Religion and Business.

A prominent deacon in one of the churches at B. cheated a man in a horse deal When he was asked to explain his unchristian conduct, by a committee of the church, he said: "Religion is religion and business is business."

This deacon had a distorted view of religion in its relation to himself and his fellowmen. He was a rascal in sheep's clothing.

It is refreshing to know that not all church deacons are of this stripe. We heard of one the other day who typifies the real christian gentleman. This man recommended a certain young man to a wealthy corporation for the position of collector. This young fellow's antecedents were good, his habits were exemplary, and, without bond, he was given the place.

For some time he performed his duties with apparent fidelity; but one day he did not return to the office. Investigation proved that almost from the first, he had appropriated various small sums due the corporation, until the filchings finally amounted to hundreds of dollars.

The man who had recommended him when he heard of the knavery offered to make full restitution but the company at first refused to accept it. Finally the young culprit was caught in New York City, and confessed his guilt. Then, tho there were protests from the corporation's officers, this man at once placed the full sum, in hard cash, in the hands of the company's treasurer "I could not" said this church deacon, "be honest with myself if I did not pay for my error!"

The difference in men is found in their ideals. The one seeks the welfare of his neighbor while the other is self-centered and resembles the swine at the trough:

How One Farmer Got Rich.

There are many well-to-do farmers in the Thumb country. The writer recently, asked one of them what led up to his success. He started out with the principle in view that all work can be done in two different ways; that everything has two ends; a right one and a wrong one.

"If you get hold at the wrong end, everything goes wrong. But if you begin at the right end, the seasons, the elements, all nature become your helpers.

"For instance, there are fifty acres of corn. Notice how the large ears crowd out from under the leaves. You do not see half an inch of waste at the end of each ear, and each bushel gains, by overweight, five pounds. Look down the rows. You do not see a blade of grass nor a stalk of weeds. This e 1 of s e 1 sec 34, Gilford, $30. corn is so good, because, it receives the whole strength of the soil.

"God helps the diligent farmer. Nature is man's friend. She assists him and yields him an abundant harvest, if he treats her well, and keeps the fetters from her. I allow no weeds to develop on my land or in the roadway. I pay my help the best of wages, and in addition give a valuable premium to the one who secures the best results.

"The easiest way is always the best way to do things, whether it is splittng a fail or governing a nation. I am sowing rye just now, and harrow it in with sheep. We drop the rye on the ground, then turn fifty sheep into the field, and in a few days they have it covered better than we could do it with a drill."

Truly farming is a science, and it is well with the man who knows how and does it.

Education is Appreciation.

Said a man at the the State Fair, "This is a great educator." He saw things; they appealed to him and he appreciated them. Education is appreciation. The man who appreciates God becomes spiritual. The man who loves money is usually stingy and dishonest. Education is not booklearning; is not necessarily a matter of schools and colleges. Education is understanding things and applying them in your daily life. When a minister has preached ten years, he has two things: a pile of sermons, more or less, and a disciplined mind; and the last is far the more valuable. His sermons may burn up, but he is educated in that line; he can produce more. He knows law. That means application which is made possible by appreciation.

The man or woman who boasts of having a success without education either possesses education won from experiences and research or he is not more than half as successful as he would have been had he been trained. The more we know, the more we can appreciate the wouders that the world affords. It matters not what where we learned, or who was teacher, when we M Cleland lot 7, Wilsey & McPhail's have understanding we have education. The wise man said: "Happy is the add to Cass City, $1,100. man who findeth wisdom, and the man who geteth understanding.'

Why Suffer?

If you suffer pain from any cause, Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills will relieve it -and leave no bad aftereffects. That's the important thing. Neither do they create a habit. More often the attacks become less frequent, or disappear altogether. Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills have no other effect except to relieve pain and quiet nervous irritation.

Ous irritation. "We are never without Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills. My husband and son, aged 15 were always subject to sick headache until we began using these Pills, and they have broken them up entirely. Don't think they have had to use them for six months. I recommend them to every 'one. A few weeks ago I heard an old lady, friend was sick. I went to see her. She was down with LaGrippe, and nearly crazy with awful backache. I gave her one of the Anti-Pain Pills and left another for her to take in a short time. They helped her right away, and she says she will never be without them again. Last winter my husband was taken with pluerisy on both sides, and I know he would have died if it hadr't been for the Pills. In less than half an hour he was sweating, and went to bed and slept." EFFECTIVE BIRD PROTECTION. The Audubon Society of America has inaugurated a vigorous campaign having in view the more effective protection of the birds of America, and this time the appeal is being made along the line of practical rather than sentimental considerations. The argument now being put forth is that bird destruction means a loss in dollars and cents to the gardeners, fruit growers win. Present an-argument that hits folks in their pocketbooks and they are bound to sit up and take notice. The plan of campaign of the society contemplates the dividing of the country into seven districts and the placing of an expert ornithologist in charge of each. It would seem as if with the prosecution of its work along general lines the society could make a definite advance by using its influence to secure the passage of federal laws prohibiting absolutely the destruction of useful birds migrating at different seasons of the year from one state to another. A communication sent by the writer to the congressman of his district and referred by him to C. H. Merriam, chief of the bureau of biological survey, seemed to develop the fact that the reason action had not been taken along the line suggested-that of federal bird protection-was due to inability to arouse interest in the subject on the part of members of congress, coupled with inadequate appropriations which would be available for carrying such laws into effect. Just so long as the matter of bird protection is left to the several states results secured will be incomplete and unsatisfactory. A law passed by congress for the protection of interstate birds would cover all states. State laws are good so far as they go, but they should be re-enforced by federal enactments.

A REFORM NEEDED.

The protest presented to President Roosevelt a short time tince by the officers of the American H mane society looking to preventing the terrible suffering of grazing animals on the western plains, which die in large numbers annually from exposure and from hunger and thirst, seems to find abundant provocation in conditions which have prevailed for years. The committee cites the fact that, according to government reports, 1,345,000 cattle and 1.250,000 sheep died from exposure in the year ending March 31 The pitiful manner in which last. they died is told in the following statement by E. K. Whitehead, secretary of the bureau of child and animal protec-tion: "Imagine a single animal in De-sidered of so great value in checking 3 per cent basis was oversubscribed Our growers mus in December, already gaunt from hunger, cold and thirst-for of the three thirst is the most terrible-imagine this wretched creature wandering about on an illimitable plain, covered with snow. with nothing to eat except here and there, buried under the snow, a spare tuft of scanty mosslike grass, eating snow for days and weeks because there is nothing to drink, by day wandering in the snow, by night lying down in it. swept by pitiless winds and icy storms, always shivering with cold, always gnawed with hunger, always parched with thirst, always searching for something to eat where there is nothing, always staring with dumb, hopeless eyes, blinded, swollen and festering from the sun's glare on the wastes of snow. Imagine that and imagine yourself enduring one hour of it. Multiply that period by the slow moving days and nights from December to April, if life lasts that long. Multiply that by 40,000,000, and you have the statistics of brute suffering in this one way for one year and every year in this unspeakable trade."

The real standing of a man in a community is often as accurately indicated by his rating in the county credit book as by the presence of his name on a church membership roll.

No farmer can be said to be living up to his opportunities if he resides within a reasonable distance and fails to attend his own state fair. It is an education all by itself, and the inspiration to be got from it ought to pay the expenses of his trip several times over.

Time was, when witches rode broomsticks in New England and possibly ater, when tomatoes were considered as poisonous and were grown only because they were pretty to look at. In the succeeding interval they have come to occupy a leading place as one of America's staple fruits.

A nice illustration of the way folks will adjust themselves to their necessities and environment is shown in the philosophical way in which folks in the corn belt put up with sweltering and farmers of the country. This will hot weather for the sake of this staple crop. They frequently ejaculate about the fierceness of the heat, but always wind up by remarking how fine it is for the corn.

> A family living in a western city who had been securing their milk from the town milkman went away not long since for several days. This gentleman left his milk regularly every morning. When they came home they found that the milk brought on the first day of their absence had not soured. They tried to sour it and could not. An inspection by the city chemist revealed enough formalin in the milk to keep it indefinitely. An investigation of this man's methods is now under way, and relief is in sight.

> A report made during July by Professor Woodworth, head of the entomological department of the University of California, was to the effect that the cantaloupe louse, which had lately made its appearance in California, was doing extensive damage to the lima bean crop in the vicinity of Carpinte ria, the pest being quite extensively distributed over the fields. Inasmuch as the lima bean crop of California is valued in the millions, the appearance of this new pest can only be viewed vith alarm.

While a leader of other nations its many commendable lines, the United States surpasses them also in some that are not pleasant to contemplate. A recent report issued by a member of the imperial railroad administration of Germany states that out of every thousand railway employees injured each year in the three countries the United States stands first with 43.5, England second with 11.8 and Germany with but 2.8. Out of 10,000 employees there are killed annually in this country 26.1, in England 12.3 and in Germany less than 4.

A heavy windstorm will often reveal weaknesses in the corn plant that are not manifest in fair weather. Perhaps the injury is done by the corn root louse, the corn root worm or the stalk borer, which works higher up, but if any of these pests have been getting in their work it will come to light at such times.

One Iowa county has paid out the sum of $5,234.50 within a little less than two years in the shape of pocket gopher bounties. Eight cents goes to the trapper, while the officer taking the affidavit receives 2 cents. The returns indicate that in this county 19,836 gophers were trapped in 1907, while this year 32,609 lost their claws.

Professor Ferbush, state ornithologist of Massachusetts, has recently come out in an edict favoring the extermination of cats within the state. He asserts that the crops of the state suffer irreparable loss because of the destruction by cats of bird life, while the felines are a prolific source for the transmission of diphtheria, smallpox, tuberculosis and other diseases.

As soon as the tops of the potato vines are ripe and dry it is just as well to dig the potatoes at once and put them into a dry, cool place as to leave them in the ground through the September rains, with the likelihood that some of them will rot. It is a good thing from the standpoint of the potatoes and likewise enables one to clean the weeds from the field before they shed all their seed.

HANDLING APPLES.

Fruit Must Be Put Up For Market In Attractive Style.

Radical changes must come about in the methods of grading, packing and marketing our home grown fruits if we succeed in maintaining our present trade in the home markets. California fruit is having a greater influence on the prices of fruit in the eastern markets every year, and this competition is sure to drive many eastern fruit growers out of the business unless it is met with goods that are put up in as honest and attractive style as those that are shipped from that section. The remedy lies in the hands of the growers. If they desire to have their fruit recognized as equal to California fruit they must make it so attractive in style and honest and uniform in quality that the buyer or the consumer will not make invidious comparisons when he sees it by the side of the California product. Quality and flavor will have weight in determining which fruit to use, but if our home grown fruits are put up in an honest manner This problem of handling and marketby individual effort alone. It requires co-operation on the part of the various fruit growers. One man may succeed in establishing a reputation for high grade fruit, but at the best his reputation would only be local, whereas if a large number of the leading fruit growers would combine and organize and have their fruit put up in uniform style and in large quantities by experienced packers, so that their brand would establish a first class reputation. the demand for their fruit would equal

PRESERVATION OF FORESTS.

The Old Bay State Is Now Taking the Initiative.

The preservation of the forests is a problem second to none in present importance and in its outlook toward the future. Without trees our country would be a desert, and the rapid denudation of our New England hills is already beginning to have its effect upon our streams and rivers and upon our water supply. The invention of wood pulp paper and the rapid extension of the industry throughout the country, together with the increase of newspaper circulation, have stimulated the destruction of the forests to such a degree that steps are already being taken to preserve them before it is too late.

Congress has attempted to take a hand in the matter, but so far with little avail, and it now remains for the individual states affected to see what they can do. The first step would seem to be the development of paper making from some rapidly growing and annually reappearing substance, such as cornstalk fiber, instead of from the slowly rising tree which cannot be replaced except after years of renewal and growth.

As was to be expected, Massachusetts is taking the initiative. To the governors of the other five New England states Governor Guild has sent out a request for a conference, and it will be held at the Algonquin club in Boston on the 14th of September. The six governors will then confer and deliberate over the best means to be taken for the preservation of our for ests, and it is probable that arrange ments will be made for the calling of a New England business conference at some time immediately following the presidential election. If it should be held, says Governor Guild in his letter, it should come at that time "in order that its work might not be confused with the politics of the presidential campaign." One of the especial objects of this meeting of the governor believe that excellent results are obtained for the teeth by the use of simple limewater.

Dentists Recommend Limewater For the Teeth. Physicians who have experimented

It is claimed that the reason of the fine bony structures of people and horses in the blue grass region of Kentucky is due to the lime soaked vegetation. It is argued that a mild amount of lime taken into the system when a child will improve the structural condition of the teeth.

Limewater can be easily prepared at home in the following manner: Put a teacup of clean, unslaked lime in a pitcher and pour over it two quarts of water, stirring until it looks like milk. Let it stand until the water seems quite clear, then pour it off and fill the pitcher again with pure water. If possible, use only filtered water.

Then stir thoroughly, tie a piece of muslin over the pitcher to prevent dust from falling into it and let it stand till the water is clear. Then carefully decant the clear portion into glass stoppered bottles.

The first water can be used in the kitchen for many cleansing purposes, although many housekeepers are ignorant of this fact.

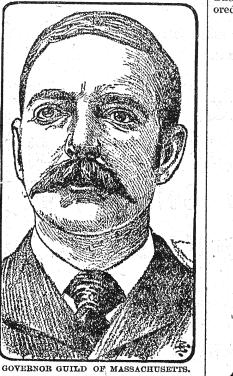

When the teeth are soft and sensitive a full tablespoonful of limewater can be taken whenever one drinks water or milk. This leaves a smooth taste in the mouth and is excellent for sweetening the breath.

After eating acid fruit, which 'renders the teeth sensitive and is always injurious to the enamel, the mouth should be rinsed with this limewater.

A CASE OF CROOKED STICK. An Idaho farmer is being accorded a great deal of newspaper and magazine notoriety and advertising these days through the exploiting of a test which will be resumed in the fall with a zest he has made with a variety of Alaska wheat which he claims has yielded for him at the rate of 222 bushels per acre. In view of the fact that the average yield of wheat for the country is but twelve bushels per acre, the claim of this Idaho granger is quite naturally being received with turtles, mushrooms, goldfish and guinea herd shake and skepticism. The grower claims that one head of this Alaska wheat, which is frost proof and hardy, produced seven pounds, that these seven pounds produced 1,545 pounds and that this quantity produced in turn 53,000 pounds of prime hard wheat of No. 1 grade. There are a lot of folks who would like to think the above claim possible and reliable, yet who until more authentic evidence is forthcoming will be compelled to class it the "Lying" Davis yarn about the stick that was so crooked it couldn't lie still. A railroad president who owns a 200 acre farm at Barrington, a suburb of Chicago, has hit upon the unique plan of devoting it to the raising of mud pigs, which may very properly be styled diversified farming. Besides the naturally boggy spots on the farm, lagoons will be dug which will be fed with a system of irrigating ditches. The guinea pig yards are expected to cover several acres and be the most extensive in the country, while the mushrooms will be allowed to grow where they will in damp places over the farm. The justification for the mud turtle aspect of the enterprise will be understood when it is known that 10,000 turtles are consumed annually in the eating houses and restaurants of the city of Chicago alone. While, of course, some of these are bona fide terrapin, the majority are mud turtles, soft shells and snappers.

The president of a western gasoline and interest that will give it a maxitraction engine manufacturing company who is considered an authority in his line over the country has recently suggested the feasibility of using gasoline traction motors of high power as a substitute for the expensive electric motors and equipment at present in use on interurban trolley systems. In many sections of the country where a trolley system would be welcomed by folks along the right of way in town and country the territory adjacent is so sparsely settled as to make impractical as well as unprofitable the construction of an electric interurban line. The suggestion made would seem to offer a definite way out of the difficulty and will be seriously considered by promoters of interurban lines in many sections.

The First Potatoes.

Sir Walter Raleigh, who shares with Sir Francis Drake the honor of first introducing the potato in England, lived at Brixton, England, near Elizabeth's House. Formby, in Lancashire, also claims the honor of being the site of the first culture of the potato in that country. They are said to have been grown there by a Formby man who sailed with Sir Walter.

The earliest cultivation of the potato in the British islands was probably at Youghal, on the south coast of Ireland. where this great navigator had an estate.

It has been generally accepted that the potato was taken to Europe from Virginia and that it was cultivated there by the natives. Sir Joseph Banks and De Condelle both lent the weight of their authority to this view, but it has been ascertained that the Indians of Virginia, though they used a number of tuberous roots, did not know our potato.

One of these was the plant sometimes grown as an ornamental climber in our gardens and called by botanists Apios tuberosa. The Indians called the roots potatoes, and the French Canadians knew them as pommes de terre, and our potato, being a native of South America, was scarcely likely to be known to the Indians of Virginia.

Yet the potato was undoubtedly introduced in England as part of the cargo of one of Sir Richard Grenville's ships and landed at Plymouth, and the ship had gone direct from Virginia and called nowhere on the way. On the voyage home, however, it had encountered and captured a Spanish ship from Santo Domingo. The potatoes were a part of the cargo of the latter vessel.

The Useful Sunflower.

Sunflower seeds are said to give an extra fine flavor to eggs and are much used by the French people for that purpose. Remember this when you plant your garden and drop in some seeds around the edges and in the odd corners. A few planted near the sink drain will help to keep away miasma into the barrel as fast as it is picked and give you heads of seed that will be mammoth in size.

All About the Bolster.

If the Crimean war led to the introduction of the cigarette into England, says the London Chronicle, another war--the war of the crusades-may be said to have introduced another article which, from the strictly hygienic point of view, writes a correspondent, is almost as dangerous and quite as objectionable. The crusaders are said to have brought home with them the bolster, and, according to Dr. Cantlie, their wives, in ignorance of the only rational way of using the article-i. e., placed lengthwise as a support for the back of a person when lying on his side-and not knowing what else to do with it. put the bolster where it is still found on the beds of those who have not learned the wisdom of discarding it altogether-under the pillow.

Post Card Frieze.

A pretty way to dispose of one's souvenir postal cards is to have a frieze of them in the sleeping room tacked just beneath the molding. Good grouping of the cards must be carried out, so that as much continuity of scene as possible is secured. Where lake or river views are the subjects of the cards they should be placed so that the views seem to broaden out into each, other and not appear to be set into the frieze like a patch. So with landscape scenes and groups of buildings, especially in castle or cathedral views. postal card frieze well arraigned is very effective.

Pocketbook Atomizers.

For the woman who travels or who shops in the city on a dusty, warm day there is a pocket atomizer which she can carry around with her. It has a screw arrangement which keeps the perfume securely inside, no matter how much the rubber bulb may be pressed. Women who are taking long motor rides are carrying these filled with pungent cologne. Nothing so refreshes the face and wrists after a dusty ride as a spray of aromatic cologne that is not too sweet.

CHAPTER XL.

OUNSBURY was stretched in Twenty-four hours were gone since, having lashed four Indian dead among the branches of the burial trees, troopers, Sloux and rescued had returned to a post that was half in ashes. Now guards tramped the high board walk as before, keeping strict watch of their sulky prisoners; the ramshackle ferryboat, dragged away from the bar that had halted her, was tied up at her landing again; across the upper end of the parade gray tents had replaced the barracks, while farther on teams and scrapers were clearing away smoking ruins and dumping them into the river; squaws were thatching the roofs of the scouts' shanties, and hammers were ringing on new structures for Clothespin row. With cool enterprise Brannon was hastening toward recov-

There was other mending that was less rapid-in the stockade, where one nursed an arrow, another a bullet, wound; in the garrison hospital, where Kippis and a comrade stumped about on swathed feet, and on the Oliver gallery, where Lounsbury lay, his face not the usual fullness and a trifle white.

"The idea of you little apes asking for stories," he was saying to his audience, "when such popping good ones are happening right under your nose!" Felicia was the youngest of the seven. She gave back at him, prancing up and down insistently. "But we don't want stories of things around here," she cried willfully. "We want lords and ladies, and you gim 'em to us."

"Once upon a time," commenced Lounsbury, "in the middle of a gre-a-a-t, wi-i-i-de, fla-a-a-t country"-"Now," interrupted James, who came next to Felicia. His inflection was rising and suspicious.

"Look here," said the narrator, "don't get it into your precious noddles that this territory's the only flat country under the sun.'

"Go on, then, go on!"

"Well, this was such a place-great, wide, flat place. The lord lived there. He was called the Lord Harry-got his name from the way he acted. He was always making forced marches"-Again suspicion, which Lounsbury ignored.

violent demands. Oh, my "And (This to James, whose heels shin!" were curled up under him.) "Violent demands, I said. And so he had the cheek-um-the impudence to love, to love"- He shut his eyes in silent rhapsody.

"What uz her name?"

"Ah!" Lounsbury threw up his well to the captain," said Lounsbury in a low voice.

"Yes. And it will satisfy the K. O. I'm pretty sure. An officer's not to be blamed so much for things going gated to a corner, but solacing himself wrong when the traitor's practically within the lines. The K. O. himself old face a benediction, and, lastly, Dalcould have had that fire."

"Well, Dallas," Lounsbury was cheery again. "You and Marylyn own the bend, sure enough,"

There was a knock at the door. Then with a great show of backing and coughing young Jamieson appeared. "Frank," said Lounsbury, "quit your nonsense and tell us about the other side. Did the scout find anything?" "Yes, he did," answered Jamieson "and what proves how smart the whole plot was. What do you think? Well, 'just above where you met that Indian they found an outfit -- black blanket and a ragged skirt"-

A quiet fell. Dallas turned away to the windows. Lounsbury followed her. comforting.

Presently he returned, clearing his voice. "They copied Charley's clothes." he said. "I guessed that. As the Indian came up to me I spoke. But when he answered I knew-just a second too late. He gave me a terrible lick, but I caught it on my arm and came back with the gun. Don't know how I ever reached the shack." "Mr. Lo peeled in the grove and scampered," said Fraser. "We saw him," said Marylyn, "and I ran." "He's the only red that got free." "But, all the same, I plugged him," declared Lounsbury. "And I'll bet he's packing a pound of buckshot. Who was it, do you know.?" "Canada John."

Again the door opened and Oliver appeared. He closed the door and waited, his hand on the knob. Jamieson stepped forward. "Captain," he said, with mock injury, "these people"-he indicated the others-"do not mark the flight of the minutes. I don't wonder-it's natural. But I, sir, I, having been asked to breakfast by Mrs. Oliver, do. Is-is breakfast ready?" "Breakfast is ready," Oliver answered. His voice was unsteady. "Thank goodness for that!"

There was the sound of a faint cheer outside. Then some one went rushing up the plank walk before the house. The captain closed the windows.

"We shall give thanks for many things today," he said significantly. Fraser started, and his eyelids fluttered what his face strove to control. "What's all that outside?" It was Marylyn innocently. But Oliver gave a quick sign, pulling nervously at his mustache.

"Frank," he began, "a-a friend is coming home to us this morning." "A-a-ah!" It was near a groan.

"Wait—wait," firmly. "Give yourself a moment to guess. But-guess something good."

Jamieson moved like a man in pain. 'You mean-you mean"- he whisper-"Oh, captain, I've waited and ed. waited."

"Bravely-we all know that. And there's reward for you." Behind Jamieson the others were leaning forward, hopeful, fearful, in a fever of emotions. The cheering outside had grown.

More people were running up the walk -children, men, bareheaded women. "Jamieson," said the captain, "you'll be very calm?"

Jamieson relaxed, faltering forward. "I'll try! I'll try!" he promised. Lounsbury caught him. "Tell him, Oliver," he begged.

close upon her every move a certain young lieutenant, who cast longing glances toward the half lighted gallery; the surgeon, ungratefully relein his cup; David Bond, his wrinkled las and John.

Lounsbury was his former self, save for the plaster strips that had supplanted the bandages. Everywhere at once, he put the grip of two men into his well arm, smiling upon all like the very genius of happiness.

And Dallas-Mrs. Oliver had offered to sew her a plain white dress for the occasion, but she had chosen-since her John must of necessity come in his wonted attire-to appear in the simple frock she had worn the night they met in the swale. Above it her hair was braided and coiled upon her head like a crown. Her cheeks were a glowing red. Her eyes shone.

All was bedlam. Tongues clattered. Cups rattled. Laughter rose and fell. The seven, having no chairs, sat in a line under the leadership of Felicia and kicked their heels on the floor. Then-interrupting-a knock, loud, peremptory.

The company stilled. Jamieson open

There stood a jolly figure-the sutler's-apple round head and all.

"Well, Blakely?" asked the captain. Blakely hung his weight on a foot and, coughing behind his plump hand, bobbed his answer, "Steam's up, sir." Lounsbury had the center of the floor. He kept it, reaching out to bring Dallas beside him. They stood while the others crowded up to give them well wishes. Last of all came David Bond. "My daughter, my son," he said, "God bless you!' Lounsbury slipped Dallas' hand into his arm. Then the door opened for them and they went out-together.

* * . "John is a good man," said the evangelist, "and will make a good husband." He was seated with Fraser on the gallery watching a light in midstream dance its way through the dark.

Fraser sighed happily. "She's a dear girl," he murmured, looking back to where the lamp was moving about in Oliver's spare room. "She'd make a wife for a prince."

Presently he roused himself with another sigh. "You ought to see the way we fixed up the shack," he said. "White kick up curtains on the windows-that was Mrs. Oliver's idea; rose berries all over the mantel-Marylyn did that; I stuffed the fireplace full of sumac; then Michael sprinkled and swept out, and we covered the floor with Navajo blankets." "Little place looked cozy."

"Cozy as could be."

"And you, Mr. Fraser?" asked the evangelist.

Despite the Sheath Gown, Petticoats Are Still Worn.

PRETTY SKIRTS EXPENSIVE.

Less Trouble to Make New Petticoats Than to Alter the Old Ones-Work Is Simple if One Has a Good Pattern. A Five Gored Model.

If you want to be well dressed, comfortable and at the same time economical, why don't you make your own petticoats?

Despite the coming of the sheath gown, petticoats must still be worn. The pretty ones are expensive if one buys them ready made, and they are, as a matter of fact, by no means difficult to make up at home.

When it is taken into consideration that the average petticoat will surely require alterations of some kind-either

it is too long or it does not fit over the hips or the drawstrings make it so bulky at the waist line that the fullness must be put into a belt-it would seem that a few hours more employed in sewing would complete an entire petticoat, with the result that the fit, material and trimming would be undoubtedly of better quality and in many cases obtained at less cost than the ready to wear skirt. Then, too, the work is simple enough if one has a good pattern, yet many girls who will attempt making a waist, a much more difficult article, hesitate when it comes to an underskirt.

As five underskirts-two of wash material, a third of a fabric such as mohair or one of the silk substitutes and two dainty white ones-are none too many for the average girl, the saving in making these garments at home will be readily understood.

If underskirts are attempted at home it is well to select a five gored model, "I know. Even the captain's proud fitting the waist line-no band required -where it would be faced with a half plied sparingly to the lips. inch strip of the material cut on the bias For everyday wear such materials as striped gingham, seersucker or wiry

A PULPIT MALAPROP.

The Unfortunate Remarks of a Celebrated Clergyman.

A certain clergyman, widely known and as widely honored throughout the middle Atlantic states during his fifty and more years of earnest and telling labors (he has "passed on to his just reward" within the past few months).

began his clerical career inauspiciously. That is to say, he was given to the most unfortunate remarks and, it must be added, saw their unintended meaning the minute the words were out of his mouth, acknowledging the blunder by the hottest of blushes. As years passed and experience grew he broke himself of the habit, if it is so to be called, but friends and parishioners (in genuine affection and therefore not in violation of the good old rule of nil nisi bonum, though, for obvious reasons, it is on this very account the more necessary not to give the good man's name) still tell of the slips of his youthful tongue.

The first such remark of record came the second week after he had gone into the pulpit of his first charge. He was announcing a communion service for the folowing Sunday, with confirmation in the evening, and he put it, "The Lord will be with us in the forenoon and the bishop in the evening."

At another time, when his congregation had tried hard, but without success, to raise by contribution a sum of money to meet the interest charges on the usual mortgage, he announced: "I need not say here how much this church stands in need of immediate funds. We have tried to obtain these in the customary way and have tried honestly. Now we are going to see what a bazaar will do."

Perhaps his last faux pas came in a sermon directed against the very human fault of vanity. "Many a good woman comes in God's house to show off (perhaps she doesn't quite realize it, but the fact is unchanged)-to show off her best clothes." Then he glanced across the crowded pews and added, "I am thankful, dear friends, to see that none of you comes here for so unworthy a reason."

Pretty Lips Hard to Acquire.

It is harder to acquire and keep pretty lips than it is many little points which women strive for. One cannot have pretty lips if they are not healthy, and to be healthy the general health must be good. If glycerin agrees with the skin, there is nothing better for the lips than glycerin and rosewater in equal parts.

A famous beauty whose lips are firm, red and healthy looking has a little trick of painting the lips every morning with glycerin and rosewater, applied with a little brush. With this she rubs the lips until they glow.

If glycerin does not agree with the skin, pure almond oil is the best lotion. Moistening the lips with cold water will make them firm and rosy if they are carefully dried, so as to prevent them from becoming chapped and rough.

Englishwomen have a way of perfuming the lips before going out in the evening, and they claim that besides perfuming the lips it is good for them. This is the way they make their cologne:

Put a grain of musk in a pint bottle and add to it half an ounce of oil of rose geranium. Then fill up the bottle with spirits of cologne. In a month this perfume will be ready to use. A drop or so of attar of roses may be added to the cologne. It should be ap-

A little while, and Fraser sprang up. "They're there!" he cried. "See, see! They're home!" Far away on the bend the eyes of the shack were bright.

"Marylyn and I will wait for the them.'

'He won't go, poor old chap!"

as he by death." of him now."

was a triumphant ring in David Bond's voice. "Few men gain as much hand helplessly. "No name was splendid enough for her-not one. But he called her-for want of a better, mind you-he called her the Rose of the South."

The door from the entry opened. Dallas came slowly out. "Go on," urged Felicia, " 'Rose of the South.' "

But Lounsbury was looking at Dallas. "Rose of the South," he repeated. a queer tremor running around his mouth "as far south as-as Texas." Dallus seemed about to turn.

Lounsbury hurried to put the well hand behind his ear. "Felicia," he said, "didn't I hear your mother call?" Felicia rocked herself from foot to foot. "Oh, you go on," she said over-bearingly, "or you might fall out of the hammock." But the spell was broken. Her sisters had pounced upon Dallas. The boys, getting a whiff from regions down the hall, made off. She followed with backward demands for "the rest of it" later on and carried the last of the five with her.

Lounsbury sat up and put out his hand. The fun was gone from his eyes.

"Dallas, you've had your talk," he said quietly, but with a hint of anxi-"I know it's all right. It's got to ety. be."

She came part way to him and stood where morning glory vines climbed a lattice. "Marylyn's just been telling me," she answered. She raised her head, very intent upon the flagstaff.

"Dear?" he questioned. She glanced down at him, smiling through tears. "All the time they liked each other," she said happily. "He calls her Marylyn, and she calls him Robert."

He got up and went to her. "When I saw him there in the road by that cottonwood bunch lugging her along so careful, looking so scared—and the way he held her on Buckskin!" He caught her hand.

"There's one thing that hurts," she answered. "That it kept you out there watching, and I didn't even go to you -but I-I"-

"You were doing the white thing by that little sister. That makes it all the sweeter." "She was afraid I'd scold," still through tears. "You scold!"

him. "Bless your sweet hearts!" he said when he faced the couple. "Mary lyn, you rested? Fraser, you look idiotically happy."

"I'm not alone," retorted the lieuten ant. "I'd hate to describe you this minute, your face beaming through all that lint."

"Save yourself the trouble here before my future wife."

Fraser turned to Marylyn. "Phew But we're important! Listen to him!" "Dallas wants to go back to the shack. Can a' ordinary everyday trooper look after the finest two-yearold and the finest team in Dakota? Not by a long shot! And I'm not going to let her go alone," soberly, "after what's happened. Can't take any more chances."

The captain turned the knob, took Jamieson by a wrist and led him out through the entry.

On the gallery was a second group. It whispered. It laughed. It cried. It looked north to where the road came down from the landing.

"Easy now, easy," cautioned Oliver. He patted Jamieson, led him down the steps and faced him up the line.

"There, my dear boy," he said. On the upper edge of the parade ground the men of B troop were surrounding some travelers, caps in air. With their cheers mingled wild shouts.

And one of them was singing the lines of a song fervent, loud and martial: "Glory, glory, halleluiah!

Glory, glory, halleluiah!"

For a moment, as one who questions his own sight and hearing, Jamieson gazed before him. Then he flung up his arms and sprang forward with a great cry:

"Mother, mother! Alice!"

Down the line they had taken up the singing. And to it, the troopers dividing, the travelers came into full view. There was a wagon with red wheels, a green box and drawn by a milk white horse. On its seat were two women, who clung to each other as they looked about. Above them a cross of rude boards stood straight up into the sunlight of the morning. And beside Pitt's Old College.

Pembroke college, Cambridge, was founded in the fourteenth century by the widow of Aymer de Valence, earl of Penibroke. Few foundations in England have been so closely connected with the revival of learning and the reformation or have produced so many distinguished alumni from a small goviety. Edmund Spenser publisheá promising poems when an undergraduate here, and Gray migrated to Pembroke from rowdy Peterhouse. William Pitt when at Pembroke associated chiefly with the dons, from whom he is alleged to have learned that partiali ty for port wine which enabled him to "see two speakers," but shortened his existence.-Westminster Gazette.

Sir Frederick Gori Ouseley used to tell a story about the famous Clarendon Press, at Oxford, which shows how very easily serious blunders may be made. It was when a new edition of the Bible was coming out, and not till the final revision of the text, when in another moment it would have been irrevocably fixed in immortal type, that the printer was discovered to have given the following "free" rendering of I Corinthians xv, 52:

"The trumpet shall sound, * * * and we shall be hanged."

French Chalk For Spots. If a girl is away from a cleaner's and she finds one of her best frocks spotted with grease, she can try the simple remedy of French chalk and a hot iron. The chalk is spread thickly over the spot until all the grease is absorbed. Then a piece of blotting paper is put over it, and a warm, not hot, iron is held over it to draw the grease into the paper.

Rub off the chalk with a soft silk or muslin rag, and the spot will probably have disappeared.

Now Missing.

A boy who was employed in a large house was warned that he would be dismissed if he broke any of the china. Just before a dinner party he was carrying a huge pile of plates from the kitchen to the dining room.

As he was going upstairs his foot slipped and the plates were broken in pieces. He at once went up to the drawing room where his mistress was, put his head in at the door and shouted, "The plates are all smashed, and I'm off!"

Arabian Cloth.

The woman whose windows need new curtains next winter might do worse than choose the new material called Arabian cloth, which sells at a small price.

It is a kind of cotton voile, quite thin, and has taken to itself all the wonderful designs in vivid colors that are coming into favor on all kinds of materials.

The freight, known as 153, bound for Muskegon, was shoving a string of cars from the main line on to a siding when the special from Grand Rapids to St. Joseph and Benton Harbor, carrying 300 excursionists, crashed into it, completely demolishing both engines and telescoping the baggage and smoking car. The engine of the special was thrown into the ditch. Going Down Grade.

The accident occurred a half mile park dock. He was one of the oldest east of the town of Waverly. The in this country and retired from active passenger train was traveling down a grade only eighteen miles an hour, faster time being impossible. Engineer Vanderbelt, leaning from the cab window, peering ahead into the heavy mantle of smoke, saw the freight loom up but a hundred yards in front of him. Quickly applying the emergency brakes, he shouted a warning to his fireman, Clarence Mates, and both men jumped.

Vanderbelt landed on his feet and then plunged head foremost into the cinders along the tracks. His left ankle was broken, his face pounded almost to a pulp, and it is believed he is internally injured. He is at the home of relatives in this city, and his death is expected. Mates sustained badly lacerated knees.

The exact cause of the wreck is not known, but it is said the freight was not supposed to be on the main line at that time. It was stretched half way around the switch, although orders had been issued giving the special the right of way. As the special was five minutes late, no cause can be assigned for the presence of the freight.

That many were no killed or seriously injured is miraculous. The telescoped smoker carried forty passengers. All of those injured excent the engineer and fireman were riding in this coach. Engineer C. Kraft and Conductor A. Hines, with the fireman of the freight, jumped before the crash and escaped uninjured. Five of feeling ill, and, as he started for port the guns, horses, men and equipcars of the freight were reduced to kindling wood.

The hurrying, workaday crowd made Broadway seem sober, alien. Everybody in the car looked pinched and tired and cold. For the last few minutes, Olive Hastings had been considering a subject unpleasantly recurrent in her thoughts nowadays-Is Life Worth Living? Then her eyes, incurious, lack-luster, roving along the row opposite, fell on a face.

It was a face that she had not seen more than a half dozen times all told. It was a face that she had not seen once in the last two years. But it was the same face about which, nightly, she wove her waking dreams. And it had all its old magic. Her heart began to leap, her head to whirl, her blood quickened to racing speed. Praying that the emotional illumination would not flare through her skin she managed to follow up her recognition with a bow and a smile.

Lawrence Crane had arisen and was coming toward her. She made a place at her side. In another instant her hand was in his. "This is perfectly charming!" she was saying.

"It's providential," he announced. She felt his amused gaze beating through her eyelashes. "I've only been here a day or two and I've had it on my mind to look you up the first free evening. That's to-night, I may add—unless you're going to be cruel to find another engagement."

There was the old fascination in his voice—she noted them one by one-well-remembered tricks of inflection; it was distinctly a "magnetic" voice.

She was trying to stay the quiver of her lips. But she had to hold the lower one still with her teeth after she had said: "Yes, I'll be at home."

How wonderful he was! How handsome! It made her dizzy to meet his eyes in that long-ago visit to Helen. Undeveloped, silent, awkward as she was, every word that he gave her seemed a caress. Now it was even worse-his very presence was a vibration, his words were bliss.

Was she dreaming? Had the skies fallen? She tried to find something to hold to. "Everything comes to him who waits," came uppermost in her mind in stupid reiteration. She wondered if that explained. Next she was conscious of being glad that she wore Helen's gray dress-it was the most becoming thing she had. Heavens! he must have seen Helen in it again and again. But men never remembered. Would Helen really have married him, she wondered. He had engaged in a desperate flirtation with her cousin during that week that they had both met him for the first time, and his flirtation had actually lapped over the announcement of Helen's betrothal to another man. The first thing that had occurred to Olive when she heard of Helen's broken engagement. six months ago, was that Lawrence Crane would renew his suit. Perhaps he had, and perhaps Helen had refused him. She would not speak to him of her, she decided-especially now when there was a coolness between herself and Helen.

talked to him. But while she was chatting her swiftest, laughing her merriest and coquetting with him in the way that seemed to be the natural effervescence of her mood, her heart was beating to the single refrain-"He is coming to-night!"

That night on her way home, she perpetrated the unheard-of extravagance of buying a bunch of violets, and later ordering a fire in the parlor. After dinner she put on the onefrivolous gown she had afforded in two years, a soft, rose-pink crepe, and tucking the violets into her belt went down to meet her guest.

"Gracious! you are doing the thing up brown!" he said irrelevantly once. gazing about the queer room with its faded magnificence.

Fortunately they had much to say at first about the people in Worcester who, Crane acknowledged, had given him the time of his life in that pleasant week two years ago. She could tell him much for, until their recent estrangement, Helen had kept her well informed. Faithful to her resolution, however, she did not mention Helen's name. Nor did he. When he left it was with more than one admiring, farewell glance at Olive's flushed and sparkling face.

In the next two weeks she saw little of Merriam, for he was sent on a business trip into the middle of the state. But Crane came two nights later, skipped a night, then three in succession, skipped a night, then constantly.

Olive was beginning to get over hershyness. Now, occasionally, she dared to meet his eyes in a pyschological, soul-to-soul conflict, which he often tacitly admitted to be a draw by shifting his gaze.

For the most part, however, he still did the talking. But even there she was beginning to assert herself. And the drollness of her point of view, the swiftness of her retorts often left him. beggared of words. Once or twiceshe had carried joking warfare into his very camp. That last night their intimacy had reached the point where it allowed them to meditate an instant in silent wonder over a subtle coincidence in taste. He interrupted it to say carelessly: "Oh, what's become of that little cousin of yours that I met in Worcester?"

Olive knitted her brows for a considering second. Then an awful certainty zigzagged through the crystal of her happiness, shattering it to a million fragments.

"A little dark thing," he went on. 'She was staying with you. What is, the matter?

Olive was staring, stricken. "Will you tell me what my name s?" she asked, stupidly. He laughed. "Helen Hastings, of course. She pulled herself together. The new laugh that he had helped her to find in herself rippled out bravely. 'Now I've got it." she said in tri-"From the first I wondered umph. how you happened to remember me so well when you saw me so few times. And you made a mistake; I'm not Helen Hastings. I'm the little dark cousin that you speak of. My fatherdied soon after I met you, and I became a stenographer.'

"You're not Helen Hastings?" he said, stupidly.

She nodded her head in assent. They tried to talk down the con-

The elder man went out after a little while, and she was left to tetea-tete with Merriam. She had never talked to any man in her life as she after an interval.

silent, joyless on her part-a little too vivacious on his. Then for a long time she did not see him.

The Sunday after his last call Merriam appeared, back from a successful trip. He came into the room likea sea-breeze, stinging her into a recrudescence of her lost hilarity with an impetuous onslaught of narrative. He insisted on taking her away for the day. When he left her, she had regained all her lately lost self-confidence.

She had little chance to lose it again, for in the next month he was constantly with her.

One Sunday, two months later, she was surprised by a visit from Crane. She was at her very best with him that day, for his eyes had no more effect upon her than a pair of pebbles. It was she who did the talking, he the listening. Before he went, he startled her by an offer of marriage. In the moment in which she hunted for words in which to refuse it, she wondered if Helen also had rejected him. He refused to accept her "no" and left almost elated. She felt now she might be in possession of data that would assure him of what her own words evidently could not.

As a matter of fact she had the evidence that very night, for Merriam. announced that the firm had decided on sending him to Goldfields the next week. Then he abruptly asked her to marry him.

She accepted.

"But there are some things I want to tell you," she said, eying him curiously. "In the first place I didn't get you quite honestly. There was another man once-and I thought he cared for me-and, so, on the strength of his admiration-"

"Go on," he said, promptly.

"Well, I feel it on my conscience to tell you that you're getting an article that isn't much in demand. In all my experience I never had but one proposal and-"

"What do the bandar-log of this town know about a real woman?" he she was beginning when the door interrupted, contemptuously. "Go on." "And I've never been kissed in my life."

> "You're going to be kissed now," he said.

"I'm glad I waited," she admitted,

WHY GO TO COLLEGE

An Education is Capital Well Invested

We are often asked should a young nan or woman go to college? Nowadays the thing of going to college or not is in the air. We hear it discussed a great deal and hear many arguments both for and against a college course. As to the propriety of it let it be said that all depends on so many circumstances that a direct answer is mpossible. That every young man or woman should go to college is just as nonsensical as that no one should go it all. Real genius is independent of all conditions, and hence some of the world's greatest men never entered a college door. Such was the case of Abraham Lincoln. It always seems to is that a college education would have spoiled him and crippled his rare genius. But all such men have a trainng of some kind and equal to a colege education. But on the other hand, all other things being equal, a college education is necessarily of great value. Because a few or even many college graduates are fools is no argument against the college. The college cannot change the nature of men or women. If they

THUMB NOTES.

John Slack took advantage of the rural carriers' holiday Monday and drove over to Cass City to look up some business matters.--Ubly Courier.

After biting 14 other dogs, a flock of geese and a little girl, a supposed mad dog was cornered in an old school house in Juanita township by a posse and killed.

A dish of varnish placed on a stove caught fire and ignited the clothes of Mrs. A. Forsythe, of Imlay City. She ran to neighbrs but they were unable to extinguish the flames and she died later.

Harry Stevenson, a strapping young man, was arrested souhteast of Alma Thursday for wife desertion. Stevenson's home is in Caro, Mich., and several weeks ago he left his young wife and baby there in destitute circumstances, and disappeared. A Caro deputy sheriff located him the first of the week and went and got him.

Does advertising pay? Well, I Persons wishing employment in the should say it does! Last week a Be-Caro Sugar Factory during the comment merchant advertised fresh dairy ing Campaign should enter their ap butter for sale. The compositor substituted an "h" for a "d" and the ad Signed: Michigan Sugar Company, read "Fresh Hairy Butter for Sale." A smart barber called up the grocer and offered to shave the butter at standard rates. The grocer got mad and licked the barber, breaking his nose and otherwise disfiguring him so that he was compelled to call upon the doctor, who charged him a tenner for services rendered. The next day 1 85 the barber met the editor on the 7 50 street and threw a brick at him, giv-

BARN RAISING IN NOVESTA.

Emmet Holcomb of Novesta township raised a large basement barn on Tuesday. A goodly number of men assisted in raising the barn while 70 ladies prepared a bountiful supper on the lawn. A jolly good time was had by everyone. Mr. Holcomb's barn is 40x60, with 18 foot post and 8 foot basement, and will be a fine structure when completed.

The ladies are happy (especially the young ladies) with the thought that soon they will be entertained at Rose his new barn.

Edwin Little was sentenced last week to forty-five days in the county jail for the theft of bicycle at Vassar. It is reported that this is the same man that helped himself to E. E. Jameson's wheel on July 29th.-Millington Gazette.

Cass City, Michigan Saturday, Sept. 26, 1908 To Commence Promptly at 2 O'Clock, P. M. Standard Time Place of Sale, Agar Bros.' Barn

The Standard Vehicle Co., of Pontiac, Michigan, will ship one full carload of finished vehicles to the above named place and will offer them at public auction to the highest bidder without any reserve; this car will contain about twenty-five jobs consisting of all kinds of top buggies, open driving wagons, spring wagons, surreys, etc., in both steel and rubber tires.

During the last three months on account of the vehicle business being so very dull, this factory has not been able to dispose of their usual output of work so take this means of reducing their stock in order to raise funds to meet some obligations that have got to be paid. These vehicles were not made for the purpose of an auction sale but are regular goods such as this well known factory has been turning out and sending to their trade all over the country. This factory has been making vehicles for over seven years and there is no factory in Pontiac that has a better reputation for getting out fine finished work.

These vehicles will be open for inspection two days prior to the sale, at Agar Bros.' barn and any one contemplating purchasing a carriage of any kind should not fail to attend this sale as probably an opportunity of this kind will never present itself in your vicinity again.

Terms of Sale :

$10 down, balance running six months with approved inotes at 6 per cent. interest.
