ALL FAVORABLE BUT THE WEATHER

Cass City Fair Attracted Many Visitors.

Premiums Will Be Paid in Full to Exhibitors. The Receipts Reached $1,000.

The nineteenth annual fair of the Cass City Fair association was held last week and everything was favorable for one of the most successful fairs in the history of the association, except the weather.

The entries for exhibits in the different departments taken on and benumerous and all of the departments MRS. R. MCCONNELL were well filled with exhibits, a few of the departments having larger displays than usual. The agricultural hall showed a fine line of vegetables Remains Were Taken to Hillman and equalled the exhibit at the state fair in quality. The showing of sheep and cattle was large and the divisions of poultry, horses and swine had many entries and fine exhibits.

On Wednesday morning the weather man let fall a bountiful shower of rain and Thursday opened cold and chilly. Early that morning people began coming in from the country and on the train and the crowd was much larger than was expected under the severe weather conditions. Overcoats were valued articles of clothing and much in evidence, but everyone seemed happy and able to find plenty of amusement and enjoyment even if it was cold. The race summary for Thursday is as follows: NAMED RACE.

DIED AT ROYSTON

for Burial.

She Was a Former Resident of This Vicinity Where She Was Well Known,

Mrs. Rene McConnell died at her home at Rdyston, Mich., on September 23, after an illness of only two weeks. She was well known in this vicinity having lived here for several years, going to Royston five years ago with her husband where they have since made their home.

Birdie Jenereaux was born August 23, 1879, in Canada, and was married October 16, 1895, to Rene McConnell of Evergreen. She leaves one son, Elmer Lee, aged nine years. Her father, David Jenereaux, of Tillsonburg, Ont.; two sisters, Mrs. Wm. Carson, of this place; and Mrs. Eugene Carson, of Tillsonburg, Ont.; and two brothers, Elmer Jenereaux, of Sand Point, Idaho, and Wm. Jenereaux of Hay Creek also survive her.

The remains were taken to Hillman for burial, a distance of thirteen miles from Royston, which is an inland place. A large number of the friends of the family followed the remains to their last resting place. During her illness Mrs. McConnell chose the text for her funeral sermon, which was Isa. 40:31, and made other arrangements. All her relatives, except the brother in Idaho and the sister in Tillsonburg were in attendance at the funeral

Mrs. McConnell joined the Free Methodist church at Hay Creek a few years ago where she always retained membership. In her northern home the religious privileges were limited, there being no church in that vicinhere. The races on Friday resulted ity, and for some time past their 2 1 1 2 1 vices and the attendance was unusually large.

No Evidence of Fraud.

In his comment on the recount, Governor Warner says that not the slightest evidence of fraud has developed, and what votes have been thrown out have been canceled by reason of no wrongdoing on the part of the voters, but because of minor technicalities which the board has been obliged to black hat, long black coat, black obey, and he adds:

In an opinion of the attorney general's department, the recount can proceed beyond Oct. 14, provided it is concluded in time for the ticket to be printed for the election.

Lansing, Mich., Oct. 7.—The board of state canvassers adjourned Tuesday night until Thursday morning, hoping by that time to receive an opinion from the supreme court on the questions raised by Bradley attorneys which will determine whether the recount is to be continued or the canvass stopped and a certificate be issued to Warner entitling him again to have the premier place on the Republican state ticket.

Briefs were presented to the supreme court late Tuesday afternoon by attorneys concerned in the recount, as well as by Attorney General Bird, who has advised the board in its action and now sides with the Warnerattorneys in urging to the court that pencilmarked ballots should be counted and Bradley denied privilege of bringing the ballot boxes from more precincts before the board.

Ficet in Hurricane.

The Atlantic battleship fleet at Manila has safely outridden a terrific hurricane which swept Manila bay for twelve hours and did much damage

Typhoon signals were displayed early Sunday morning, but the storm broke over the bay suddenly and unexpectedly at noon. It was impossible to hoist the cutters and the launches belonging to the fleet because of the danger of smashing them against the steel sides of the battleships, and the little craft were sent scurrying inside the breakwater into the Pasig river, where they remained all night. The storm quickly increased in intensity, and the torrential rains shut in the ships.

At 8 o'clock Sunday night, the storm had reached its height and gradually calmed down until midnight, when it was comparatively calm, although heavy seas swept across the harbor. During the storm all the battleships had steam up, ready for any omer gency. Rear Admiral Sperry finally ordered the flagship Connecticut and the Kansas, Minnesota, Vermont, Virginia and Ohio under way. They were close to the breakwater, and Admiral Sperry feared they might drag anchors. The six vessels steamed down close to Cavite, where they anchored.

Detroit Wins Pennant.

What is said to have been the closest pennant contest ever waged by American league baseball clubs came to an end in Chicago on Tuesday, when Detroit, champions of 1907, captured the emblem for another year by defeating Chicago by the score of 7 to 0. Detroit, Cleve land and Chicago struggled all season for first place, never being far from each other in the percentage table, and not until Tuesday could the win ner be picked. St. Louis put Cleveland out of the running Monday, leav ing the field to Detroit and Chicago.

Fairs Help Trade.

Bradstreet's weekly review of trade

Cooler weather is the mainspring of the moderate improvement in retail and jobbing trade reported at most cities this week. Additionally help ful features have been the numerous fairs and festivals which have enlarged distribution locally at many points. While there are reports of holding of crops, notably at the south, where prices are much lower than a year ago, the crop movement is liberal as a whole.

Reports from industries are rather better as a whole. Good reports come from the lumber trade south and west. and a good volume of building is go

RICE ENTREES.

Tasty Dishes That May Be Compounded Quickly and Easily.

The housewife who is merely acquainted with rice in its dual aspectthat is, as a pudding or as a more or less indifferently cooked adjunct to curry-will be, I imagine, greatly surprised when she finds that quite a number of delightfully savory little entrees may be achieved with its aid.

Here, then, are a couple of recipes vherewith she may proceed to astonish the mere man at dinner or lunch-

Boil half a pound of well washed rice in salted water till very tender. Drain thoroughly. Let it dry. Place an ounce of either butter or oil (roughly, a large teaspoonful) in a clean stewpan. When very hot add a finely minced onion and a few picked shrimps. Fry for a few minutes, then add the rice and fry, turning frequently, until of a light golden hue. Add cayenne or white pepper to taste and a large heaped tablespoonful of grated. cheese. Any sort will do, but Parmesan gives the best results. Make very hot. Pile upon a hot dish and serve

Take some smoked sardines and make them hot on a saucer in the oven in a little of their own oil. Have ready half a pound of well cooked It must have been cooked in salted water till very tender. Drain it well. Dry it. Place a large tablespoonful of either butter or oil in a clean stewpan. Melt or bring to the boil, then add the rice, together with a teaspoonful of very finely minced shallot. Fry a light golden hue. Add a large tablespoonful of tomato catchup, a tablespoonful of grated cheese and pepper to taste. Make very hot. Pile up on a hot dish. Drain the sardines quickly on clean blotting paper. Garnish round the base and serve at once. Anchovies may be used in place of sardines if liked. Turn the rice frequently when frying it.

THE BUSINESS WOMAN.

Smiles Will Help to Lighten the Day's Work.

Business women should enjoy lifeevery bit of it. To do this they must keep alive and not forget they are liv-

Many business women have lost and are losing a third of their lives. The instant they leave their homes in the morning they become entirely different beings, forgetting entirely that they are alive. They become mechanical beings for their employers. They never smile, never tell or think of humorpenings of the day. These would flavor their existence.

This is not the view of an idealist or dreamer who spends all of life in trying to find amusement to pass the hours away and who only pictures the business woman's life, but is the view of one hard in the harness of the business world and one who strongly advocates working as hard as strength will permit, always busy as a bee and working earnestly and faithfully for the employer's interests.

Cultivate a smile, be an optimist, enoy every minute of your lives, sisters! You will profit and be years younger instead of years older if you do.

The Ironing Board.

Holland window shades no longer fit for the windows may be utilized in several ways. First, they should be minutes in cold water and then boiled in soap and water in the boiler for five minutes. They can then be easily cleaned. They may be used to cover the ironing board and will be most durable and satisfactory. They may also be shaped into aprons by cutting.

Mutton Tallow Uses. Ink stains may be removed by pouring melted mutton tallow over them before putting the garments in the wash. The tallow should be allowed to get cold before the garment is washed.

HOUSEWIFE HINTS.

Mayonnaise seasoned with chili sauce gives a variation for fish and meat salads.

Carpets should be beaten on the wrong side first and then more gently on the right. Never put a carpet down on a damp floor, for this often results in the carpet becoming ruined. If when using lemon for flavoring you need only half a one, put the other

FISH SUPERSTITIONS.

Queer Old Time Notions, Some

Which Still Survive. The one fish medicine of which modern science thoroughly approves is cod liver oil, and this, though in far less nauseous form than formerly, is swalowed in tons every year.

In old days a much wider use was made of fish as cures for various evils, and some of these practices have survived to the present day. Some little time ago a boy died of epilepsy in a north Wales parish. The doctor, called In too late, inquired if the deceased had been given any medicine. "Oh, yes," was the answer. "We caught a trout, drowned it in new milk and gave it to the boy."

Dels are supposed to possess all kinds of virtues. In the dark ages of medicine a powder made of eels' liver was considered an absolute specific for deafnegs and was also employed in cases of ngue or fever. A decoction of eels' fat is still used by Dutch peasants as a remedy for falling hair.

But the most valuable part of the cel belt of eelekin as a preventive against theumatism, and some believe that a garter made of the skin of this snakelike fish worn next to the human skin as a preventive not only against rheusimilar injuries.

Another cure for rheumatism, which finds favor with salt water fisherman, is a red herring. The herring being the most plentiful of all the sea fish, a number of superstitions have attached themselves to it. For luck through the ensuing year one must be sure to eat a herring on New Year's day,

Fishermen believe that each shoal is headed by a king herring, which is more than double as large as any of its followers. They believe that when one of the "kings" comes up in the net it should be thrown overboard; otherwise the next day's fishing will be a failure. -Pittsburg Gazette-Times.

THE HEADSMAN.

He Used the Sword and Not the Ax Prior to 1483.

I am inclined to think that prior to 1483 the sword and not the ax was usually employed as the weapon for judicial decapitation and that a block was dispensed with, the victims receiving their doom "meekly kneeling upon their knees," and in this opinion I am fortified by the concurrence of an eminent clerical historian. This learned writer agreed with me that the ax did not become the "regulation" lethal implement until after the rough and ready "heading" of Lord Hastings on the Tower green, when he was summarily dispatched by order of the protector, Gloucester. In this instance, according to the chroniclers, the victim's neck was stretched upon a piece of timber then in use for the repair of the adjacent church of St. Peter ad Vincula, probably a "putlog," part of the scaffolding which, we read, "conveniently lay in Contemporary accounts the way." seem to indicate that the executioner straddled over the prone body, and from this position I infer that the decapitation was effected by the tool known as an adz, the cutting edge of which is at a right angle to and not in a plane with the haft. I may add that the only contemporary reference I have come across of the use or proposed use of an ax and ck for inflicting capital punishment to this tragedy is in one of the series of letters describing the

The Hair.

A single hair, which can support a weight of two ounches, is so elastic that it may be stretched to one-third of Its entire length and then regain its former size and condition. Dr. Pincus has measured the growth of hair by cutting off circles about one inch in diameter from the heads of healthy men and so comparing the growth of the patches with that of the rest of the hair. He found that the growth rate generally became slower after cutting; that in some cases the hair on the patches grew at the same rate as the pest, but that it never grew any faster,

The ordinary length of the hair on the head ranges between twenty-two inches and about forty-five inches, the latter being considered unusually long. -London Standard, Belle-This new hat I got doesn't does cure Eczema.

There is no doubt about the matter whatever. A great many letters are on file in our office from grateful patients, telling of the quick and easy way in which Wonderful Dream Salve has removed all traces of this torturing skin affliction.

Mr. John T. Kealey, a well-known business man, located in the Stevens Bldg., Detroit, Mich., was recently cured of a bad case of Edzema of fourteen years' standing. After treating with many doctors and taking many remedies without relief, Mr. Kealey induced to try Wonderful Dream Salve, and in four weeks was entirely cured.

He says:

"I certainly consider this a remarkable cure, masmuch as I have spent hundreds of dollars in the fourteen years of annoyance with this troublesome itching skin ailment. I have since the cure of my case heard of other cures, some of them even more remarkable than mine, which go toward demonstrating the value of Wonderful Dream Salve as a great skin healer."

CURRENT COMMENT

BY F. HLUMP

Jesus in His Relation to Wealth.

It is undoubtedly true that some of the sayings of Jesus bring him very close to the general position of socialism. If wealth is not for purely personal enjoyment but is to be used for the good of society, and the ideal society is a brotherhood, then it is not a long step to the belief that any form of private property is anti-christian, and that society itself can best administer economic matters for the good of its members. The fact that the disciples had a common purse and the primitive Jerusalem church had all things in common might lend some color to such an interpretation.

It is therefore by no means strange that there have always oeen those who believed that socialism has its root in christianity. Moreover, according to Herr Todt, every christian who is in earnest with his faith has a socialistic vein in him, and every socialist, however bitter his hatred of religion may be, has an unconscious christianity in his heart. However, it is useless to attempt to discover modern socialism in the words of Jesus. While there is nothing inconsistent in such a system were it once proved to be the means best adapted to ennoble humanity, but just as true is it that there is nothing inconsistent with a rational individualism. We heartily sympathize with Mr. Lenzner as he denounces the grinding profit system called "capitalism or individualism," but Jesus does not stand for socialism as against individualism. He would make society good by making the individual good. Love of neighbor as of self tends to harmonize inequality "by the proportionate union and balance of altruism and egoism." It produces the highest type of manhood, secures natural rights to all and takes away the hindrances to equal natural opportunity to all. "The strong shall bear the infirmities of the weak," "unto whom much is given of them much shall be required."

Property is a trust held for God and is to be administered according to his will. Everyone holds his title as gift of God. Private property is inalienable from personality. Jesus never taught that form of socialism that would equalize the sharing of products. On the contrary, when using commercial matters as illustrations he did not condemn competition, and in one instance he distinctly recognized the principle of difference in rewards. "Unto him that hath shall be given," comes with ill grace from a socialist. The parable of the market place has no economic force; but if it had, equality in wages is not its point but the owner's right to do as he saw fit with his own property. Matt. 20:17. Farthest possible was Jesus from the curse of most socialistic programs—the assumption that the ideal social order is based upon an increase in creature comforts. The same Jesus that fed the many withstood the temptation to use his higher powers to satisfy mere hunger and deliberately rebuked those who sought to exploit his philanthropy while refusing his teaching. John 6:26, 27, 66. Jesus was not an economist and had little interest in abstract questions. With him the search for wealth is a moral matter and its use is also a moral matter. If one cannot be faithful in the unrighteous mammon, he is unfit to be entrusted with the true riches.

Jesus was neither a flatterer nor a demagogue. He neither forbids trusts nor advises them; he neither forbids trades unions, strikes and lock-outs, nor advises them; he was neither socialist nor individualist. Jesus was a friend neither of the workman nor the rich man as such. The question he puts to a man is not "Are you rich?" but "Have you done the will of my Father?" He calls on the poor man to sacrifice as well as the rich man. He was the Son of Man, not the son of a class of men. He would have all men do to others as they wish to be done by.

Governor Hughes at Close Range.

It was our privelege to see Governor Hughes at close range the other day while he was addressing the republican state convention in the city of Detroit. Mr. Hughes is one of our big men. We had read much about the listinguished gentleman from the Empire state, but not until now did the opportunity present itself to see and hear him At first glance one is fascinated by his rugged appearance. In every movement of his tall and strong physique there gleams forth a sensitiveness that is singularly impressive—the sensitiveness of fine perceptions, of high aims, of pure actions. His look is penetrating. His lips are large and firm. He has a fine straight nose. He has a big jaw covered by a shaggy beard which conveys a sense of the fighter. His teeth are big and white. They suggest power His words are deliberate. Every sentence carries conviction. Every movement shows painstaking care. His whole being indicates dignity, energy, alertness-a man who will have only a cause that is good. We have never heard a man who can analyze a subject more effectually than he does. Mr. Hughes repeats his points at different places, driving them home to his hearers by the use of apt illustrations and varied explanations. He sticks to his text. With great pertinacity he pounds into the comprehension of the people the issues which must not be obscured by cheers, or music, or excitement, or partisanship-or slander. There is the tenacity of purpose that made him the great investigator of the Gas Trust and the Insurance swindle, and that has made him to be one of the most unique characters in our national life.

Mr. Rockefeller and His Wealth.

The daily press informs us that Mr. Rockefeller has again assumed active control of his vast interests. It is our opinion that now is the time when he should place himself in the right attitude to the general public by distribut ing far greater sums than he has yet given for purposes of general use Whether or not the business methods of his companies have been unfair, it is the wealth produced by the efforts of laboring people all over the country that has, through a peculiar combination of economic conditions somehow been poured into his private coffers. Under the strict application of the golden rule no man could possibly have acquired such wealth as that which Mr. Rockefeller now possesses. The best thing that men so situated can do is to actively promote the tendency—a natural and christian tendency in a country of equality such as our country is or should be-to a more normal diffusion of benefits and a wider distribution of prosperity. If Mr. Rockefeller has done society an injustice the time is ripe to make wrongs right as far as that may be possible. He has done much for educational institutions. It is praiseworthy. But what about the thousands who can hardly afford the luxury of illuminating their barren homes with kerosene oil? He claims to be a follower of Jesus. What did Jesus teach in regard to wealth? He showed that wealth is good only when it is a social good and when its pursuit does not weaken those impulses within a man that go out towards his fellows and Those who have had experience with this God, and so render him unfit for the kingdom of heaven. Inevitable and stubborn disease can hardly believe at first fearful punishment awaits the man whose wealth brings no joy to others that Wonderful Dream Salve can and then himself than himself.

Take Care of Your Health.

People have no right to be careless concerning their health. First, they have their own duties to do and they cannot do them properly without health: second, no person can be sick without interfering with the rights and privileges and comforts of others. Probably three-fourths of the sickness and disease in the world could be prevented by a little care and what a shame it is for people who ought to be and might be well and useful in the world, to make themselves ill, and dependent and miserable and so hinder others from their work and weary them and make them ill, when a little care might have prevented it all. It is every person's duty to be well and strong, rather than weak, sickly, miserable, helpless and burdensome to others. Hence all persons should be thoughtful and careful about their health. The above admontion is prompted by the writer's own personal experience.

The Great Need of Times.

What this country needs more than railroads, airships, government ownership of public utilities, and bigger field crops, and a merchant marine and a new navy, is a revival of piety, the kind father and mother used to have—a piety that counted it good business to have family worship, right in the middle of harvest; that quit field work a half hour earlier on Wednesday night so as to get the chores done and go to prayer meeting. We are too greedy for money. Instead, we need more old fashioned piety. Great wealth never made a nation substantial nor honorable. There is nothing on earth that looks good that is so dangerous for a man or nation to handle as quick, easy, big money. If you do resist its deadly influences the chances are that it will get your son. It takes greater and finer heroism to dare to be poor in America than to navigate an airship.

WHEN FIRE BREAKS OUT.

Keep Cool and Remember and Follow

These Instructions. In case of fire, if the burning articles are at once splashed and sprayed with a solution of salt and Cass City Dairy Farm nitrate of ammonia an incombustible coating is formed. This is a preparation which can be made at home at a trifling cost and should be kept on hand. Dissolve twenty pounds of common salt and ten pounds of nitrate of ammonia in seven gallons of water Pour this into quart bottles of thin glass and fire grenades are at hand ready for use. These bottles must be tightly corked and sealed to prevent evaporation, and in case of fire they must be thrown near the flames, so as to break and liberate the gas contained. At least two dozen of these bottles should be ready for an emer-

Salt thrown upon a fire if the chimney is burning will help to deaden the blaze. If a fire once gets under headway and prompt exit becomes a necessity, a silk handkerchief dipped in water and wrapped about the mouth and nostrils will prevent suffocation from smoke; failing this, a piece of wet flannel will answer.

Should smoke fill the room, recall your physics-remember that smoke goes first to the top of the room and last to the floor. Wrap a blanket or woolen garment about you, with the wet cloth over your face, drop on your hands and knees and crawl to the window. Bear in mind that there is no more danger in getting down from a three story window than from the first floor if you keep a firm hold of the rope or ladder. Do not slide, but go hand over hand.-New York Tribune.

CHAPTER VII.

AMES BANSEMER had not recklessly rushed into Mrs. Cable's presence with threats of exposure; but, on the contrary, he had calmly, craftily waited. It suited his purpose to let her wonder, dread and finally develop the trust that her secret was safe with him. Occasionally he had visited the Cable box in the theater, not infrequently he had dined with them in the downtown cafes and at the homes of mutual acquaintances, but this was the first time that James Bansemer had enjoyed the hospitality of Frances Cable's home. His son, on the best of terms with their daughter, was a frequent visitor there.

There was a rare bump of progressiveness in the character of Graydon Bensemer. He was good looking enough beyond doubt, and there was a vast degree of personal magnetism about him. It seemed but natural that he should readily establish himself as a friend and a favorite of the fair Miss Cable. For some time James Bansemer had watched his son's progress with the Cable family, not once allowing his personal interest to manifest itself. It was but a question of time until Mrs. Cable's suspense and anxiety would bring her to him one way or another. Every word that fell from the lips of his son regarding the Cables held his attention, and it was not long before he saw the family history as clearly as though it were an open book, and he knew far more than the open Frances Cable was not deluded by his silence and aloofness. But she was unable to devise means to circumvent Constant fear of his power to crush lurked near her day and night. Conscious of her weakness, but eager to have done with the strife, sometimes she longed for the enemy to advance. At first she distrusted and despised the son, but his very fairness battered down the barriers of prejudice, and real admiration succeeded. Her husband liked him immensely, and Jane was his ablest ally. David Cable regarded him as one of the brightest young men on the stock exchange and predicted that some day he would be an influential member of the great brokerage firm for which he now acted as confidential clerk. Mr. Clegg, the senior member of the firm of Clegg, Groll & Davidson, his employers, personally had recommended young Bansemer to Cable, and he was properly-

It was not until some weeks after the chance meeting in Hooley's theater that Mrs. Cable came into direct contact with James Bansemer's designs. She had met him at two or three formal affairs, but their conversations had been of the most conventional character. On the other hand, her husband had lunched and dined at the club with the lawyer. At first she dreaded the outcome of these meetings, but as Cable's attitude toward her remained unchanged she began to realize that Bansemer, whatever his purpose, was

They met at last quite informally at Mrs. Clegg's dinner, a small and congenial affair. When the men came into the drawing room after the cigars Mrs. Cable, with not a little trepidation, motioned to Mr. Bansemer to draw up his chair beside her.

"I have been looking forward with pleasure to this opportunity, Mr. Bansemer," she said in a courteously acidulated way. "It has been so long in coming."

"Better late than never," he returned, with marked emphasis. Fortunately for her the challenging significance of his words was quickly nullified by the smile with which she was almost instantly favored. "Twenty years, I believe-it certainly came very near bechanging from harsh to the sweetest of tones. "No one could believe that you -you're simply wonderful!" and added pointedly, "But your daughter is even more beautiful, if such is possible, than her-her mother."

Apparently the innuendo passed unnoticed. In reality, it required all her courage to appear calm.

"How very nice of you," she said softly. And looking him full in the face, "Her mother thanks you for the compliment."

It was a brave little speech. Such bravery would have softened a man of another mold-changed his purpose. Not so with Bansemer. A sinister gleam came into his eyes, and his attack became more brutally direct.

"But the husband-has he never mistrusted?"

The blow told, though her reply was orlde for the clean, vigorous manhood given with rippling laughter and for the benefit of any chance listeners. "For shame, Mr. Bansemer!" she cried lightly. "After flattering me so delightfully you're surely not going to spoil it all?" Despite his growing annoyance, admiration shone clearly from Bansemer's eyes. His memory carried him back some twenty years to the scene in his office. Was it possible, he was thinking, that the charming woman before him exercising so cleverly all the arts of society, as if born to the purple, and the light hearted, frivolous little wife of the Central's engineer

"Is that extraordinary looking creature you had in your office still with von Mr. Bansemer?"

"Extraordinary!" He laughed loud-"He is certainly that and more. Indeed, the English language does not supply us with an adjective that adequately describes the man."

The people nearest to them by this time had moved away to another part. of the large drawing room. Practically the couple were by themselves. She had been thinking for a moment, reasoning with a woman's logic that it was always well to know one's enemy. When she next spoke it was almost in a whisper.

"How much does that horrible man know?"

"He is not supposed to know any thing," and then, with an enigmatical smile, promptly admitted, "However, I'm afraid that he does."

"You have told him? And yet you promised nobody should know. How could"—

"My dear Mrs. Cable, he was not told. If he has found out I could not prevent his discovering the truth through his own efforts," he interrupted in a tone more assuaging than convincing to her, and then, hitching his chair closer and lowering his voice a note, he continued: "The papers had to be taken out. But you must not worry about him. You can depend on

"Promise me that you will make him -I am so fearful of that awful"- she broke off abruptly. Her fears were proving too much for her, and she was in imminent danger of a complete breakdown. All the veneer with which she had brayely commenced the interview had disappeared.

Bansemer endeavored to soothe her with promises, but the poor woman saw only his teeth in the reassuring smile that he presented to her, together with the warnings that they were likely to be observed. With the hardest kind of an effort she succeeded in pulling herself together sufficiently to

It was what she had expected and feared. Her cup of bitterness was filling rapidly-too rapidly. His invitation to dinner a fortnight later followed.

Jane Cable was radiant as she entered the drawing room shortly after the arrival of the two Bansemers. "It's quite like a family party. How splendid," she said to Graydon, with a quick glance in the direction of James Bansemer and David Cable, who stood conversing together, and withdrawing her soft, white hand which she had put forth to meet his in friendly clasp. "It's too good to be true," she went on in a happy, spontaneous, almost confiding manner.

Other guests arrived before Mrs. Cable made her appearance in the drawing room. She had taken more time than usual with her toilet. It was impossible for her to hide the fact that the strain was telling on her perceptibly. "And to think, Miss Cable, of the unfortunates who have known neither father nor mother," said Bansemer senior, slowly, relentlessly. "How much they have missed of life and

As he had expected, his place at the dinner table was some distance from hers. He was across the table from Jane and Graydon and several seats removed from David Cable. He smiled grimly and knowingly when he saw that he had been cut off cleverly from the Cables.

"Tomorrow night, then, Jane!" said Graydon at parting. No one was near enough to catch the tender eagerness in his voice nor to see the happy flush in her cheek as she called after him: "Tomorrow night!"

CHAPTER VIII.

OBBY RIGBY and Graydon Bansemer were bosom friends in Chicago; they had been classmates at Yale. It had been a question of money with

Bobby from the beginning. According to his own admission, his money was of his son awaiting to receive welcome a source of great annoyance to him. from the adorable Jane; the other, long He was not out of debt but once and since conscious of the splendid beauty then before he fully realized it. So unof his daughter, mentally declaring that usual was the condition that he could not sleep. The first thing he did in the morning was to borrow right and left for fear another attack of insomnia might interfere with his training for the football eleven.

> Robertson Ray Rigby, immortalized as Bobby, had gone in for athletics, where he learned to think and act quickly. He was called one of the lightest but headiest quarterbacks in the east. No gridiron idol ever escaped his "Jimmy" or "Toppy or "Pop" or his shingle in Chicago—"Robertson R. identity even among his classmates. It erally known that it was Bobby who shingle.

With his aunt's unfaltering prosperity, his own ready wit and unbridled ugliest man she ever had seen. Every versatility he was not long in estabother woman in the party was saying lishing himself safely in his profession to herself that James Bansemer was and in society. Everybody liked him, though no one took him seriously ex-"Most pleasures come late in life to cept when they came to transact busisome of us," he returned gallantly, and ness with him. Then the wittiness of even Graydon Bansemer wished that the drawing room turned into shrewdness as it crossed the office threshold. The day after the Cable dinner Bob-> the night before, and all on account of a certain, or rather uncertain. Miss Clegg. That petite and aggravating young woman had been especially exasperating at the Cable dinner. Mr. Rigby, superbly confident of his standing with her, encountered difficulties which put him very much out of temapparent rift in her constancy. Never before had she shown such signs of fluctuating. He could not understand it-in fact, he dared not understand it. "She was a most annoying young person," said Mr. Rigby to himself wrathfully more than once after he went to bed that night. Anyhow, he could not see what there was about Howard much less to admire. Mr. Medford certy for Mr. Rigby, and he was full of resentment.

> "Miss Keating," called Mr. Rigby for the third time, "may I interrupt your conversation with Mr. Deever long enough to ask a question that has been on my mind for twenty minutes?"

> Mr. Deever was the raw young gentleman who read law in the office of Judge Smith next door. Bobby maintained that if he read law at all it was at night, for he was too busy with other occupations during the day.

Miss Keating, startled, turned round-about promptly. "Yes, sir," at last came from the pert young woman near the window.

"I guess I'll be going," said Mr. Deever resentfully, rising slowly from the side of her desk on which he had been lounging.

"Wait a minute, Eddie," protested Miss Keating. "What's your hurry?" And then she almost snapped out,

"What is it. Mr. Rigby?" "I merely wanted to ask if you have sufficient time to let me dictate a few short letters that ought to go out tosaid Bobby sarcastically. And then added with mock apology: "Don't move, Mr. Deever. If you're not in Miss Keating's way, you're certainly not in mine." "A great josher!" that young woman was heard to comment admiringly.

"You may wake up some morning to find that I'm not," said Bobby soberly. Whereupon Miss Keating rose and strode to the other end of the room and took her place beside Bobby's desk.

Bobby dictated half a dozen inconsequential letters before coming to the one which troubled him most. For many minutes he stared reflectively at the typewritten message from New York. Miss Keating frowned severely and tapped her little foot somewhat impatiently on the floor. But Bobby would not be hurried. His reflections were too serious. This letter from New York had come with a force sufficient to drive out even the indignant thoughts concerning one Miss Clegg. For the life of him Bobby Rigby could not immediately frame a reply to the startling missive. Eddie Deever stirred restlessly on the window ledge.

"Don't hurry, Eddie!" called Miss Keating distinctly and insinuatingly. "Oh, I guess I'll be going!" he called back, beginning to roll a cigarette. "I have some reading to do today." Mr. Deever was tall, awkward and homely and a lot of other things that would have discouraged a less self satisfied "lady's man." Judge Smith said he was hopeless, but that he might do better after he was twenty-one.

"What are you reading now, Eddie?" asked Miss Keating, complacently ey ing Mr. Rigby. "'Raffles?" "Law, you idiot!" said Eddie scorn fully, going out of the door. "Oh! Well, the law is never in a hurry, don't you know? It's like justice—the slowest thing in town!" she called after him as his footsteps died away. "Ready?" said Bobby, resolutely. "Take this, please." And slowly and carefully he proceeded to dictate:

Mr. Denis Harbert, New York: Dear Denis—I cannot tell you how much your letter surprised me. What you say seems preposterous. There must be a mistake. It cannot be this man. I know him quite well, and he seems as straight as a string and a gentleman too. His son you know as well as I. There isn't a bet-ter fellow in the world. Mr. B. has a fairly good business here. His transactions open and aboveboard. I'm sure I have never heard a word said against him or his methods. You are mistaken;

that's all there is about it.

You might investigate a little further and, assuring yourself, do all in your power to check such stories as you relate. Of course I'll do as you suggest, but I'm positive I can find nothing discreditable in his dealings here.

Keep me posted on everything. As ever,

Miss Keating's anxiety was aroused. After a very long silence she took the reins into her own hands. "Is Mr. Briggs in trouble?" she asked at a venture. Mr. Briggs was the only client she could think of whose name began with a B.

Briggs? What Briggs?" asked Bobby, relighting his pipe for the fourth

"Why, our Mr. Briggs," answered Miss Keating curtly.

"I'm sure I don't know, Miss Keat ing. Has he been around lately?" "I thought you were referring to him in that letter," she said succinctly. "Oh, dear me, no; another party altogether, Miss Kenting. Isn't the typewriter in working order this morning?" he asked, eying her machine innocently. She sniffed and started to reply, but thought better of it. Then she began pounding the keys briskly. "It works like a charm," she shot back genially. The letter that caused Bobby such perturbation came in the morning mail. His friend had laid bare some of the old stories concerning James Bansemer and cautioned him not to become involved in transactions with the former New Yorker. Harbert's statements were positive in character, and he seemed to know his case thoroughly well. While the charges as they came to Rigby were general. Harbert had said that he was quite ready to be spe-

All day long the letter hung like a cloud over young Mr. Rigby. He was to have lunched with Graydon and was much relieved when young Bansemer telephoned that he could not join him Rigby found himself in a very uncomfortable position. If the stories from New York were true, even though he knew none of the inside facts, Graydon's father was pretty much of a scalawag, to say the least. He was not well acquainted with the lawyer. but he now recalled that he never had liked the man. Bansemer had impressed him from the beginning as heartless, designing, utterly unlike his clean hearted son. Bobby loved Graydon Bansemer in the way that one man loves a true friend. He was certain that the son knew nothing of those shady transactions-if they really existed as Harbert painted them-but an exposure of the father would be a blow from which he could not recover.

It came at last to Rigby that he was not the only one in Chicago who held the secret. Other members of the bar had been warned long before the news came to him, and it was morally certain that if the facts were as bad as intimated the police also were in posaession of them.

At the same time Rigby felt a certain moral responsibility involving himself. Bansemer at any time might apply his methods to people who were near and dear to him. The new intimacy with the Cables came to Bobby's mind. And then there were Clegg, Groll, the Semesons and others who might easily fall into the snare if James Bansemer set it for them. Appreciating his responsibility in the matter, now that he was prepared to hear the worst of James Bansemer, Rigby's heart stood almost still. It expose Graydon Bansemer's father. It meant that he might have to cruelly hurt his friend. It meant that he might lose a friendship that had been one of his best treasures since the good old college days. The mere fact that he would be compelled to watch and mistrust James Bansemer seemed like darkest treachery to Graydon, even though the son should not become aware of the situation.

Later in the afternoon Bobby went guiltily into a telegraph office and sent away a carefully worded dispatch. The answer came to him at the club that evening while he was playing billiards with young Bansemer, who even then was eager to be off to keep the promised appointment with pretty Miss Ca-

The telegram, which he opened while Graydon impatiently chalked his cue and waited for him to play, was brief and convincing. It read:

CURRANT BUNS.

A Delicious Bread For Luncheon or

Supper. To make current buns mix a cake of compressed yeast with one-fourth cupful of lukewarm water and add to it a cupful of scalded milk cooled to lukewarm temperature. Add also about a cup and a half of white flour and beat until the batter is very smooth, then cover and let stand in a warm place to become very light.

CURRANT BUNS GLAZED WITH SUGAR.

Then add half a cupful of currants. half a cupful of sugar, one beaten egg, one teaspoonful of salt and one-fourth cupful of melted shortening. Mix thoroughly, then beat in enough flour to make a soft dough. About two cupfuls will be needed. Let this stand to become light, then roll into a sheet and into rounds. Bake when about doubled in bulk from thirty to forty minutes. Stir a teaspoonful of cornstarch with cold water to a smooth liquid consistency, then pour on boiling water. Let it cook five minutes and use it to baste the tops of the rolls. Dredge them thickly with granulated sugar and return them to the oven to glaze.

CARE OF THE EYES.

It Is Bad to Read on a Railroad Train When In Motion.

Never rub the eyes, for this practice causes inflammation of the lids, and, however beautiful the expression, if the eyes are red or without lashes they lose their charm. When a foreign substance gets into the eye do not irritate it by trying to force it out. Keep the eve closed for a few moments or until the object is removed by the tears which will flow. If, however, it is impossible to remove the substance yourself, have some one who will perform the operation carefully remove it for you.

If the wind has reddened the eyelids. wash them in slightly salted warm water, using common salt.

However strong the eyes may be, give them a little rest after a few hours' continuous use. Never force them to gaze at minute objects when they are weak. Neither write, read. nor sew when the light is dim. During all continuous work close the eyes from time to time at intervals.

Great care should be taken that the light should fall from the side, not full in the face. When working it should be allowed to fall upon the left side.

It is bad to read on a railway train, in a carriage, while walking, while lying down or while physically tired. Beds should not be so placed that the eyes receive the full rays of sunlight on awakening. The light should fall from the side. A very good wash that will strengthen the sight and restore its powers is made of one pint of soft water, a pinch of common salt and a spoonful of brandy.

A Deadener of Pain.

Iodine is an excellent deadener of pain. In cases of toothache, painting the gum, taking care not to swallow any of it. because it is poison, will frequently relieve pain. It will ease the ache of rheumatism if applied to the sore joint and is recommended for use on a painful corn.

Menthol cologne is one of the best simple applications for a headache. The combination of burning sensation and coolness that it gives the skin is very refreshing. An eye wash of boracic acid and camphor that is put up by all druggists should be in every traveling outfit, for the eyes suffer great strain from light and heat and need special attention. A few drops of this compound dropped on the eyeballs after a journey or at night will have a most soothing effect and may even prevent a headache.

Soap Economy.

Bits of soap should never be flung away, but placed in a glass or china jar until a number have been accumulated. They should then be dissolved in boiling water into soap jelly, which may be used for various purposes. That made from the jar reserved for toilet soaps may be used for the bath, and that from kitchen and laundry soaps may be used for laundry purposes. Care should be taken to see that every bit of soap added to the jar is clean. It is by no means an uncommon thing to see soap looking anything but attractively clean.

Women Out of Business World. Hamilton Mable is reported as having said that he did not think the present industrial age, in which women take part in the work of the world, will last a century. Nor did he think it desirable that it should. He did not tell what he thought would replace this industrial age nor what is to recompense the women for the pleasures they will miss when they shall have some one else to work for

"Take my umbrella," said the broker. "I don't need it. The coming bus takes me to my door." At the ferry Mr. Beecher met a Presbyterian lady, a prominent worker of a sister church, who, having no umbrella, was lamenting her inability to reach her car safely. The urbane preacher forced the umbrella upon her as he said, "I will be out your way tomorrow and will call and get it." But the great expounder of truth and honesty was

He Failed to Pass.

General Benjamin F. Butler was one of a commission to examine young applicants for admission to the bar, and tickets can be obtained by applying before him came a youth who failed miserably on all that pertained to jurisprudence, case law, civil law, sumptuary law, unwritten law and due process of law. Finally Butler, who rather liked the chap and wanted to see him through, asked: "What would you like to be examined in? You have in the grammar room. The lunch failed in everything we have suggested."

The reply came. "Try me on the statutes. I'm up on them."

Butler shook his head solemnly. 'My young friend," he said, "I'm for?" afraid you won't do. You may be ever so familiar with the statutes, but what is to prevent a fool legislature from repealing all you know?"

Progress.

Let us, then, be of good cheer. From the great law of progress we may derive at once our duties and our encouragements. Humanity has ever advanced, urged by the instincts and necessities implanted by God, thwarted sometimes by obstacles which have caused it for a time-a moment only in the immensity of ages-to deviate from its true lines or to seem to retreat, but still ever onward.—Charles Sumner.

The Poor Cannibal.

A man once went to the circus. Near the main entrance to the circus there was a side show, and a vast and brilliant oil painting portrayed in all its horrors a cannibal feast-corpses cooking over fires, nude natives squatted an a circle, helding to their mouths grilled forearms, hands and such like delicacies. A genuine cannibal, the Scrap Book poster said, was to be seen within.

Paying a dime, the man entered. The cannibal, very lightly clad, sat with crossed legs on a divan, languidly toying with a spear. His teeth were filed. The visitor was a man of markedly

A Reference.

A firm of shady outside London brokers was prosecuted for swindling. In acquitting them the court, with great soverity, said:

"There is not sufficient evidence to convict you, but if any one wishes to know my opinion of you I hope they will refer to me."

Next day the firm's advertisement appeared in every available medium with the following, well displayed: "Reference as to probity, by special permission, the lord chief justice of England."

His Reformation.

He was rather given to late hours. and his wife remonstrated with him, so he promised her faithfully that he would reform. It would have been all right if his friends had not heard of it "So John H. has reformed, has he? Humph, we'll see." They "saw" him in procession. First he met one old chum, then another, and it never dawned upon him that is was a conspiracy.

The first night that John H. reached home after he had made that promise to his wife it was very late, or, rather, it was very early. In fact, it was early morning. He took off his boots, man aged to hang his hat up and walked softly into the room where his wife slumbered. So far all was good. He divested himself of his coat, and just as he was hanging it on the gas bracket his wife woke up.

"Why, John," she exclaimed, "what on earth are you getting up so early

This was a poser, but John was qual to the occasion.

"That's all right," he said. "You know I've reformed, Mary, an' there's lots of people I've got to see early in the mornin'." And he deliberately put on his coat and boots, found his hat and went out again, while Mrs. H. turned over, with a fiendish chuckle, and went to sleep.

Think what it is not to hate anyhing but sin, to be full of love to every creature, to be angered at nothng, to be sure that all things will turn to good, not to mind pain because it is our Father's will, to know that nothng-no, not if the earth was to be burnt up or the waters come and drown us-nothing could part us from God, who loves us and who fills our souls with peace and joy, because we are sure that whatever he wills is holy, just and good.—George Eliot.

The Drawback.

Beardman was a writer of plays, ultimately fairly well known in his day. For nearly twenty years he struggled and fought his way along without meeting with any very pronounced success, each play in turn proving more or less of a failure. At last, however, he produced a play that really caught the public taste. He and the famous Sheridan happened to be present together on the opening night. All went well. Success followed success, and applause greeted and ended each scene. At the end of the second act Beardman's elation got the better of his discretion, and, leaning over toward Sheridan-as usual, too witty to be merely sympathetic-he exclaimed: "Sheridan, Sheridan, it's going to be success, a complete success!"

"Ah, yes," murmured Sheridan, with exquisite compassion in his voice, "too bad, too bad!"

"Too bad?" stammered his friend. completely taken off his guard. "Why, too bad that it should prove a success?" "Because now," retorted Sheridan, "It'll take you another twenty years to convince any one you wrote it.'

Politely Put.

The manager of a fashionable hotel received complaints from several of his best patrons that the occupant of a certain room on their floor kept them awake nights with his incessant and night piercing snoring. The next day the manager sought out the objectionable snorer, who happened to be a singer of foreign renown, and acquainted him with the situation.

"Vat! I snore night?" exclaimed the artist, bristling at this accusation. ("Do you know who I am? I am Spitzler, the great German basso!" "Well, then," rejoined the hotel manager, "kindly refrain from singing nights!"

Maintained His Point.

Roger Minot Sherman while arguing a celebrated case said that his opponent could no more prove his point than he could cut a hair lengthwise.

While he was still talking the opponent, who happened to have a very sharp knife, pulled a hair from his beard and split it. As he held it up the court began to laugh, and Mr. Sherman quickly called out, "I said a hair,
