SEBEWAING - Monday afternoon

while Paul Asmuss, the 11-year-old son of Wm. Asmuss, was playing on a raft in the water at the Beck street bridge, with several companions, he fell in and had a very close escape from drowning. The water just under the bridge is from five to six feet deep, and, being unable to swim, the lad floundered helplessly. His companions yelled to the lad to swim, but he only held one hand before his mouth and nose to keep the water out, and struggled. The cries of the Asmuss boy and his companions brought out the entire neighborhood, but it remained for Johnson Smith to play the role of For doors, windows and porches hero. He rushed out of his home, dashed across the street and, with all the vividness of the hero of a moving picture play pulling off a hair raiser, he plunged into the water, grabbed the nearly exhausted boy and pulled him out, and once again the Grim Reaper was foiled.—Blade.

From all accounts silk manufacture originated in China. Chinese tradition has it that the Emperor Foh Li taught his people the art of cultivating the silkworm as early as 5000 B. C. Spain was the first European country to receive the silkworms, the Arab conquerors introducing them about the tenth century, probably from their home on the borders of Persia. The foundation of the silk industry in France dates from the year 1516, when Francis I.

CHAPTER VIII. "Trail Hurley!"

AYTON sat examining the bill until Manning returned with the announcement that Mr. Hurley was coming. Kayton from Pittsburgh when Kayton arrived. slipped the banknote into his pocket.

ever.

"Well, how is the mystery getting along, Mr. Kayton?" he inquired, accepting a cigar the detective offered him and puffing it happily.

hand, and looked up at him with a little smile of surprise.

"Mystery!" he exclaimed. "Why there's no such thing as a mystery if you use a little common sense. Mr. Hurley. You know, in an affair of this sort, you're confronted by a long line of facts, and you hammer away until you break through somewhere." He lit his cigar and took a puff. "Mr. Hurley, when you first met Mr. Argyle- By the way, how did you meet Mr. Argyle?"

Mr. Hurley carefully brushed the ashes off his cigar and examined the end of it critically.

"Well, now, Mr. Kayton, I'll tell you about that." he said slowly. "I had a western proposition in which I wanted to interest him, and I went to his office, and he proved to be a very approachable man. I laid the matter before him in the usual way. He took it up, investigated it, found it was what I had said it was, and we got together on it. I suppose that gave him confidence in me. Are you through here?" he inquired as Kayton picked up his hat and slipped on a light overcoat.

"Yes," replied the detective. "Call me up in the morning if I can be of any help to you," offered the lawyer, also making ready to leave. "I'll be in Pittsburgh," said Kayton briefiy.

"Oh! You are going away?" Mr. Hurley was interested.

"Yes, for the day. My operatives have just rounded up a case there. and I've got to see the man and pull him across. Expect to take the night train back."

"I'll see you the day after tomorrow, then," said the lawyer with a nod of farewell as he walked slowly out.

"Yes, do," said Kayton.

The detective buttoned his overcoat, ran his eye about the room again as if to make sure he had overlooked nothing and then turned to his assistant with a brief command: "Joe, trail Hurley."

Manning was not an easily surprised young man, but now his jaw almost dropped with amazement.

"Wh-a-t!" he exclaimed. "Hurley?" Kayton chewed his cigar, and an amused gleam came to the corners of his eyes as he surveyed his assistant. "Haven't you been listening to him?"

he asked. "No, not particularly," Manning admitted.

"Well, you should have," commented his chief grimly. "That's your business. He's way off from normal. When a man says 'Now I'll tell you about that' it's one safe bet he's lying. Trail him!"

Ten seconds later the lawyer had an ever invisible but ever present shadow. Contrary to the copy book wisdom on the subject, swift action is not a habit. Persons who habitually hurry are merely fussy. They seldom accomplish much beyond an appearance of activity which is deceiving to the unversed, and they also succeed in getting real workmen nervous and irritated. Such people are worse than useless in a crisis. It is the even tempered man who conserves his energy ing and concentrating his energies. When he returned from Pittsburgh he did not know who had killed Mr. Argyle. He strongly suspected that Mr. Hurley knew more than he was telling, and his plans had been laid with a view to eliminating the lawyer or fastening guilt upon him. He did not know which would result. He was not guessing. He had not made up his mind that the lawyer was in he mesh of the true crime. So he had to make certain just where this figure stood in the game before he could proceed along new lines with certainty.

He was expected at his office the second morning after his departure for Pittsburgh, and the newspapers confirmed the report of his return. They confirmed it by telling in seven column headlines what he had done in Pitts-

Leischmann, the manager, and Nash, a veteran aid of the great detective, who was allowed all sorts of privileges, were awaiting him in the private office and discussing the news

The chief carried a little grip and "Let him in," he said. Mr. Hurley also some few signs of two successive returned more largely patronizing than nights in a sleeping car, but he seemed as calmly energetic as ever.

"Hello, boys," he said, with a nod. "Morning, governor," responded his aids. Kayton stripped off overcoat and gloves, hung his hat and turned to Kayton paused, lighted match in his desk, rubbing his hands to get the morning chill out of the fingers.

"Is Cortwright out there?" he inquired without further formality. "Yes."

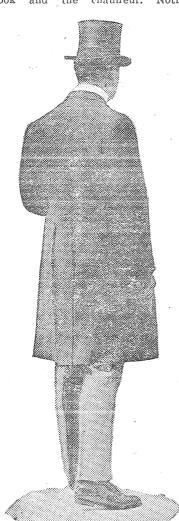

"Send him in."

Leischmann disappeared and there came presently into the office a man of about forty who might have been cashier of a reliable bank. He was well dressed. His face was round and honest. His eyes were bright and his speech and gaze were direct and straightforward.

"Good morning, governor," he said pleasantly, but respectfully.

"Good morning, Cortwright," returned his chief, looking up with a cheerful smile. "Tell me about this report on the Argyle case." His hand fell on a mass of typewritten manuscript.

"Well, we've run out all the inside servants," said Cortwright, "and the cook and the chauffeur. Nothing wrong there at all. We've found the policeman that was on the beat. He has nothing. We looked up some of the discharged servants-a coachman. Nothing to that."

"All right. That's all," he nodded, and Cortwright withdrew.

Kayton picked up the receiver of a desk phone. "Send Joe in here," he ordered, and presently Manning walked in with a broad, red scratch like a birthmark on his cheek.

Kayton grinned at him. "Hello, Joe. Marked for identification?"

Manning slowly raised both hands to his face—one to feel tenderly of the wound on his cheek and the other to carry to his teeth the apple he was eating.

"Picked that up trailing Hurley," he mumbled cheerily, his mouth full of fruit. "A fresh cop tried to follow me, and I fell down a fire escape."

"How about Hurley?" Manning shook his head dolefully. "Nothing doing," he said. "Haven't been able to line him up with anything. We know Hurley's back better office to another. He don't go into court. Nothing busy in his office but his telephone. We take him home and put him to bed at night-do everything but hear his prayers." "Well, don't lose him. How about that fake personal?"

"It's planted in the morning paper." Manning fished one out of his overcoat pocket and opened it and gazed at it. "Sure you got it right?" demanded his chief. "'Information wanted regarding "N.

M." Beneficiary Argyle estate. Tolworthy & Mead, St. Paul building," read Manning.

"Did the papers bite?" inquired Kay-

"Well, one of the evening papers played it up yesterday. Their men beat it to Tolworthy's, and when they couldn't find out anything they chucked in some more mystery about a new murder clew and a missing heir to the Argyle estate."

Kayton nodded happily. "Weli, if she doesn't see the personal that stuff ought to reach her." The desk phone rang, and the attendant at the outer informed him that Mr. Hurle was asking for Mr. Kayton. The detective's eyes gleamed, and he made a gesture to Manning. "Hurley? Send him right in. Here, Joe, take these telegrams"-he handed a number of yellow sheets-"they're all mixed up with a half dozen aliases for each counterfeiter. Pick out the information and make me a sort of record of past performances. Sit over there at the desk"-he pointed to one in a corner and added meaningly-"and keep an ear this way for Hurley."

Manning took off his coat and hat and placed himself as ordered. Kayton took out a box of cigars, lit one and leaned back in his chair, puffing contentedly as the massive form of the lawyer pushed through the door.

"I just wanted to speak to you for a moment, Mr. Kayton," said the lawyer pleasantly, advancing to the desk and shaking hands.

"Glad to see you any time, Mr. Hurley," returned Kayton cordially, offering the box of cigars. "I expect to get a good deal of assistance from you." "I don't know about that," laughed

Mr. Hurley, selecting a cigar and availing himself of the lighted match the detective held out. "But, of course, I'll be glad to do anything I can."

Kayton nodded, and his visitor took a chair, facing him.

"By the way," resumed Mr. Hurley, puffing with a smoker's appreciation of a treat, "in line with your theory blackmailing, it occurred to me that may have a grievance because the chauffeur supplanted him."

The detective was impressed. "Do you remember his name?" he inquired, picking up a pencil.

"No, but I suppose the family would have it."

"Thanks. I'll look him up." "I saw the Tolworthy & Mead personal in the morning paper," remarked Hurley, "and I thought it might be a new clew, but they say not. They referred me to you.'

"Yes," Kayron nodded frankly "They consulted me. You see, it appears that in Mr. Argyle's will, drawn up by the old head of the firm, there was a legacy to a Miss Nellie Marsh. There's no knowledge now in that office of Nellie Marsh. The information evidently rested only with old Mr. Tolworthy and Mr. Argyle. The firm asked me how to locate her, thinking there might be some scandal."

"Yes, yes!" chimed in Mr. Hurley, betraying a hasty concealed eagerness. "And for that reason," continued Kayton, apparently without noticing the other's manner, "we used only the initials. Did you ever hear Mr. Argyle refer to a Miss Marsh?"

Mr. Hurley stroked his chin. "Well, now, I'll tell you about that," he said reflectively. "When we were discussing the new will we didn't get to the lesser legatees."

"Oh, it's too large a sum to have been simply a bequest to an old servant!" protested Kayton. "It runs well up in the thousands."

"Well, in that case," said Mr. Hurley without interest, "the person will probably be expecting to be remembered by Mr. Argyle and show up."

"Oh, yes," agreed Kayton. "The whole thing may be perfectly innocent, but to avoid anything unpleasant for the family the lawyers thought they had better be on the safe side. By the way, Mr. Hurley, you understand, of course, that this is strictly confidential?"

"Oh, of course-of course!" exclaimed the lawyer hastily. The telephone bell rang, and as Kayton turned to the instrument Mr. Hurley rose.

"Well, I won't take up any more of your time," he said. "Going so soon? Well, come in again, Mr. Hurley," invited the detective.

"Thank you, I will," declared the lawyer. "I shall be interested to hear if there's any new development in the sheets, which at the right upper corner "I'll keep you posted," Kayton assured him, and with a nod Mr. Hurley withdrew. "Ask Mr. Colt to come right in," said

Kayton into the phone. [TO BE CONTINUED.]

Wedding Invitations.

If you are planning to be married in July it is time to think of the details, which may be very annoying, but custom insists on their observance

The invitations are the first thing to be chosen after the date for the wedding has been decided upon. They should be sent not more than one month nor later than fifteen days before the date. If a large church wedding is contemplated all the names of both families' visiting lists are included. Besides these the relatives and friends of bride and groom and father of the bride are honored with invitations. Friends who are in other countries and those in mourning (although the latter will not attend) are notified of the coming event.

Select a good stationer, who will submit to you some of the newest forms of invitations. Besides these, there are always accepted "set" styles, which conservative persons select. These are always correct.

If the bride has a family crest that she has used on her note paper the die can be left and the crest stamped in white (never in colors) at the center of the top of the sheet and on the flap of the envelope.

Paper should be white or cream and with an unglazed surface. With every sheet of paper two envelopes are ordered, one to inclose the invitations, the larger one to hold both and to be addressed and stamped. The first one

On the unsealed envelope is a line written. This is the name of the recipient. You should never make one that it was an old servant who was invitation serve for an entire family. Economy should not be practiced at they used to have a coachman who this time. To a family one invitation is sent to the husband and wife, one to "The Misses Gray" and a third to "The Messrs. Gray." These three envelopes or the number required are placed in one large outer one, and that is addressed to the matron or hostess of the house, in this case "Mrs. Ed-

The accepted form, which should be engraved in a simple script or block lettering, is as follows:

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Beck request the honor of your presence at the marriage of their daughter,
Alice,

Mr. Andrew Hall on Monday afternoon, June the sixth, at four o'clock. St. Mary's Church, New York.

Another form has a space at the top in which the name of the guest is written by hand. This gives a personal touch to the engraved form.

A bride who has no parents living issues her invitations in the name of her nearest living relative. If a married woman should be this hostess the exact relationship is explained thus: Mr. and Mrs. Frank Black request the honor, etc., at the marriage of Mrs. Black's sister, Miss Alice Gray, etc.

If a wedding is to take place at the home of a friend a form like the following is good:

The pleasure of your company is requested at the marriage of Miss Alice Gray to Mr. Andrew Hall

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Claire, etc. A stepdaughter's relationship is clearly defined in an invitation issued by her parents. "Mr. Gray's daughter" or "Mrs. Gray's daughter, Margaret

With invitations there are sent at home cards, which have the name of the newly married couple, their home address and the date suggested for receiving callers. The correct forms are on hand at all stationers' shops.

These sheets and envelopes come in French gray, cream and light brown shades, and to match them are 2 by 6 inch correspondence cards, also with lap over ends and exceedingly narrow envelopes.

A new idea in mourning stationery is the envelope in pure white save for a fine line of black defining its deeply pointed flap, but with a black tissue paper lining.

Tennis Etiquette.

On tennis courts or any similar places at which groups of people are thrown together introductions should be made by the one who is an acknowledged leader or the one in most auperfunctory-a more mention of the names-and are done because of the sympathy of interests and the common

HOW TO CELEBRATE

Many Cities Join Movement for Sane Fourth of July.

Casualty Lists Have Been Greatly Reduced-Fine Example of Proper Observance Set by Springfield, Mass.

REPORT published by the Russell Sage Foundation How the Fourth Was Celebrated in 1911," gives conclusive proof that the movement inaugurated in many cities for a sane and safe observance of the day resulted in reducing the death roll. The number of casualties by fire and accident was 1,603. In 1909 there were 5,307 victims of their own sane celebrations, but there remains over 1,100 cities of 5,000 population that have not embraced the reform. It is hoped that this year many other cities and villages will fall in line. Besides the gain in ridding the day of fires and accidents, the sane method of observance has given a larger amount of pleasure to the public and in many localities has been historically instructive as well. In New York city many large celebrations are planned for different centers which will include parades, pageants, historical tableaux, music and speeches by well known men on events and people connected with our national history. Beside the celebrations, devised for our English-speaking residents, there will be special festivals and celebrations in the Italian, Hungarian, Bohemian and Jewish sections of the city where our more newly arrived citizens will hear the history of their adopted land explained in their own tongue and illustrated by stereopticon views or tableaux. An example of this kind of celebration was set two years ago in Springfield, Mass., at the instance of the settlement workers of that city. It required, to be sure, some time and thought, but the result was a beautiful, poetic and educational holidaywith no aftermath of killed and wounded. There were processions, a balloon ascension, games, folk dances, athletic contests, boat races, band concerts and public fireworks-but no firecrackers.

161 cities made a point of holding

One of the processions was a thing unique in America. Each nationality in the city was invited to put a float in line. The Pilgrims were there to represent the old American stock; beside them came a huge Viking ship on wheels, sent by the Swedes; English residents put in line a float showing the signing of Magna Charta; the Scotch, Queen Mary, escorted by kilted Highlanders; the French Canadians Champlain in his boat on the St. Law rence; Greeks, Italians and Irish, Armenians, Poles and negroes all made suitable and interesting contributions to the line. Probably a more unifying and citizen making celebration was never seen in America.

FOUNDED BY RELIGIOUS MEN

Our Nation Owes Its Origin to Those Who Stood in Fear of the Lord.

No student of the philosophy of history will for a moment deny that the discovery and colonization of North America was directed by the guiding hand of Providence, neither will anyone dispute that the Declaration of Independence and the formation of our government were the actions of men who stood in conscious fear of the Lord. Each of the original 13 colonies was established on distinctive and dominant religious principles. Each of them sought to know the will of God, and to do it. In all their discussion of the problems of freedom and in their reasons for independence our fathers made their appeal to God and his truth was written in their hearts. They looked to him as their leader and defender. When liberty came they recognized God as its author-giver, so that the emblem of our freedom was a God-given banner to those who feared him and did all in their power to make his will supreme in the earth.

Summer at Bay View. The seasonable Bay View announcements are out and will interest the thousands in search of an ideal vacation place. All winter Bay View has barely a dozen families, but in July and August its population swells to 5,000, and then the young people in their gay costumes, the teachers and delightful people from all over the land throng this summer city, amid the groves on Traverse bay. More than 10,000 go there annually. The magnet which draws the people is the Assembly and Summer University, which this year opens on July 5, continuing to August 14. These five weeks are crowded with recreative pleasures and advantages of the finest order. A feature of the Assembly is a series of four great public conferences on supreme issues which are discussed by distinguished leaders. The general, daily programs are filled with famous people, among the names this year being Wm. J. Mme. Burns, the great detective Schuman-Heink and Helen Keller. The university's fame extends far and last season drew students from 14 states. This year a new school is added in Library Work, conducted by the State of Michigan. Those who desire to know more about this summer place will find it in the Bulletin, from which above facts are drawn.
J. M. Hall, Bay View, Mich., will send it.—Adv.

As You Go Through Life. Don't look for the flaws as you go through

And even when you find them It is wise and kind to be somewhat blind And look for the virtue behind them. For the cloudiest night has a tint of ligh Somewhere in its shadows hiding; It is better by far to hunt for a star Than the spots on the sun abiding

The current of life runs ever away

To the bosom of God's great ocean. Don't set your force 'gainst the river's

And think to alter its motion Don't waste a curse on the universe— Remember it lived before you. Don't butt at the storm with your puny

But bend and let it go o'er you The world will never adjust itself To suit your whims to the letter.
Some things must go wrong your whole life long.

And the sooner you know it the better. It is folly to fight with the Infinite
And go under at last in the wrestle; The wiser man shapes into God's plan

No Laughing Matter.

An American visiting in England encountered one afternoon in the hotel in London where he was stopping a Scottish kinsman. The Scot agreed to dine with the American, the cousins repaired to the grill, and after suitable preliminaries a steak was set before them. It was tough. The waiter was summoned. He was all apologies. Another steak would be forthcoming, or chops

"Hold on," said the Scot as his eye fell upon a dish of asparagus which supported the steak on one side. He carefully consulted the bill of fare. Asparagus was expensive just then. "I'll tell ye what we'll do, my man," he went on. "If ye'll no charge us for the asparagus we'll keep the steak."

The waiter seemed a bit startled, but accepted the compromise, and the Mrs. Libkuman of Canboro is visit-American, who was paying the bill, concealed his amusement and allowed his guest's arrangement to stand. He even ate sparingly of the steak. A few days later he related the incident to another kinsman, also a Scot.

"It is what I should have done myself," said the other kinsman solemnly.—New York Post.

Keeping It Quiet.

Shortly after his election as president of the Royal academy Edward Povnter said: "My election as presi dent of the Royal academy came more or less as a surprise. The first intimation I had of it was from old Sidney Cooper, who was always very friendly to me. He was deaf as a post and always talked, as some deaf people do, at the top of his voice. During the time when it was evident, from poor Millais' terrible state, that there must soon be another election to the presidency the varnishing days came around, when members are present in full force, and Cooper came up to me and said in a voice which could be heard by every one in the room, 'This is quite between ourselves, you know, but you are going to be the new president."

Lucky In America.

The luckiness of thirteen may be said to have been exemplified in the American war of independence, when thirteen colonies revolted and formed the United States. A London newspaper of 1776 asserted that the rebels considered the number lucky, and attributed to a party of returned naval prisoners the mocking statement that 'thirteen dried clams were a rebel's daily ration: that Washington had thirteen toes and thirteen teeth in each jaw; that the regular rebel family comprised thirteen children, each expecting to become a general at the age of thirteen, and that thirteen American paper dollars were worth one penny sterling!"-London Spectator.

How the Fourth of July, 1812, Was Celebrated, According to the News-great deal of parading, considerable oratory, the reading of the Declaration of Independence, closing with numerous dinners and the drinking of as many toasts as there were states in the Union.

Fire crackers, cap pistols and other ear-splitting devices which have caused so many of the injuries following in the wake of the national holiday, were unknown a century ago. There was sufficient incentive then to make the biggest kind of a racket. The country was engaged in a second war with England, and the younger generation, with the example of the Revolutionary veterans before them, might have been excused had they given vent to noisy demonstrations.

According to the newspapers of the time, however, the celebration of July 4, 1812, was conducted in a very orderly way. The phrase "safe and sane" was not used in describing the events of the day. Their substitutes a century ago were "genteel" or " respectable." One of the early celebrations at Princeton was thus described:

The flag belonging to the town was displayed opposite the front of the college. At 11 o'clock a genteel company of ladies and gentlemen assembled in the college hall, where they were agreeably entertained by two excellent orations suitable to the occa-

The Fourth of July, 1812, was opened with the raising of the Stars and Stripes over all the public buildings and on the shipping in the harbor. At ten o'clock the militia with the members of the Tammany society the Tailors, Hibernian, Provident, Columbian and Manhattan societies with the cordwainers, shipwrights and other trades, met in the park in front of the city hall, which had lately been finished. There they drew up in order that of parade, and after a national salute the administration of said estate be had been fired by the veterans of the granted to John Stapelton or to some Revolution, they marched down Broadway to Beaver street to Broad, up Pearl to Beekman, where, at the cor-July A. ADVERSITY.

Adversity is often a road to knowledge. He that has never known adversity is but half acquainted with others or with himself. Constant success shows us but one side of the world. $ LARGEST OF OFFICIAL FLAGS

If patriotism were measured by the yards of red, white and blue bunting made into the form of the flag of the nation, the biggest assignment of it would be found in the post office building at Washington, for here hangs the biggest official flag that was ever made, although there are larger unofficial flags. It also was made at the little flagshop on the side street. The building which houses the headquarters of the postal service and keeps its finger on the pulse of all Uncle Sam's mails, boasts this mammoth Huron at Marlette Friday.

The great building is constructed about a hollow square at the bottom of which is the glass-roofed floor space where the local mail is handled. Above this rise eight or nine stories of ma- Mrs. R. Ever hear of the small boy who said he didn't know much about freezing ice cream but that he was great on thawing it?

Little work or knowledge is necessary to Use one of our ice Gream Freezers.

An inexperienced person can make Ice Cream that is deliciously smooth and mellow, and that will fairly melt in your mouth, thus making hot weather a pleasure instead of a discomfort.

We have all sizes from one gallon up. Make your own ice cream. It is better and cheaper.
