodged, and the swirling steel buried itself in the snow bank beyond. Without an instant's hesitation Thorne reached back for another. The man took to his

"I don't want to see you around here again!" shouted Thorpe after him. Then in a moment he returned to the office and sat down, overcome with con-

"It might have been murder," he told himself, awe stricken.

But, as it happened, nothing could have turned out better:

Thorpe had instinctively seized the only method by which these strong men could be impressed. Now the entire crew looked with vast admiration on their boss as a man who intended to have his own way no matter what difficulties or consequences might tend to deter him. And that is the kind of man they liked.

Injun Charley, silent and enigmatical as ever, had constructed a log shack near a little creek in the hard wood. There he attended diligently to the business of trapping. Thorpe rarely found time to visit him, but he often glided into the office, smoked a pipeful of the white man's tobacco in friendly fashion by the stove and glided out again without having spoken a dozen words.

Wallace made one visit before the oig snows came, and was charmed. He ate with gusto of the "salt horse." baked beans, stewed prunes, mince pie and cakes. He tramped around gayly in his moccasins or on the fancy snow shoes he promptly purchased of Inju-Charley. There was nothing new to report in regard to financial matters. The loan had been negotiated easily or the basis of a mortgage guaranteed by Carpenter's personal signature. Noth. ing had been heard from Morrison &

By the end of the winter some 4,000, 000 feet of logs were piled in the bed or upon the banks of the stream. To un derstand what that means you must imagine a pile of solid timber a mile in length. This tremendous mass lay di rectly in the course of the stream

When the winter broke up it had to be separated and floated piecemeal down the current. The process is an interesting and dangerous one and one of great delicacy. It requires for its successful completion picked men of skill and demands as toll its yearly quota of cripples and dead. While on the drive men work fourteen hours a day up to their waists in water filled with floating ice.

On the Ossawinamakee, as has been stated, three dams had been erected to simplify the process of driving. When the logs were in right distribution the gates were raised, and the proper head of water floated them down.

Now, the river being navigable, Thorpe was possessed of certain rights on it. Technically he was entitled to a normal head of water whenever he needed it, or a special head, according to agreement with the parties owning the dam. Early in the drive he found that Morrison & Daly intended to cause him trouble. It began in a narrows of the river between high, rocky banks. Thorpe's drive was floating though close packed. The situation was ticklish. Men with spiked boots ran here and there from one bobbing log to another, pushing with their peaveys, hurrying one log, retarding another, working like beavers to keep the whole mass straight. The entire surface of the water was practically covered with the floating timbers. In a moment, as though by magic, the loose wooden carpet ground together. A log in advance up-ended, another thrust under it. The whole mass ground together, stopped and began rapidly to pile up. The men escaped to the shore in a marvelous manner of their own.

Tim Shearer found that the gate at the dam above had been closed. The man in charge had simply obeyed orders. He supposed M. & D. wished to back up the water for their own logs. Tim indulged in some picturesque language. "You ain't got no right to close off more'n enough to leave us th' nat'ral flow unless by agreement," he concluded, and opened the gates.

Then it was a question of breaking the jam. This had to be done by pulling out or chopping through certain "key" logs which locked the whole mass. Men stood under the face of imminent ruin-over them a frowning sheer wall of bristling logs, behind which pressed the weight of the rising waters-and hacked and tugged calmly until the mass began to stir. Then they escaped. A moment later, with a roar, the jam vomited down on the spot where they had stood. It was dangerous work. Just one half day later it had to be done again and for the same reason.

This time Thorpe went back with Shearer. No one was at the dam, but the gates were closed. The two opened them again.

That very evening a man rode up on horseback inquiring for Mr. Thorpe. "I'm he." said the young fellow.

The man thereupon dismounted and served a paper. It proved to be an injunction issued by Judge Sherman enjoining Thorpe against interfering with the property of Morrison & Daly-to wit. certain dams erected at designated points on the Ossawinamakee. There had not elapsed sufficient time since the commission of the offense for the other firm to secure the issuance of this interesting document, so it was at once evident that the whole affair had injunction the official rode away. "Of all the consummate gall!" exploded Thorpe. "Trying to enjoin me from touching a dam when they're refusing me the natural flow! They must have bribed the fool judge. Why, his injunction isn't worth the powder to blow it up."

been prearranged. After serving the "Then you're all right, ain't ye?" inquired Tim.

"It'll be the middle of summer before we get a hearing in court," said he

"I'm he," said the young fellow. Oh, they're a cute layout! They expect to hang me up until it's too lite to do anything with the season's cut." He arose and began to pace back and

"Tim," said he, "is there a man in the crew who's afraid of nothing and will obey orders?"

"A dozen," replied Tim promptly.

"Who's the best?" "Scotty Parsons."

"Ask him to step here." In a moment the man entered the of-"Scotty," said Thorpe, "I want you to understand that I stand responsible for whatever I order you to do.' "All right, sir," replied the man.

"In the morning," said Thorpe, "you take two men and build some sort of a shack right over the sluice gate of that second dam. I want you to live there day and night. Never leave it, not even for a minute. The cookee will bring you grub. Take this Winchester. If any of the men from up river try to go out on the dam, you warn them off. If they persist, you shoot near them. If they keep coming, you shoot at them. Understand?"

"You bet!" answered Scotty, with enthusiasm.

"All right," concluded Thorpe Next day Scotty established hims of, as had been agreed. He did not ned to shoot anybody. Daly himself come down to investigate the state of affairs. He attempted to parley, but Scotty would have none of it.

"Get out!" was his first and a ast word.

At the mouth of the river booms of logs chained together at the ends, ad been prepared. Into the inclosure be drive was floated and stopped. The a raft was formed by passing new it anila ropes over the logs, to each (ne of which the line was fastened by a hardwood forked pin driven astride of it. A tug dragged the raft to Mar-

Now Thorpe was summoned legally on two counts. First, Judge Sheyman cited him for contempt of court; second, Morrison & Daly sued him for alleged damages in obstructing heir drive for holding open the dam sluice beyond the legal head of water.

CHAPTER XVIII.

INDING the call of trial T horpe took a three weeks' vacation to visit his sister. Time, filled with excitement and responsibility, had erased from his mirid the bitterness of their parting. Now he found himself so impatient that he ould hardly wait to get there.

He learned on his arrival that she was not at home. Mrs. Renwick proved not nearly so cordial as the year before, but Thorpe, absorbed in his eagerness, did not notice it. Mrs. Renwick thought Helen had gone over to the Hugheses.

Thorpe found the Hughes residence without difficulty and turned up the straight walk to the veranda. On the steps of the latter a rug had been spread. A dozen youths and maidens lounged on its soft surface. Thorpe, as he approached the light from a tall lamp just inside the hall, hesitated, vainly trying to make out the figures before him.

So it was that Helen Thorpe saw him first and came fluttering to meet

"Oh, Harry! What a surprise!" she cried, and flung her arms about his neck to kiss him. "How do you do, Helen?" he replied sedately.

This was the meeting he had anticipated so long. The presence of others brought out in him irresistibly the repression of public display which was so strong an element of his ca-

A little chilled, Helen turned to introduce him to her friends. He took a place on the steps and sat without saying a word all the evening. There was nothing for him to say. These young people talked thoughtlessly, as young people do, of the affairs belonging to their own little circle. He had thought pine and forest and the trail so long that he found these square elbowed subjects refusing to be jostled aside by any trivialities. He took Helen back to Mrs. Renwick's about 10 o'clock. They walked slowly beneath the broad leaved maples, whose shadows danced under the tall electric lights, and talked. "How have you done, Harry?" she inquired anxiously. "Your letters have been so vague."

"Pretty well," he replied. "If things go right I hope some day to have a better place for you than this."

Her heart contracted suddenly. It was all she could do to keep from bursting into tears. The indefiniteness of his answer exasperated her and filled her with sullen despair. She said nothing for twenty steps. Then: "Harry," she said quietly, "can you take me away from Mrs. Renwick's?" "I don't know, Helen. I can't tell vet. Not just now, at any rate."

"Harry," she cried, "you don't know what you're doing. I tell you I can't stand Mrs. Renwick any longer. I know you've worked hard and that you'd give me more if you could. But so have I worked hard. Now we ought to change this in some way. I can get a position as teacher or some other work somewhere. Won't you let me do that?"

Thorpe was thinking that it would be easy enough to obtain Wallace Carpenter's consent to his taking $1,000 from the profits of the year. But he knew also that the struggle in the courts might need every cent the new company could spare. It would look much better were he to wait until after the verdict. If favorable, there would be no difficulty about sparing the money. If adverse, there would be no money to spare. And so until the thing was absolutely certain he hesitated to explain the situation to Helen for fear of disappointing her.

"I think you'd better wait, Helen," said he. "There 'll be time enough for all that later when it becomes neces-"And in the meantime stay with Mrs.

Renwick?" flashed Helen. "Yes. I hope it will not have to be for very long." "How long do you think, Harry?"

pleaded the girl. "That depends on circumstances." replied Thorpe.

"Oh!" she cried indignantly. "Harry," she ventured after a time, 'why not write to Uncle Amos? His wanting us to come to him seems to me

"You will do nothing of the kind," commanded Thorpe sternly. "Amos very generous."

Thorpe is an unscrupulous man who became unscrupulously rich. He deliberately used our father as a tool and then destroyed him. I consider that any one of our family who would have anything to do with him is a traitor!"

The girl did not reply. Next morning Thorpe felt uneasily repentant for his strong language. After all, the girl did lead a monotonous life, and he could not blame her for rebelling against it from time to time. Her remarks had been born of the rebellion; they had meant nothing in themselves. He could not doubt for a moment her loyalty to the family.

That night he wrote Wallace Carpenter for $1,000.

Wallace Carpenter was not in town. Before the letter had followed him to returned a week had passed. Of course the money was gladly put at Thorpe's disposal. The latter at once interviewed his sister.

My Dear Niece-Both Mrs. Thorpe and myself more than rejoice that time and reflection have removed that. I must confess, natural prejudice which the unfor-tunate family affair, to which I will not allude, raised in your mind against us As we said long ago, our home is yours when you may wish to make it so. You state your present readiness to come immediately. Unless you wire to the contrary we shall expect you next Tuesday evening on the 4:40 train. I shall be at the Central station myself to meet you. If your brother is now with you I should be pleased to see by also and will be most happy to give him a position with the firm. Aff. your uncle AMOS THORPE. New York, June 6, 1883.

On finishing the last paragraph the reader crumpled the letter and threw t into the grate.

"I am sorry that you did that, Helen," said he, "but I don't blame you, and it can't be helped. We won't need to take advantage of his 'kind offer'

"I intend to do so, however," replied the girl coldly. "What do you mean?"

"I mean." she cried, "that I am sick of waiting on your good pleasure. I waited and slaved and stood unbearable things for two years. I did it cheerfully, and in return I don't get a civil word, not a decent explanation, not even a—caress!" She fairly sobbed out the last word. "I can't stand it any longer. I have tried and tried and tried, and then when I've come to you for the littlest word of encouragement you have told me I was young and ought to finish my education. You haven't a cent when it is a question of what I want, but you raise money quick enough when your old family is insulted. Isn't it my family too? And then you blame me because, after waiting in vain for two years for you to do something, I start out to do the best I can for myself. I'm not of age, out you're not my guardian."

During this long speech Thorpe had stood motionless, growing paler and paler. Like most noble natures, when absolutely in the right he was incapable of defending himself against misunderstandings.

"You know that is not true, Helen," he replied, almost sternly.
"It is true," she asseverated, "and 'm through.'

"It's a little hard," said Thorpe, passing his hand wearily before his eyes. "to work hard this way for years and then"— She laughed with a hard little note of scorn. "Helen," said Thorpe, with new energy, "I forbid you to have anything to lo with Amos Thorpe. I think he is a scoundrel and a sneak ' "I shall do as I please," she replied, crossing her hands behind her.

Thorne's eyes darkened "We have talked this over a great many times," he warned, "and you've ilways agreed with me. Remember.

you owe something to the family." "Most of the family seem to owe something," she replied, with a flippant laugh. "I'm sure I didn't choose the family. If I had I'd have picked out a better one."

"You may take your choice, Helen," he said formally. "If you go into the household of Amos Thorpe, if you deliberately prefer your comfort to your honor, we will have nothing more in common."

They faced each other with the cool, deadly glance of the race, so similar in appearance, but so unlike in nature. "I, too, offer you a home, such as it is," repeated the man. "Choose." At the mention of the home for which means were so quickly forthcoming when Thorpe, not she, considered it needful, the girl's eyes flashed. She stooped and dragged violently from beneath the bed a flat steamer trunk, the his new address and the answer had lid of which she threw open. A dress lay on the bed. With a fine gesture she folded the garment and laid it in the bottom of the trunk. Then she knelt and without another glance at her brother standing rigid at the door began feverishly to arrange the folds. The choice was made. He turned and went out.

The Better Way. By burning the garden and orchard rubbish you destroy unseen but numerous insect enemies. For that reason burning is better than hauling to some out of the way corner. The dry fruit mummies hanging to the trees, especially the plums, have in them the seeds of future trouble for you. They are full of the germs of fungous diseases. Woman's Best Friend

All the Horrors of Change of Life for Five Years. Leucorrhoea for Ten Years.

USED ZOA-PHORA

After Physicians Failed to Cure. That Was Five Years Ago. Still Praising Zoa-Phora.

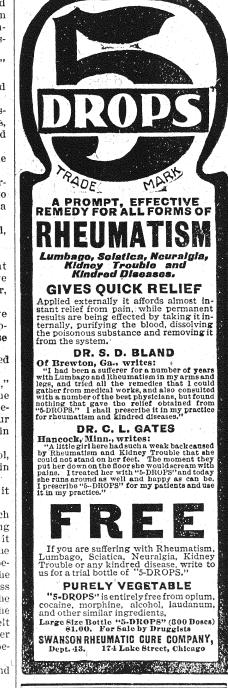

Woman's best friend is one that will give her the degree of buoyant health and strength that nature intended for her. Zoa-Phora is that friend. Not a 'patent cure all," but just a medicine, scientifically prepared for women only. One that acts directly on the diseased organs through the blood and nervous system, replacing the old worn-out tissues with new, and removing congestion, inflammation and unnatural dis-

Zoa-Phora is the well woman's friend, too, because it keeps her well. Mrs. Edwin Lee, of Addison, Michgan, says: "Pen and ink can never tell what Zoa-Phora has done for me. It is indeed a true and tried friend and has never failed me once." you are sick, ailing, or well, keep a bottle of Zoa-Phora in the house all the time. It will prove a friend in need.

Mrs. Alice Brown, of Valley Junction, Ia., wrote on May 27, 1902, "I wish to tell you that Zoa-Phora has been a wonderful blessing to me. I have been a sufferer for the last ten years from leucorrhoea, and for the last five years with change of life and all its horrors. I took treatment from local physicians in Elkhart, Ind., but received no benefit. Finally I was induced to begin taking Zoa-Phora, and after taking four bottles my health is restored. I can now do my own work, and can never thank you enough for the benefits derived from your wonderful remedy." On April 22, 1907, nearly five years later, Mrs. Brown writes, "You may still refer any woman to me. I will gladly recommend Zoa-Phora." Does this not prove that the benefit was permanent?

This letter is strong proof of the merit of Zoa-Phora. The only way that you can become positively convinced that Zoa-Phora will do as much for you is to try the medicine yourself. Go to your druggist and ask him for Zoa-Phora; no other explanation will be needed. You will receive the medicine already prepared, compounded in just the right proportions, and put up in a sealed, sterilized, one dollar bot-

In each package will be found a copy of "Dr. Pengelly's Advice to Women," a medical book giving interesting and instructive information about all diseases of women and the way to successfully treat them. You can now treat yourself in the privacy of your own home and need not tell your troubles to any one.

PIGEON WISDOM.

Some Valuable Hints For Bredeers of the Feathered Beauties. Good shelter is half the food. No matter how well we feed, if the shelter is not of the right order, only half the results will be produced.

The runt hen cross is said to produce the finest squabs, but at present is too high priced for the general market. Give the loft a good coat of whitewash, and it is recommended that a little glue be mixed in it to prevent the whitening coming off on your clothes.

E. C. Cummings says that it costs him $1.30 per pair to build houses: 92 cents to feed breeders, and two men to attend to 5,000 pairs. Ten cents per | are kept before them, and water, with pair will cover cost of grit, charcoal, salt, lime, sand, tobacco stems, etc. It will be found that those pigeons that molted early will be the first and best squab producers. It is the hen pigeon that builds the the afternoon. Breeders under twelve months of age should be avoided. Immature females cannot possibly produce large, well developed squabs, nor can they be depended upon to produce squabs entirely free from disease and ailments of all kinds.

A few odd cocks have been known to destroy more young birds in one day than a couple of rats would in a whole

A damp house creates catarrhal and bronchial colds, which later develop into roup and canker. Filth poisons the air and becomes in-

As a good working pair of breeders will hatch the second pair of young within a week from the time the first pair were weaned, it is essential that proper food be given the old birds, that they may keep up their own strength and at the same time push their young to the market size.—Philadelphia Farm Journal.

Line Breeding.

Line breeding as practiced by poultrymen is simply carefully conducted inbreeding, females being continually mated back to the best male specimens of direct descent from the original male ancestor. The practical application of the system varies according to the ideas and needs of the various fanclers. There is no fixed rule. Use only male birds of the direct male line from which you are breeding. Select breeding birds for health, vigor and quality. Pullets may be bred back to sires, grandsires or great-grandsires or to other good males of direct descent from the original male ancestor. It is preferable to mate pullets with cocks and hens with yearling cocks or cockerels instead of mating pullets and cockerels together.

Food For Breeding Ducks. There are several formulas of feed in use for breeding ducks, but I have found the following very satisfactory during the egg producing season, says Miss F. E. Wheeler in Poultry Husbandry. The measures are given in bulk, not weight: Two and a half parts of cornmeal one and a half parts of wheat bran, one and a half parts of ground oats, one and a half parts of ground wheat or barley, one and a half parts of beef

Add to the above in bulk one-fourth part fine cut stripped alfalfa, while of course oyster shells, sand and charcoal a light feed of hard grain at noon.

The Incubator Needs Air.

The incubator room must be kept quite constant in temperature. A cellar is a good place in which to run incubators if it is not so cold as to require the lamps to be run very high in order to maintain the necessary degree of warmth inside of the machine. If several incubators are located in the same room, great care should be taken to provide proper ventilation, so that the machines may be furnished with clean, fresh air at all times.

Which Hens Laid?

It is highly important that the poul tryman know the egg laid by each hen in his flock. This is practically impossible without the aid of the trap nest. If the breeder who has never given the trap nest a trial would seriously consider the subject, he would see the many advantages to be derived from Poultry.

Mr. Thomas Finkle,
Clifford, Mich.
Dear Sir: There is a troupe here in our opera house this week called the Myrtle, Barcum Theatre Company, and they are billed for your town next week. It is not often that a fellow feels like going to much trouble to recommend theatre people, but this troupe has made such a favorable impression on us that we feel it a pleasure to recommend them to our friends. Along with being above the ordinary theatre ability, we have found the entire troupe the most sociable, agreeable and respectable that has ever struck our town, and you need not be afraid to go to the show yourself, and to speak a good word for it to your customers. Yours truly,

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

By local application, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

By JANE ELLIS JOY.

ERVICES had not begun in the little white painted wooden church, and the congregation was gossiping in the sunshine under the budding trees and along a line of posts where the horses were hitched.

"Barney Brill is sprucing up considerable. Wonder if it ain't for the benefit of his pretty new neighbor?" observed Jim Stover, shutting one eye to give importance to the observation.

Jim's audience of three men looked at him unbelievingly. It was well known that Barney Brill had passed through several unsuccessful love affairs.

"I tell you he's gettin' ready to do it again," asserted Jim. "It ain't only that he's got a new suit of clothes, but he's taken lately to combin' his hair in a scallop acrost his forehead. Mind what I say-Barney ain't makin' that scallop for nothin'.'

Jim Stover's partiality for Miss Sally Brill, which dated back to Sally's school days, quite explained to those who heard Jim's talk this morning the young man's almost womanish interest in finding a wife for Barney Brill. As long as Barney remained a bachelor he wanted his only sister to oversee his house and would not hear of Sally leaving home to marry Jim or any one

The Brill property-a fine farm and homestead-had been left to Barney absolutely, with an unwritten understanding that he would provide for Sally, or, in the event of her marriage, give her a dowry, provided she married with Barney's approval.

Of course Sally might have married in spite of Barney and sued for a portion of the estate. There were sympathetic people in Jersey township who advised her to do this very thing.

But Sally Brill would listen to no counsel to quarrel with her brother. She would delay her marriage, she said, until Barney's consent should be given freely.

"I've been thinking, Sally," said Jim as the two walked home from church, lagging behind the crowd as lovers will, "that Barney's got more than half a notion of making up to Miss Woodward."

"Miss Woodward! Why, Jim, it's quite impossible!" said Sally. "I don't believe the acquaintance between them has gone further than bowing and per haps saying 'Good day.'

"Corinne Woodward is a mighty handsome girl," said Jim, "of course not as pretty as present company," he added, with a chuckle of gallantry.

Sally rewarded the last remark with a smile. Then her thoughts seemed to revert to her new neighbor. "I'm afraid Miss Corinne Woodward isn't the kind Barney would like," she said. "She was raised in town and was a schoolteacher, but she thinks she knows more about farming than half the country people. And to think of her living there with only her aunt and a hired man!"

They had come to the parting place. The large Brill house with its broad front porch and old style dormer windows loomed forth behind a film of green leafage. Sally's hand was on the latch of the gate. "It's awfully good of you, Jim, to wait for me so good naturedly," she went on. "Just to think, we've been engaged for nine years! Now, if you're tired waiting-and could get to like some one else-don't mind me. Speak your mind right out-and you can be-free"-

Jim caught Sally's other hand. "Shucks! What you talking about, Sally? I don't want to be free that way! I want most eternal bad to get Barney off our hands, and then we'll both be free to marry!"

Jim's optimism reassured Sally, and she tripped along the path toward the house light heartedly. Across the fence to the left lay the Woodward acres. For years this ground had been neglected. Tenants had left it without paying rent. Its fences had tumbled down, and the buildings were falling to businesslike young woman had ap peared on the scene, taking possession and beginning improvements. The improvements had gone on until now the place looked very different. The property had come to Corinne Woodward through the death of an uncle, who had never taken any interest in it.

The preceding February, however, a

Glancing to the left, Sally Brill saw the straight, graceful figure of her neighbor on the other side of the new wire fence. Miss Woodward was look ing at a freshly plowed field on the Brill side.

Daintily Sally picked her steps across a strip of the plowed field, intending to have a friendly little chat. "Ain't it a lovely day, Miss Woodward?" she began, with a beaming smile. "Splendid! You can most hear things growing," answered Corinne Woodward. Then she asked a little abruptly, "What are you going to plant in this field?" "I think Barney said he was going to plant rye or perhaps barley." 'Why not plant clover? Rye, you know, or barley, either, will injure my peach orchard." "Injure your peach orchard!" repeat ed Sally, bewildered and a little hurt. It seemed to her that Miss Woodward was dictating in an unwarrantable way. "I don't understand what you mean," she faltered. "You will have to talk to my brother about it. That's he up on the porch." "Well, I'll speak to him," said Corinne. She put her strong white hand on the top of the fence post and vault ed over like an athlete.

Barney must have seen the approach of the visitor. He was a little flushed and curious looking. But there were a composure and an air of preparedness about him which, with his new suit and fresh Sunday shave, went in his favor. The scallop on his hair was in evidence, too, and altogether Barney was looking his best.

"Glad to see you, Miss Woodward," he said, extending his hand. "I was just remarkin' to myself that your peach trees look first rate since you've had 'em cleaned out. Have a seat?"

Three or four rush chairs stood about on the porch, and Corinne appropriated one of them. "I was just telling your sister," she began, "that I hoped you wouldn't plant either rye or barley in that field on account of my peach trees, and Miss Sally kindly invited me to come up and talk to you about it."

"Miss Woodward thinks our rye will spoil her peach orchard," put in Sally tremulously.

"You don't say! How's that?" asked Barney complacently, as if he expected a joke was about to be sprung upon

"The matter is not very easily explained, Mr. Brill, nor perfectly understood," said the visitor, with a straight. serious glance into the open, questioning eyes. "But, all the same, it is known to scientific agriculturists that peach trees are injured by proximity to rye or barley. And, you see, you have other fields in the far end of your farm that would be just as good for rye as that one, while I can't move my peach

"Not very well," said Barney. "What you say is mighty interestin'. I always supposed peach trees was tolerable contented and happy when they had good soil to grow on and got their yearly prunin' and was kep' clear of weeds and insects." He suppressed a sarcastic smile. "Didn't know they was so choicy about their company. Bad as some folks."

When the visitor had gone Barney broke out into a rollicking laugh that might have been heard halfway across the Woodward fields.

"Oh, Barney! What if she should hear!" protested Sally. "Let her hear!" laughed Barney, with a note of combative determination. "All she wants is to make a fool of

"Oh, Barney, no! She isn't trying to make sport of you!" pleaded Sally. 'She's an awful pretty girl, isn't she?" "She ain't bad lookin'. I guess she knows it too.' True to his word, Barney put in his rye. Sally prepared a little supper party as an offset; but, to her dismay, Corinne's aunt sent a polite note of regret. It was all that Jim Stover could do to comfort Sally now. "Don't you believe it's all over yet, Sally," said Jim. "Long's Barney keeps that scallop acrost his forehead there's hope. Just wait. 'Pears to me the scallon is gettin' a leetle slicker"

Corinne Woodward kent bees Barney Brill raised the finest cantaloupes in Jersey county. His cantaloupes were celebrated and brought fancy prices when shipped to New York and Philadelphia.

Miss Woodward planted a common variety of pumpkins close to her neighbor's melon patch.

In August the melons were ripe. They were large and looked well, but Sally fancied the flavor of them was not what it had been in former years.

"Seems to me they taste like pumpkins," she said to Barney. "Maybe I think so because I've looked so often over to Miss Woodward's pumpkin patch alongside the fence."

Barney could not hide his vexation. He would not acknowledge that there was anything the matter with his melons. He told Sally she "imagined" the pumpkin flavor and scouted the idea that there was any truth in it. But when he sent his melons to the produce men in the city, who usually were glad to get all that he could ship, complaint followed complaint. "I knew that this would to fortune to be hardened by her happen when I planted my pumpkins against herself. By degrees she will so close to your melons."

"I am very sorry," said Corinne "I wish I could make amends. Suppose I give you my next year's crop of peaches by way of compensation." "Well, that's fair enough. I'll think about it," said Barney. What Barney thought of the proposition he prudently kept to himself, being averse to having his affairs talked about in the neighborhood. Occasionally he met Miss Woodward at an evening company or a church social. On the evening of the first Tuesday of November there was a benefit lecture in one of the churches, the subject being "The Habits of Bees." Of course Corinne Woodward was there. Barney Brill was there, too, and they met coming out of the church door. "Mighty fine lecture-wasn't it, Miss Woodward? - and instructin'," marked Barney. Corinne agreed, and they proceeded homeward together. Jim Stover was walking with Sally. "This talk tonight about bees kinder reminds me of the trick bees played with my cantaloupes this summer,' said Barney to the girl by his side. It was the first reference to the matter.

"I was hoping you had forgotten that," said Corinne, with a little laugh. "I believe you promised to make it good?" said Barney, with a peep under the brim of the velvet hat.

"Yes, I know I did. You shall have my peaches next year if you want

The Dog's Disposition.

The superintendent of streets in Cleveland recently summoned to his presence an officer, to whom he said: "It is reported to me that there is a dead dog in Horner street. I want you to see to its disposition."

Seneca on Endurance.

There can be no easy proof of virtue. Fortune lashes and mangles us. Well, et us endure it. It is not cruelty. It is struggle, in which the oftener we engage the braver we shall become. The strongest part of the body is that which is exercised by the most frequent use. We must intrust ourselves make us a match for herself. Familiarity with danger leads us to despise it. Thus the bodies of sailors are hardened by endurance of the sea, and the hands of farmers by work; the arms of soldiers are powerful to hurl darts; the legs of runners are active. That part of each man which he exercises is the strongest. So by endurance the mind becomes able to despise the power of misfortunes.

baby?"

One morning Willie said to his father very seriously, "Papa, I had a strange dream this morning."

Papa-Indeed! What was it? "I dreamed, papa, that I died and went to heaven, and when St. Peter met me at the gate, instead of showing me the way to the golden street, as I expected, he took me out into a large field, and in the middle of the field there was a ladder reaching away up into the sky and out of sight. Then St. Peter told me that heaven was at the top and that in order to get there I must take the big piece of chalk he gave me and slowly climb the ladder, writing on each rung some sir I had committed." Papa got interested and, laying down his newspaper, asked, "And did you finally reach heaven, my son?"

"No, papa, for just as I was trying to think of something to write on the second rung I looked up and saw you coming down."

"And what was I coming down for?" "That's what I asked you, and you told me you were coming down for more chalk."

In summing up, the lawyer in opposition denounced the railroad company with much heat. closing with this sentence, "This graspor its chief attorney and henchman, Benjamin Brewster!" This outburst was followed by silence, breathless and expectant, in the crowded courtroom. All eyes were riveted upon the scarred face of Brewster, who rose to reply, speaking in quiet tones, with no evidence of emotion. "The allusion to my misfortune," he said, "will perhaps justify an explanation of its cause. When I was a small boy I was playing one day by an open fire with my little sister, who was younger than I. She slipped and was about to fall into the flames, when I caught her, saving her, I am happy to say, from injury. I was less fortunate, however, being carried into the fire by the impetus of my movement. The scars of my injuries I have carried since and shall carry to my grave. I recognize no reproach in them. I would have acted just as I did even if I had known that my face would have been burned as black as"-he paused, as if searching aiming at the road that Isaiah saw for a comparison; fixing his eyes upon the opposing counsel and pointing a finger at him, Brewster concluded slowly and with quiet emphasis-"asblack-as-that-man's-heart!"

Schopenhauer on Erudition.

So it is that much reading deprives the mind of all elasticity. It is like keeping a spring continually under pressure. The safest way of having no thoughts of one's own is to take up a book every moment one has nothing else to do. It is this practice which explains why erudition makes most men more stupid and silly than they are by nature and prevents their writings obtaining any measure of success.

The Good Boy.

Sir Walter Scott's Laugh.

Never perhaps did a man go through all the gradations of laughter with such complete enjoyment and a countenance so radiant. The first dawn of a humorous thought would show itself sometimes, as he sat silent, by an involuntary lengthening of the upper lip, followed by a shy, sidelong glance at his neighbors, indescribably whimsical and seeming to ask, from their looks, whether the spark of drollery should be suppressed or allowed to blaze out. In the full tide of mirth he did indeed "laugh the heart's laugh," but it was not bolsterous and overpowering nor did it check the course of his words. He could go on, telling or discanting, while his lungs did "crow like chanticleer, his syllables in the struggles growing more emphatic, his accent more strongly Scotch and his voice plaintive with excessive merriment."

Fancies, Fallacies and Facts About the Science.

WHAT AN EXPERT HAS FOUND

Why New Jersey's Supervisor of Roads Prefers a Lighter Macadam to a Telford Road-How to Build a Good Stone Highway.

From the time of the prophet Isaiah to the present men have had their ideas of a perfect highway. The plans of road engineers have been criticised as newfangled, while they were only with prophetic eye when he cried: 'Make straight in the desert a highway for our God. Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low, and the crooked shall be made straight and the rough places plain." Thus the fancy that a straight road with easy grades is a new idea is swept away by the words of Isaiah uttered over 700 years before the Christian era, writes R. A. Meeker, state supervisor of roads, New Jersey, in the Good Roads Magazine.

Later Claudius Appius had his vision of a road that would perpetuate his name, and his dream has been realized. But beyond that he gave-what? The monument of a tyrant who com-Concerto" of her third husband at the pelled thousands to work for naught and a lasting example of how not to build a road. The Appian Way, famous in picture and story, is avoided over a greater portion of its length by every traveler who is in a hurry to reach his fourney's end

This old Roman's idea of a deep foundation has lived after him, but no experienced road builder adopts it. The old Roman's fancy that it is necessary to build a deep foundation for a the present time, and is exploited as the best and, in fact, the only true way to build a road. It was not until road ed earth was the only sure foundation for any kind of road covering that a great advance was made in road con-

That road improvement is an expensive luxury, something nice to have, but too costly for those who have to work for a living, is the fancy of some, but it is not borne out by experience. In New Jersey every dollar expended for road improvement has added tens and hundreds of dollars to our state's wealth. The first roads I built were sixteen inches deep, composed of ten inches of telford bottom and six inches of compacted two and one-half inch and one and one-half inch crushed stone and finished with coarse stone screenings. That the foundation of this kind of road lasts is true, but the top wears off much more quickly, and when that is gone every driver avoids the telford road in good weather. I well remember the first sixteen inch telford I ever saw. It was in 1869 at my home city of Plainfield, N. J. We boys were disthought. In fact, we were merely recussing it very learnedly, as we hearsing what we had heard our elders say, when an old Scotchman passed by and, catching the drift of our remarks, said: "Boys, it is wrang. It is at wrang. It is wrang in prencepil. Here ye hae the anveel, an' on it ye put the sma' stone. Along comes the horse and wagon. The horse's hoofs pound the sma' stone an' the wagon wheels grind it till, 'twixt the hammer and the anveel, the sma' stones are ground to powder." We laughed at the old Scot, but my experience has since taught me that he was right. Not only is a deep telford more expensive to build, but the road wears rough much sooner than a lighter macadam and is consequently much more expensive to maintain. It is also much harder on horses' feet, as it has no elasticity.

It has been argued that a deep telford road will not be heaved by frost This is not so. I have seen fourteen inch telford turned upside down by frost so that the large bottom stones were on top of the road, while six inch macadam built over the same soil and same conditions of travel remained unmoved, the only other difference in construction being that underdrains were placed outside of the macadam, while none was used beside the telford.

To build a good stone road, first grade your hill down to 5 per cent or less if possible; fill up your flats so you have a minimum grade of at least onehalf per cent; second, by underdrains cut off all water that may threaten the road; third, give your road a crown of three-quarters inch per foot; fourth, cut out your subgrade, being careful to give it the same curvature as the finished road; fifth, roll the subgrade until it is hard and smooth, carefully removing any spongy or vegetable earth that the rolling may disclose; sixth, spread your bottom course evenly, then roll and add a little binder and continue the rolling until the stones cease to sink or creep in front of the roller; seventh, spread your second course and roll it, with the addition of binder and water, until the whole surface is hard and smooth, carefully filling with stone any depressions that may appear, then finish the whole with a course of three-fourths inch stone and screenings. This must be soaked with water and rolled until a wave of mud is formed in front of the roller, being particularly careful to commence the rolling at the sides and gradually work toward the center. By so doing you will preserve the crown of your road. If this work is well and thoroughly done, you will have a road that is smooth, hard and convenlent for travel at all seasons of the Keystone State Highways to Be Improved During Next Two Years-Why French, Method of Building Roads Should Be Followed.

Agitated on all sides, the good roads movement is spreading throughout the United States and it is hoped that in a short space of time will have reached such proportions that congress will take a hand in the betterment of the road conditions in this country. Already many of the state legislatures in the United States have appropriated millions of dollars for the improvement of the highways, the legislature of Pennsylvania recently setting apart $3,000,000 for work along these lines during the next two years.

While this amount is not as large as many of the good roads advocates had hoped to see appropriated for this purpose, most of those interested are well satisfied and feel that the work of bettering the highways of the Keystone State has at last fairly started. Just what disposition will be made of the $3,000,000 for the next two years has not been settled, but it is thought that it will be spent in bettering the roads in counties which are at the present time most backward in respect to improved highways and which have not had the money to compete with their richer neighbors

With the work started in this direction, it will not be long before the highrooms in the second story of the Fritz | way from Philadelphia to Pittsburg will become a reality, and with its completion the touring facilities in Pennsylvania will be second to none in the United States.

Americans who have toured in France return to the United States with an entirely different idea of road conditions, for nowhere in the world are the highways kept in better condition nor the question of roads given so much consideration as they are in the European republic. Road builders throughout the world can take lessons from the French. In that country there are 27,000 miles of national ment and maintained at the expense of the government, and in the words of Mark Twain, "They look as if they were jack planed and sandpapered every day.

Many of the most important highways are lined with trees in order that Frutchey and family and Herb Frut- the rains may not damage the roads, chey and R. B. Crosby. They spent The national roads in France are the In addition to the national roads, they have the roads built and maintained by the commune, which is tantamount to

At all seasons of the year the roads present the same appearance, and the infinite care taken to keep them in first class condition is the cause of the desire of all visitors to Europe to spin over the level stretches, which abound in France, in their big motor cars.

Unlike the method in the United section. A workman of this class is called a cantonnier. He has a length of from two to seven or eight kilometers given to him, and he takes entire charge of it, the length varying according to its character. If the road is flat, he has a long piece; if mounhave only two kilometers. He keeps the ditches clear, the grass cut, the trees trimmed, and wherever he finds a depression or little hole in the road he evens the ground with a pick. He has a supply of fine stones dumped at the side of the road and fills up the rut with this and tramples it down, and when he has finished with the defect you cannot tell that there was ever a hole there.

By the use of this system it can readily be seen that the road conditions of a country will improve and are bound to, for much more attention is country.

There are many states in this country that do not give the road question much consideration, and it is with great difficulty that the highways can be negotiated with the automobile, but with the national movement for good roads daily gaining in strength it will be only a short time when these states will act with the state automobile associations in the improvement of the highways.

By keeping the highways in high class condition it is an incentive for touring, and the revenues derived from the tourists amount to thousands and thousands of dollars in the course of a year. With the great increase in the use of the motor car in the United States during the last year it is necessary that the highways be kept up to the standard set by many of the states

The SPORTING WORLD

World's Distance Champion. by the wonderful snap in his action. Instead of the long lope Shrubb uses a fast stride, and his arm action is more that of a sprinter than that of the average distance runner.

In distance races the average athlete maintains an even gait all the way. Not so with Shrubb, however. He is just as liable to let out a hundred yard sprint in the middle of a race as not. The following world's records are all held by Shrubb:

Mile and a quarter, 5m. 40 1-5s. Mile and a half, 6m. 47 3-5s. Two miles, 9m. 9 3-5s. Three miles, 14m. 17 3-5s. Four miles, 19m. 23 3-5s. Five miles, 24m. 33 2-5s. Six miles, 29m. 59 2-5s. Seven miles, 35m. 4 3-5s. Eight miles, 40m. 16s. Mine miles, 45m. 10s.
Nine miles, 45m. 27 3-5s.
Ten miles, 50m. 40s.
Eleven miles, 56m. 23 2-5s.
One hour, 11 miles 1,137 yards.

Fred Bradley "Stung."

The chances are that Fred Bradley, the New England heavyweight, is the most disgusted man in the Queensberry game, and certainly he is about as foolish a boxer as ever put on the gloves. He was going along at a fine pace in Philadelphia, meeting men of his own class and caliber and putting them away with knockout punches in short order. Then this dangerous welter, Jack Blackburn, who has made It interesting for some of the hardest men in the world without reference to how much they weighed, announced that he would like to exchange thumps with the mighty Bradley. The New Englander thoughtlessly accepted the challenge, and Blackburn proceeded to knock out his heavier opponent in the second round of a bout at Philadelphia on a recent night.

Nothing can be sillier than for a boxer to take on a man below his weight. Should the heavier man win he will get no credit for his victory, as sympathy is with the smaller fighter, and if the big fellow loses it makes him look ridiculous. Bradley followed in the footsteps of Dan Creedon and Joe Choynski, who were badgered into making matches with Joe Walcott and getting soundly thrashed in the bar-

"This Jones Person."

There must be a lot in what Connie Mack of the Philadelphia Americans says in praise of Fielder Jones, the leader of the White Sox, as one of the best managers in major league baseball today. This Jones must be a very superior person to land the American league pennant last season with what was generally considered at the beginning of the season as a most ordinary team and then to follow that up by defeating what had been hitherto considered an almost invincible aggregation. The winning of the world's pennant was a great personal triumph for Fielder Jones and at once put him in the front rank of leaders, and he holds that place today. Comiskey trusts him with the complete charge of his team, and doubtless Jones does far better than he would were the owner of the club around to bother him all the time.

Ellison Horses In the East. Charlie Ellison has reached the east with eight horses, including the half brother to Salvidere, who has been named Sir Navarre.

The Ellison stable is not a strong one numerically, comprising four two-yearolds and four older horses. Yankee Girl, winner of the City Park Derby, is perhaps the best of the older horses. Her first engagement is the Gazelle stakes at the second Gravesend (N. Y.) meeting.

F. H. Carroll, Supt. of the P. O. & N. Ry., made the Gazette a pleasant call yesterday. In company with R. J. Lounsbury, receiver, he was headed for the northern terminus of the line and dropped off here to get a bite to eat. When asked concerning the sale of the road, he said there was nothing to it, particularly the "Bob Oakmanelectric" proposition, and that in his opinion the road would be operated by the present management for some time to come.—North Branch Gazette.

John Davis, aged 18, son of Martin Davis, of Applegate, was drowned whilebathing off Port Sanilac in Lake Huron Thursday. He was swimming with a companion, Don Leslie, in nine feet of water, when he was seized with cramps. Leslie made desperate efforts to save his friend and came near drowning himself, going down twice before he was forced to give up and accept the aid of rescuers.

Edward Rievert, one of the most prominent and best known farmers of Sebewaing township, was overcome by van by Philadelphia to Providence and the heat Thursday while at work in the field and died in a few minutes. Mr. Rievert was one of the most successful sugar obeet raisers in the thumb and was considered an authority on matters pertaining to that line of farming.
