WINTON TEAM WINS CHAMPIONSHIP

CAPTURES $20 IN PRIZES OFFERED IN RURAL TOURNAMENT.

More Than Six Miles Were Made in Runs in Three Games Played Tuesday.

By defeating the Bird School team in the morning by a score of 16-12 and the fast Elmwood nine in the afternoon 25-17, the Winton representatives won the 4th of July base ball tournament and showed themselves the undisputed champions of the surrounding country.

An ideal day drew a fair sized crowd, and notwithstanding the size of the scores, the spectators were treated to three fine exhibitions of base ball.

At 10:00 a. m., the Bird school and the Winton's crossed bats in the initial game for the purse of $5.00 offered by local business men. Being old rivals, both teams were out to win and for the first five innings the score ran nearly tie, but in the sixth the Winton crew added four more to their credit and were in the lead for the remainder of the game. The Birds started a sure enough ninth inning rally, making things lively for a few minutes, by filling the bases but a double play at this time cut off their chances and they had to content themselves with a 16-12 score. Hall started in the box for the Winton's but was relieved by F. Reed after six scores had been run across on him in the first inning. Stevens and Bird were the twirlers for the Birds and both pitched a most creditable game.

The line up of the team was as follows: Winton—J. Muntz, 3rd, 1st; F. Reid, ss-p; Copeland, 2nd; Allen, c; Hurley, c. f.; O. Reid, 3rd; Hall, p-ss; Karr, 1 f.; S. Muntz, r. f.

Bird—Hoadley, 2nd; C. Profit, r. f.; E. Profit, c; Bird, ss-p; Root, 1st; Murphy, 1 f.; Dobson, c. f.; Doerr, 3rd; Stevens, p-ss.

Score by innings:
1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9
Bird . . . . . 7 1 0 0 2 0 2 0—12
Winton . . . . . 2 0 7 2 0 4 1 0—16

Batteries—Profit, Stevens and Bird. Allen, Hall and Reid. Reynolds & Knapp, umpires.

Ellington—Elmwood.

Immediately after dinner, the second game of the tournament between Ellington and Elmwood was pulled off, resulting in a mighty interesting game as the score of 13-7 will indicate. Both teams have been playing ball all season and were both in fine trim. Previous games between the two gave Ellington the edge on her rivals, but after see-sawing for the first six innings with the score first in favor of one and then the other, Elmwood managed to put across four runs and practically clinched the game. Ellington scored one in the eighth and had two men on but couldn't overcome the lead of the sixth. In the sixth inning with one man on base, May of Elmwood decided to run on his second strike when the catcher dropped the ball and by a series of errors and misplays he made the circuit of the bases only to be called up to take his third strike. In the excitement the man on base scored.

The line-up was as follows:

Elmwood—May, r. f.; Rondo, c; Schrader, 1; Brock, p; Hartley, 2; Guilds, ss; Martin, 1. f.; Hendrick, c. f.; Keilitz, 3.

Ellington—Rollins, p; L. Schrader, 3; Ball, ss; Balch, c. f.; Wickware, r. f.; Green, 1. f.; Gerou, 2; Fadie, 1; Phillips, c.

Score by innings:
1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9
Ellington . . 1 0 5 0 0 0 1 0—7
Elmwood . . . 0 0 1 5 2 1 4 2 x—13

Batteries—Phillips and Rollins, Rondo and Brock. Umpires—Dickinson and Patterson.

Winton—Elmwood.

The deciding game between Elmwood and the Wintons was hotly contested throughout, and up to the seventh inning, Elmwood seemed to have the advantage. In the seventh however, Winton added six runs and in the eighth seven more, giving them the deciding lead and clinching the title for them as well as the $15 purse put up for the winners.

Hall for the Winton's made a grand come-back from the morning game and went the whole nine innings. He was ably supported by all the other members of the team and was at no time in any great danger. Martin started for Elmwood and was relieved by Brook, who having pitched in the morning game, was in no condition, to pitch then and as a result was pounded all over the lot.

The lineups:
Wintons—J. Muntz, 1; F. Reid, ss; Copeland, 2; Allen, c; Hurley, c. f.; O. Reid, 3; Hall, p; Quinn, r. f.; S. Muntz 1. f.
Elmwood—May, r. f.; Rondo, c; Schrader, 1; Brock, 1. f.-p; Hartley, 2; Guilds, ss; Martin, p-1. f.; Hendricks, c. f.; Keilitz, 3.

Score by innings:
1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9
Wintons . . . . . 0 2 2 4 4 0 6 7 x
Elmwood . . . . . 1 0 2 6 2 1 4 0 1
Batteries—Allen and Hall; Rondo, Martin and Brock. Umpire, Patterson.

The tournament as a whole was most successful and the committee is to be congratulated. When we consider the fact that more than six miles were made in runs in the three games we do not wonder that the players were somewhat tired. The Winton team made nearly one-half mile in circling the bases in the eighth inning of the final game. Hurley of the Winton's made a sensational Ty Cobb one-handed catch in center field in the final game.

The lack of quarrelling was noticeable in all three games showing all of the 36 or more players who participated to be sportsmanlike in every respect.

We hope to have more such tournaments later and possibly more teams may be added next time making it embrace more territory.

INJUNCTION PAPERS SERVED

Secures Service on Drain Commissioners and Contracts in Suit to Prevent Flint River Dredging.

Deputy Sheriff William Johnson has returned to Saginaw after having spent the better part of two days in serving subpoenas and injunctions on the officials of the counties and construction companies interested in the dredging of the Flint river. Deputy Johnson made the trip by auto, driving over 200 miles in getting service for action by which it is hoped to stop the dredging of the north branch of the Flint and thus prevent a large amount of water being precipitated into the present overtaxed Saginaw river basin.

He served his first papers on William Sudman, who was in charge of dredging operations about eight miles from Clifford. He then served papers on Albert Hunter, drain commissioner of Tuscola county; Stewart Nichol, drain commissioner of Sanilac county; Mr. McCulloch, drain commissioner of Lapeer county, and the Woolman Construction company, which has the contract for the dredging work. Prosecuting Attorney Bird J. Vincent and City Attorney Robert T. Holland will have charge of the case for Saginaw.

PRINTING TRADE SUFFERS FROM WAR.

No branch of industry has been more seriously affected by the war and the consequent scarcity of various supplies than the printing trade. This newspaper has several times commented on the shortage of paper and the impossibility of procuring any of the blue white kind formerly used by all newspapers. Because of the shortage of dye imports, publishers are compelled to use the yellow tinted paper as it comes from the mills.

Even that has advanced in price four times within 60 days, the advances being from 50 to 100 per cent. Ink began to soar almost as soon as the war began and is still going up. The metal from which both type and casts are made is also steadily ascending. Other departments of the printing trade are faced with corresponding increases in cost of production. For example, one of the chemicals used in engraving, that is, in making the cuts from which pictures are printed, has advanced from 60 cents to $7.50 the pound. Now the rollers used on the presses have advanced in price more than 50 per cent, because one of the constituents is glycerin, and the munition manufacturers need all the glycerin they can get.

In the matter of cornering supplies, the sword is mightier than the pen.—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

TWO KILLED WHEN TRAIN HITS AUTO

FATHER AND SON RETURNING TO SANDUSKY FROM DETROIT VISIT.

Other Happenings in Villages and Cities in the Thumb Counties.

James Bourke and son, Arnold, of Sandusky, were instantly killed at Crosswell just before noon Wednesday when the automobile in which they were riding was struck by a Pere Marquette passenger train. Father and son had gone to Detroit to spend the Fourth and purchased the automobile which they intended to drive to their home. They left Detroit early in the morning. The wrecked automobile was carried for some distance on the pilot of the engine. Both men were dead when assistance reached them.

Otto Dahlke, 14-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Otto Dahlke, living three miles west of Harbor Beach, was found dead in the woods a short distance from the home Sunday afternoon, with a bullet through his heart. He and his companion, Frank Pacholke, were strolling through the woods, each with a loaded 22-calibre rifle. They separated, and a few minutes later Frank heard a shot and started in the direction to learn what his friend was shooting at. When he reached the spot, near a stone pile, he found the lifeless body of his chum, his rifle by his side, and an empty shell in the barrel. It is generally supposed that the lad had been poking around the pile of stones with the butt-end of the gun, when it discharged, sending the bullet through the abdomen and the heart and lodged in the back. The parents and neighbors were notified and the body was taken to the house. Coroner Armitage was also notified, and after an examination of the body and the ground, decided that an inquest was unnecessary, as it was very evident that the shooting was accidental.

Friday, July 7th., the citizens of Port Huron will take a trip over the Handy Bros., railroad line from Port Huron to Bay City. Automobiles will be used to convey the party from Port Huron to Peck, the recent southern terminus of the road and from there a special train will be supplied by Handy Bros., which will convey the party to Bay City and return. Thomas L. Handy visited Pt. Huron a few days ago and after a conference with the local committee extended an invitation to the citizens of Port Huron to go over the line, so that they could get at first hand some idea of what Handy Bros. road is and what it will be when completed to that city. "We are going to build to Port Huron and we are going to be there by next fall," said Mr. Handy. "We have a large number of men at work now and we want the citizens of Port Huron to see what they have bargained for. The way for them to see it is to go over the road and we will take them over in a special train, as far as we have built."

The name of a certain merchant in a certain town 15 miles from Sebewaing has become so strongly impressed upon the mind of the public in that territory that half of the time this merchant does not use his signature in his advertisements in the local paper. There's a certain distinctiveness about his advertisements and what is more, they appear not less than 52 times a year. There are still a few business men who make themselves believe advertising doesn't pay, but they are only deceiving themselves. It is safe to say that 99 out of every 100 people know the above mentioned merchant's ad. when they see it, even though the signature is left off. And it is a safe bet that every Sebewaing merchant can guess who this advertiser is without having seen his ad.—Sebewaing Blade.

Evangeline Pursell, aged 14, a ninth grade student in the Unionville school says she can remember the titles of the 260 books she has read. Besides being a great reader Miss Pursell also does much fancy work, plays the piano and the violin well and above all can cook a good meal.

The Village of Gageton will on July 17 hold a special election to vote upon a proposition to bond the village for a sum of $5,000 to meet the outstanding indebtedness incurred by the purchase of the village electric light and water plant.

The Sebewaing council has made arrangements with the band of that village for open air concerts during the summer, and is giving the band $100 for their services.

L. C. Stirling, proprietor of a Crosswell's drug store, announces that after July 1 no intoxicating liquors of any kind will be sold in his store.

Akron will entertain the old soldiers and sailors at Camp Akron from Aug. 14 to 19.

MRS. CHAS. PHILLIPS

Funeral Services Held at M. E. Church Thursday Afternoon.

Mrs. Charles Phillips died at the home of her mother, Mrs. John Agar, on Monday morning after an illness of two years' duration. In her death, a patient sufferer is released and taken to her reward. The funeral services were held Thursday afternoon from the M. E. church and interment was made in Elkland cemetery.

Ida L. Agar, oldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Agar, was born in Canada, December 7, 1881. When four years old, her family moved to Michigan, settling on a farm seven miles south and east of Cass City. When twenty-five years old she went to Kalamazoo to work at the state hospital and was soon married to Charles Phillips on December 27, 1906. Mr. and Mrs. Phillips went to Palsades, Minnesota, to make their home. Four children have been born to them. They are Madeleine, Hugh, Carol and Jean.

Two years ago, Mrs. Phillips' health began to fail and a year ago she came to make her home with her mother and Mr. Phillips went to Detroit to work. Mrs. Phillips has undergone several operations and was a patient at Pleasant Home Hospital several weeks last fall. Besides her husband and children, the deceased is survived by her mother, four brothers, Charles C. Agar and Wilson V. Agar of Flint, David J. Agar of Elmdale and John T. Agar of Owendale and one sister, Mrs. Francis Kennedy, of Veteran, Alta.

FARMERS AT ROAD BEE

Buehley Road, Long Neglected, Is Being Put into Good Shape.

Farmers in the northeastern part of Elkland township held a road bee Monday and improved the Buehley road three miles northeast of town. Nineteen teamsters and eight shovellers loaded and hauled 110 loads of gravel and one-quarter of a mile was placed in excellent shape.

Farmers living on the highway north of the cemetery which is being made into a state road are confining their road work to the Buehley road. This together with the work done at Monday's road bee is working wonders to a highway which has been long neglected.

HOUSE BURNS; BABY DIES OF INJURIES

TERRIBLE CATASTROPHE AT HOME OF LEE DOERR AT ARGYLE.

Mother, in Attempt to Rescue Little Son from Flames, Is Terribly Burned.

A terrible catastrophe occurred at the home of Lee Doerr, one-half mile south of Argyle on Tuesday, when his home was burned to the ground and his wife and baby, one and one-half years old, were burned so severely that the baby died Wednesday morning and Mrs. Doerr, alive yet Thursday noon, is in a very critical condition.

The accident happened about noon. Mr. Doerr was near Hay Creek helping install a culvert, the baby was asleep upstairs and Mrs. Doerr was busy below cooking and baking. The fire, which probably was started by a defective chimney, originated up stairs. The first intimation of the fire Mrs. Doerr had was when the baby cried and she opened the stair door to go after him only to be met by a rush of smoke. Dashing through the smoke she managed to reach her baby and started downstairs again but slipped and fell to the bottom. With her clothing aflame she rushed out of doors and, with the baby, rolled in the grass until the flames were extinguished but all her clothing had been burned.

Henry Ingalls, neighbors across the way, soon discovered the fire and ran to help. They could not quench the flames and for some time did not find Mrs. Doerr and baby. They were unconscious when found but a physician was secured almost immediately and Mr. Doerr was brought home as quickly as automobile could travel. The baby had been injured in the fall downstairs and died the next morning. It is hoped that the mother will recover.

Mr. Doerr is a brother to Mrs. Harley Keating who lived in Cass City for some time. Mrs. Keating came from Detroit to Cass City Wednesday on her way to Argyle to visit her parents and see her sister-in-law.

Country Life Has Many Advantages That Life in the City Cannot Give

In much of the writing and speaking in advocacy of the back-to-the-land movement undue emphasis is laid upon some of the facilities that characterize life in cities. That is to say, writers and speakers would convey the impression that in order to make life in the country on the farms endurable, not to say attractive, the numerous facilities, amusements and methods of entertainment that city people use to occupy their leisure hours must be introduced into the country scheme of life. The fact is that country life and country living are one and city life another method of living, and the most disappointed of persons who remove from city to country is he who expects that conditions will be similar to those he has become accustomed to in the city. Contentment in the country now is and probably always will be the result of an attitude of mind favorable to contentment, and that attitude of mind is characteristic of middle age in the individual man as well as what may be termed middle age in a nation.

The farmer can shorten—indeed, he already has shortened—his hours of labor, as compared with the hours that his father and mother labored on the land. He can improve and he already has improved his facilities for performing the heavy labor of the

YEAR WITHOUT A SUMMER

Summer of 1816 Was as Cold as Winter—All Vegetation Was Blasted.

Away back in the year 1816 there was a year without a summer. To those who think that the past winter has been hard let us refer them back to the famous summer of 1816. The following account is taken from an old account of the summer of 1816, published by the Catskill Recorder some time ago:

"The year 1816 is recorded as the 'year without a summer.' April came in warm, but by May 1st there was a temperature like winter with much ice and snow. Ice half an inch thick formed on ponds and rivers. Corn was planted a second time, but there was no crop, except that of a farmer in the state of Vermont who built fires around his field. By the last of May everything had been killed by the cold. In June frost and ice were plentiful. Snow fell to the depth of ten inches in Vermont, seven inches in Maine, and three inches in New York and Massachusetts. All summer long the wind blew steadily from the north in blasts laden with ice and snow. Mothers knit stockings of double thickness for their children. Farmers worked out their time on the road wearing overcoats and mittens.

"On June 16th, a Vermont farmer sent a flock of sheep to pasture. In the morning of the 17th, the thermometer registered below the freezing point. When he started to look after his flock he jokingly remarked that he might get lost in the snow. One hour after he left a terrible snow storm came up; there were great drifts. Night came and the farmer did not return. His wife became frightened and a searching party was organized. He was found the third day lying in a hollow on the hillside with both feet frozen. He was half covered with snow but alive. Most of the flock of sheep were lost.

"July was ushered in amid ice and snow. On the fourth ice formed in the New England states, New York and Pennsylvania. August proved the worst month of all. Almost every green thing in this country and Europe was blasted with frost. Snow fell at Barnet, thirty miles from London, England, on August 30th. English newspapers stated that 1816 would be remembered by the existing generation as the year in which there was no summer. There was great privation, and thousands of people would have perished in this country had it not been for the abundance of fish and wild game."

A Chinese Trick.

The Chinese are past masters in the art of trickery, and some of their tricks are very ingenious. One is a method by which they can make a postage stamp do service almost indefinitely. The sender of the letter passes over the stamp some paste which in appearance is not unlike the gum at the back of a stamp. When the stamp is obliterated it takes the impression, but it is not even "skin deep." The receiver of the letter must be a confederate, and he passes a damp sponge over the stamp. This removes the paste and with it the postal mark, so until the stamp is worn out it can be used over and over again.

Strange Storehouses.

In the old birds' nest that are placed near the ground in shrubs and small trees close to hazelnut bushes and bittersweet vines one will often find a handful of hazelnuts or bittersweet berries. They were put there by the white footed mice and the meadow mice, which visit these storehouses regularly. Very often a white footed mouse will cover a bird's nest with fine dried grass and inner bark and make a nest for itself.—New York Tribune.

The Great Bank Mystery

A Story of an Employee's Vindication

By F. A. MITCHEL

There was a fete champetre in progress on the grounds of M. Paul Brisson, a wealthy manufacturer, in the environs of Paris. It was given to celebrate the betrothal of his daughter, Jeanne, to Lucien Villaret, a young man who, without fortune, was descended from the nobility of France and whose nature was as noble as his ancestry. Accepting the changed conditions for the nobility under the republic, he entered into business as a clerk and was at the time of his betrothal in receipt of a fair salary. Jeanne possessed an equal income from property inherited from her grandmother, and her father had volunteered to give the pair a house in Paris on the day of their marriage.

There were dancing and feasting in the chateau, while throughs of guests wandered about the grounds. Just before the close of the festivities a lackey handed Lucien a letter. Lucien opened it and turned pale. Then he staggered to a sofa and buried his head in his hands; but, suddenly recovering himself, he hurried from the room and, making his way through the guests, astonished at his appearance, left the premises.

Jeanne, having missed her lover and having been told of his exit, indicating that some misfortune had befallen him, passed a sleepless night. In the morning she received a letter from him stating that he had been discharged by his employers without any reason being given, but since his position was one wherein he was intrusted with funds the natural inference was that he had been suspected of dishonesty. That certainly would be the reason assigned by the world. With the stigma upon him he could not permit Jeanne to bear his disgrace by marrying him. Jeanne at once set out for Paris and, calling at Lucien's home, was informed by his mother that the sudden transition from transcendent happiness to disgrace had acted upon his sensitive nature so severely as to throw him into a fever and he was delirious. Jeanne visited him in his room, but he did not know her. She returned to her father's chateau, and that was the last she saw of her lover for a long while. As soon as Lucien was able to leave his bed he disappeared.

Jeanne, instead of remaining in society, devoted herself to works of charity. She was a constant visitor to the homes of the poorest classes, relieving their wants and comforting them by her sympathy. One of the families she took under her care was that of Francois Ferriere, a man so low in the social scale that his only employment was picking up articles in the sewers covered with dirt and slime, washing and repairing them and selling them for what he could get. One day while Jeanne was visiting his family and nursing his sick child he came in very much excited.

"Ah, mademoiselle," he exclaimed. "I am glad you are here! I have met with what may be a great blessing, or it may in the end be a great misfortune. I need your advice, and, whether or not you have the wisdom to advise me, I know that under your influence I can do no wrong and that what I tell you you will not divulge."
"Tell me your secret," said Jeanne. "I will keep it and advise you."

One morning Jules Laroque, the official who was deputed to sort the mail for the Bank of France in Paris and open such communications as he thought might better not be laid before the managers, took up a letter addressed in a woman's hand to "His Excellency the Governor." Laroque hesitated a moment, then ran his steel opener through it. The letter read:
Monsieur the Governor—This is to notify you that your bank is in a position to lose a great deal of money. ELISE R. Address, General Delivery, Paris.

Letters were received from time to time by the bank from persons who offered for a consideration to show the officials how the institution could make or how it could lose a great deal of money. Laroque, considering the letter before him to be one of this kind, threw it into the wastebasket and took up the next.

A fortnight later another letter arrived addressed in the same handwriting, but the stationery used was expensive. It read:

Two weeks ago I advised you by letter that you were in danger of losing a great deal of money. I have received no reply to my communication. In order to secure your attention I have purchased this stationery with your money. The amount will be returned to you whenever you see fit to call for it.

This letter, too, was thrown into the wastebasket.

Another fortnight passed, at the end of which a third letter from the same person came, this one inclosing a fifty franc note of the bank fresh from the printing press. The writer said that the money belonged to the bank.

At last Laroque's attention was arrested. He took the missive to the official having charge of the currency, who expressed great astonishment at Laroque having it in his possession, but would accept none. Francois was made a guardian of the treasure room with a handsome salary. Lucien and Jeanne celebrated a wedding that had been put off at the time of his discharge.

Both Laroque and the person in charge of the currency were instructed to keep the matter a secret, and the governor took it into his own hands. However, he could do nothing but address a communication to the writer of the notes, to be called for at the general delivery window, asking her to visit him the next day at the bank.

She did not respond in person, but wrote that an official in the bank some years before had been discharged under suspicion of dishonesty. The discharged man had suffered much by this injustice, the consequences of which, including loss of salary, amounted to a claim against the bank of a hundred thousand francs. He was no better able to prove his innocence now than formerly, but he was in a position to help himself to the amount of his claim. If the bank would pay it without a lawsuit the danger in which the institution stood of losing funds would be revealed; if not, the claimant would choose his own way of securing his claim.

The governor at once called for the names of all persons discharged from the bank within twenty years. When the list was presented to him he was surprised to see that it embraced nearly 100 names, for it had been the policy of the management to discharge suspected officials without investigation.

After mature deliberation the governor concluded that it would be impossible among so many to hit on the person named. He believed that there was a leak somewhere among his subordinates, that one of them was a confederate of the person who was endeavoring to get money from the bank, while a woman confederate was employed to write the notes. He at once called upon the bank's chief detective for a list of the officials now in the bank's employ who had been observed visiting places of questionable repute or were believed to be living beyond their means. Five names were furnished, and they were all discharged.

Nothing further was heard from Elise R. for a month; then came another note. It stated that the amount of the discharged official's claim had been appropriated and the governor need give himself no further concern in the matter. The claimant would not help himself to any more of the bank's funds than the amount of his claim, though he was in a position to take all he liked.

Upon receipt of this letter the governor gave an order for an inventory to be made of all the funds of the bank. The amounts in the safes were found to be correct, but there was one room with massive walls called the treasure room, in which was kept the enormous supply of gold belonging to the institution, together with certain paper currency for which there was not storage room elsewhere. From the treasure in this vault, which constituted a part of the foundation of the building, the sum of 100,000 francs was found to be missing.

The governor at once wrote to Elise R., inviting her to call at the bank, inclosing an indemnity for whom it might concern on account of any funds that had been taken from the bank. He received a reply that if on a given night and hour he would be in the strong room of the bank he would find not only the 100,000 francs deficiency but an explanation of the mystery.
On the appointed night a carriage drove up to the bank. A lady, accompanied by an attendant, alighted and, being admitted, was shown to the governor's private office.

"Mademoiselle, or perhaps madame," asked the official, "whom have I the honor to address?"

"I am Jeanne Brisson, the daughter of Paul Brisson, whom you probably know as one of France's prominent manufacturers."

"Indeed!"
"I have come to accompany you to your strong room. I am your correspondent, Elise R. This gentleman is one of your former employees."

"More mysterious than ever!" exclaimed the governor.
"I believe it is the appointed hour. Shall we proceed?"

The governor, summoning attendants, led the way to the treasure room. The door was unlocked, and the party entered.

"Remove those boxes," said Jeanne, pointing.
The boxes were removed. Jeanne went to a spot they had uncovered and stamped with her boot heel upon one of the marble slabs that constituted the floor. The slab was lifted from its place, and the soiled head of Francois Ferriere rose through the opening.
"Tell how you came here," said Jeanne.

"I am a sewer scavenger," said Francois. "One day while hunting in the sewer I saw that there was a break in the arch. Climbing to it, I pulled away stones and earth till I came to crumbling mortar. This, too, I removed and found this slab. Lifting it, I found what you see about you."

Jeanne's attendant stepped forward and addressed the governor:
"Monsieur," he said, "I am Lucien Villaret, once in charge of one of your departments. You discharged me on mere suspicion on the day my betrothal was being celebrated and caused me years of misery. Through this man Ferriere, who was advised by my betrothed, I could have robbed you of the untold wealth contained in this room. Here," handing the governor an envelope, "is all the money that has been taken in an effort to secure my vindication."

Such was the end of the great Bank of France mystery. Lucien was offered any position in the bank he desired, but would accept none. Francois was made a guardian of the treasure room with a handsome salary. Lucien and Jeanne celebrated a wedding that had been put off at the time of his discharge.

HOW

To Keep the Windmill In Good Running Order

A GREAT many people seem to have the idea that a windmill is some sort of a perpetual motion machine which needs little if any care. As a matter of fact a windmill is a machine and as such needs a reasonable amount of care, particularly in the way of lubrication. The windmill should be gone over from time to time with a wrench and the bolts tightened up and kept in shape so that there will be no possibility of the windmill or tower twisting in the heavy breezes.

The oil holes in the windmill sometimes become gummed up and need to be cleaned out. A good grade of oil will help this. When the oil holes become gummed up oil may be put in from above, and yet the bearings may run dry for a long time.

Nothing so damages the looks of a farm and gives such a "down and out" appearance as a disreputable windmill. The windmill kept up in good shape and painted gives a trim, neat effect to the place. The steel windmill tower when first put up with a new coat of paint presents a very pleasing appearance, and with ordinary care the metal itself will last a lifetime. If paint is not used from time to time it will soon become rusty and gradually work toward the junk heap.

It is well when getting a windmill to get one with a step attachment so that it will be easy to get up to the platform of the tower.

Keeping the windmill up in shape and keeping the bearings well oiled will make the windmill run in lighter breezes in the summer when it is needed the most.

FOR AUTOISTS.

How to Spare Your Tires When You Feel Like Speeding.

Rough streets tempt one to drive in car tracks. It is more comfortable for the passengers and may be economy to protect the car from bumps and vibration. The tires won't be injured noticeably by doing this occasionally—it is continued practice that shortens the mileage. Quite often the pavement along inside edges of rails is rough and may result in cuts to the rubber and bruises to the fabric. Driving over street car track switches at the pointed frogs may cut the tires seriously. Rails on hills are to be avoided as much as possible, as they usually have sharp, thin splinters on the edges, which are liable to cut or puncture the tires. Be careful when driving on wet rails. Quick twisting of the front wheels may result in accident from rear of car skidding sidewise when leaving rails. Edges of the rails wear away the tread rubber and cause a sharp bending action of the fabric, which will usually develop breaks inside. It is just a matter of time until the rubber cover loosens underneath and the fabric weakens from moisture and decay. Later an unusual bump or shock may result in a blowout while running on a perfectly smooth street or road. It is careless, indeed, to spoil a tire in this manner when possible to secure so much more mileage from it if used correctly, or if reversed on the wheel—namely, the worn side turned toward the car. A competent workman can make satisfactory repairs if only the tread rubber be worn and the tire has not been neglected too long.

HOW TO SEND FLOWERS THROUGH THE MAIL WITHOUT WILTING THEM.

If the flowers are to be sent to town in the morning cut them during the very late afternoon of the day before and keep them all night in a large pail or pitcher of cold water. Then pack them in the morning in a box with layers of wax paper, and they will travel for hours and remain perfectly fresh. A flower is like a camel—give it a long, deep drink of water and it can go without water for a long time.

Dahlias require a peculiar treatment. When first cut plunge their stems into a vessel of hot water and allow them to remain until the water has cooled off; then put the flowers in cold water for the night, and so treated the dahlias will remain stiff and travel safely.

How to Cure Hives That Annoy Your Peace of Body.

Hives are not dangerous if you avoid taking cold. Either soda, starch or vinegar baths are curative, soothing and grateful. The soda is prepared by adding a tablespoonful of bicarbonate of soda to the bath. The starch bath, which is also effective for hives and chafing, is made by simply adding one-half cupful of powdered laundry starch to the bath. These baths may be given daily. The vinegar bath is made by putting a tablespoonful of pure vinegar into one-half pint of warm water. Sponge off parts of the body distressed and allow to dry in without using a towel.

COUNTRY LIFE HAS MANY ADVANTAGES THAT CITY LIFE CANNOT GIVE.

mere fact that any man or any generation of men prefers conditions that now exist in cities is not to be taken as conclusive proof that those conditions are best for him, that they are desirable or even permissible. The stimulus of commerce and trade, the excitement of traffic and the ambition to achieve success in a financial way always will incite men to engage in trade and to make their homes in the commercial centers; but it does not follow by any means that in that direction lies the road to national vigor and perpetuity.

If a careful study of an individual man could be made "from the cradle to the grave" it probably would be learned that in childhood he liked the country and that his physical and mental welfare was best promoted by life in the open, next to nature. Youth is the most impressionable period of his life; then it is he makes original investigations and discoveries—grows. Some of the greatest psychologists have said in effect that the man is made before the boy 10 years of age; nothing after that in his life very much matters. One writer has gone so far as to say that the greatest of writers—Shakespeare—in his greatest works habitually uses images, makes allusions and utilizes figures of speech that are based upon a knowledge of nature that could have been gained at no other time than in childhood play hours along the River Avon. Every reference to birds, to flowers and to other marvels of nature can be traced to his childhood home and taunts.

Life in the country is not merely breathing pure air, though that is important enough. It is not merely the taking of exercise and using of muscles, though they all are essential to proper physical development; these may be in a large measure carried on in the city. The greatest benefit from living in the country must arise from the fact that the child is much by himself and that a thousand appeals are made to his intelligence, a thousand demands are made upon his resources mental and physical. In the city he is part of an immense machine; in the country he is the whole machine himself. In the city he is making constant demands upon others for his entertainment; in the country a thousand demands are made upon him, appeals innumerable are made to his curiosity and his insatiable desire to know. The city street presents one view all the year round and after one view with the keen observative faculties and impressionable mind of the child the neighborhood's resources are exhausted. In the country nature presents a different view every day, and at every hour of the day. Animal and vegetable life in their innumerable forms and transformations present a kaleidoscopic view—always changing and perennially fascinating.

If this be true with respect to the child it is equally true in principle of the adult. To be happy in the country he must find his interests, his amusements, his contentment in contact with and observation of the facts and wonders of nature. Life on the farm must not be for him merely plowing, sowing, harrowing and harvesting, and it will not be so when he has divested his mind of some of his delusions. Too many farmers hug the delusion that city life has much altogether desirable that country life can not give; whereas, a few brief visits to the city can give them all that the city has that they would likely acquire by a longer stay.

For a few score of years the city has been having "its day"; now, however, the country is coming into its own, and the time soon will come, if it has not indeed already arrived, when the superior advantages of country life will be appreciated and preferred. To prefer the city and city life is to be superficial; to prefer the country and its advantages is to delve beneath the surface and understand life's deeper meanings, is to recognize the basic conditions that are indispensable to the growth and development of vigor in mind and body, and a large rural population affords the foundation upon which only can be erected a superstructure that will endure.—American Lumberman.

A Proper Celebration

And It Fitted Right in on the Fourth of July

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Mel Archer and May Baldwin were spoons from the time they were the tiniest of kids. When Mel was five and May was four they captured a sugar bowl together and ran as fast as their chubby little legs would carry them to the barn, mounted to the hayloft and emptied the bowl into their stomachs. The sting of the shoe sole which followed only added to the bond between them.

Then came the schoolmate age, and it brought another episode calculated to unite their young hearts. May possessed a doll whose eyes would appear to open and shut. An accident to the optic machinery within caused that part of the eye on which the pupil was not painted to remain always to the front. One of the boys made fun of May's doll, and Mel gave him a licking.

It is needless to say that with such heart links to bind their souls together when they were children they became real spoons when they grew up. But this period during which true love should run smooth proved the reverse, and instead of being the bosom of a gently flowing river it was the humps and hillocks of the glacier.

Then another fellow stepped in between them and their paths forked.

Nevada Pete studied the fly spotted calendar with his one good optic. The glass eye stared fixedly at the wall over the calendar.

"Seems like that there calendar's got you hypnotized," drawled Luke Mather.

Pete turned his head on his long neck. "Tomorrow's the Fourth of July," he remarked.

"Tell it to Sweeney," was Luke's caustic advice.

"Wake up!" cautioned Henry Dorr, yawning. "I've known it ever since last year."

Pete laughed. "You ain't likely to forget the Fourth, either."

For on the previous anniversary of his country's birth to freedom Henry Dorr had held a pack of cannon crackers too close to his careless cigarette. The cigarette happened to be lighted, and—well, Henry spent several weeks in bed and came forth with his natural beauty much marred, which was a pity, as Pete insisted, because Henry had no good looks to spare.

Henry bore their teasing with good natured tolerance. On the Double Bar ranch they were much given to tormenting one another and to practical joking.

"I was talking to Mrs. Whiffle yesterday," remarked Pete, tipping his chair back against the wall.

"You might be observed in that pleasant occupation most any time," put in Luke.

Pete looked down at the cigarette he was rolling.

"And she says," he went on evenly, "that her children ain't ever seen a firecracker. They don't know what a Fourth of July celebration looks like." "For the love of Mike! Where have they lived?" asked the amazed Mr. Dorr.

"Oh, homesteading up in Washington. Kids all born up there. And Whiffle too down and out to fire off his gun, I reckon, when the Fourth did come around. He was half dead when they reached God's country, meaning Umpas county, and before she could turn around the other half of him died and left her with three kids to bring up."

"Tough luck," muttered Luke. "It's a good thing she ain't ashamed to do washing and ironing. She's got a job at every ranch within ten miles of her shack. She's keeping the hull county clean."

"And what's all this leading up to?" demanded Henry Dorr.

"A celebration for the Whiffle kids," said Pete firmly. He took off his hat and passed it around.

"Fifteen dollars and four cents," he announced after counting the result.

"Some celebration," murmured Luke sleepily. "I reckon the widow would rather have the cash to buy clothes and food for the kids."

Pete passed the hat again, but he only gleaned two collar buttons and an assortment of dark glances.

"You must think we're a collection of conscience smitten millionaires," grunted Luke.

"You're a collection of knockers," retorted Pete. "What'll we buy, fellows?"

The nine looked interested.

"Old man Miller's got some skyrocket-ets," suggested Barker.

"Skyrockets!" repeated Pete, writing the words down in a greasy memorandum book. "Anybody else got any brilliant suggestions to make?"

They all had and they all voiced them in one deafening chorus.

When the list was completed a committee of eight cowpunchers rode over to Bear Gulch to buy the fireworks, and the remaining member of the Double Bar outfit, Mel Archer, was delegated to notify the Widow Whiffle of the impending celebration.

Mel set forth on his errand in an unpleasant frame of mind. In the first place he had never seen the Widow Whiffle, and in the second place he did not care for women. Once upon a time a woman had thrown him over, and Mel Archer had sworn against the fair sex ever since.

Still he had been interested enough to put on his best white silk shirt and orange necktie, which was vastly becoming to his dark, good looking face. "She sure might be scared if I looked too much like a hobo," said Mr. Archer in excuse for his vanity.

The Widow Whiffle's shack was tucked under the brow of a hill several miles away from the Double Bar.

Archer had never seen it, but now as he rode down the trail that ended at a neat whitewashed fence he sniffed the air with a homesick longing for the little middle west village where he was born.

For there was a flower garden here that boasted all the sweet old fashioned posies of his boyhood—petunias, mignonette, heliotrope, day lilies, roses, marigold, honeysuckles, all the sweet familiar smells.

And the little shack itself was a long, one story building of corrugated iron, but its walls were hidden under clambering roses and honeysuckles.

"Any widow who can go out washing and keep a garden like this one is worth a celebration," decided Mel Archer as he tied his horse to the fence and walked up to the front door—in fact, the only door of the house. The windows were lighted.

He knocked and immediately a shadow crossed the drawn shade.

"Who is there?" demanded a firm, sweet voice.

"A friend," laughed Mel in his pleasant voice. "A committee of one from the Double Bar."

"Oh!"

The door opened hospitably, and Mel blinked as he entered a cozy sitting room.

There was a round table and a workbasket and a pile of children's clothes.

Hat in hand, Mel turned his powerful figure to meet the Widow Whiffle.

Instead of a sharp featured, work worn drudge he saw a plump little woman with brown hair streaked with gray, a fresh complexion, a pretty nose and a pair of blue eyes that scanned him incredulously.

"Mel Archer?" she whispered at last. "May!" he exploded in a tone of disbelief. "What are you doing here—at Mrs. Whiffle's?"

"Because I am Mrs. Whiffle," she answered evenly.

"You?" he gasped, because she was the woman who had made him hate all other women. "I never knew who you married," he explained dully.

"And of course I didn't know you were within a thousand miles of Umpas county," she said. "Won't you sit down?" She sank into her own little rocking chair and picked up a child's frock.

Mel could see that her fingers trembled.

"So you married Whiffle," he said at last. "You're having a hard time of it, May?"

She bit her lip.

"No more than I deserve," she said in a strained tone. "There's something I must explain to you, Mel. You went away so suddenly you never gave me a chance."

"Fire ahead!" he said, his eyes hidden beneath his hand.

He told himself that the light hurt his eyes, but it was the sight of her after seven long, hateful years that dazzled him.

The Fourth of July dawned clearly. The grass of the ranges crisped under the burning rays of the sun, but in the grove of trees at the back of the Widow Whiffle's house it was delightfully cool.

When the nine cowpunchers from the Double Bar reached the grove the three little Whiffles were playing contentedly beneath the trees. They had some cheap toys and broken bits of china and were supremely happy.

Their mother had set a table in the grove, and it looked good to the hot and thirsty riders.

"We've come to celebrate," explained Nevada Pete as they staked their horses in the shade.

"Celebrate?" repeated Mrs. Whiffle, blushing and starchy eyed, in a white muslin gown she had washed and ironed since dawn.

"Didn't Mel tell you we were coming today to show your kids how to celebrate the Fourth of July?"

They all looked accusingly at Mel Archer.

He was the picture of confusion.

"I declare," he confessed; "I plumb forgot to tell May about it!"

"May?" shrieked eight indignant male voices.

"Yep," he said sturdily; "we're engaged!"

"Engaged!" chorused the celebrants.

"Quick work!" added Luke Mather.

May Whiffle put her hand on Mel's sleeve.

"Tell them, Mel, that we used to be sweethearts, and that we met unexpectedly last night, and that we're going to be married now. Here comes the minister."

The Rev. Mr. Jelton declared that he had never officiated at a more preposterous wedding. When the big, bronzed cowboy and the blushing little widow had been married beneath the trees they sat down to a delicious meal prepared by the bride.

And after that the day was one wild pandemonium of noise, for the cowboys celebrated every moment of the time, while the children, caring not a whit for the day and its significance, played with their toys.

When the last rocket had blazed its way into the evening sky the visitors shook hands and rode away.

Not one of them but envied Archer his good luck.

"It was a right proper celebration," admitted Peter gloomily.

A Realm Beyond Bookkeeping

By Former United States Senator WILLIAM E. MASON

"Neither love nor friendship hath need of a bookkeeper."
—John the Unafraid.

LIKE Damon and Pythias were the two friends, Judge Bland and Randall Edwards. One man said of them, "they are more than kin." One day, Judge Bland asked his friend to do a thing for him, which was, as his friend explained, absolutely impossible. Whereupon the judge, in anger, said: "I have been your friend all these years," and then recounted the many acts of kindness with which he had served his friend. The other replied: "Yes, judge, you have not named one-half of the favors you have rendered me. You have forgotten many which I cannot forget. I have had great pleasure in doing some very small things for you, and was so happy in it, that I supposed you had been pleased to serve me. In the realm of friendship, I had not thought of bookkeeping." The judge turned away but soon returned with outstretched hand, saying: "Forgive me, dear old friend, you have done me many favors, but none greater than today, when you discharged the bookkeeper who has kept my account of service rendered in friendship."

Have you ever heard a man boast of what he has done and the money spent for wife or child? He is keeping books and growing blind and stoop-shouldered at his work. Have you seen the man's eye sparkle who spends the last of his week's wages to give his boy a new pair of shoes? Have you watched him come home at night, thinking only of what happiness he may bring to others? Have you seen him make sacrifice to help a friend in distress?

That man is no bookkeeper. He has no open or running account. He collects in every transaction a joy that could not be set down in all the musty day books, cash books and ledgers in this world.

This then is the thought expressed: "Neither love nor friendship hath need of a bookkeeper."

A Sty on the Eye.

A sty is not dangerous, but it can be most unbecoming and troublesome if not attended to at its very start. Sties are due to the irritation of the hair follicle out of which an eyelash springs. They should be opened as soon as pus is formed, for they will not get well as long as pus remains. For inflammation and scaldness add to vaseline fifteen grains of precipitated sulphur. In applying this ointment it is well to warm it a little, as it will not then be so sticky. Apply several times a day until the sty is gone.

A Pleasant Outlook.

"I wonder why the bride is crying," remarked one of the guests at the wedding. "Can it be because she is leaving home?"

"No, it ain't that," answered the bride's small brother. "She's in love with the fellow she married, and I think she's crying 'cause she feels sorry for him."

MISTAKES.

While man lives mistakes will be made, and they should teach us wisdom. When you make a mistake don't look back at it long. Take the reason of the thing into your own mind and then look forward. Mistakes are lessons of wisdom. The past cannot be changed. The future is yet in your power.

How To Fight Tuberculosis

Of course, you breathe, BUT HOW DO YOU BREATHE? If you could be induced to do it, a little close self-observation would do more for you than many books—and one of the things it would do for you would be to show you that you do not breathe half as much as you think you do—that is, if you are the ordinary person neglectful of these matters.

Do you know what men pay money to gymnasium instructors for? To learn to breathe. Do you know that no amount of physical training would accomplish the least good for the body if it did not induce deep breathing? Exercise stimulates the breathing so that accumulated poisons are removed, and the cells of the body set free; and this gives the sense of benefit which follows the work.

Those who are not interested in instructing the people in matters of health know with what unconcern, if not derision, the average un-instructed person looks upon advice as to breathing. And yet there is no advice which, if followed, would more amply produce its own proofs of wisdom than this. The practice would justify the advice.

It is strange when you stop to think of it, that men will give thought to filling their stomachs, to clothing and sheltering their bodies, and yet give no thought at all to breathing. Not only that, but they will resent breathing advice as faddish. If they could go through the schools of a city and see doctors at work trying to correct these breathing defects that cause serious defectiveness of all kinds, they would have a new idea of the importance of breathing. And it is not as if men breathe naturally without such instruction; our habits of life are against proper breathing, so that in order to regain the normal practice we must give definite attention to it for awhile. Breathing is almost a lost art, which must be recaptured by attentive practice. It will be worth more than money to you to correct your breathing.

Tobago and Tobacco.

It is now generally agreed that the word tobacco is derived from "tobago," which was an Indian pipe. The tobago was Y shaped and usually consisted of a hollow, forked reed, the two prongs of which were fitted into the nostrils, the smoke being drawn from tobacco placed in the end of the stem. The island of Tobago, contrary to the belief of many, did not furnish the name for tobacco, but, on the other hand, it was given that name by Columbus, owing to its resemblance in shape to the Indian pipe.—Philadelphia Press.

A perilous feat is climbing the "Girdle traverse" on Scafell in the lake district of England. HOW TO SECURE A GOOD LAWN AND KEEP IT.

All lawns may be improved if there is a reasonably good turf, as it is possible to better it materially by reseeding, fertilizing and watering. In the spring many bare spots will be in evidence, and if the spots are small they can be reseeded. If they are large it is usually advisable to spade them up and reseed, or doing the work early in the spring. If the grass is thin over the entire lawn the work should be started early in the spring, while the soil is loose and in condition to permit the seed to be covered with little difficulty. The whole lawn should be raked with an iron rake and seeded and rolled as soon as the ground is sufficiently dry.

The care of the lawn after it is established is important. Liberal fertilizing should be given, and one of the best fertilizers is nitrate of soda. Five pounds of nitrate of soda is sufficient for 1,000 square feet of lawn, applying this with a watering pot, then watering thoroughly with the hose. Bonemeal is one of the best commercial fertilizers to use on lawns, eight pounds being sufficient for 1,000 square feet. Any fertilizer used should be applied early in the spring, when the grass begins to grow. Bonemeal can be applied every month during the growing season excepting July and August. Prepared sheep and stable manure is also beneficial. Slacked lime can be applied with beneficial results late in the fall. If a good lawn is wanted buy the best lawn grass seed to be had, well cleaned and free from weeds. Much of the lawn grass seed is from 25 to 50 per cent weed seed. If weeds are wanted do not bother to plant seeds; the weeds will grow without a special invitation.

DAHLIAS FROM SEED.

How They Can Be Started and Transplanted.

For several years I have had grand success raising dahlias from seed, starting them in a box or pan in the house as soon as April 1 and transplanting them in the garden as soon as the ground is warm enough—usually about the last of May, at which time they will have four or six leaves. From a packet of mixed seeds I have had as many as eight different colors, ranging from snowy white to darkest crimson, besides some beautifully striped and variegated. They were the admiration of all beholders, says a writer in Farm and Home.

Should there be a few single ones (as there probably will be) they are by no means to be despised, as they are nice for cut flowers. Set them out along the side of the house or each side of the door, where you can see them as you go about your daily vocations, and you will be more than satisfied with the results. Water them with the water from the weekly wash, as they are greatly benefited by frequent waterings in dry weather. Even if they are not a joy "forever," they will surely give much pleasure through the long hot days of summer.

How to Massage the Scalp Daily Without Making an Event of It.

Press the finger tips (fingers close together) to the scalp and with a gentle pressure rub the scalp in a circular manner, causing it to move. The object is to loosen it as much as possible and bring a warm glow to it by causing the blood to flow to the surface.

When this is accomplished move the fingers to another spot, and in this way go over the whole scalp. If the hair is very dry a very small amount of vaseline may be rubbed into the fingers and applied to the scalp only, as any grease will cause the hair to lie flat if applied to the hair itself.

Any tonic which is chosen should be applied with massage, as most of the benefit is obtained by the massage.

How to Make the Beds So That Slumber Really Refreshes.

To make up a bed so that it will be smooth tuck the clothes in, one piece at a time, at the sides, and complete the work all but tucking the clothes in at the foot. Now draw the clothes down, one piece at a time, as taut as possible and tuck them in at the foot. The bed will be far nicer looking than would be otherwise possible. If the bed is of iron or brass, which does not permit of tucking in the coverlet, tuck in the other clothes as directed, placing the coverlet over all.

How to Do the Family Mending in the Easiest Way.

To do quick, neat and strong mending take presser foot off sewing machine, stretch hole in material over embroidery hoop, hole as near to center as possible; insert under needle, cloth side down; set down the part that holds presser foot; sew back and forth slowly without letting go of hoop. Always sew further than tear each way. After filling in lengthwise of tear turn hoop and sew across. Use medium size stitch.

Will You Lose Your Boy, Too?

This is a true picture of what is happening on thousands of farms each year. Breaking home ties. Young men, and young women too—leaving home for the attractions and conveniences of city life.

Young people in country homes have plenty to keep them busy and contented during the day. Evening is their time of leisure and recreation.

It is then that the depressing gloom of their poorly lighted homes strengthens their desire for the pleasures and comforts of good light which all city homes enjoy, rich and poor alike. For young folks crave companionship—good times—pleasant homes—cheerful surroundings.

Thirty years ago, it is true, only city homes enjoyed the advantages of gas lights and gas cooking but for the past fifteen years progressive home owners in the country have also enjoyed this greatest of city conveniences—good light—until today are supplying brilliant, inexpensive light to houses, barns, outbuildings and cooking fuel for the kitchen range on hundreds of thousands of up-to-date country places from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

These homes—situated just like your own—are lighted as well as the finest city house you ever saw.

The young folks in these homes are contented and happy. Their homes are cheerful, full of light and comfort, real homes of which young folks, and older ones too, can well be proud. City life has no attraction for them, because they know that with modern conveniences in the home, life in the country is better, happier and more enjoyable than the best the city has to offer.

What about your children? Are you doing your part to give them the advantages they desire and which their friends and neighbors enjoy? Or are you denying them the simple comforts and conveniences which you can well afford?

They may be just approaching the time when they will decide for themselves—whether they too will leave for the city or stay at home.

They may never have said anything about these things to you—but what are they thinking? What will they decide?

Their decision is largely in your hands. An attractive home is the strongest magnet in the world. The greatest factor in making the home cheerful, bright and attractive is good light.

Other guests here were: Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Knapp and son, Clark, of Cass City and Clark McKenzie and children of Kalamazoo. Mrs. J. Parent is the guest of her mother, Mrs. J. W. Umphrey. Mrs. Linus Walker passed away at the home one mile west of Argyle Friday morning, June 30, at the age of 71 years. She had been seriously ill since March of cancer of the stomach. Deceased was born in Canada where the earlier part of her life was spent. Mr. and Mrs. Walker, with their family, moved to the home where they have since resided about 35 years ago. One little girl died in infancy. Her companion and four sons, Marvin, Fred, Oscar, and Melton survive, who with their families reside in this vicinity. One brother and four sisters also survive. The flowers were beautiful and the church filled with relatives and sympathizing friends and neighbors. She was a devoted wife and mother, a kind good friend and neighbor, a faithful member of the Austin Baptist church and an enthusiastic worker in the Willing Workers. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Card and interment in McRae cemetery. Mrs. Lee Doerr and little son were terribly, perhaps fatally, burned Tuesday afternoon when their house and its contents were destroyed by fire. Mrs. Doerr is too low to tell how the fire originated, but it is reported it is thought she was outdoors and seeing the flames rushed in to save the baby. Mr. Doerr was absent from home and is almost prostrated. Mr. and Mrs. Amasa Walker are entertaining friends from Manistee. Miss Nellie McKichean was home for the Fourth.

WHEN GENIUS FELL DOWN.

It Did the Job Thoroughly and Took a Double Header. The crowd in the hotel cafe had been talking about extraordinary vocal inconsistencies, the conversation taking its start from an anecdote about a sailor who was always seasick in rough weather and moving happily along about a surgeon who would faint at the sight of his own blood, and things like that, says the New York correspondent of the Cincinnati Times Star. The sailor, an Englishman at the far end of the group, who had merely listened, finally cut into the talk. "All interesting, quite," said he, "and reminds me of something that came under my own notice in London. Most extraordinary this was. We have a chap named Datis over there. In the music halls they call him 'the man with the marvelous memory'; does a lot of bally feats that make you fairly shiver, y'know. Been doing it for years; always makes people wonder a lot and applaud like th' devil. Well, this marvelous memory chap goes out one night with Houdini, your American fellow who breaks out of jails and all that, and after they'd had a fearful lot of beer this marvelous memory chap invites Houdini to come home with him for the night, and then, by Jove, he can't remember where he lives. Extraordinary, what? Makes a living remembering things, y'know, and can't remember where he's lodging. Corking, eh, what?" "Sure!" said one of the party. "Corking is the word. What did they do?" "Oh, there isn't much to that," said the sad faced Englishman. "Met a cobby that knew where the marvelous memory chap lived and he took 'em home, but they had to come back to the hotel after all." "How was that?" "Well, this marvelous memory chap was so spicificated that he'd lost his key, and Houdini couldn't open the door." "And we're still wondering if he was kidding us."

Always Feminine. A young chap was walking along a business street with a very pretty girl when he happened to glance into a couple of windows where the latest

She looked at everything. styles of men's overcoats and suits were displayed. The girl noticed it. She stopped and exclaimed: "What a dandy overcoat! Why don't you get one of those, Bob? You'll look fine inside of that."

She looked at everything in that window, and the young chap was delighted at her interest in men's clothes. "You're all right, Grace," said he. "That's what I like about you. Most girls would rather look at lingerie waists than at a man's overcoat and suits."

The girl laughed. "Well, Bob," said she, "to be perfectly honest, the mirrors in that window are something to cry for. I was trying to see if my hat was on straight!"

Looked Suspicious. A southerner visited New York recently and was fortunate enough to secure an invitation to dine in one of the great and fashionable houses on upper Fifth avenue. It was to be a large dinner with many tables, each one of which was known by the color of its decorations. As the visitor entered the house the butler inquired his name and then handed him a card, saying, "You are to be at the white table, sir." "What, sub," demanded the southerner, "are there to be niggers?"—Exchange.

Helping Her Out. The Smythes attempted the unwise experiment of trying to give a fashionable dinner party with an inexperienced maid, whose mistress had coached and coached her until, as poor Ellen said afterward, her mind was "all in a tangle." During the middle of the dinner Ellen appeared in the dining room with a look of perplexity on her face and said: "Say, ma'am, I can't remember whether you want them croquet things next or that salad, and I'm shy one salad plate, and I don't think there's goin' to be enough salad to go round anyway, so hadn't we better cut that out altogether?"
