With big crowds, large and well disspecial free amusement features and evening services Aug. 17. At the strongly contested races, the 24th annual Cass City fair closed Friday. The weather conditions were favorable to the exhibition. While Thursday morning looked threatening and probably kept some away, the hour's rainfall just before dinner nicely laid the dust, but did not retard the racing program, and made the afternoon more pleasant for the thousands of visitors on the grounds.

The various departments showed well displayed lines of exhibits. In the horse and cattle divisions, the entries were unusually large and display space was a premium. The ball game Thursday afternoon was an attraction enjoyed by a large number of visitors. Marlette and Owendale were the contestants and up to the seventh inning the game was quite closely contested. INSPECTED THEATRE Deputy State Fire Marshal Recommends Changes.

Thos. C. Shafer of Lansing, deputy state fire marshal, was in Cass City town. yesterday morning and inspected the Rex theatre. He recommended a few changes in the theatre's equipment that will bring it up to the standard required by the state law. On the whole, the deputy informed the Chronicle, the Rex would compare favorably with similar electric theatres in cities of like size. There being no local regulations for electric theatres in the smaller cities, the managers have neglected a few details, not with the intent of disobeying the law, but because they were not familiar with all of its provisions. Theatres and schools receive nar-

THE HYDRAULIC RAM.

Pumping water by hydraulic ram makes a water supply system far susystem. In some instances it is even better than gravity in matter of expense when a gravity supply requires a long line of pipe. How to See Through Opaque Paper. A very remarkable experiment which any one can repeat with very little trouble has been unearthed by a con tributor to Prometheus in an old number of the Mechanics Magazine of the year 1829. Take a piece of paper of such thickness that when it is laid pon a piece of printed matter the characters just show through, but cannot be read. Place it over a printed sugar, 1 cur boiling water, 1 cup raissheet, impart to it a circular motion to and fro, and to your surprise you will find that now you can read the print below the paper. It is rather Harmon Kelly returned Friday from difficult to explain this peculiar effect. The explanation offered in Prometheus is that the paper has a number of thin places in it, and by rapidly moving it over the print every part of the printed matter is exposed in turn underneath one or the other of the thin places in the paper, and thus the entire print can be read. However that may be, the experiment is interesting and very simple, requiring for its performance only the simplest means imaginable.

Cadmium Vapor Lamps.

The mercury vapor lamp would be ideal were it not so deficient in red rays, says the Scientific American. It has been found that by operating the lamp at much higher temperatures in a quartz tube there is an increase in the emanation of red rays as compared with green and blue rays. But even under such conditions the light it gives does not possess enough red for ordivery ill the past few months, has nary commercial purposes. Efforts have been made to find a vapor which will give the desired spectrum. However, the desired end has now apparently been reached by Dr. Wolfke, who uses cadmium in the lamp. The vapor of cadmium gives an excess of red If you have a buggy that's lying light when the temperature of the lamp is raised, but this is corrected by adding a small amount of mercury. It is stated that a lamp of 3,800 candle power uses 620 watts.

The Value of Beeswax.

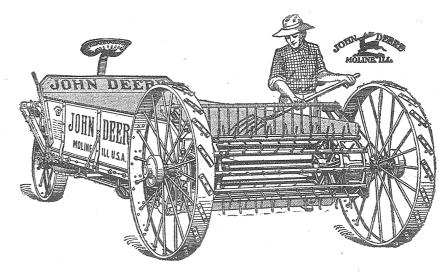

Beeswax is a product peculiar to the special life action of the bee. Wax is not collected from the flowers as wax, but is secreted by special glands situated beneath the wings of the abdomen of the neuter or working bee. The quality of the wax secreted is proportioned to the honey consumed. Beeswax is a very important product, and in the markets of the world it has a more standard value than the honey. There is no substitute that can take the place of beeswax in the many uses to which it is put in the industrial arts. and when we have a pound of beeswax we know that there is more gold in it to the square inch than there is in an equal amount of honey.-Kansas City

John Deere Manure Spreader Did That For Farmer on Field of Wheat

TOL

When the first manure spreader was put out, and in fact for many years after, manure spreaders were considered an expensive luxury, for only the wealthier farmers could afford one. Today every farmer realizes that the manure spreader is an indispensible implement and that he cannot afford to be without one.

The John Deere spreader has been found to be the SIMPLEST in construction and MOST EFFECTIVE in results of any spreader on the market. It is the only spreader that has the beater on the axle.

Accurate account has been kept and it has been determined that a John Deere spreader has gained on a crop of wheat alone $4.80 per acre over the old hand way of

LOVE AT FIRST SIGHT

By JULIA LEITCH.

When young Winthrop met Elizabeth at the Griffith's dance he wondered if the sensation he experienced would not in prehistoric times have been called love at first sight. He danced with her as often as possible and with nobody else, and in between the dances he propped himself against the wall and watched her. When toward the end of the evening she mentioned that she was invited to the Porters' dance the next week he urged her to promsie that she would dance every other dance with him.

"But I didn't say I was going," Elizabeth protested laughingly.

"But you will go, won't you? And whether you go or not, won't you promise to dance with me anyway." "Oh, I'll promise that," Elizabeth assured him, "but I'm not at all sure that I'll go."

"But if you do so-" "If I go," promised Elizabeth, smil-

To Winthrop's great disappointment Elizabeth did not go. He met her sister Dorothy, however, and from her he received the explanation that Elizabeth had decided that she couldn't come. Winthrop felt abused.

After several days he persuaded a mutual friend to take him to call on Elizabeth.

The day following his call, feeling that his acquantance was sufficiently assured to warrant the proceeding, he telephoned her an invitation to go with him to the theater. She would "perfectly love to," she trilled over the telephone, and accordingly they went. The evening was one of such unalloyed enjoyment to Winthrop that he called the following week and ventured another invitation. He was sur. prised and somewhat disconcerted by the way she received it. She hesitated, said she would like to awfully, but really-here she glanced at her sister Dorothy, who was present-she was afraid she couldn't.

Temporarily disheartened, Winthrop restrained himself from calling for a week, at the end of which time he dropped in casually with a gift of violets, and, finding Elizabeth exceedingly cordial, invited her to go to a concert. Her evident delight was as balm to Winthrop. Surely, he told himself, he had been unduly affected by her previous refusal.

The concert was a beautiful success to Wonthrop at least, though it was little he heard of the music. Elizabeth evidently was enjoying herself immensely, yet when Winthrop ventured the suggestion that there was another concert the following week he was met with a dampening vagueness. Elizabeth knew she'd enjoy it, she was really crazy to go. Anyway, she'd let him know the next day.

The following morning there came what Winthrop considered a very chilly note. Elizabeth had decided after all that it wouldn't be possible for her to arrange to go.

Winthrop decided savagely that he would let her alone. The world was full of girls.

Nevertheless, a week or so later he found himself once more calling on Elizabeth. Her cordial greeting and unconcealed pleasure in his company soothed and encouraged him. She certainly didn't seem like the girl who would blow hot one minute and cold the next. Why, then, he wonder did she behave in such a strange way? He made up his mind to find out and presently his opportunity came. Elizabeth had just spoken of a play that she was anxious to see.

"Well," said Winthrop meaning,

"you know you can go if you want Elizabeth blushed. "How?" she asked. "With me," said Winthrop, bodly. Elizabeth fidgeted with the sofa cushion. "Oh, I'd love to," she began, "and I will if-

"If what?" insisted Winthrop. Elizabeth sank back in her chair with a little sigh of disgust. "Oh, you obtuse man," she cried. "I suppose you're going to keep at me until I tell

"Well, then," said Elizabeth, "I'll go if it happens to be my turn for the

"Your what for the what?" "By turn for the suit, Mr. Paul Pry," rejoined Elizabeth. "And if you must know all about it, I suppose I may as well tell you now. The whole painful truth is that dad was so hard up this winter he couldn't afford to get Dorothy and me each a good suit and a good party dress. As we can wear each other's things perfectly well, we got one nice suit and one silk slip and we drape the slip with different overdresses, and as we've always worn nearly the same kind of clothes, anyway, lots of people don't know the difference."

She paused and looked into Winthrop's astonished face for an instant. Then she laughed. "Isn't it funny?" she asked.

"It's-it's-tragic," said Winthrop. "But the world's full of clothes and I've always intended to furnish Mrs. Winthrop with a complete set of 'em. Wouldn't you-couldn't you-won't you see if they'll fit you?"-Chicago

Fair's Policy

By the Hon. D. D. AITKEN. Pres dent of the Michigan State Fair.

VERY scientist agreem that in order effectively re duce the cost of living the production must be increused.

This being granted, it is obvious that in order to accomplish it measures for in-HON. D. D. AITKEN. creasing the yield must be shown the producers. Every means of effecting this end, aside from actual demonstration, have proved failures. Denonstration of ways and means of improved farming has been of immediate benefit in enlarging the annual yield.

Demonstration work is the mission of the Michigan State Fair, and just how well it performs its mission is up to its patrons.

We may secure all the best experts and the most mode n devices for scientific farming, give suggestions as to land rotation and its good, analyze soil and do the many other things which we will do from Sept. 15 to 20, and it will be largely thrown to the winds if visitors do not throw off their "vou'll convince me over my dead body attifude" and be open to honest convic-

The idea that the Michigan State Fair is .. place to come to and gawk around, toss a few rings at the canes. see the races and go home is an unprogressive one Don't get me wrong on

All these things are instructively entertaining: that is what we have them there for. No one is a firmer believer in the time honored axiom that "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy" than I am. It is the combination of education and pleasure that we aim for.

This year when you come to the Fair talk with the successful men in your special line of endeavor. Ask them what methods they used to produce such fine, sleek stock as they have on exhibition. They will be proud to tell you if you are sociable enough to inquire. Talk to the implement men. They will explain the good points of their vehicles.

Look around and see if there isn't something you could add to your household equipment which would make the duties of your wife lighter.

We want the Michigan State Fair to be a benefit to the entire family. We want it to be the family convention. When we have accomplished these things we will have the greatest institution for educational good extant. We can only do this with the whole souled co-operation of the people of the state of Michigan.

Owing to Prevailing Styles Milady Now Finds It as Important a Matter as Looking Out For the Summer Complexion.

HE summer girl adds much to the beauty of both her face and figure by her love of an outdoor life, but she has one or two trifling ills to guard against if she wishes to preserve her complexion in a perfect condition.

It is an important matter that neck and shoulders should be pretty and that arms should be white and rounded. The season's styles demand it with their low cut collars, diaphanous fabrics and short sleeves.

Late in the summer, when the sun is especially hot, tan and freckles are hard to combat, yet if care is taken they may be kept in check.

Most girls like the low blouse, and if one has a neck that is at all presentable this season she is showing it.

When a girl possesses a beautiful skin and well covered bones there is no reason why she should hide such charms when the weather is suitable. On the other hand, the girl "saltcellars" are noticeable and whose skin is not as smooth as it ought to be should never draw people's attention to the fact. There is no need to cover oneself with thick clothing. The filmiest ninon or double chiffon or lace may be used for the purpose of hiding the protruding bones and will still leave one cool in the hottest weather.

Even the shape of the blouse need not be altered at all, the "V" can still be as pronounced as before, and if chiffon is used the coveted bare appearance may still be preserved.

The plump girl is undoubtedly the troit Tigers. fortunate girl at the present time. Her thin sister may, however, do a great deal to improve her appearance by attending to just one or two little things. First she must spend at least five minutes night and morning in massaging the scraggy parts, particularly the neck, chest and arms. Massage the neck and chest with any good massage cream or with olive oil after having bathed them thoroughly with very warm water. This opens the pores and makes them more susceptible to the treatment.

Secondly, she must exercise her neck by turning her head slowly from side to side, then forward and backward, repeating from five to ten times each way, every night and every morning. Breathing exercises are excellent for strengthening and broadening the

Half a pint of milk to a wash hand basin of lukewarm water will be the correct proportions. After washing a lotion such as glycerin and rosewater should be rubbed over the entire face and neck.

Those who live in the country have the remedy, and especially is this the very best cure for freckles at hand -buttermilk. Were it possible to obtain this in large towns in a perfectly fresh state no other remedy would be required; but, as this is seldom the case, here is a recipe which will often remove them:

Take the white of one egg and beat it to a stiff froth. To this add an equal quantity of sweet almond oil and rub this over the freckles several times a day.

To bleach freckles use diluted per oxide of hydrogen (one part of peroxide to ten parts of water), applying it with little son, Roderick, of Jennings are a fine camel's hair brush and allowing it to dry on the skin. In fact, this form of tion 11, Novesta, $1. sunburn, or, to be exact, windburn, is far more difficult to deal with, as it tends to make the skin peel. Now, when this is allowed to go on summer after summer the skin begins to look old and withered, although its possessor may be still quite young, so guard most carefully against this. Below is a recipe for a cream which will Mrs. D. W. McLean, who has been not only soothe the skin, but make it

If somebody tells you that he can sell lumber or building material at a lower price than we offer you, don't be "taken in" without investigating. He's offering you "bait."

We don't believe there's a dealer in the country who makes prices lower than ours. We don't see how he can—and stay in business. But you know there's a big difference in lumber, and quality cuts a big figure. We will never slight the quality in order to cut the price. We want your confidence and your steady trade, and that we know we are not entitled to unless we give you a square deal all around and all the time. Try us.

Situation That Brought ± About a Reconciliation.

By JOANNA SINGLE.

It was the weather in the first place, thought Edith very drearily as she watched the rain beat against the window. If she and Richard had not been caught in a sudden shower, to the utter ruin of her very prettiest dress, she would never have been irritable and quarreled with him about nothing at all, and she would not have expected him to take the fault upon himself when she alone after the weatherwas to blame. And now it had rained for nearly a week, and the inaction was driving her wild. She could only think, think, and vainly try to overcome her pride and send for him.

For the thousandth time she drew from her dress his last letter and re-

Dearest—We have been friends and neighbors and sweethearts all our lives and should not let anything come between us. I love you, and if you will just send one word saying you want me I will come at your call and forget the nothing we at your call and forget the nothing we quarreled about. Should we let anything so childish part us? I look for a word from you. If it does not come I shall know that you really meant to break our engagement and shall of course not trought. ble you. But you couldn't have meant it, Edith? Fraternally yours,
RICHARD COPELAND.

That was all, but she had sent him no word, thinking that in time he would come anyhow, and then she would let him coax her out of her anger. But he had not come, and she could not fail to respect him for refus ing to be played with.

So she was very wretched and blamed her own pride and the weather. The rain beat down warmly and intermittently, and all nature expanded and throve under its moist influence. Edith looked across the fields to the south to Richard's home, which one day was to have been also hers, and saw him out in the rain on his horse, coming from the town a few miles away. How often they two had ridden about the country together! And now it was all over. He would never come back to her-unless she sent for him. Could she do it? It was early in the aftermoon, and she might send her little brother over with a note. She hesitated. Then she went to her room and sat down to her desk. It would be a relief to write to him, even if she could not bring herself to send it to

Dear Richard-Will you come to see me tonight? I was horrid, and I am very sorry. If I had not been wet and cross I should not have thought of caring be-cause you rode to town with Fay. Of course you could not help her overtaking you. She always was forward. Forgive me and come back. You know that—I love EDITH

She sat looking at it. Then her heart misgave her. It had been two long months since they parted, and he might no longer care for her. He might care for Fay. The neighbors had said he had been to see her. The letter was altogether too unguarded. She could not tell him she loved him. So she carelessly thrust it into her dress with the letter from him. She tried to busy herself about the house, but somehow she could not work. She was restless and felt as if her mother and sister saw it and would know that she fretted for Richard. She tried to read in her own room, but it seemed like a prison.

Along about 3 o'clock she felt as if the day had been years long. She could bear it no longer. She put on some heavy shoes and an old waterproof riding habit, wound her fair hair closely under a little cap and stood before the glass thinking what a fright she looked and rather rejoicing in the fact. What was the use of being beauwhen Richard no longer loved

She slipped out to the barn and saddled Ginger, her little mare, mounted and rode quickly out of the gate and northward, as she did not want to pass Richard's house. Her mother saw her ride off in the storm and wondered if the girl was going crazy, but it was too late to call after her. At first Ginger wheeled and refused to believe that she was expected to splash her dainty hoofs through such pools of mud and water, but after a few snorts of protest Edith convinced her with the quirt that this wind and rain were really to be faced, and the little beast settled into a spiteful trot.

Edith rather rejoiced at buffeting the storm. The rain and wind cooled her hot cheeks, and the open air relieved the unbearable tension of her nervousness. For the first time since the trouble with Richard she allowed herself the unrestrained luxury of tears. Here out in the open, with the sting of raindrops in her face, she was free from prying eyes. She did not need to keep up her pride, and she could be as wretched as she really felt. She did not look about her, but rode mile after mile, letting the mare take her own course. After riding an hour or so she noticed that the storm abated and, looking up, saw that the clouds were less dark. Here and there was a gleam of blue, though the warm wind still blew intermittent drops into her face. She drew her collar closely about her neck and pulled her cap over her eyes and ode on with her own thoughts.

At last an idea came to her. not phone to Richard-just call him up and talk to him in the old way about nothing in particular and, if he made it easy for her, ask him to come to see her that evening? Strong in this new resolve, she looked to see where she was and realized that after a long detour they were about a mile below Richard's house, which they must pass. She could not go back, for it was probably near evening. The sun threatened to break through the clouds near the horizon. The rain had entirely ceased. She felt tired, but happier and quiet after the relief of

Then she remembered a way through Richard's fields that they had often taken. She would have to pass a bad slough, but that could not be helped. He must not see her in her present plight. She realized that her face was swollen and her eyes red with weep ing and that she was covered with mud. Her hair was flying wildly, though the dampness always made it the curlier. She turned into the pasture after dismounting to open a heavy gate, and as she rode along she rehairpins to her mouth, let the reins fall on Ginger's neck while she shook out her long hair and prepared to coil it more closely. But Ginger gave a sudden jerk, and in calling "Whoa!" the and water. Then she laughed long will with her hair. No one would see her anyway.

As she neared the slough she felt very warm and unfastened her habit at the throat. Ginger was plunging and snorting through the mud and stopped once with a jerk that almost threw the girl from her saddle. The wind caught at her dress, and before she realized it the two luckless letters were spread out in the mud. It was no laughing matter, for Richard would be sure to find them, and the mud was so deep she could not possibly dismount. She drove Ginger as close to over reaching for them so attentively that she did not see Richard till he rode up almost against her.

Her eyes met his, defiantly conscious of her floating hair and her soiled face and, above all, the telltale letters. She wished her writing was finer. She could see that hateful "I love you" from where she now was. He lifted his hat and was getting down to hand her the letters when she stopped him. "Richard Copeland, you go right BIG CROWDS ENJOY away! Don't touch them! I will get them myself.' "You can't. You'd get stuck in the mud. Let me."

"If you do I'll—hate you." "You do anyway, and, besides, I won't look at whatever it is you seem to value so." He coolly dismounted, but she sprang down ahead of him and snatched at them, sinking to her knees in the slush. Ginger started, and Richard called "Whoa!" but gave the poor beast a sly cut with his whip that sent her on a mad gallop for home. He held Colonel by the bridle. Edith faced

"Now, Edith," he said, "hate me or not, you will have to get on Colonel and be taken home. Come, dear!"

"I'll die here first!" He mounted and, riding close to her, suddenly caught her in his arms and drew her, front of him."

"Edith." he said, "I couldn't help seeing the 'I love you' on the letter Lula Chief ... that she could bear it no longer. She turned her face against his shoulder and cried, while he smoothed back her long hair and held her very close. Her pride was quite gone. She was in tears and a fright generally. She felt that it was positively a miracle that he to be her left ear. Then he asked her

He laughed softly and bade her look up, and Colonel somehow understood Little Daisy that he was expected to go very slow.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Treatment of Fever. Only the most general rules can be laid down regarding the measures to be adopted in the treatment of cases of fever. A rule which is of very general application and which represents a medical practice of great antiquity, is that of administering at the commencement of fever symptoms a saline aperient. A dose of sulphate of magnesia or sulphate of soda, will serve to clear the system and assist in reducing the temperature. Otherwise a dose of calomel-say, two or three grains-will attain the same end.

Where it is desirable to reduce the fever temperature aconite may be employed. Fifteen drops of the tincture of aconite are mixed with two ounces of water, and a teaspoonful of this mixture, but no more, may be administered every quarter of an hour for the first hour and once an hour afterward for three or four hours, by which time the temperature should be visibly affected toward its lowering. By way of hastening the development of the fever, in simple cases, a tepid bath or a mustard bath, the feet being placed in mustard and hot water, may assist the course of the ailment.

A Writing wesk in the parn. Every farmer should have a combination writing desk and medicine chest in his barn. It should be securely fastened about waist high on the wall or on a shelf in some convenient place and kept closed when not in use. It will save many a trip to the house for a sheet of paper, salve or liniment. It moved her cap and, transferring her is much better than to have one thing here and another there. A convenient clear nights. size for this chest is as follows: Eight nine inches thick. It can be divided and heartily and gave the wind its into many compartments.-Farm and Fireside.

He Meant Well.

The company was mostly medical. and a little discussion arose about the conduct of another doctor who always had afternoon tea served to patients who called between 2 and 5. Some of the younger doctors were indignant and asked if the next thing would be free lunch counters in the surgery But the oldest doctor smiled cheerfully. "Don't you worry about him. Any man who encourages the public to eat or drink between meals is, consciously them as possible and was leaning or unconsciously, a benefactor to our profession."-Manchester Guardian.

OWENDALE—A family of workers on the Hugh Crawford farm quit Friday last and Archie Karr, one of the field men for the company went out and got the contract. Slavko Gynronov wanted the contract back and reached for gun, but Archie having a rock handy persuaded him not to attempt to use the personal artillery. Mrs. Gynronov came out of the house, stepped up back of her husband, pulled gun from his pocket, drew a bead on Archie, and—a la Jesse James—got the contract. The authorities and M. J. O'Conners brought the pair to Justice Arnold who assessed them $25 each, or in lieu of the cash offered them a sixty day stay in the jail at Bad Axe. The money was not forthcoming, and the couple are now enjoying free board at the county NORTH BRANCH-August Haslick, a rich bachelor of Burnside township, died some six weeks ago in a hospital at Port Huron after an operation. He left an estate estimated at from $20,000 to $40,000. In his will he named James Martus, a good farmer and neighbor in Burnside, as executor. When the will was filed in the probate court a short time after his death it was learned that he left nearly all the estate to the children of his sister, Mrs. Mary Homer, of Burnside, cutting off the other heirs with a paltry $1 each. The other heirs being Charles and Gotlieb Haslick, and the children of Mrs. Fred Smith, of Burnside, (Mrs. Smith is now deceased) and Mrs. Minnie Bennett, of Buhl, Minn. The heirs were dissatisfied at the distri-bution of the property by the will and have begun suit in the probate court to contest and break the will of August on the grounds of incompetency and undue influence and have retained Attorneys B. F. Reed and W. E. Brown to look after their interests, while Lawyers Geer, Williams and Halpin will act for the defendants. A big law suit is promised. The property is mostly real estate located in Burnside township, together with some collateral notes. Wednesday, August 13th, was set as a day for hearing, but the case was adjourned to another day to be decided upon by the attorneys of the contesting parties.—Gazette.

Of all machines made by man none can compare for long life with the clock. The life of a clock is as much longer than that of any other machinery as the life of a man is longer than that of a dog.
