CHAMPIONSHIP BALL GAME AND RACES ARE FEATURES

AT THE CASS CITY FAIR NEXT WEEK.

Novel and Attractive Amusement Features Engaged by the Fair Officials.

One of the features of the Cass City Fair next week will be a championship ball game between leaders in the Huron County and Thumb Leagues. Marlette, holding first position in the Thumb League, will meet the Ubly team. The latter stands second in the Huron county association and is crowding its nearest competitor hard for first place. The game promises to be closely contested and will be of especial interest to the base ball fans of towns connected with the two leagues. The game will be played on Thursday, Aug. 19, the third day Gagetown Postmaster Weds Elkland Friday morning. of the fair.

Good Races Promised.

August 18, 19 and 20 promise to be red letter days for the racing fraternity in the Thumb counties. "Ted" Snelling, superintendent of the speed department, anticipates a large influx of horses from the Davison racing meet held this week and these together with the string of racers in training on the local track will make strong competition for the purses offered in the following program:

YOU CAN IF YOU WILL.

Would you increase the value of your town property if you could?

It's easy to do and worth doing. Get busy on it; clean it up; repair and paint up; grade your grounds, if they need it; keep your walks in good condition and add new ones where required; cut the weeds and keep them down, both on and adjacent to your property; don't throw trash in the street or the back yard; keep up your fences, if you have them; grow plentv of flowers and neat shrubbery, and

MAKE IT A PLACE OF BEAUTY. Then go around and brag like the dickens to your neighbor about YOUR place, and keep on bragging until you make him jealous of its beauties and he goes to work and does the same

Then let him in on the secret and start him out to rubbing it into his neighbors, and see that he keeps it up until they, too, become tired of the contrast and the bragging and get busy on their own property with a determination to outdo the rest of you.

And in time the whole town will become jealous of the property of each other and every fellow will be whooping it up to see who can have the most attractive place.

Then the traveling public will come along and take notice, and go away and talk of the beauties of our town and the thriftiness of our people and other people will want to come and live in such a fine community.

And isn't it easy to see that your property then will be worth nearly double what it is today?

THE LIGHT THAT NEVER FADES.

A hundred more residences in this town should be lighted by electricity, and every business house, work shop and professional office should be similarly equipped.

The day of the tallow candle has passed, and the lantern and the coal oil lamp should (soon be on their way. Electricity today is no more expensive than the lamp or the candle, while its effectiveness is increased a thousand fold.

The way of the modern world is lighted with electric rays, and the community that refuses to become modernized soon slumbers in the cobwebs of oblivion.

Let every one light up and stay lit.

Why is it men who are as sharp as tacks in most things are as careless as an infant in others? Get in a car and drive around the country and you will see farm implements everywhere exposed to the elements, plows standing the two would make a match. In this in the fields, mowers, rakes, wagons and dozens of implements out in the rain from January to December. Lift a five spot from the pocket of one of those fellows and he will want to either lick you or send you to the penitentiary to square up for his loss. But he lets many times that amount go to rack and ruin in exposing his machinery and implements to the elements without an apparent thought as to their value. Queer-but it's true.

Her Leap Year Privilege

How a Fortune Was Lost.

By CLARISSA MACKIE

"Tum-te-tum, tum-te-tum!"

Angela Winton watched the little fingers wander uncertainly up and down

When the pupil had gone Angela closed the piano with a sigh of relief. Twenty years of teaching music had worn her nerves to a fine edge.

"I wonder if it will always be the same?" she thought as she went to open her letter box. There was a let-

A little color flashed into her pale cheeks as she read the name in one corner of the business envelope: JOHN T. CATESBY

Attorney and Counselor at Law John Catesby was an old friend of Angela's, and she tore open the letter with a feeling of impatience at her swift conclusion that John's unexpected letter was in direct response to her query of the moment before. Very likely it had to do with the bridge club to which they both belonged. The letter read:

Dear Miss Winton-Please call at my office immediately, as I wish to consult with you concerning an important matter of business. Faithfully yours,
JOHN T. CATESBY.

"Dear me! I wonder what he wants to see me about? I may as well dress and go downtown now," she thought as she folded the letter.

An hour later Angela presented herself at Catesby's office. She was a small timid looking woman with soft brown eyes and a wealth of glistening brown hair. Twenty years of battling with the world had made Angela bold of heart and unafraid, but the appealing look remained in her eyes.

An office boy took her into John Catesby's private office, and Catesby grasped her little gloved fingers in his large hand and forgot to release them for a moment.

"You wished to see me?" asked Angela, and, thus reminded, he drew forward a chair beside his own. "Listen to this," he said in an odd tone, picking up an open letter: Sydney, Australia, Jan. 18, 1915. Dear Sir-Kindly inform my niece and only relative, Miss Angela Winton, that it is my intention to bequeath my entire fortune of $1,000,000 to her, provided she is married at the time of my death. She is the only old maid in the Winton family and if she is still unmarried when the announcement of my death is made she will merely receive a small annuity, while the remainder of my estate goes to charty. As I am suffering from an incurable disease it behooves my niece to hasten to

JOSEPH HENRY WINTON. "How utterly absurd!" cried Angela as rosy blushes invaded her smooth "The very idea! He might cheeks. as well cut me off with an annuity and be done with it!" Another letter had been received by Catesby on the same subject. The lawyer had been a protege of Winton, who had sent him to school, to college and had paid his way while he studied his profession. Winton never married, and, as stated in his letter, Angela was his only relative. He was very fond of her and had noticed what Angela had not even suspected-that his protege loved his niece. He was in hopes that event they would inherit his fortune together, and John would make a capital manager of the estate.

Finding that death was not far distant, he had written the two letters, the one intending to influence his niece, the other to advise Catesby of his desire to leave them his property jointly. In the one for John's private reading he had told him that it was his intention to place his niece in a position which would place Catesby in a position to marry her. "Excuse me just a moment," said Catesby, rising. "I am called away on a matter of business." He went into the outside office, where a client was waiting for a few words of advice, and Angela was left alone with her startled thoughts.

How glorious to be the owner of a great fortune! What bliss to travel, to have beautiful clothes, to help the

How sordid it was to consider that she must marry and lose her freedom, but who on earth would marry her? Common sense told her that many unscrupulous men would embrace the opportunity to become the husband of an

From an adjoining office came the lowered voices of two stenographers. "I saw the letter!" insisted one impatiently. "It said she must marry before he died or she would lose the money! The idea!"

"As if such an old maid could find a husband quick as a wink!" giggled the other. "Did you ever see such a little brown mouse of a woman?"

"I wonder if she knows it's leap year and she has the privilege of asking some man to marry her? It's her only chance to get the million, believe me!" When Catesby returned to his desk he found Angela drawing down her veil. Through the filmy meshes her cheeks were pink and her eyes flashed dangerously. All Angela's fighting instincts were aroused. She must have that million at the price of her pride, For the time avarice possessed her

"And now, Miss Winton," smiled Catesby ruefully, "let us plan how we can agree to your uncle's eccentric proposition. Of course you do not want to lose a fortune.'

"Of course not," said Angela crisply. better at this writing. 'I shall not lose it, Mr. Catesby."

He stared at her. "You mean that you are going to be married?" he asked.

Angela nodded. "Then the matter is simplified," he aid brusquely. "Perhaps you can ar range to be married immediately so as to gain the fortune. You may as well

"Yes," said Angela mechanically.

He opened the door for her. asked in such an altered tone that Angela flashed a glance at him. His face was pale and stern, and the friendly look was gone from his dark blue eyes. It was almost as if he had guessed Angela's bold intention.

"I've got to-I've got to look out for the future," thought Angela all the way home.

That evening Angela sat and thought and thought of all the men she knew weighed and sifted them and discarded spent Sunday at Cass river. the impossibles and the undesirables there remained but two-Roger Frame and Dr. Deering.

Roger Frame was a civil engineer, or, rather, an uncivil one-brusque and bad mannered, but withal a fine, strong character and a good friend. "And," debated Angela, "it must be desirable to have one's husband a good friend as well.'

Dr. Deering was her minister, the middle aged rector of her church. "I will explain to them," thought Angela, with hot cheeks. "They will understand, and, as that office girl said, it is leap year. I am only taking advantage of my privilege." The next morning Angela arrayed herself in her best frock, happily a new one of soft gray with a hat to match. The hat was trimmed with violets, and at her breast she pinned a bunch of the same sweet purple blos-

Who could guess the panic in Angela's heart when she stood before Roger Frame's office door? All her principles were in revolt, in arms against the fear that she would lose Uncle Joseph's money.

Facing Roger Frame in his private office, Angela's panic found refuge in hasty speech. Her words tumbled desperately from her lips.

"You have done me such a great honor, Miss Winton," he said gently, 'that I am proud of your confidence in case?" asked Frame quickly. "You see, I must do something, Mr. Frame," and with one shamed look over her shoulder, she slipped out and closed the door upon a ery angry man.

bathed in mellow sunshine when a trim maid ushered an agitated Angela into

"Dr. Deering is engaged at present," said the servant. "He will be at liberty in a little while."

Left alone, Angela could hear the frightened thumping of her heart.

There was the purr of a motorcan outside and the sound was instantly stilled. The rector had another visitor. Angela's courage waned rapidly. She had arisen in a panic when the servant ushered a man into the room with the same explanatory formula.

The man was John T. Catesby. "Ah!" he cried quickly. "Have you seen him? Am I in time?"

"I haven't seen him yet," admitted Angela faintly.

"Then-then"- he stammered excitedly, "why not marry me, Angela?" love you. I want you for my wife." He held out his hands. Angela placed her trembling hands in his. "If I have to marry any one," she faltered: "I'm so glad it's you!"

He drew her closer. "Suppose your uncle had never written you? Suppose there had been no fortune involved?" he whispered.

"Your love would have been riches enough," said Angela, her face against 7:30. All are welcome. his and her pretty hat all crooked. He smiled contentedly.

"Then you may read this," he said drawing a cablegram from his pocket. "It came half an hour ago." It was from Sydney, Australia, and dated the day before. It announced the death of Joseph Henry Winton. Angela would have drawn away from his arm, but he held her closely.

"And you come to me after that?"

"Didn't I say I loved you?" he retorted gruffly. "I've been screwing up my courage to tell you. Your becoming an heiress was a dash of cold water."

But what shall we say to Dr. Deering?" questioned Angela. "Why, we'll ask him to officiate at our wedding next week!" was Catesby's brilliant suggestion.

Angela smiled bravely and shook her head. "I've another name on my list." she said hardily. "The rector."

"Dear lady," said Frame earnestly, "I wish you much joy and success in your quest. Dr. Deering is a good fellow, but I'd like to wring your uncle's neck for placing you in such a position!"

Angela's lip quivered. "If Mr. Catesby had only thought of some other way out of it," she said piteously.

"Catesby? He's the lawyer in the case?" asked Frame quickly.

"I wish you much joy and success in your quest. Dr. Deering is a good fellow, but I'd like to wring your uncle's heisn't as formidable as you may think from this. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. All tomato plants produce branches which bear perfect Though the tomato flowers. plant is largely self fertile, especially when grown in the open air, there is always more or less mixing of varieties when the plants are grown close together.

The selection of your own seed is a simple matter. Select plants that are ideal in vigor, freedom from disease, production and character of fruit. Practically all the tomatoes from each plant thus selected may be saved, only fruits that happen to be inferior being discarded.

Inasmuch as not all plants possess equal powers in transmitting their qualities, it is desirable to keep the seed from each plant in a separate package and then to plant the contents of the packages in separate lots next year.

This will give you an opportunity to judge the best stock. An excellent plan is to conduct a trial test of about twenty-five plants from each lot of seed. You will not find it much trouble to weigh and even to count the tomatoes from each lot of plants. The results will justify the work involved.

SEAWEED AS FERTILIZER.

How It Can Be Used to the Best Advantage.

In general the use of seaweed as a fertilizer is a good investment, says a contributor to the Country Gentleman. On sandy soils it may merely be plowed under, but in general it is preferable to compost it.

Seaweed varies considerably in analysis, according to species, but all kinds contain a high percentage of moisture and more potash than do soft structure land plants. The kelp species in particular carry much potash.

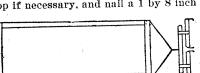

The disadvantage of applying large quantities of seaweed to farm land lies in the possibility of injury to some crops through the chlorine in the salt that adheres to the weed and in the acidity that may be developed through decomposition of masses of the weed.

The weed should be spread on the land as far ahead of crop planting as possible to permit of the chlorine's being carried off by drainage. An application of lime will remedy both the acidity and the ill effects of the chlorine. Much larger applications of the seaweed can be made on sandy soils than on heavy soils or on those not well drained. Plowing under leguminous crops if they are of the deep rooted species, like clover and alfalfa, will maintain soil fertility. The nodules on the roots will collect nitrogen from the air, and the deep roots will bring up potash and phosphoric acid from the subsoil.

But lime should be applied occasionally to prevent any acidity that may develop as the result of decomposition of masses of green growths. At intervals of seven to ten years it would also be advisable to apply phosphorus in the form of ground bones, slag or only. They do little for soil improve-

NEW FLEXIBLE TIRE

Will Be Welcomed by Motorists as Improvement Over Those of Rubber.

HÁS MANY GOOD QUALITIES

Inventor Claims for It High Resiliency and a Surprisingly Long Life-Antiskid Properties Secured Without the Use of Chains.

Since the rapid advance of the price of rubber automobile tires within the last few years, countless inventors have been working on the idea of perfecting some sort of tire which would not involve inflated rubber, or the pneumatic type, and the incurred shortness of life and the unpleasantness of punctures. One of the most ingenious examples of the new "mechanical tires" and one said to possess high resiliency and a surprisingly long life, embodies several pliable nonelastic bands under tension, separated by aluminum blocks. It will be readily seen that resiliency does not result rubber compounds, as is usually the case. On account of the square edge, antiskid properties are secured without the use of chains. By means of an adjusting arrangement the tire can be made harder or softer, to suit individual comfort. The new tire has been approved by the Royal Automobile club of Great Britain, and it has passed the antiskid test of Scotland Yard.-World's Advance.

New Clutch Is Big Advance.

The problem of how to construct a cone type of clutch which will neither grab nor slip under any circumstances is one that has had the very strict attention of automobile engineers for years. A new type of cone clutch embodies improvements that make it impossible for the clutch to grab or slip, no matter how quickly the clutch is allowed to engage. Five hard steel disks are set at equal intervals into the inner surface of the cone of the flywheed. The disks are so placed that the center of the face of each disk is slightly above the surface of contact. When the clutch is first en- miracles. Wherever its culture begaged, the gripping is on the surface of these five disks, but as the full force of the clutch spring is applied perity attends the farm. One-half raw phosphate rock. Commercial ferthe flexibility of these disks allows pound more of butter and one pound tilizers may be termed crop producers them to yield so that gradually the whole clutching surface is engaged.

Many Parts in Modern Auto.

That there are 2,000 to 3,500 parts in the modern automobile, and that the absence of any one of these parts may delay the manufacturing of finished cars, was pointed to by E. Ver Linden, production manager of the Oldsmobile plants, as illustrating the importance of business methods in motor car factories.

Co-ordinating the purchasing and production departments in such a manner that materials are obtained in the correct quantities far enough in advance to guard against shortages in stocks, Mr. Ver Linden stated, was essential to conducting smooth running plants, which produce cars on well-defined schedules.

Saves Macadam Roads.

There is a well-defined though little known theory that much of the rapid and often deplored depreciation of macadam roads might be prevented were they rolled with three-wheeled rollers when under construction, instead of by the usual two-wheeled affairs. It is said that machines of this type have been tried abroad with highly gratifying results, their effect being to prevent the formation of very small but distinct depressions in the shape of transverse hollows, which in time, under the combined influences of the kneading of the surface and pounding of the entire structure by wheels, develop into the much-maligned chuckhole.

Important "Dont's." Here are some of Mr. Leavell's dont's for tire owners: Don't drive in ruts.

Don't turn corners too rapidly. Don't strive to shatter all the speed

Don't run with the tires underin-flated. Don't fail to vulcanize or seal up small cuts.

Don't run with wheels out of alignment.—Valley Farmer. Don't Fill Too Often.

Frequent additions to the oil in the crank case are all right for a limited time only. When the oil gets saturated with mineral wear, and has also considerable gasoline which dips past the piston rings combined with it, it is a very poor lubricant.

Making the Little Farm Pay

By C. C. BOWSFIELD

In the dairy section of Illinois and in a number of other localities throughout the country the corn crop is below normal, and many farmers would be in a serious predicament but for the amazing success of alfalfa.

At corn planting time last year the weather in Illinois was cold and wet. delaying work and giving the crop a poor start, but in the fine weather of April, three or four weeks before anybody would dare put in corn, alfalfa was growing vigorously. It came through the winter in good condition, through the winter in good condition, and the yield of hay has been far the heaviest ever obtained from the alfalfa fields of the northwest.

In hundreds of individual cases alfalfa makes up for the deficiency in corn, so that farmers will be able to feed their cattle to advantage. It goes without saying that alfalfa has come without saying that alfalfa has come into high favor all over the north, and farmers are learning all they can about the crop. This legume ought to net $50 to $75 an acre where it is cut three times in a season. The return is $75 to $100 an acre in southern latitudes, where the crop is cut five or six times. Most of the arguments for growing alfalfa are based on the plan of feeding the crop to dairy cows at home. There is another side to this. Hamlet Worker of Onondaga county, N. Y., sells the hav and cuts out the work of running a dairy. He has sold his cows. His thirty-five acres of alfalfa this year gave five tons of hay per acre, for which he has received an avacre, for which he has received an average of $16 a ton. Perhaps his work on the hay represents two months of actual labor, whereas when he fed his crop to dairy cattle he worked from daylight till dark the year round, and from a pneumatic principle or from seven days in the week. He claims the dairy never showed more net profit for a year than does this crop of thirtyfive acres of alfalfa.

All along the limestone soils in central New York alfalfa is working farm comes general all crops improve, land values rise, incomes increase and prosmore of beef for each household in the middle west is a possibility if only three-tenths of the land now in grass were given over to alfalfa. The protein in alfalfa hay is substantially as great as that from bran in feeding ration. Alfalfa ranges in price from $15 to $25 a ton, but after all it pays to feed it up as closely as possible to dairy and beef cattle on the farm. Whether sent to market or consumed at home, it has become established as one of the greatest of the money making products and in many cases is solving the whole problem of farm finances. The yield of four to six tons per acre is a common experience all over the country where modern methods are employed in raising the crop. At minimum market prices this means a money val-

falfa is to provide a good seed bed. For this purpose it is well to choose land on which corn, sugar beets, potatoes or other cultivated crops have been grown. Through the cultivation of these crops the land is clean from weeds and usually works down to a mellow seed bed. The field should be plowed deeply in the fall, so that the soil may be exposed to frost and thaws during winter, and eight or ten tons of manure per acre should be used. In the spring the land is to be disked and harrowed. Then there should be obtained a quantity of soil where alfalfa or sweet clover has been grown. This soil contains suitable bacteria. In other words, it is inoculated. This inoculated soil should be scattered over the surface in quantities of about 500 pounds per acre. It must be harrowed in at once, as sunlight is deadly to bacterial life. The field is then ready for seeding, and it will pay to drill in with the seed 400 pounds per acre of a fertilizer analyzing 2 per cent ammonia, 12 per cent available phosphoric acid and 2 per ceent potash. Twenty pounds of seed is a liberal supply. Less may do, and the farmer, if satisfied with his soil, may cut out the commercial fertilizer. It is assumed that the land has been limed or is sweet enough for leguminous crops. If there is sourness apply 2,000 pounds of lime. Spring seeding of alfalfa is generally favored. Cut the crop when blooming begins. In order to save the leaves the hay should be raked up soon after cutting and cured in cocks. In starting out with alfalfa look for the seed of hardy varieties, and do not use soggy

Eye Strain.

There are two common kinds of eye strain. It is a strain for a person who is farsighted to do close work, and it is a strain for one who is nearsighted to use the eyes for distances. Both kinds of eye strain produce the same symptoms-headache-and both require that the eyes be examined and glasses be provided.

WOMANLY CHATTER.

How to Make a Charming Water Garden With Aid of Tub and Hose. Most persons who love all flowers have longed at some time for a water garden, but very few attempt to create

There appears to be a widespread impression that water lily growing is an expensive pastime and one that requires considerable skill. As a matter of fact a very charming little water garden can be made with the aid of a tub and a garden hose, and the lilies are not difficult to grow. If you have only a small space a few tubs or half barrels sunk into the ground about three-quarters of their depth will furnish the easiest beginning. Put these in the sunniest spot and plant flags and other moisture loving plants around the edges. Fill two-thirds of the depth of the tubs with rich soil. Three parts loam and one part well rotted cow manure is a good mixture. Cover the soil with half an inch of clean white sand and turn in the water.

After the tubs are filled with water let them stand for two or three days until the water is warmed by the sun to the same temperature as the air; then set in your lilies. After the roots are in the tubs be careful that the tubs are kept well filled with water, as evaporation is rapid.

Hardy water lillies, callas, sweet flag, water poppy and water hyacinth are good plants with which to begin.

For the margins of the tubs flowering rush-an irislike plant with rose colored flowers-water arum, a miniature calla, Egyptian paper plant, cattails and parrot's feather all are easy to cultivate and are inexpensive.

Goldfish are an attractive addition to the water garden, and they thrive well, as the growing plants keep the water clean and pure. The goldfish also keep the little pond free from mosquitoes.

A large pond or basin lined with concrete is quite within the amateur gardener's reach if there be sufficient space and an ample supply of water, but the pond must be kept well filled to become a success. When the large concrete basin is used the roots of the lilies should be planted in boxes. Be sure that the boxes are large enough to give the roots ample room to spread

FITTING NEW FACING

Frequently Only Way to Eliminate the Slipping of the Cone Clutch.

BY NO MEANS DIFFICULT TASK

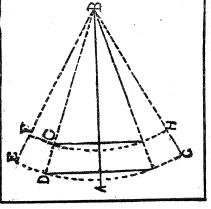

Here Are Directions for Pattern That Will Make It Just What It Should Be-Best Leather for the Work-To Attach to Cone.

When the usual treatment of the leather or other functional facing or adjustment fails to eliminate the slipping of the cone clutch, the only satisfactory remedy is to fit a new facing. This is not a difficult task, and can be successfully accomplished by the average motorist. As it is not always possible to remove the old facing in a good enough condition to utilize it as a pattern, one will have to be made. As it is important that the faces of the clutch be at the correct angle and the pattern the exact size. use a large sheet of paper.

Draw a line through the center, this representing a line through the center of the hub and parallel with it, as shown at A-B in the accompanying illustration. Continue the angle of the cone by straight lines meeting at a point on the center line. Use this point as a center and the distances from B to C and to D as radii for describing the circles F H and E G. The dimensions from E to G should equal the largest circumference of the cone, and it is a good plan to make the strip slightly longer to allow for the fitting. Cut the leather according to the pattern.

The best leather for facing is a high grade oak bark tanned sole or belting. Hemlock tanned is sometimes used. The leather should be made soft and pliable with neatsfoot or castor oil before fitting. Soaking the leather in water is favored by some, but it is apt to result in the leather pulling away from the rivets in drying out.

To attach the cone, place one end of the leather in position and hold it with clamps. Drill the holes and be sure that they are well countersunk before riveting, as it is important that the heads of the rivets be well below the surface. Pull the leather taut, clamp it, and drill and rivet the facing at the next point of fastening, repeating the operation until the work

Patience a Virtue.

When making motor adjustments it usually is necessary to exercise a little patience in order to get the best results, for the reason that the effects of adjustments are not always instantly apparent. In carburetor adjustments, for instance, the motor must be given a little time to feel the changes made, and the results obtained immediately following the turn of a needle valve or an air valve spring may be misleading. The same is true of lubrication adjustments, only to a much greater extent, for it is clear that it takes some time for oil previously supplied to work through and for the new rate of supply to settle down to steady work.

Owner at Fault Many Times.

Thomas J. Hay, automobile expert, is authority for the statement that 90 per cent of the battery and ignition trouble experienced by motorists is due to carelessness and negligence on the part of owners. Hay believes that owners have not been properly educated on battery maintenance.

"The trouble is," said Hay, "that owners do not pay enough attention to care and operation of batteries. This is due to the fact that battery education has been sadly neglected, by motorists. Most people look upon the storage battery as a 'mystery box' and believe the less attention it is given the better."

Proper Lubrication.

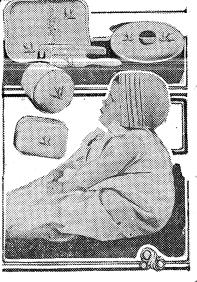

To make a good car continue to run well, proper lubrication is essential. If owners can be made to keep their cars so lubricated they will get the maximum of service from them. In order to make this operation as simple as possible a company has issued a chart that not only shows every connection, joint and surface that needs oil or grease, but also has a calendar attached so as to show just when the oiling or greasing has been

A Story of Intentions Turned Awry.

By EUNICE BLAKE *************************

Edgar Beverly, from the time he was born, was all boy. There was abolutely nothing feminine about him. When he was three years old a doting aunt presented him with a doll. His father was not in sympathy with this gift, averring that dolls were exclusively for girls. But the aunt insisted that boys, as well as girls, in their infancy played with dolls. So a doll was provided, with a china head, flaxen locks and a pair of beautiful blue eyes. Edgar accepted it, but showed a lack of intelligence as to what it was for. Ten minutes after it had been given him he took it by the ankles and brought the head down on a stone step, scattering fragments of the china E. W. Keating, contractor and head over the garden walk. builder, has a special announcement

When Edgar was ten years old he lost his mother and was turned over to a bachelor uncle of thirty. Robert Cooledge, the uncle, had been a wild fellow and was just beginning to realize the chances he had taken and the time he had wasted in sowing his wild oats. He had barely escaped losing at the gaming table a fortune he had inherited and had just in time put a check on himself in too close association with the bottle. He had madly loved three different women, any one of whom, if he had married her, would a nickle in his ice cream department have wrecked his life.

When Robert Cooledge assumed the care of his little nephew he had become fully aware of his own imperfections and realized by what a narrow margin on many occasions he had escaped calamity. His experiences with the women he had loved, or thought he loved, had caused him to believe that he was a very poor judge between good and bad women. Nevertheless he considered matrimony, the wife being a good woman, as a sheet anchor for men. Having convinced himself of his the performances at the Rex Theatre. own inability to discover the good or the bad in a woman, and being horrified at the mistakes he had made, he eschewed matrimony for himself, while he advocated it for others.

For these reasons he determined that Edgar Beverly should be brought up very carefully, that some woman, who knew her own sex perfectly, should select a wife for the boy and that he should marry the girl selected, whether he loved her or not, when he came to manhood. He would bring the boy up to consider him more as a companion than an uncle, and in this way would be the better able to shield him from the dangers through which he himself had passed. When Edgar came to be eighteen_ years old he displayed the same proclivities his uncle had displayed in his youth. He was not bad, but reckless. He was very generous, and when his own interests came in collision with there's still an opportunity for you to those of any one weaker than himself he would invariably give way. He when one day his nephew swung to did not conceal what he was doing there are bigger stores than his, but from his uncle, and Cooledge had every advantage in guiding him, having from he calls attention to the completeness

Edgar benefited by the advice of his nouncement of Treadgold's Drug uncle so far as to escape certain pitfalls, but the trend of his disposition could not be turned. He had inherited the same wild oats fever as his uncle and it must run its course.

The man who wants to get the most For several years the uncle was in a house-value for his money should not constant state of anxiety with regard fail to read how to spend his buildto his nephew, for such was the relaing dollars wisely in the ad of the tionship between them that Cooledge knew exactly what Beverly was doing. Mr. Cooledge had passed safely through the danger period of a man's life and had arrived at an age wherein he saw those dangers in their true light. The fascination of danger inherent in a manly man had passed and left him a splendid fellow. But that was no reason why his nephew could run the same course and escape ruin. These were some of the thoughts that passed through Mrs. Jernegan's mind before she acted upon Mr. Cooledge's request. Then when she had the matter all thought out she sent for a young lady friend of hers, Miss Laura Dudley, and the two had a long conversation on the subject of snatching young Edgar Beverly as a brand from the burning. The next day Mr. Cooledge received an invitation to call on Mrs. Jernegan and upon doing so was informed that she had fixed upon a young lady who would be a fit person to reform his nephew. The only question was, Would she consent to make the effort? She was three or four years older than Edgar, but Mrs. Jernegan recognized the fact that very young men are more easily won by women older than themselves than by immature girls. She proposed that the young woman upon whom she had decided meet the uncle and the nephew, and after the meeting, if she consented to make the desired attempt, that Mr. Cooledge be informed of the fact and give her every opportunity to accomplish her mission. The result of these interviews was that Mr. Cooledge, Mr. Beverly and Miss Dudley met at Mrs. Jernegan's at dinner. Cooledge kept a close eye on Miss Dudley to observe whether or no she seemed pleased with his nephew. He saw no evidence that she was pleased or displeased with him. As dinner passed very pleasantly, and alone in Mrs. Jernegan's runabout, Edgar Beverly accompanied her. A few days later Mr. Cooledge was informed that Miss Dudley had acceded to his request, and Mrs. Jernegan suggested that he call upon the young lady for the purpose of talking the matter over. He lost no time in making the call and found Miss Dudley in a very complaisant frame of mind.

"I was much pleased with your nephem, Mr. Cooledge," she said, "and since our mutual friend, Mrs. Jernegan, has apprised me of your intentions, we may as well begin where she left off. If I am to win your pephew I can only do it by being thrown a good deal in his company. This, of course, cannot be without management. Now, I pronose that we make up a little party for the balance of the summer to go to the mountains. That there may be two men and two women I propose to invite a lady friend of mine-for chaperon if you like and I feel great confidence that your plan of marrying your nephew will succeed before the end of the summer.'

Mr. Cooledge fell in with the plan, and in due time a party of four was domesticated in a mountain hotel. Mr. Cooledge was somewhat surprised to find the lady who was added to the party to be several years younger than Miss Dudley, but the latter explained that she was the only one of her friends whom she could get to make up the party. She was scarcely out of her teens and a very attractive young woman. She was introduced as Kate Millard, and the name Kate is often synonomous with the word fascinating.

The quartet passed a very enjoyable month together. But from the first the plan to marry Beverly to Miss Dudley went awry, because he preferred Kate Millard. Cooledge was much put out at the turn the affair had taken, for he approved very highly of Miss Dudley, but considered her friend of very light caliber. Instead of his nephew being attentive to Miss Dudley he was devoted to her friend. This left Cooledge and Miss Dudley in constant companionship. Cooledge after awhile instead of being troubled at this turn of his intentions was so delighted with Miss Dudley's companionship that her from his friend he showed his spleen perceptibly.

Not only did Beverly notice his uncle's being ruffled by his attentions to Miss Dudley, but Kate was immensely delighted with it. The two younger the State Fair this fall, as we did a persons were evidently out for a frolic, year ago, and a child welfare exhibit and if they could get any fun at the older man's expense they were quite incline to do so. Beverly would for a time leave Miss Dudley quite free to receive the attentions of Mr. Cooledge, then he would veer about and appropriate her to himself. To make matters' worse, Miss Dudley made no objection to being monopolized by the young scapegrace, and when he was devoted to her his uncle was left out in the cold.

And so the game went on. Mr. Cooledge when his nephew was devoting himself to Miss Dudley declared that the plan was working out admirably, but he felt like throwing the young rascal over a precipice. Then when Beverly swung back to Kate Millard and left the field to him he voted the boy a fool, but in his heart was delighted.

When the autumn came round and the party returned to the city Mr. Cooledge one day received a message from Mrs. Jernegan asking why he had not called upon her. He at once put in an appearance, and the following dialogue ensued:

"How did the plan for marrying your nephew work?" asked the lady. "It didn't work at all. Miss Dudley invited a friend of hers, a chit, to be of our party in the mountains, and the chit got away with Edgar."

"Indeed!" said the lady. "That was very hard on Laura, wasn't it? Who was the friend that Laura invited to complete your party?" "A Miss Kate Millard."

"You mean Mrs. Kate Millard." "What?"

"Kate Millard is a widow." Mr. Cooledge was thunderstruck. "You wished to marry off your neph ew, and I wished to give you a wife. I got up this party for a summer outing myself. It was all arranged beforehand that Kate Millard should win your nephew and Laura Dudley should win you. The plan has been successful in both its parts. Edgar Beverly is

All Sorts of Neckpieces

Just how it happened is one of with an ermine tail and head, and ties those things that cannot be explained, but in this year of grace May and June beheld the summer girl (and the matron) bedecking themselves matching the suit, cannot be said to with light neckpieces of fur. No matter how summery the gown and hat, the thin silk hose and light, low shoes, a scarf of white fox hugged the throats of about nine out of ten of those who keep up with the merry pace of fads.

In the wake of summer furs-which looked especially well with white turbans-came other neckwear, and now there is a limitless variety from which to choose, with a growing demand to inspire its expansion. Next after white fox come the angora pieces. These are shown in short collars, like that at the upper right in the picture, and in short boas. Smart big pompons made of the fur, to match these neckpieces, are worn on small hats and turbans. The little angora collar shown here is finished

The ostrich boa in white and black, in all white, or in white with a color take second place, although it followed the neckpiece of fur in popular favor. Just now it is in more general demand than any other and heads the list of favorite neckpieces. The newest ostrich boas are short and finished with long tassels of narrow silk braid. Nestling in the long and dainty fibers are beautiful millinery roses in a small cluster, or a single rose and bud shows off to wonderful advantage so placed. These ruffs are fastened with tassels hanging at the back. Occasionally a short neckpiece of white marabou is seen, but the longer flue of the ostrich makes it the favorite. Besides furs and feathers there are the collars of malines and nets made in variety so great that everyone may

ARED CROSS NURSE

What One Girl Who Belongs to "the Idle Rich" Is Doing.

USED TO BREAKFAST IN BED.

Now Her Day Begins by Early Rising, Early Breakfast and Then Hard Labor Taking Care of Wounded Soldiers In a Military Hospital at Exeter.

A letter from a Red Cross volunteer nurse is interesting as showing what some of the "idle rich" have turned to, for it is written by a girl who has much money, was always considered too delicate to get up for breakfast and has been pampered all her life. She is at No. 2 Military hospital at Exeter, England.

"I am home for a breathing space after more than five weeks and am very glad of the time. I like the work very much, but it is very hard. We are on the go from 7:30 to 12:30 without ever hardly having the chance to sit down, and in the afternoon you may get a little time to cut up dressings, I really hate is getting up, and it grows worse and worse

"This is my day: Called at 6:45horror of horrors-breakfast at 7:30, and one has to turn out for it wet or fine. Roll call at 7:55. Wards at 8prayers, make beds, sweep ward, dust lockers, etc. Wash doctors' jugs, etc., take temperatures, etc., and chart them. Have all ready or look ready by 9:15 and do what you can't before that time when you can, for it must be done. Nine forty-five, put out all medicines and see that all empty lotions, etc., are sent up to the dispensary to be renewed; then get all dressings ready, sterilize instruments, help with the dressings, clean up, wash and sterilize instruments and scrub all bowls, carbolize mackintoshes, etc.

"Wander round in file after the doctor and listen to his lightest request and rush off to fill it, but never run. It is taboo, a rapid glide can be acquired. Then you get the diet sheet made up and signed, meal lists made up, bath list sent in, linen list made, and stores made up. Besides these trifles you have to get your patient's lunch and carry it to the wards, gobble your own. then get their knife, fork and spoon, bread and tray for dinner. After this you gobble yours and then rush for the trays and carry them off in triumph to the ward and feed the lions, then rush off for the puddings, then sweep and dust again and put out medicines. I may mention that all brass has to be polished, pans and kettles kept in order and such little abodes of bliss as wash houses, lavatories, etc., all come under your charge in rotation, also the recreation room to be kept tidy and in

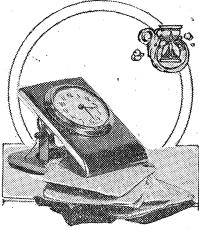

"After dinner-that is, about 2 till -you may get a chance of sitting down, and you make swabs, cut dressings, pad splints, if you are not changing your four hourly dressings, etc. At 3 you go and cut bread and butter for tea, bring mugs, etc., forward. At 3:45 fetch and give them tea, then sweep again. At 5 take temperatures, make beds, wash patients, do backs, and do all dressings. Supper and bed at 8-you are devoutthankful it is not later. Quality does not mean mere "showiness." Quality refers to the backbone of the material—the sound, clear, strong, uniform fiber and texture of the lumber, brick, cement, etc.

That is the quality you want—backbone quality. It is the only quality that will insure you real housevalue—the pleasing, comfortable home that lasts longest at least expense—a daily source of satisfaction and bringing full value if you want to sell or rent.

CHAPTER XXII.

Fanchon. ENROD hastily dropped the small hand and, exclaiming, with simple honesty, "Why, I don't want it!" followed Fanchon out into the sunshiny yard, where they came to a halt and surveyed each other.

Penrod stared awkwardly chon, no "her occupation & itself to him, while Fanchon, with the utmost coolness, made a very thorough visual examination of Penrod, favoring him with an estimating scrutiny which lasted until he literally wiggled. Finally she spoke.

"Where do you buy your ties?" she asked.

"What?"

"Where do you buy your neckties? Papa gets his at Skoone's. You ought to get yours there. I'm sure the one you're wearing isn't from Skoone's."
"Skoone's?" Penrod repeate.d

"Skoone's?" "On Fifth avenue," said Fauchon. "It's a very smart shop, the men say." "Men?" echoed Penrod in a hazy whisper. "Men?" "Where do your people go in summer?" inquired the lady. "We go to Long Shore, but so many middle class people have begun coming there mamma thinks of leaving. The middle classes are simply awful, don't you think?

"What?" "They're so boorjaw. You speak French, of course?"

"We ran over to Paris last year. It's lovely, don't you think? Don't you love the Rue de la Paix?" Penrod wandered in a labyrinth. This girl seemed to be talking, but her words were dumfounding, and of course there was no way for him to know that he was really listening to her mother. It was his first meeting with one of those grownup little girls, wonderful product of the winter apartment and summer hotel, and Fanchon, an only child, was a star of the brand. He began to feel resentful.

"I suppose," she went on, "I'll find everything here fearfully western, Some nice people called yesterday, though. Do you know the Magsworth Bittses? Auntie says they're charming. Will Roddy be at your party?"
"I guess he will," returned Penrod, finding this intelligible. "The mutt!" "Really!" Fanchon exclaimed airily. "Aren't you great pals with him?"

"Good heavens! Don't you know pals' with any one? You are an odd

Despite all anguish, contumely, tar and Maurice Levy, he still secretly thought of Marjorie, with pathetic constancy, as his "beau," though that Marjorie was beautiful; her curls were long and the color of amber; her nose was straight, and her freckles were honest; she was much prettier than this accomplished visitor. But beauty is not all.

"I do!" breathed Fanchon softly. She seemed to him a fairy creature from some rosier world than this. So humble is the human heart it glorifles and makes glamorous almost any poor thing that says to it, "I like

"Well-I don't care-if you want to I just as soon." "We'll dance together," said Fanchon, "at your party."

"I guess so. I just as soon."

"Don't you want to, Penrod?" "Well, I'm willing to." "No. Say you want to!"

He used his toe as a gimlet, boring into the ground, his wide open eyes staring with intense vacancy at a button on his sleeve. His mother appeared upon the porch in departure, calling farewells over her shoulder to Mrs. Gelbraith, who stood in the doorway.

"Say it!" whispered Fanchon. "Well, I just as soon." She seemed satisfied.

A dancing floor had been laid upon a platform in the yard when Mrs. Schoabode, and a white and scarlet striped canopy was in process of erection overhead to shelter the dancers from the sun. Workmen were busy everywhere under the direction of Margaret, and the smitten heart of Penrod began to beat rapidly. All this was for him. He was twelve!

After lunch he underwent an elaborate toilet and murmured not. For the first time in his life he knew the wish to be sandpapered, waxed, and the yard struck up their thrilling march, polished to the highest possible degree. And when the operation was over he stood before the mirror in new bloom. feeling encouraged to hope that his resemblance to his father was not so strong as Aunt Sarah seemed to think.

The white gloves upon his hands had a pleasant smell, he found, and as he came down the stairs he had great content in the twinkling of his new dancing slippers. He stepped twice on each step the better to enjoy their effect, and at the same time he deeply inhaled the odor of the gloves. In spite of everything Penrod had his social capacities. Already it is to be perceived that there were in him the makings of a cotillion leader.

Then came from the yard a sound of tuning instruments, squeak of fiddle, croon of cello, a falling triangle ringing and tinkling to the floor, and he turned pale.

Chosen guests began to arrive, while Penrod, suffering from stage fright and perspiration, stood beside his mother, in the "drawing room." to receive them. He greeted unfamiliar acquaintances and intimate fellow criminals with the same frigidity, murmuring "'M glad to see y'" to all alike, largely increasing the embarrassment which always prevails at the beginning of children's festivities. His unnatural pomp and circumstance had so thoroughly upset him, in truth, that Marjorie Jones received a distinct shock, now to be related. Dr. Thrope, the very kind old clergyman who had baptized Penrod, came in for a moment to congratulate the boy and had just moved away when it was Marjorie's turn, in the line of children, to speak to Penrod. She gave him what she considered a forgiving look and, because of the occasion, addressed him in a perfectly courteous manner.

"I wish you many happy returns of the day, Penrod."

"Thank you, sir!" he returned, following Dr. Thorpe with a glassy stare in which there was absolutely no recognition of Marjorie. Then he greeted Maurice Levy, who was next to Marjorie, "'M glad to see y'!"

Dumfounded, Marjorie turned aside and stood near, observing Penrod with gravity. It was the first great surprise of her life. Customarily she had seemed to place his character somewhere between that of the professional rioter and that of the orang outang. Nevertheless her manner at times just hinted a consciousness that this Caliban was her property, wherefore she stared at him incredulously as his head bobhed up and down in the dancing school bow, greeting his guests. Then she heard an adult voice near her exclaim:

"What an exquisite child!" Marjorie glanced up-a little consciously, though she was used to itnaturally curious to ascertain who was speaking of her. It was Sam Williams' mother addressing Mrs. Bassett, both being present to help Mrs. Schofield make the festivities festive. "Exquisite!"

Here was a second heavy surprise for Marjorie. They were not looking at her. They were looking with beaming approval at a girl she had never seen, a dark and modish stranger of singularly composed and yet modest aspect. Her downcast eyes, becoming in one thus entering a crowded room, were all that produced the effect of modesty, counteracting something about her which might have seemed Penrod was even more confused too assured. She was very slender, very dainty, and her apparel was disher eyelids, if very closely scrutinized, would have revealed successful experimentation with a burned match. Marjorie's lovely eyes dilated. She learned the meaning of hatred at first is not how he would have spelled it sight. Observing the stranger with instinctive suspicion, all at once she seemed to herself, awkward. Poor Marjorie underwent that experience which hearty, healthy little girls and big girls undergo at one time or another-from heels to head she felt herself, somehow, too thick.

Fanchon leaned close to Penrod and whispered in his ear:

"Don't you forget!"

Penrod blushed.

Marjorie saw the blush. Her lovely eyes opened even wider, and in them there began to grow a light. It was the light of indignation, at least people whose eyes glow with that light always call it indignation.

Roderick Magsworth Bitts, Jr., approached Fanchon when she had made her courtesy to Mrs. Schofield. Fanchon whispered in Roderick's ear also. "Your hair is pretty, Roddy! Don't forget what you said yesterday!"

Roderick likewise blushed. Maurice Levy, captivated by the newomer's appearance, pressed close to Roderick.

"Give us an intaduction, Roddy?" Roddy being either reluctant or unable to perform the rite, Fanchon took natters into her own hands and was field and her son arrived at their own presently favorably impressed with Maurice, receiving the information that his tie had been brought to him by his papa from Skoone's, whereupon she privately informed him that she liked wavy hair and arranged to dance with him. Fanchon also thought that sandy hair was attractive, Sam Williams discovered a few minutes later, and so catholic was her taste that a ring of boys quite encircled her before the musicians in and Mrs. Schofield brought Penrod to escort the lady from out of town to the dancing pavilion.

Headed by this pair, the children sought partners and paraded solemnly out of the front door and round a corner of the house. There they found the gay marquee, the small orchestra seated on the lawn at one side of it and a punch bowl of lemonade inviting attention under a tree. Decorously the small couples stepped upon the platform, one after another, and began

"It's not much like a children's party in our day." Mrs. Williams said to Penrod's mother. "We'd have been playing Quaker meeting, clap in, clap out or going to Jerusalem, I suppose."

"Yes, or postoffice and drop the handkerchief," said Mrs. Schofield. "Things change so quickly. Imagine asking little Fanchon Gelbraith to play London oridge! Penrod seems to be having a difficult time with her, poor boy. He wasn't a shining light in the dancing

However, Penrod's difficulty was not precisely of the kind his mother supposed.

Fanchon was soon showing him a new step, which she taught her next partner in turn, continuing instructions during the dancing. The children crowded the floor, and in the kaleidoscopic jumble of bobbing heads and intermingling figures her extremely different style of motion was unobserved by the older people, who looked on, nodding time benevolently.

Fanchon fascinated girls as well as Many of the former eagerly sought her acquaintance and thronged about her between the dances, when, accepting the deference due a cosmopolitan and an oracle of the mode, she gave demonstrations of the new step to succeeding groups, professing astonishment to find it unknown. It had been "all the go," she explained, at the Long Shore Casino for fully two

She pronounced very "slow" a "fancy dance" executed during an intermission by Baby Rennsdale and Georgie Bassett, giving it as her opinion that Miss Rennsdale and Mr. Bassett were "dead ones," and she expressed surprise that the punch bowl contained lemonade and not cham-

The dancing continued, the new step gaining instantly in popularity, fresh couples adventuring with every number. The word "step" is somewhat misleading, nothing done with the feet being vital to the evolutions introduced by Fanchon. Fanchon's dance came from the orient by a roundabout

Pausing in old Spain, taking on a Gallic frankness in gallantry at the Bal Bullier in Paris, combining with a relative from the south seas encountered in San Francisco, flavoring itself with a care free negroid abandon in New Orleans and accumulating, too, something inexpressible from Mexico and South America, it kept throughout its travels to the underworld or to circles where nature is extremely frank and rank, until at last it reached the dives of New York, when it immediately broke out in what is called civilized society.

Thereafter it soon spread in variously modified forms—some of them disinfected-to watering places and thence, carried by hundreds of older male and female Fanchons over the country, being eagerly adopted every where and made wholly pure and respectable by the supreme moral axiom that anything is all right if enough people do it.

Everybody was doing it.

Not quite everybody. It was pernaps some test of this dance that earth could furnish no more grotesque sight than that of children doing it.

Earth, assisted by Fanchon, was furnishing this sight at Penrod's party. By the time ice cream and cake arrived about half the guests had either been initiated into the mysteries by Fanchon or were learning by imitation, and the education of the other half was resumed with the dancing when the attendant ladies, unconscious of what was happening, withdrew into the house for tea and a bit of gossip.

"That orchestra's a dead one," Fanchon remarked to Penrod. "We ought to liven them up a little."

She approached the musicians. "Don't you know," she asked the leader, "the 'Slingo Sligo Slide?" The leader giggled, nodded, rapped with his bow upon his violin, and Penrod, following Fanchon back upon the dancing floor, blindly brushed with his elbow a solitary little figure standing aloof on the lawn at the edge of the

introduced by Fanchon she had scornfully refused from the first to dance the new "step" and because of its bonfire popularity found herself neglected in a society where she had reigned as beauty and belle. Faithless Penrod, dazed by the sweeping Fanchon, had utterly forgotten the back fence, and a western window of amber curis. He had not once asked the house blazed in gold unbearable to Marjorie to dance. All afternoon the the eye. His day was nearly over. light of indignation had been growing He sighed and took from the inside brighter in her eyes, though Maurice pocket of his new jacket the "slingevy's defection to the lady from New York had not fanned this flame. It seemed to and drew back the ancient catapult her that Penrod had no right to allow for a shot. A sparrow hopped upon a strange girl to whisper in his ear, a branch between him and the house, that his blushing when the strange girl and he aimed at the sparrow, but the did it was atrocious and that the reflection from the dazzling window strange girl herself ought to be ar-

Forgotten by the merrymakers, Marjorie stood alone upon the lawn, clinching her small fists, watching the new dance at its high tide and hating it with a hatred that made every inch of her tremble. And, perhaps because jealousy is a great awakener of the virtues, she had a perception of something in it worse than lack of dignitysomething vaguely but outrageously reprehensible. Finally when Penrod brushed by her, touched her with his elbow and did not even see her, Marjorie's state of mind (not unmingled with emotion) became dangerous. In fact, a trained nurse chancing to observe her at this juncture would probably have advised that she be taken home and put to bed. Marjorie was on the verge of hysterics.

She saw Fanchon and Penrod assume the double embrace required by the dance. The "Slingo Sligo Slide" burst from the orchestra like the lunatic shriek of a gin maddened negro, and all the little couples began to bob and dip and sway.

Marjorie made a scene. She sprang upon the platform and stamped her

"Penrod Schofield!" she shouted. You BEHAVE yourself!"

The remarkable girl took Penrod by the ear. By his ear she swung him away from Fanchon and faced him toward the lawn.

"You march straight out of here!" she commanded. Penrod marched.

He was stunned; obeyed automatically without question and had very little realization of what was happening to him. Altogether and without reason he was in precisely the condition of an elderly spouse detected in flagrant misbehavior. Marjorie similarly was in precisely the condition of the party who detects such misbehavior. It may be added that she had acted with a promptness, a decision and a disregard of social consequences all to be commended to the attention of ladies in like predicament. "You ought to be ashamed of yourself!" she raged when they reached the "Aren't you ashamed of your-"What for?" he inquired helplessly.

She slapped him. He should have understood from this how much she cared for him, but he rubbed his cheek and declared rue

"I'll never speak to you again!" "You will too!" she sobbed passionately.

"I will not!"

He turned to leave her, but paused. His mother, his sister Margaret and their grownup friends had finished their tea and were approaching from the house. Other parents and guardians were with them, coming for their children, and there were carriages and automobiles waiting in the street. But the "Slingo Slide" went on regard-

The group of grown up people hesitated and came to a halt, gazing at the pavilion.

"I didn't!" Penrod quavered. "I was shooting at a sparrow, and the sun got in my eyes, and the sling broke"-

"What sling?" "This'n."

"Where'd you get that devilish thing? Don't you know I've forbidden you a thousand times"-

He took the broken sling in his hand, looked at it long and thoughtfully, and he looked longer, and quite as thoughtfully, at Penrod. Then he turned away and walked toward the house.

"I'm sorry, papa," said Penrod. Mr. Schofield coughed, and as he reached the door called back, but without turning his head.

But something else, surpassing, he would remember of that hour, for in the side street close by a pink skirt flickered from behind a shade tree to the shelter f the fence. Easily Made Negligee of Crepe and Lace

Now that the filmiest of laces are | negligee seems to fulfill its destinymade by wonderful machinery and are so plentiful and so cheap, every woman should indulge herself in a dainty negligee. If ever there lived a woman without a longing for this strictly feminine and most luxurious of belongings she must have been feebleminded, for every well-balanced daughter of Eve acknowledges their fascina

The most enticing of negligees are made of crepe de chine or thin, supple silk, with laces and ribbons.

Color plays so important a part in the makeup of these garments that the fabric is the second consideration. All the beautiful and rich colors may be set down as available, and the more flowerlike the better. Also the more frilly and frivolous and altogether irresponsible the design, the better the

which is just to be pretty.

These house gowns are easy to make, as may be gathered from the very good example shown in the picture. A long, plaited skirt is set on to a short baby waist having elbow sleeves covered with rows of plaiting that are edged with narrow lace. A wide ribbon girdle, with a rosette bow at the front, is tacked over the joining of the waist and skirt.

A coatee of shadow lace, with draped sleeve, adds the final touch of daintiness and a new style feature at the same time. Light pink crepe and cream-white lace make as good a color combination as any, but one may consider becomingness and environment and choose whatever is most pleasing.

Suggestion for Making Pretty Night Dress

In the matter of lingerie one may | satin ribbon that adjusts the gown to choose between much-trimmed or little-trimmed garments, providing they are made of sheer, well-woven cotton or linen fabrics. The great majority are made of cotton because it is cheaper than linen, is just as good-looking, and does not muss so easily. Linen is thought to be more durable and is therefore sometimes selected for lingerie which is to be hand-embroidered. By comparison with cotton fabrics, such as fine voiles, woven of hardtwisted thread, durability lies rather in favor of cotton.

The best known tub fabrics include nainsook, batiste, long cloth, voile, mull, lawn and the fine cotton crepes. One of the first three named is chosen for the great bulk of all lingerie.

An empire gown of nainsook, with body and sleeves of narrow val insertion, is pictured here. A narrow beading is set at the top and bottom of the body and serves to carry the narrow ing of val. The sleeves are made sepedged with val. Ribbon is run in the beading and tied in little bows, with hanging loops and ends, by way of dainty decoration.

The three little figures sketched in the picture suggest gowns more simply trimmed but equally pretty. Each borrows the refinement of lace and the glow of color in ribbons, and each is gracefully cut. Thus they embedy atthe admiration that women always accord tasteful lingerie.

TO PREVENT FLIES BREEDING

New and Safe Method of Destroying the Larvae Discovered. [Prepared by United States department of agriculture.]

A safe and effective weapon against the typhoid or housefly has been found in powdered hellebore by scientists of the department of agriculture. Flies lay their eggs chiefly in stable manure. Powdered hellebore mixed with water and sprinkled over the manure will destroy the larvae which are hatched from the eggs. Since powdered helleoore is readily obtainable this puts in the hands of everyone a remedy for one of the pests that has been found dangerous as well as troublesome. Powdered hellebore, however, will not kill adult flies, which must be swatted or trapped.

It has long been known that flies breed in manure, but previous methods of destroying the larvae there by the use of strong chemicals have been open to the objection that the treatment under some conditions lessened the fertilizing value of the manure or actually injured vegetation. This is not true of powdered hellebore. Govrnment experiments have shown that the hellebore is entirely decomposed in the course of the fermentation of the manure and that even in excessive quantities it does no harm except to the larvae it is intended to destroy. Chickens picking in manure treated with it suffer no ill effects.

One-half pound of powdered helle bore mixed with ten gallons of water is sufficient to kill the larvae in eight bushels or ten cubic feet of manure. The mixture should be sprinkled carefully over the pile, especial attention being paid to the outer edges. In most places hellebore is obtainable in 100 pound lots at a cost of 11 cents a pound. This makes the cost of the treatment a little less than seven-tenths of a cent per bushel of manure. A liberal estimate of the output of manure is two bushels a day per horse. The money involved is therefore trifling in comparison with the benefits to the individual and the community from the practical elimination of the disease spreading fly.

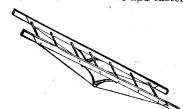

Although fresh manure is the favorite breeding spot, flies lay their eggs in other places as well, such as outhouses, refuse piles, etc. In these places, from which no manure is taken to spread on the fields, considerable saving may be effected through the substitution of borax for powdered hellebore. Applied at the rate of 0.62 pounds per 8 bushels of manure borax is as effective as powdered hellebore in killing the larvae, but costs less than half a cent for each bushel of manure treated. In larger quantities, however, or when the manure itself is spread at a greater rate than 15 tons to the acre, some damage to crops may Large quantities of manure are often used by market gardeners and others, and there is always danger of carelessness in applying the borax The use of the more expensive but safer hellebore is therefore recommended for the treatment of manure. Borax is recommended for all other refuse in which flies may lay eggs. Scientists who have been working for years to eliminate the fly are convinced that the use of one or the other of these simple measures is a public duty wherever manure and refuse ex-Sanitarians, however, strongly advise the removal of refuse heaps or other unnecessary rubbish or breeding which cannot be thus disposed of, such as manure or stables, the daily use of powdered hellebore will keep the flies from breeding in these favorite breeding grounds. The best results are obtainable in a community where every one cleans up his premises, traps or kills the flies and systematically treats the manure and other breeding places with powdered hellebore.

The fly is not only a nuisance to human beings and live stock, but spreads disease and filth and is a menace to public health which cannot be tolerated in the face of a demonstrated

A Well Braced Long Ladder.

Farmers who have occasion to use ong ladders often find them weak and dangerous when set up at the proper angle. This can be overcome by a wire brace. Get a blacksmith to make two V shaped irons and fasten them to the side sills with small bolts. Bore small holes through sills at each end. Take two pieces of No. 9 wire and fasten to the sills at one end by passing through the holes and forming a lock by turnthe figure. It is finished with an edg- ing the end back through the holes over small iron pins; then pass the wire arately and decorated with beading over the V irons, drawing them tight with a lever and fasten at the other ends in the same way. This brace will more than double the strength of the ladder and adds but little expense.— Farm Progress.

For Poultry Raisers.

There is good money in selling eggs for hatching. It calls for absolute honesty. Only sell strictly fresh and tractions that merit the interest and fertile eggs that can be expected to hatch under favorable conditions.

Mongrel fowls should not be kept for egg production because the eggs will be uniform neither in color nor size. This factor of itself is of enough importance to induce one to select a pure breed, even though the mongrels might possibly lay as well as the pure bred fowls, but this is very doubtful.

 LARGE PROFITS IN NUTS.

Planting of Orchards, Says an Authority, Should Bring Excellent Returns.

No land is so poor, stony and hilly; no fence corner so useless; no city front or back yard so valuable but will profitably grow native and some varieties of foreign edible nuts, says Emil Gammeter of Akron, O., an authority on nut culture.

Probably no other field of undeveloped natural resources in all the wide domain of diversified production offers richer and happier results than does nut culture. Ethical and educational institutions are rapidly assuming a share in planting and growing nut trees

The advantage of nut raising over other forms of recreation or business at the present time rests in the fact that one can hardly avoid doing new and constructive work in any part of the field. One then becomes a public benefactor, wittingly or unwittingly, notwithstanding the fact that stock companies for producing just one of the hickories-the pecan-offer at the present time one of the very best of financial investments when such investments are made carefully, and large private capital is being invested in nut orchards. Our imports of nuts rose from $1,700,000 worth in 1896 to $7,300,000 worth in 1907. No one can foretell the magnitude of the new field, but it is pretty safe to say that America could not only have raised most of the $7,-000,000 worth of nuts that were imported in 1907, but could have exported nuts to the tune of the same harp.

The increased demand for nuts is due in the main to two causes-namely, a better appreciation of their apaces for thes. In breeding places petizing qualities and the numerous ways in which they form a palatable addition to the diet for the average family, and, second, to their use by the vegetarians and persons of similar belief-a group small in proportion to the total population, but still fairly large numerically-who use peanuts, etc., as a substitute for meat and other nitrogenous and fatty foods.

Almost any kind of nut trees will grow in this climate, but not all kinds can be grown, profitably, so why not improve and cultivate such of our well  known varieties that we are sure will yield abundantly? No nut excels the shellback hickory in flavor and richness, and they will always bring a good market price and a premium for selections.

Black walnuts and butternuts can be easily grown by planting the nuts where trees are wanted or can be successfully transplanted. They are useful for shade and also ornamental. English filberts or hazelnuts succeed well on almost any kind of soil. The larger varieties are sweet and much in demand by candy manufacturers. The purple variety are frequently used as an ornamental shrub and for hedging. The best method of propagating the so called English walnut, which is properly known as the Persian walnut, says a contributor to the Country Gentleman, is either by the cleft graft in sap wood at the time the buds are starting, or by the annular or patch budding process during the growing season in July or August. These methods are also apparently the most successful in propagating the pecan.

Details of these processes, except ring budding, are given in bulletin 254 of the bureau of plant industry, department of agriculture, Washington.

It is probable that certain varieties of Persian walnuts and pecans may be used successfully on black walnuts and hickories, although it is not safe to attempt very extensive planting in any district where peaches also are not fairly dependable. In other words, the success of peaches is a better index of the probable success of the Persian walnut than is the success of hickories or black walnuts.

Some planters follow the practice of setting rows of hardy English walnuts and pecans with the purpose of top grafting them a few years later with better varieties which may then be available.

EVERY LITTLE COSTUME CALLS FOR GLOVES TO MATCH ITS STYLE.

The critical taste in dress, which has encouraged hosiery to match your gowns and wigs and slippers and silk lingerie, among other things, is now coming around to silk gloves to go with your costume for the approaching summer.

No more may you buy gloves by the wholesale. Rather you select a white pair with a black and white fluted wrist frill to go with your black and white striped silk trot about gowns, or if you have a filmy, alluring, illusive light flummery dress for summer, with which you are wearing a rose garden of a summer hat, then you have a long pair of white silk gloves with a plaited ruffle running up the side from the wrist to the top, the ruffle of a hue to harmonize with your gown.

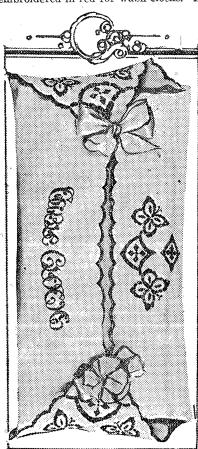

And as they have shoes lacing up the sides there is reason to believe there will be gloveswhite silk, with the lacing of contra color to harmonize with the dress. Then, of course, gloves come in all solid colors too. There are tucks that girdle the arms of the gloves and hemstitching and cobweb patterns to add to the gayety of the season.

All "Showers" Except Rain Are Welcomed by the Bride.

Bridal showers are now planned with much originality. While more or less collaboration is necessary in order that there may be no duplicate contributions to the shower and that all gifts may be suited to the occasion, the actual manner of presentation is a matter which the hostess often prefers to keep secret. In order that there may be ample time for carrying out whatever arrangement the hostess has decided upon all gifts intended for the shower should be delivered at the home of the hostess at least two days in advance of the festivity.

A tea table shower is a little out of the ordinary and serves as a means of providing the prospective bride with many small details for the afternoon tea service. At a shower of this kind recently given the articles were all used for the entertainment of the party and toasts were drunk in tea to the bride. Gifts included a handsome teacloth, 5 o'clock teakettle, a lemon dish and fork, a wicker framed cake plate and various pretty things in the way of sugar holders and sandwich dishes. Just before the party dishanded the various articles were all neatly packed, ready to be stowed away in the automobile of the bride to be when she took her departure.

THE FAMILY RENT GROUND.

The Garden Produces All the Vegetables That They Require, Tended as It Is by the Entire Flock-German Girl Trained In Domestic Science.

This is the way of it. They take a street car to a vacant lot on the outskirts of the city, and they rent a patch of ground for about 20 marks a year and build a little house. Father drives the nails, and the children pass them up, and mother holds the board in place.

Nobody in Germany ever hires anything done that he or she can do for himself or herself. The house consists of one very small room with a tiny stove in one corner and a shelf to keep the plates on. And there is a little latticed porch that will be sure to be all run around with roses. Outside they plant a tree or a flowering shrub and place beneath it the table and the bench and the three chairs for the "quiet corner." The little house is not, of course, large enough to be used for sleeping purposes. But it does very well for light daytime housekeeping.

The family spend the day in the out of doors, returning to their city apartment at night. Mother brings the children and comes here to sew in the afternoon. Father comes directly from work, and they have supper, and afterward they make the garden. All through the long, lovely Berlin summer evenings they tend it with German loving care.

The outskirts of Berlin are covered with the Lauben Kolonie in picturesque profusion, so that almost literally every vacant lot is planted with them. A garden produces for each family all of the summer vegetables and some for winter. There are also the eggs from chickens. There must be the chickens, else what should be done with the waste leaves that have to be picked from the plants?

The German housewife, you see comes of a race which has made of frugality a fine art. To her inherited instinct there is added also special training to make her the competent and capable household manager that she is expected to be. In America you keep house if you have to. In Germany you keep house because you pre fer to and prepare to.

Every German girl by the time she turns an engagement ring on her finger must be well grounded in the principles of what is going to be her all absorbing life occupation. She may be accomplished in music and French and English, but it matters not in how many other subjects she is proficient. She would be counted uncultured indeed without domestic training.

Her education is usually finished at one of the fashionable haushaltungs schule where housekeeping is taught. She may even be a princess of the royal blood, and there will not be omitted her training in the most ancient and honorable calling for a woman. Lippe, took her housekeeping course at the fashionable school known as the Pestalozzi Haus in Berlin. The emperor's daughter, the Princess Victoria Luise, now the Duchess of Brunswick, was sent to the equally fashionable Lette Verein in Berlin.—Pictorial Re-

To Keep Tablecloth Clean.

Here is a household suggestion which might interest the tired mother of a family who finds it impossible to keep the tablecioth clean. When soiled wash and wring out as dry as possible and throw over the table the same as if dry; smooth out on the top and let dry; when nearly dry pull the edge out, and you have a clean cloth without much labor. Of course it doesn't look as good as one laundered, but much better than a soiled cloth and saves iron-

FOREWARNED—FOREARMED.

A girl had a proposal of marriage Sunday night, and asked a week to consider it before answering. She then organized herself into an investigating committee and began taking testimony from married ladies of her acquaintance. The first one she visited used to be a belle and the most admired girl in town before she married six years before. The cross-examination brought out the fact that she had six children, did all her own 🕻 work, including washing and ironing, and hadn't been down town for four weeks, and that her husband had given her but $2 since she married, and that he had borrowed and forgot to en her but $2 since she married, and pay back $10 which her brother once gave her for a Christmas present. He bought himself a new overcoat with the money, while she wore the same plush coat which she wore when he was courting her. After visiting them and summing up the evidence, she went home and wrote the young man. She will be married next month.

CHURCH NOTES.

Baptist Church—

The church will be reconstructed sufficiently by Sunday that the regular services will be conducted Sunday morning and the congregation will attend the evening open air service. Evangelical Church—

The morning services will be held at the regular hours on Sunday. Rev. Feather will deliver the sermon at the open air meeting Sunday evening.

M. E. Church—

The Christian Science monthly for 1915 has for its first article, one headed "Jesus and Christ." This article absolutely denies the doctrine of the Holy Trinity which is one of the fundamental doctrines of all true Christian churches. On Sunday morning next, August 15, the pastor will preach on the subject, "Jesus Christ as the Second Person in The Holy Trinity." If you are nterested in the maintenance of the essential doctrines of Christianity come and hear this. W. A. Gregory, Pastor.
