VASSAR FARMER STABBED

Drunken Hungarian Makes Escape After Murderous Attack.

Vassar, Mich., Sept. 9-John Myers, a farmer of Denmark township, was stabbed some time Sunday night by Antoine Kretzler, a Hungarian beet weeder, who was in his employ. The Hungarian, after having been drinking considerably in town, had been to Myers' house and called him out of doors, saying that he wanted to settle with him.

Myers hesitated, for he knew that his opponent had been drinking and was displaying a dirk knife. Finally, upon a promise that the man would not harm him, Myers went outside. The Hungarian attacked him, and in the mix-up Kretzler stabbed Myers, the knife passing between two ribs, just below the heart and penetrated the lung.

Myers bled profusely and is in a critical condition, but it is thought he will recover.

The quarrel was over a disagreement they had had before.

The Hungarian, accompanied by his brother-in-law, escaped, and the sheriff, with his deputies, while on the trail all day, have not as yet made a capture. They are said to be hiding in a swamp north of Vassar.—Saginaw Courier-Herald.

NEILL GIVES UP TASK

No Longer Concerns Himself With Telegraphers' Strike.

GOMPERS USING HIS EFFORTS

Declares Strike Should Be Amicably Settled Now-President Anxious to Perfect Organization for Promotion of Industrial Peace.

Oyster Bay, Sept. 11.-Labor Commissioner Neill is no longer concerning himself with the telegraphers' strike and his original effort to bring about peace between the telegraph companies and their former employes represented all the part taken by the administration in the controversy. Reports to the contrary were denied by the commissioner upon his leaving Sagamore Hill, where he had luncheon with the president Tuesday.

Others at the luncheon were Secretary Straus of the department of commerce and labor, Lawrence F. Abbott and Ernest Hamlin Abbott of New York.

Commissioner Neill, on leaving Sagmore Hill, said that since his preliminary efforts to settle the telegraphers' strike, he had taken no part in that controversy, and that these efforts, which had failed, represented all that had been dor by the administration in the matter. The strike, he said, was not considered, and he contemplated no further activity in the matter. President Roosevelt, he added, had never asked for a report on the question from him, and unless such a request should be made, he would not give in detail the failure of his initial and only effort to bring about a cessation of the strike.

President Enthusiastic.

Secretary Straus said the president was enthusiastic about perfecting the national organization for the promotion of industrial peace, the foundation for which was assured by the $37,000 bestowed on the president as the recipient of the Nobel peace prize. The secretary stated that Labor Commissioner Neill was to be made active secretary of the organization which in an effort to land this proposition, congress had chartered, and that a popular subscription of $1,000,000 was to be raised. Just what was to be the propaganda of the organization, he added with a smile, would be left to the discretion of Mr. Neill.

Mr. Strauss said that he had made comprehensive report to the president regarding his inspection trip in the west which had extended as far as Hawaii. While immigration was one of the country's problems, he saw no its solution, and did not regard the visit of the Atlantic fleet to the Pacific as any part of its solution.

New York, Sept. 11.-Without having accomplished anything toward settling the telegraphers' strike, President Samuel Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor, left here for declared he would do anything in his avenue, fell from the top of a water power or make any personal sacrifice to bring about the end of the strike. No Unconditional Surrender.

"I came here," he said, "to see whether I could not do something to bring about an honorable settlement of the strike. I met Mr. Small and Mr. Thomas and talked over with them the possibility of peace and financial support from the American Federation of Labor in case the strike should be prolonged. There will be no unconditional surrender by the strikers. That is certain. The strike should be amicably settled now. It would be the worst thing possible for all concerned if the strike were fought to a finish. It would be bad for the public, bad for the strikers and bad for the telegraph companies. In such an event there would be much bitterness on both sides. Bad feeling would be avoided if the strike were settled now by an agreement between the companies and the operators. Therefore, I am willing to do anything in had to be hoisted with jack-screws bemy power to bring about peace."

At a meeting of New York local No. 16 of the Commercial Telegraphers' union Tuesday, a resolution was adopted to the effect that the delegates be instructed to consider no basis of settlement unless it be the acceptance of the eight-hour day, 15 per cent increase in salary, free typewriters and equal wages for women and men performing equal work."

ANOTHER MASSACRE.

Jews in Kishinev Are Again Attacked and Many Killed.

Braila, Roumania, Sept. 11.—News has reached here of another serious and atrocious anti-Jewish outbreak at Kishinev. It is estimated that no less than eighty Jews lost their lives in encounters with the inflammed populace. The outbreak occurred Monday. The Jewish quarter of Kishinev was attacked by organized bands of roughs, who looted houses and shops, and ruthlessly killed or wounded all those who attempted to defend their property. The Jews are fleeing from Kishinev in a state of panic. Many of them who made their way to the banks of the Pruth in the hope of finding protection in Roumania, were driven back by the frontier guards.

PLOT TO SMUGGLE.

Port Huron Officers Believe They Have Uncovered One.

Port Huron, Mich., Sept. 11.-The customs officers have confiscated five trunks containing silks, laces and fine dress good valued at $4,000, and three Chicago society women are registered at the Harrington, awaiting the outcome of their predicament.

Mrs. A. L. Olsen, Mrs. L. L. Ropp and Mrs. Sallie Stiefel are the names written in the big book at the hostelry. The ladies are in high dudgeon; the customs officers declare they are but doing their duty. The ladies say they are on their way home from a year's trip abroad, and the dresses and laces seized have been worn and are therefore non-dutiable. Special Treasury Agent Burton Parker of Monroe, who made the seizure, declares the goods have been purposely crumpled and slightly soiled to give them the appearance of having been worn, and that a plot to smuggle has been uncovered.

The customs officers say the ladies are anxious to settle the duty now, but that it is probable they will not be given the opportunity.

Milan Rejoices.

Milan, Mich., Sept. 11.-Milan witnessed the wildest night in her history last night. Whistles screeched, cannons boomed, huge bonfires illuminated the street, and men, women and children, armed with horns, added to the din. Milan is to have a $30,000 water works and a sewer system. That is why Milan is celebrating. The secial election came off Tuesday, and the "boost for Milan" crowd won. Bonds will be floated at once to raise the money. Veteran Editor Retires.

Pittsburg, Pa., Sept. 11.-John N. Hazlett, city editor of the Pittsburg Leader for the past forty years, has esigned from the position and retired from active newspaper work. "The chief," as Mr. Hazlett is widely known, is said to be the oldest living city editor in America in continuous service. Probably to Mr. Hazlett more than to any other one man, was due the early exploitation of Ira D. Sankey, the singer, who was later to achieve fame on two continents in connection with Evangelist Moody and the late Francis Murphy, temperance advocate. Mr. Hazlett's retirement was not on account of ill-health, but wisely to preserve the good health and vitality with which he is gifted.

Garibaldi's Red Shirt. The most popular uniform of its day

-perhaps of any day-in Europe was the Garibaldean shirt, whose prosaic origin was little suspected by its adorers. In a note to Mr. Tievelyan's "Garibaldi's Defense of the Roman Republic" this origin is explained by Admiral Winnington-Ingram, who was in Montevideo in 1846, when and where the uniform was first assumed: "Its adoption was caused by the necessity of clothing as economically as possible the newly raised Garibaldean legion. A liberal offer having been made to the government to sell at reduced prices a stock of red woolen shirts that had been intended for the Buenos Ayres market-now closed through the blockade-it was thought too good a chance to be neglected, and the purchase was therefore effected. These goods had been intended to be worn by those employed in the saladeros, or great slaughtering and salting establishments for cattle at Ensenada and other places in the Argentine provinces, as they made good winter clothing, while by their color they disguised in a measure the bloody work the men had in hand."-London T. Latitude and Longitude. The lines seen on maps and globes called degrees of latitude and meridian of longitude serve the very important purpose of fixing the position of places and things and the reckoning of distances (north, south, east or west) from a given point. Latitude measures distance north or south, longitude measures distance east or west, and between the two the exact position of a county, city or ship can be definitely determined. The base of calculation, north or south, is the equator; that of the distance east or west is Greenwich, England. A line joining the poles and passing through Greenwich is called the prime meridian, from South America has a frog of peculiar habits. Dwelling in the virgin forest, at the tops of the highest trees, it chooses as the site of its nursery some hollow stump and then proceeds to line it with rosin procured from trees in the neighborhood. This lining serves to catch and hold the rainwater, with which it quickly becomes filled. As soon as this takes place the eggs are laid therein, and here they undergo development into tadpoles. How the rosin is collected is a mystery, nor is it yet known how the separate pieces become welded to form the water tight basin necessary to insure the safety of the treasures deposited therein.-New York Tribune.

CHAPTER XXXIII. HAT is it?" "What is the matter?" "What the -'s up?"

"What's happened?" burst on Wallace in a volley. It's Dyer!" gasped the young man. "I found him on the boom! He held me up with a gun while he filed the boom chains between the center piers. They're just ready to go. I got away by diving. Hurry and put in a new chain. You haven't got much time!"

"He's a goner now," interjected Solly grimly. "Charley is on his trailand he is hit."

Thorpe's intelligence leaped promptly to the practical question.

"Injun Charley - where'd he come from? I sent him up to Sadler & It's twenty miles, even through the woods." As though by way of colossal answer the whole surface of the jam moved inward and upward, thrusting the logs bristling against the horizon. "She's going to break!" shouted Thorpe, starting on a run toward the river. "A chain, guick!"

The men followed, strung high with excitement. Hamilton, the journalist. paused long enough to glance up stream. Then he, too, ran after them, screaming that the river above was full of logs. By that they all knew that Injun Charley's mission had failed and that something under 10,000,000 feet of logs were racing down the river like so many battering rams.

At the boom the great jam was already a-tremble with eagerness to spring. Indeed a miracle alone seemed to hold the timbers in their place.

"It's death, certain death, to go out on that boom," muttered Billy Mason. Tim Shearer stepped forward coolly. ready as always to assume the perilous duty. He was thrust back by Thorpe, who seized the chain, cold-shut and hammer which Scotty Parsons brought and ran lightly out over the booms. shouting:

"Back! Back! Don't follow me, on your lives! Keep 'em back, Tim!"

The swift water boiled from under the booms. Bang! smash! bang! crashed the logs a mile up stream, but plainly audible above the waters and the wind. Thorpe knelt, dropped the coldshut through on either side of the weakened link and prepared to close it with his hammer. He intended further to strengthen the connection with the

"Lemme hold her for you. You can't close her alone," said an unexpected voice next his elbow.

Thorpe looked up in surprise and anger. Over him leaned Big Junko. The men had been unable to prevent his following. Animated by the blind devotion of the animal for its master and further stung to action by that mas ter's doubt of his fidelity, the giant had followed to assist as he might.

"You fool," cried Thorpe, exasperated, then held the hammer to him "Strike while I keep the chain underneath!" he commanded.

Big Junko leaned forward to obey, kicking strongly his calks into the barked surface of the boom log. The spikes, worn blunt by the river work already accomplished, failed to grip. Big Junko slipped, caught himself by an effort, overbalanced in the other direction, and fell into the stream. The current at once swept him away, but fortunately in such a direction that he was enabled to catch the slanting end of a "dead head" log whose lower end was jammed in the crib. The dead head was slippery, the current strong. Big Junko had no crevice by which to assure his hold. In another moment he would be torn away.

"Let go and swim!" shouted Thorpe. "I can't swim," replied Junko in so low a voice as to be scarcely audible. For a moment Thorpe stared at him. "Tell Carrie," said Big Junko,

Then there beneath the swirling gray sky, under the frowning jam, in the midst of flood waters, Thorpe had his second great moment of decision. He did not pause to weigh reasons or chances, to discuss with himself expediency or the moralities of failure. His actions were foreordained, mechanical. All at once the great forces which the winter had been bringing to power crystallized into something bigger than himself or his ideas. The trail lay before him; there was no choice.

Now clearly, with no shadow of doubt, he took the other view: There could be nothing better than love. Men, their works, their deeds, were little things. Success was a little thing, the opinion of men a little thing. Instantly he felt the truth of it.

And here was love in danger. That it held its moment's habitation in clay of the coarser mold had nothing to do with the great elemental truth of it. For the first time in his life Thorpe felt the full crushing power of an abstraction. Without thought, instinctively, he throw before the necessity of the moment all that was lesser. It was the triumph of what was real in the man over that which environment, alienation, difficulties, had raised up

At Big Junko's words Thorpe raised his hammer and with one mighty blow severed the chains which bound the ends of the booms across the opening. The free end of one of the poles imThorpe, like a cat, ran to the end of skirting the edge of the logs which now the very seconds alone seemed to hold back. They were drenched and blinded with spray, deafened with the crash of timbers settling to the leap. The men on shore could no longer see them for the smother. The great crush of logs had actually begun its first majestic sliding motion when at last they emerged to safety.

At first a few of the loose timbers found the opening, slipping quietly through with the current; then more. Finally the front of the jam dove forward, and an instant later the smooth, swift motion had gained its impetus and was sweeping the entire drive down through the gap.

ing, they ran. The great fierce wind caught them up ahead of the current. In a moment the open river was full of logs jostling eagerly onward. Then suddenly far out above the uneven tossing sky line of Superior the strange northern "loom," or mirage, threw the specters of thousands of restless timbers rising and falling on the bosom of the lake.

struck them dumb. They did not understand the motives beneath it all, but the fact was patent. Big Junko broke down and sobbed.

After a time the stream of logs through the gap slackened. In a moment more, save for the inevitably stranded few, the booms were empty. A deep sigh went up from the attentive multitude.

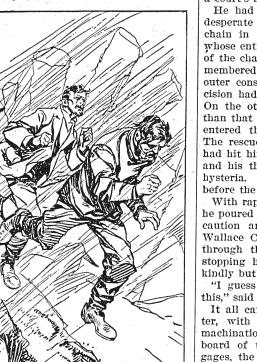

Then the awe broke from about their minds, and they spoke many opinions and speculations. Thorpe had disappeared. They respected his emotion and did not follow him.

Then they noticed a group of men gathering about the office steps, and on it some one talking. Collins, the bookkeeper, was making a speech.

Collins was a little hatchet faced burner. No one had ever seen him exthe firm had been mortgaged to the last dollar in order to assist expansion, rowed to tide over present difficulty. He knew that the notes for $60,000 covering the loan to Wallace Carpenter came due in three months. He knew paring that the season's cut should have netted a profit of $200,000, enough to pay the interest on the mortgages, to take up the notes and to furnish a working capital for the ensuing year. These things he knew in the strange concrete arithmetical manner of the routine bookkeeper. Other men saw

The two started desperately back man, with straight, lank hair, nearsighted eyes, a timid, order loving disposition and a great suitability for his profession. He was accurate, unemotional and valuable. All his actions were as dry as the sawdust in the cited. But he was human, and now his knowledge of the company's affairs showed him the dramatic contrast. He knew. He knew that the property of so that not another cent could be borfrom the long table of statistics which he was eternally preparing and coma desperate phase of firm rivalry. He

It was the simple turning of the hand from full breathed prosperity to life-

His view was the inverse of his master's. To Thorpe it had suddenly become a very little thing in contrast to the great, sweet, elemental truth that the dream girl had enunciated. To Collins the affair was miles vaster than the widest scope of his own narrow

The firm could not take up its notes when they came due; it could not pay the interest on the mortgages, which would now be foreclosed; it could not even pay in full the men who had worked for it—that would come under a court's adjudication.

He had therefore watched Thorpe's desperate sally to mend the weakened chain in all the suspense of a man whose entire universe is in the keeping of the chance moment. It must be remembered that at bottom, below the outer consciousness, Thorpe's final decision had already grown to maturity. On the other hand, no other thought than that of accomplishment had even entered the little bookkeeper's head. The rescue and all that it had meant had hit him like a stroke of apoplexy, and his thin emotions had curdled to hysteria. Full of the idea he appeared before the men.

With rapid, almost incoherent speech he poured it out to them. Professional caution and secrecy were forgotten. Wallace Carpenter attempted to push through the ring for the purpose of stopping him. A gigantic river man kindly but firmly held him back.

"I guess it's just as well we hears this," said the latter.

It all came out-the loan to Carpenter, with a hint at the motive—the machinations of the rival firm on the board of trade; the notes, the mortgages, the necessity of a big season's cut; the reasons the rival firm had for wishing to prevent that cut from arriving at the market; the desperate and varied means they had employed. The men listened, silent. Hamilton, his eyes glowing like coals, drank in every word. Here was the master motive he had sought; here was the story great

"That's what we ought to get!" cried "And now Collins, almost weeping. infernal river hog had to fall off a boom! It's a shame! Those scalawags have done us after all!"

Out from the shadows of the woods stole Injun Charley. The whole bearing and aspect of the man had changed. His eye gleamed with a distant, farseeing fire of its own, which took no account of anything but some remote vision. He stole along almost furtively, but with a proud, upright carriage of his neck, a backward tilt lumber in the yard. of his fine head, a distension of his nostrils, that lent to his appearance a panther-like pride and stealthiness. No one saw him. Suddenly he broke through the group and mounted the steps beside Collins.

"The enemy of my brother is gone," said he simply in his native tongue, and with a sudden gesture held out before them—a scalp.

The mediæval barbarity of the thing appalled them for a moment. The days been closed away between the pages of forgotten histories, and yet here again before them was the thing in all The human animal had tasted blood.

The railroads lay for a mile straight through a thick tamarack swamp, then over a nearly treeless cranberry plain. The tamarack was a screen between the two towns. When half way through the swamp Red Jacket stopped, removed his coat, ripped the lining from it and began to fashion a rude mask.

"Just as well they don't recognize us," said he.

"Somebody in town will give us away," suggested Shorty, the chore boy. "No, they won't; they're all here," assured Kerlie.

It was true. Except for the women and children, who were not yet about, the entire village had assembled. Even old Vanderhoof, the fire catcher of the yard, hobbled along breathlessly on his rheumatic legs. In a moment the masks were fitted; in a moment more the little band had emerged from the shelter of the swamp and so came into full view of its objective point.

Shingleville consisted of a big mill, the yards, now nearly empty of lumber, the large frame boarding house, the office, the stable, a store, two saloons and a dozen dwellings. The party at once fixed its eyes on this collection of buildings and trudged on down the right of way with unhastening

Their approach was not unobserved. Daly saw them, and Baker, his foreman, saw them. The two at once went forth to organize opposition. When the attacking party reached the mill yard it found the boss and the foreman standing alone on the sawdust, revolvers drawn.

Daly traced a line with his toe. "The first man that crosses that line gets it," said he. They knew he meant what he said. An instant's pause ensued, while the big man and the little faced a mob. Daly's river men were still on drive. He knew the mill men too well to depend Truth to tell, the possibility of such a raid as this had not occurred to him for the simple reason that he did not anticipate the discovery of his complicity with the forces of nature. Skillfully carried out, the plan was a good one. No one need know of the weakened link, and it was the most natural thing in the world that Sadler & Smith's drive should go out with the Increase of water. The men grouped swiftly, and silently on the other side of the sawdust line. The pause did not mean that Daly's defense was good.

"Do you know, what's going to happen to you?" said a voice from the group. The speaker was Radway, but the contractor kept himself well in the background. "We're going to burn your mill; we're going to burn your yards; we're going to burn your whole shooting match, you low lived wheln!"

"Dyer," said Injun Charley simply, shaking the wet scalp arm's length toward the lumbermen.

At this grim interruption a silence fell. The owner paled slightly; his foreman chewed a nonchalant straw. Down the still deserted street crossed and recrossed the subtle occult influences of a half hundred concealed watchers. Daly, and his subordinate were very much alone and very much in danger. Their last hour had come. and they knew it.

With the recognition of the fact they mmediately raised their weapons in the resolve to do as much damage as possible before being overpowered. Then suddenly, full in the back, a heavy stream of water knocked them completely off their feet, rolled them over on the wet sawdust and finally jammed them both against the trestle. where it held them, kicking and gasping for breath, in a choking cataract of water. The pistols flew harmlessly ino the air. For an instant the Fighting Forty stared in paralyzed astonish-Then a tremendous roar of aughter saluted this easy vanquishment of a formidable enemy. Daly and Baker were pounced upon and captured. There was no resistance. They were too nearly strangled for that. Little Solly and old Vanderhoof turned off the water in the fire hydrant and disconnected the hose they had so effectively employed.

"There, blast you!" said Rollway Charley, jerking the mill man to his we're gone and bust just because that feet. "How do you like too much water, hey?"

The unexpected comedy changed the party's mood. It was no longer a question of killing. A number broke into the store and shortly emerged bearing pails of kerosene, with which they deluged the slabs on the windward side of the mill. The flames caught the structure instantly. A thousand sparks, borne by the offshore breeze, fastened like so many stinging insects on the

It burned as dried balsam thrown on camp fire. The heat of it drove the onlookers far back in the village, where in silence they watched the destruction. Daly and his man were slapped and suffed hither and thither at the men's will. Their faces bled, their bodies ached as one bruise. "That squares us." said the men. "If ve can't cut this year, neither kin you.

It's up to you now!" Then, like a destroying horde of loof scalping were long since past, had custs, they gutted the office and the store, smashing what they could not carry to the fire. And that was as far as the famous hingleville raid ever got. Daly did his best to collect even circumstantial evidence against the participants, but in vain. He could not even get any one to say that a single member of the village of Carpenter had absented himself from town that morning. This might have been from loyalty or it might have been from fear of the vengeance the Fighting Forty would surely visit on a traitor. Probably it was a combination of both. The fact remains, however, that Daly never knew surely of but one man implicated in the destruction of his plant. That man was Injun Charley; but Injun Charley promptly disappeared.

After an interval Tim Shearer, Radway and Kerlie came out again.

"Where's the boss?" asked Shearer. "I don't know, Tim," replied Wallace seriously. "I've looked everywhere. He's gone. He must have been all cut up. I think he went out in the woods to get over it. I am not worrying. Harry has lots of sense. He'll come in about dark."

"Sure!" said Tim. "How about the boys' stakes?" queried Radway. "I hear this is a bad smash for the firm.'

"We'll see that the men get their vages all right," replied Carpenter, a ittle disappointed that such a question hould be asked at such a time,

"All right," rejoined the contractor. We're all going to need our money this summer.'

The "Simple" Young Man. Count Nigra was originally a minor official at Piedmont, his chief occupation being to arrange the books and documents in the registry. One evening Count Cayour asked the director of the registry if he could lend him one of his clerks to accompany him to Paris. "The only one I have," said the director, "is the young man at the top of the ladder; he is, however, very simple and inexperienced." does not matter at all," said Cavour; "the stupider the better." Nigra traveled with Cavour to Paris as his secretary. After some days Cayour said, "Tonight I must compose a note to the powers; it will, however, be late when I return, but you must remain up for me." Upon Cavour's return he found the note already written. He read it as composed by Nigra without altering it. "This is well, young man," he said, "but how is it that you were described to me as simple?" Nigra answered, "Excellency, no one has hitherto demanded any intelligence from me." Cavour said, "You have a decided talent for diplomacy, and I shall keep you in my service." -- St. James' Gazette.

"Salary" and "Wages."

The distinction between "salary" and 'wages" is a very nice point. Etymologically their origins are very diverse. "Wages" are really rewards of labor stipulated to be paid, the idea being that the sum is pledged or "engaged," put under pledge-the same "gage" appearing also in "mortgage" and "wa-"Salary" is simply "salarium," salt morey, the allowance for salt given to Roman soldiers, which afterward came to mean a pension, stipend or "salary" in the modern sense.-London Chronicle.

The Bishop Cornered. The quick witted son of a farmer was in the habit of delivering butter and eggs regularly every morning at the summer residence of a prominent bishop. The latter, who delighted in an early morning walk in his garden, became interested in the boy and enjoyed quizzing him.

Early Days of Famous Composer. Signor Puccini, the famous composer, once said that when he was writing his first opera, "Le Villi," he lived four months on credit at a little restaurant called the Aida in a slum in Milan. "My dinner usually consisted of a piece of badly cooked meat and a cup of more or less sour wine. I can still recall the half ashamed manner in which I used to tell the waiter to chalk up the bill, and then I sneaked out of the place because I had no money for a tip. And I can also recolect my humble diggings, where I tried to exist on the few francs a week allowed me by the government as a charity pension. Two or three of us lived together, and we often had to pawn our umbrellas and overcoats and boots in order to get a little ready money for immediate requirements."-London Chronicle.

An English Fish Story. Brown had returned from a fishing expedition and after partaking of a most welcome dinner was relating some of his fishing experiences.

"Last year," said he, "while fishing for pike I dropped half a sovereign. I went to the same place this year, and after my line had been cast a few minutes I felt a terrific pull. Eventually I landed a fine pike, which had swallowed the hook, and on cutting it open to release the hook, to my amaze-"Well, what became of the other threepence?" queried his friends. "I suppose the pike paid that to go through the lock," answered Brown.-London Tatler.

Cherry and Peach Oriental. The peaceful cherry eater does not realize the debt he owes to the aggressive militarism of ancient Rome. But the cherry tree in Europe, whither it was brought by Lucullus after his eastern campaigns in the century before Christ, is one of the permanent heritages of Roman jingoism. The very name of the fruit comes from Cerasus in Pontus, the old Asiatic kingdom south of the Black sea. The peach, which is "Persicum malum" (the Persian apple), the pheasant (from the river Phasis) and jet (from Gazas in Asia Minor) are similar instances of things named by the Romans from their oriental origin, and entirely unrecognized as oriental today.-London Chronicle.

Why a Backbone Beats a Wishbone.

"Trouble with most fellers," says Uncle Si Simlins, "is that their backbone is mostly all wishbone." Uncle Si's sage sar-succeed in business. You wish you could do as well as your neighbor who does succeed. You are overworking your wish-bone. Give your wishbone a rest. It's tired.

 YOUR BACKBONE NEEDS EXERCISE, IT'S BACKBONE THAT DOES THINGS - NOT WISH-BONE. STRENGTHEN YOUR BACKBONE AND GO UP AGAINST COMPETITION.

Marshall Field had competition, but his backbone gave him the nerve to advertise big in newspapers when adver-

DRANK BEER AND DIED.

A singular death occured to Charles Reynolds, a well-to-do farmer living three miles east of Argyle on Sunday last. Saturday Mr. Reynold took a jug to town and got it filled with beer. Upon arriving home he took a drink which immediately produced a painful effect in his stomach and burning sensation in his mouth. He continually grew worse until Sunday, when he died. An examination of the jug revealed that it contained a substance similar to lime. He was about 55 years of age and was highly esteemed. His untimely death brought a profound shock to the many who were acquainted with him. The burial took place Tuesday.—Sandusky Republican, culture, St. Louis.

CORN ROOT LOUSE. E. K. F., Geneva, Neb.: Kindly give us some information about the corn root louse and how to prevent its attacks on the corn.

Answer.-It is known that this pest is cared for by the little red ants which are so common to the average cornfield. If you dig into the ant hill, you will see the ant attempt to carry the louse to a place of safety before it will make an effort to save its own eggs. The reason for this is the louse secretes a material called honeydew, and upon this the ant feeds. In other words, the louse is the ant's dairy cow, and the ant cares for the louse and carries it to the place where it can obtain the best food. If the ant is destroyed or in any way hindered from placing the louse upon such plants as it requires, the louse will soon perish for want of food.

Early plowing of the ground and the late planting of the seed is the best way to destroy the pest. It is known that, besides the corn plant, the louse can live upon the roots of the pigeon grass, nearly all of the ragweeds and upon the roots of the smartweed. If these weeds are destroyed and the ground is kept clear of them before the corn is planted, the pest will perish/for want of food between the time the eggs are hatched and the corn has begun to root. Early plowing will warm up the soil so that the eggs of the louse will hatch a little earlier than usual, and it will also destroy a number of the weeds and grasses upon the roots of which the pest may spend the early part of its existence. Every week or ten days after the ground has been plowed it should be cultivated or disked. This destroys all the weeds makes it impossible for the lice to find food when they are hatched several days or a week after the ground has been broken up. It is a good idea to postpone planting till the first or middle of May in the corn belt. By this time most of the eggs have hatched and the lice have perished.

An additional way is to make the ground as fertile as possible. The more fertile the ground is the hardier will be the corn plant and the stronger it will be to withstand the assaults 23, add twenty-three days to Feb. 6, of the pest. Many times the lice will completely destroy a part of the roots, and if the ground is rich the plant will quickly put forth other roots and continue its growth. If the soil is poor and has not the strength, the plant will not do this, but will become dwarfed, as it would when going through a period of dry weather.

CORNSTALK BORER. F. M. W., Lima, O.: Tell us something about the cornstalk borer and how to overcome it.

Answer.—This insect is generally the "heart worm," because it is in the heart of the stalk that it does its greatest injury. When full grown it is about an inch in length, and its color varies from a light brown to a purple. It is marked with five white stripes running lengthwise of the body. Its presence can be very quickly noted. The top of the corn plant will wither rapidly and die in a day or two, while the stalk below the point where the worm is located will remain green. If the attack is made high up on the plant the leaves below will remain green. By observing closely a small hole may be seen in the side of the stalk, which was opened by the pest when it gained admission.

When the worm is full grown it pupates. Since the pest eats downward, it pupates below the opening through which it enters the stalk. Here the pupa remains till the middle of August or the 1st of September, when the moth appears. This deposits the eggs for the brood of worms for the following year. Up to the present time the cornstalk borer has not done much harm to the corn crop of the middle states. Consequently little effort has been made to discover remedies by which its attacks can be overcome. Rotation of crop's is the most satisfactory of all means. When the field is kept in corn year after year the pest multiplies. If the change is made to some other crop the pest will perish.

DEEP PLOWING. C. J. F., Springfield, Ill.: How deep should one plow his corn ground to insure best results?

Answer.-Some will readily answer that it should be plowed at least ten inches deep and it is even better to make the depth sixteen or eighteen inches. Others will contend that deep plowing is not the thing and should never be resorted to under any consideration.

The trouble with the most of us is we consider the whole wide world by face layer of the soil. A pound of our own personal experience. We do this when we consider how deep we should plow the ground for the next year's crop. Because we have had excellent success with deep plowing we think that every one else will.

There is but one rule to take into consideration regarding the depth of so soon to be placed on the table.

plowing. That rule is the amount of organic matter the soil contains. If the soil is rich in organic matter, it can be plowed to a greater depth than it can when there is but little organic matter. The farmer knows that he can plow the garden plat a great deal deeper than he can the clay hill. The reason lies in the fact that there is more organic matter in the garden plat than there is on the clay hill. If he would plow the clay hill to the same depth he has been in the habit of plowing the garden plat, he would fail. He would turn up so much inorganic matter that the plant would make a very inferior growth. The more organic matter there is, up to a certain percentage, the better will be the growth. If too much mineral matter is turned up and the percentage of organic matter decreases, harm will be done.

We do not wish to be understood as opposing deep plowing, for we are not. Where the soil is rich or where it con-If the soil contains a great deal of desired depth is reached. In this way the organic and inorganic matter are properly mixed and no harm is done to the crops attempted. TABLE OF GESTATION. E. M. F., Kirksville, Mo.: What is the number of days a mare, cow, ewe or sow will carry her young? Please give a rule that will be reliable under all circumstances.

Answer.—Below we give the figures which show when the mare, cow, ewe or sow will be delivered if bred on the last day of each month. For instance, if the mare were bred on April 30 of this year, she is due to foal on April 4 of next year. If the cow were bred on May 31, she should drop her calf on March 9 next year. If the sow were bred on Dec. 31, she should pig on April 21.

If the animal is bred on any other date than those given in this table, which have germinated afterward and take the day of the month she is bred and add it to the date she should be delivered had she been bred the last day of the month previous, and you have the date she is due. Suppose the sow is bred on Jan. 7. Add seven days to April 21, the time she should farrow if bred on Dec. 31, and it gives you April 28. If the mare is bred on April 20, add twenty days to March 5, the date she should foal if she had been bred March 31, and you have March 25. If the cow is bred on May

SHORT ANSWERS. ROSE MILDEW.-T. K., Ann Ar-Mich.: Perhaps the best remedy for this disease is to smoke the bushes with sulphur fumes. Place a kettle of live coals under the bushes in the evening when the air is calm and throw on a handful of sulphur. Repeat this each alternate evening for a week and the trouble will be corrected. Spraying with diluted bordeaux mixture or any of the fungicides used in the orchard will also overcome the disease.

HORSERADISH. - W. A. R., Hot Springs, Ark.: Horseradish will grow, with practically no attention, in any rich soil where there is an abundance of water. It will even thrive and multiply along the edge of a wet place or in the field where an old straw heap has rotted down. If you wish to grow it in the garden with the other vegetables, it is a good plan to select a bed rather rich and then sink a board eighteen inches wide in the ground around the edge of the bed. This will hinder the plant from spreading and becoming a weed plant.

WORM REMEDY. - H. K. P. Frankfort, Ky.: The remedy given below is one of the best for worms in horses we have ever known. Powdered aniseed, two ounces; Jamaica ginger, five ounces; powdered charcoal, two ounces; powdered nitrate of potash, six ounces; sulphate of iron, four ounces; ground flaxseed, two pounds. These parts should be well mixed and a heaping tablespoonful fed once each day in a mixture of equal parts of oats and bran. Besides being a worm destroyer, the remedy assists in toning up the system. RADISH WORMS.-F. M. J., Nashville, Tenn.: The radish worm has not become very common in this country, and but a very little attention has been paid it. Rotation of crops will prevent it. If the reader's radishes were bothered this year, a bed in some remote part of the garden should be prepared for that vegetable next year. Just before the seeds are planted next spring a liberal amount of tobacco dust should be mixed with the surdust for each plat ten feet square will be sufficient. Some advise dusting the plants with hellebore or some of the insect powders, but the writer never had much success with such methods. Besides, he was always afraid to place these materials on a vegetable that is

Out of the Channel.

By LYLE WARD SANDERSON. Copyrighted, 1907, by C. H. Sutcliffe.

Merton Kester came slowly down the lighthouse stairs. He liked the wind and twist of them. A hazy wish floated through his mind that they might never end. He would like to go on forever, hearing the tap of her little feet on the iron behind him, feeling her hand touch his shoulder every now and then when she grew a bit dizzy with the curve.

The fact was Mr. Kesler's sense of proportion had been rather unsettled since the night before. Then Marion, tains even a reasonable amount of in that strange, illogical way girls organic matter, the plowing should be have and in spite of her aunt's skillas deep as it can be conveniently done. ful, contrary maneuvers, had made the obtuse Mr. Harvey understand that clay, it should be well manured each she was not overwhelmed with delight year, then make each plowing a little at his invitation to try his new electric deeper than the previous one till the launch and within the same five minutes had promised Kesler to visit the light with him, "even if we have to go in a dory." It had been somewhat hard for Mr. Kesler when he came down to the old playmate absorbed by the wealthy all the world and made an extremely willing chaperon on the many trips which that gentleman was constantly planning. This had been Kesler's first chance.

After thanks and farewells to the old captain, Kesler guided his companion down the steep path to the little, pebbly beach, where their boat awaited them. It was not a dory, but a gay little pleasure craft, bright with many cushions. Kesler helped Marion in, feeling a keen regret that he could not put her into the handsomest launch on the coast. There was no hint of regret in Marion's face as she picked up the rudder ropes and the boat swung off. The sun was warm, but the breeze, filled with the tang of the sea, blew the girl's bright hair about her face and brought a sparkle to her brown eyes.

"And over the sea lies Spain," sang the girl happily.

"You'd like to visit the old world, wouldn't you, Marion? You must go some day," said Kesler, wondering how he would feel if he should know that Harvey and Marion were journeying about Europe together.

"Some day," repeated the girl softly, her dark eyes dreaming, then smiling into his. She was quite willing to push 'everything but the present moment into the indefinite future.

The man hesitated a moment, then said, with a note of entreaty in his voice: "May I row you over to Turbet's creek before we go back? It's such a quaint, Dutchy little place, with its old wharfs and fishermen's houses, that I want to see it again. You know my vacation ends tomorrow."

Marion's face suddenly flushed till it was the deep pink of the wild roses that grew along the shore. "I'd love to go with you," she answered, "only-well, you see, after all aunt told Mr. Harvey he might take us out in his launch at 5, and she'll be much displeased if I am not at home." "Oh, I see," said Merton Kesler rather blankly, "I'd better then."

His mouth suddenly became straight line. He began to pull with long even strokes. "Harvey can give her everything in the world." he thought, with remorse and some bitterness, "and he is a very decent fellow besides-aside from being a snob. If ever a girl was born for riches she was. What right have I to ask her to share my mean little salary? 'Tis a good thing my vacation is nearly over; might say something foolish and make her unhappy. But, oh, may she not smile at me again before we reach the farther side of the little bay." "The tide is running out fast," said

Marion, looking down through the clear water to the yellow sands. "We'll strike the channel soon," returned Kesler, pulling himself together with an effort. "I can never tell exactly where it is when the wind roughs the whole bay. Great day for sailing. Wish we had a yacht, Ma-

"Oh, I like this little boat fully as well," declared the girl contendedly. then suddenly cried, "It's growing shallow, sailor boy; look out!"

Kesler's oars stopped in the air. That was the name she had called him when, as children, they had built many dream ships together.

The oars made a savage swoop into the water, the boat shot half its length nhead, then stopped with a jerk, its nose buried in the sand.

"Great Scott, we've struck on the flats! Jerk up the rudder, Marion, while I push her off. Then, after an unavailing effort: "It's a mercy this oar is stout. No, don't push, child; sit still."

"But the tide is just racing out," objected Marion, while all of the man's efforts simply caused the obstinate little craft to grind deeper into the sand.

Wrath and mortification struggled on Kesler's face. "It's bad enough to have to take the princess out in a mean little rowboat," he broke out, "but to shore her on a sand bank and not be able to pull her off is absolute disgrace."

From far up the bay came the sound of distant puffing, and Kesler, glancing up, had the pleasure of seeing a new, shining launch coming rapidly down the channel toward the stranded boat. Still tugging and pulling ineffectually, | hist'ry, it's almost perpindienlar!"

he turned angrily to the astonished

"Your aunt will be pleased to find you here, Marion. Good heavens, why did you ever come off with me? You ought to be in that launch this minute. You don't belong here"-his wrath poured out-on her-"you love luxury; you know you love it like a cat. Harvey's not good enough for you; nobody is. I'm not. He wants you. Of course I want you many times more, but you're crazy to come off with He'll be angry and 'twill serve me. you right. I'm going to signal when he gets nearer and get you over to the channel if I have to carry you. I hope this will teach you a lesson!"

Back of the anger in the man's face the girl read something else and sprang to her feet, crying, "Wait, Merton; don't signal!" With a swirl and a splash she landed knee deep in the water, one hand gathering up her skirts, the other grasping the boat line, while the boat, lightened of her weight, loated a bit. "I don't belong in the launch. I'd rather be here with you," she said defiantly.

"Marion, what do you mean, dear?" asked Kesler, staring at the little figure by his side as if he was just waking out of a sleep. The girl suddenly began to cry. "I thought I'd better be helping youhelping you pull this boat," she sobbed. 'than riding round in an old launch with a man-I don't like. But if you don't want me—I can take him, I sup pose." Her voice died away as she struggled vainly to keep her wind blown hair out of her face, her skirts from the water and the tears from blinding her eyes.

"He shall never have you." declared Kesler fiercely, dropping the rope and catching the girl in his arms. "Little comrade, do you mean it? I do want your help, little girl, and I will make you happy. Oh, don't hide your face, dear! Your hair is so lovely-but it's dreadfully in the way!"

The ubiquitous Mr. Harvey, as his launch came swiftly down the channel, noted with astonishment two persons over toward the lighthouse wading slowly through the shallow water. He thought at first that he recognized the girl's white sweater and her green skirt, which she held gathered about her knees. The gulls circled over their heads and the sea wind blew the girl's bright hair all about her face. The man waded very close to her side. The pair seemed in no particular hurry. Behind them bobbed a little white

Caught on a Fishhook.

Who that has fished has escaped getting a fishhook caught in a thumb or finger? There is nothing more painful and more difficult to relieve than this simple little incident. The first impulse of the fisher man or woman is to try to remove the hook the way it got caught in the fish, and the more it is pushed back to release the tip the more it cuts and hurts the flesh. On account of the peculiar shape of a fishhook it is necessary to push it all the way through, if the hook is one of those without the loop or eye at the upper end, or else it must be pushed through until the tip of the hook is cleared, and then a pair of tweezers will serve to snap the metal and let the hook be taken out of the flesh. Sometimes a good sized knife will do the hook cutting if tweezers are not handy. The wound made by the hook should be thoroughly cleansed with hot water and perhaps some disinfectant, after which it should be covered with a soothing ointment and then carefully bound with lint or a bandage.-New York Herald.

The "Woman From England." One of the most curious myths of the middle ages, singularly false and flagitious in its character, but so persistent that it eventually attained general belief, was the story of "Pope Joan," the woman pope who was supposed to have sat in St. Peter's chair about midway of the ninth century. For 200 years in the great cathedral at Siena, Italy, along with the busts of all the other popes, there stood a bust of this mythical female bearing upon it the inscription, "John VIII., a Woman From England." This bust was put in its place by ecclesiastical authorities in the year 1400, without protest from any source, and in pursuance of the universal popular belief that the eighth John had indeed been a woman, and this in spite of the fact that the personal history of the real John VIII., who was a man and a Roman and the defier of the Emperor Charles the Bald, was open to the scholars of the world. It was only at the beginning of the seventeenth century that the bust of the "woman from England" was taken down.-Argonaut.

According to History.

A New York man, who spends a portion of the summer each year in England, tells of an amusing incident in connection with his first visit to Richmond castle. On that occasion he was accompanied by a guide who relied for his information mainly on a guidebook, which from time to time he would furtively consult if he thought the visitor was not looking his way. "What is the height of this fine old keep?" asked the New Yorker. "According to hist'ry," replied the guide, "it's ninety-two feet." Similar replies were made to other questions of a like nature, each being vouchsafed with the assurance that it was "according to hist'ry."

Finally there was reached a part of the battlements where the hill on which the castle stands descends abruptly to the river.

"Pretty steep descent!" exclaimed the American.

"Yes, sir," came from the guide in his monotonous tone. "According to SECRET OF GOOD DRESSING.

A Matter That Is Altogether Apart from Vanity.

To understand the art of good dressing does not show vanity, but wisdom.

And for a woman to contribute to the charm and beauty of life by understanding the underlying principles of good dressing and practice them in the making of her clothes is to benefit the world and her ownself at the same time.

Good dressing does not necessitate any uncomfortable compromise with reform in dress.

More often than not the so-called reform dress does nothing but make its wearer conspicuous.

The question of good dressing is more simple than reforms and movements. It does not force a woman to take a stand and in any ostentatious way differ from the prevailing modes. All that is necessary for her to do is to study her own color scheme, to understand the merits and faults of her own body and to select for that body the clothes that are just suited in line and color.

To avoid useless ornamentation and to see to it that the color, texture and cut of her clothes are suitable to her occupation in life.

NECKWEAR OF THE MOMENT. Silk Ties Generally Best with the Embroidered Collars. There are many varieties of jaunty little silk ties offered for wear with the embroidered collars, but the smartest thing to use with such a collar is some form of lingerie tie or bow. These, when fine enough to be desirable, are too expensive to become common, and the coarse imitations of them are hopelessly ugly and tawdry. If one cannot afford a really dainty lingerie tie or bow or rabat it is far better to hold to a silk tie.

A short strip of fine lingerie stuff, widening toward the ends and beautifully embroidered at those ends, is one of the popular arrangements for wear with the linen collar. It is doubled so that one embroidered end falls just below the other, and the folded middle is slipped up under the collar, hiding the two collar buttons and either buttoning invisibly to the upper collar button or held in place by the pin which is often associated with the embroidered linen collar.

A horseshoe or circle pin, catching the two sides of the collar and holding them and the lingerie cravat firmly in place, is often seen, and ornamental collar pins of the kind so much used for collar and cuff sets are also used.

Short Sashes.

For women inclined toward greater simplicity there are charming short sashes which look especially well with the frocks made slightly short waisted at the back. Others consist of inch and a half gold or silver ribbon, weighted with tassels, but a very good quality of ribbon must be used if it is not to tarnish, and this is only another way of saying that such sashes, even though among the narrowest of the smart waist trimmings, are easily the most expensive. A very good quality of gold or silver ribbon will cost from two and a half dollars a yard upward, while the tassels and kindred trimmings are correspondingly high. Fichu effects are growing more and more in popular favor. Flounced skirts are another Victorian fashion admirably adapted to summer fabrics.

The Newest Belts.

The newest belt is made of leather of one color and striped with leather of another color, and this looks best with a white foundation and striped in black. But elastic belts continue popular, no doubt by reason of their adaptability, and belts of ribbon either buckled or held with embroidered buttons or hooks are particularly becoming to the small waist. Much favor is still being shown to the ribbon belt which is made in one with oversleeves and braces of ribbon, these braces being either frilled or plain, made of the ribbon, treated simply or made of piece silk adorned with a trellis of silk, the best effect being gained by some dark ribbon which matches the skirt, while the blouse with which these are worn is of fine white soft lawn.

Dress for Young Girl. A pretty dress for a young girl is of pale blue mull with a yoke and undersleeves of very sheer white handkerchief linen formed of tiny tucks and half-inch valenciennes insertion. It is made by hand. The blouse and sleeves are cut in one piece, trimmed with the lace insertion and edging, while a hand-embroidered motif in front gives a very French touch. The gored skirt is plain and full, simply finished with a nine-inch hem. The girdle is of deep rose pink liberty satin. This frock is very easy to make, but its style depends on its color scheme. With it should be worn a leghorn hat with brown tulle drapery around the crown and two deep pink roses as trimming, and a pink parasol should be carried.

Corset Covers.

When making a cover to be worn under a thin waist, it will be more satisfactory if opened and buttoned down the back instead of the usual way, which has no opening, has to be slipped over the head, and drawn up. By making them open in the back they can be slipped on without mussing the hair and can have the fullness at the waist line permanently adjusted into a well-fitting band, thus doing away with any extra thickness Rover. Yisterday I went to play down to Grandma Perry's. In her yard there's apples, too, and gist heaps of cherries! There, is lots of things to do down to my grandmother's; There is jolly boys and girls and they all have brothers.

We play "Injun" and then "cars" and we romp with Rover. Running through the pasture bars clear out in the clover!

Rover is the bestest dog! He won't bite nor scratch you,
And if you will hide and call, he will come and catch you.
When the baby pulls his tail, he don't growl nor nothin'—
You gist listen to me now and I'll tell you

Onct when I was oful small—gist a little feller,

I got lost upon the track; Rover heard me beller! Down the rails the fast express come like rolling thunder-In a minute more, I guess, I'd be crushed right under!

Gracious, ma gits oful white every time it's mentioned Grandpap says that when he dies Rover shall be pensioned. When the cars comed rumbling down, Rover jumped and grabbed me And the train went flying past that had tried to nab me!

Sometimes ma comes down with medown to Grandma Perry's,
And the first thing that SHE does aint to pick the cherries

She gist gits the cookie jar and she hunts for Rover. It don't make no diffrunce where, she gist hunts all over! Then she pats him oful soft! One time I

gist tell her

'At she likes him better'n me—that old. shaggy feller!

Veracity.

Some facetious sawmaker says, 'Once a fisherman, always a liar!'

The attention of Grover Cleveland and his verbose vocabulary not having been called to this, we will say, 'just what is in us" to refute the slander. The small boy who was told to write what he felt and "just what was in him" responded bravely with a long list beginning with mince pie and jam and ending with the stomach ache. Ordinarily when a man writes "just what is in him" he does it from the heart rather than the abdominal regions, hence we say that the author of the aforesaid calumny is either a horse-thief or a man who expectorates in street cars! He can take his choice.

Many a man has fished all day and gone home sorrowful, hand in hand with Truth. Remember the story of the boy who was caught Sunday morning on the bank of the stream, by the deacon; who cried out in horror:

"Boy, boy, be'ant you 'shamed to catch fish on Sunday?" And then Johnny replied, as truthful as the season's returning: "Who'se ketching fish? I ain't even had 'er darned nibble!" Once we caught 67 fish before breakfast, had the fish photographed, with ourselves in the background, took the proof home with us, and the tarnal doubters wanted to know what time we had breakfast! We had omitted having the breakfast and the morning photographedand we had no affidavit from the fish themselves.

The trouble is not with the fisherman; the world is too suspicious. The angler comes home laden with fins and with no smell of "snake-bite" about him-and the scouters gallop up the road to meet him shouting: "How much did they cost you?"

In business one man may trust another, in love there is a mutual confidence, in religion we accept by faith, but in fishing-

Don't it beat all?

"Yes, Honey." Some of the perquisites of the erstwhile queenly telephone girl are to be taken from her. A movement is on foot to stop her habit of calling the girl at the other end of the wire "dearie," "honey," "darling," etc. There were, according to honored history, two old fellows in Kentucky who got together on divers occasions and insisted they would "never miss the water when the well runs dry!" We are not so assumptious. Having been mistaken now and then for the aforesaid girl at the other end, we have joyed in being fondled over the wire. Somehow it always tickled us in the valvular region to be addressed as "No, dearie," or "What is it, love?" And now this is to be done away with forever. Cruel world!

Comb Your Butter.

Manufacturers of oleomargarine work a smooth graft, 'tis said. They put two or three cow hairs in each jar of their product to make the guest of the hotel think he is eating the real thing in country butter. A certain firm started the practice with one hair. A rival raised them one, and it will not be surprising if the realism continues to grow until we get a whole cow with a crock of oleo.

A Bas, Traitor!

If this is the land of the free and the home of the brave we want to know why an Iowa young man has gone back on his best girl because she has red hair! The golden-haired lady also seeks light and goes to the courts to get it. If a man can desert a woman simply because she has red hair, the happiness of every auburn-haired female in this land is in jeopardy.

OL-LA-PO-DRI-DA

To the Electors of the 21st State Senatorial District Comprising the Counties of Lapeer and Tuscola, Greeting:

An election is near at hand which as compared with the general biennial elections for state officers, members of congress and our state legislature, is of far greater importance, in its final results for weal or woe to the citizens of our states en masse and their posterity as well, than any of the kind that has preceded it.

The Original State Constitution conferred by the United States congress in 1836, at the time of her admission to the Union, as one of them, full- shall be the duty of the township fledged. A new Constitution was adopted by its citizens in 1850. In 1877 a revision of it was made, which the Electors declined to accept or adopt.

After an abeyance of Forty Years, the citizens by a majority vote having expressed a wish for another effort at revision, preliminary steps through the medium of the caucus meetings, county conventions and state senatorial conventions of the different political organizations of the state have already been had, naming candidates, three from each party, nine in all, from which number the three receiving the largest number of votes at the approaching election to occur September 17th next, will be entitled to represent our district in the constitutional convention to assemble at the capitol of the state at Lansing on October 22, 1907.

At the State Senatorial Convention of the Prohibitionists of the district held on the 13th day of August, A. D., 1907, in the office of the Judge of Probate for the County of Tuscola, at Caro, the county seat, the following named persons were declared elected as candidates for election to the constitutional convention at the coming election on Sept. 17th next, viz., > George Bates, of Kingston, Tuscola Co., Robert King, of Lapeer, Lapeer Co., William A. Heartt, of Caro, Tuscola Co.

The first named, Geo. Bates, is a middle aged person, a practicing physician having a large and remunerative business. He is a graduate of the Michigan State University, and has the good will and respect of his entire neigh-

Robert King, of Lapeer, the second named is a veteran of the late unpleasantness, who at the call of Uncle Abe, turned his back upon his personal business interests, shouldered his musket, sought out and encountered the enemy at Antietam and other points, returning after service of two years, with honorable discharge papers and scars from wounds received, which time alone will not suffice to efface. Mr. King became a resident of Lapeer in 1856 and engaged in the manufacture and sale of lumber and shingles which business has been continuous without intermission to the present time. It is claimed for him that he has never failed of making a success of everything he has undertaken. So extensive has been his shingle business in Michigan that he was called "The Shingle King of Michigan." He is well and favorably known throughout the entire state, on account of his extensive and straightforward business relations.

The third member of this triune offering is likewise engaged in the manufacture and sale of lumber and shingles. In the early days of his advent to Tuscola which dates back to 1852, he also combined with his lumber business general merchandising, farming and stock raising, is fairly well known to all the earlier residents of the county who survive and a portion of the late comers, but largely a stranger to residents of the district outside the Tuscola County limits, save and except those with whom he has had business relations to maintain.

And now, with this expose of a one-third portion of the nine candidates from which it is given you the privilege and duty as electors to declare your choice on three of the number to represent the district in the constitutional convention for formulating anew the constitution, fundamental laws of our state, it is left to you, gentlemen of the jury, before voting your preferences to ponder well and long upon the great importance of the matter involved and realize to the full the deplorable and widespread effect which a vote influenced by personal friendship or party prejudice may entail towards defeat of the true and best interests of our state and her citizens enmasse.

WILLIAM A. HEARTT. Caro, September 10, 1907.

Good Road District Law. An Act to authorize townships, villages and cities in any county to form themselves into a good roads district, and to operate under the provision of the county road law. The People of the State of Michigan

Section 1. Any two or more organized townships, or any one or more townships, and one or more villages, or one or more townships and one or more cities, or any combination of townships, villages or cities lying contiguous in any county, are hereby auchorized to form themselves into a district to be known as a good roads district, and such district shall operate under the provisions of the county road law, except as herein otherwise provided.

Sec. 2. On petition of not less than ten freeholders of each organized township, incorporated village and city which is desirous of joining in a good roads district, the board of supervisors shall submit the question of adopting such system, to a vote of the electors of such townships, villages and cities, so petitioning, not later than at the next general election.

Sec. 3. After the adoption of the resolution by the board of supervisors, the county clerk shall give notice thereof, to the several townships, incorporated villages and cities petitioning to form such district, in form of a handbill to be posted in three or more public places in each township and ward, and by publication in a newspaper or newspapers having a general circulation throughout such district. Ballots shall be prepared and distrib-uted by the same officers as is provided by law for general elections. At the time mentioned in such resolution such election shall be held and the vote taken accordingly: Provided, that no township, village or city, not petitioning to form and become a part of such road district, shall vote upon the question of adopting such system.

Sec. 4. If upon the canvass of the sec. 4. If upon the canvass of the votes cast on such question at such election, it shall appear that a majority voting thereon, is in favor thereof, then the good roads system shall be considered as adopted in such district, and thereupon the provisions of this act and of the county road law, shall be and become operative in such district.

Sec. 5. In each township, incorporated village and city belonging to such district, shall be elected one good roads commissioner, which commissioners shall constitute a board of good roads commissioners, who will have the same rights, powers, obliga-tions and duties in the good roads district as county road commissioners under the county road law. The under the county road law. The terms of office of such good roads commissioners shall be two years, and their compensation shall be fixed by the board of supervisors. In the first instance, or in case of a vacancy in the office of any good roads commis-sioner, such office shall be filled by appointment by the township board, village or city council, as the case may be. Notice of Election.

Notice is hereby given that at the election to be held on the seventeenth day of September, 1907, the question of the adoption of the good roads district system will be submitted to a vote of the electors of the Townships of Almer, Elmwood, Ellington, Elk-land, Vassar, Indianfields, Juniata, and Millington, and the Villages of James H. Hall was nominated by the people and Farmers on the Republican Ticket as delegate to the Constitutional Conrention.

Mr. Voter, how would you like to be a constitution builder? The only way that each of you may have a hand in the making of the constitution is to vote for one, who is interested in the success of the same things that you are.

Put an (x) opposite the name James H. Hall on the ballot next Tuesday, and see that your farmer friends and neighbors do the same.

If you elect Hall, write him what you want put in the new constitution, then watch him work for you.
