PROMINENT FARMER ANGMERS SIMMONS

A. E. Goodall Had Long Been Active in Advancement of Community.

Alfred E. Goodall, a well known Elkland township farmer, passed away at his home on Thursday night, Aug. 5. Death was due to typhoid fever. He had been ill three weeks.

Funeral services were held at the Presbyterian church Saturday afternoon and a large number of friends gathered to pay their last respects to a man who was held in high esteem and who took an active interest in advancing the better things in his community. The service was conducted by Rev. W. W. Edwards of Lansing and Rev. P. J. Allured. Interment was made in Elkland cemetery.

Mr. Goodall has long been identified with the business, social and religious affairs of his township and county. At the time of his death, he held the office of elder in the Presbyterian church, was vice president of the Cass City Oil and Gas Company, a member of the board of directors of the Tuscola Co. BY O. LAWRENCE HAWTHORNE If I can say that I have done my best today— Have made the most of opportunity, If I have acted always in a manly way And met those problems life presented me, To me belongs tonight the victor's right to know A certain satisfaction and content. I do believe that I have done my best, and so I view with pride today's accomplishment!

But let me not forget that what today was good Will never meet the test tomorrow gives. Perhaps today I did the very best I could, But great success is won by him who lives In constant striving toward a higher, better goal; And so I pray that every morning sun Will stimulate a new ambition in my soul Until I do the best that can be done!

THE BUSY MAN

66 T T IS a great gift," C. H. Henderson says in John Percyfield, "that of being occupied without being busy. I have a friend at home, Graham Harlowe, who is forever busy see him I am always shown directly up to his den, and there the poor youth sits, half buried in papers and rubbish of all sorts, up to his ears in work, and never accomplishing anything Harlowe never rises when I enter. He always holds out his hand and says, 'Ah, Percyfield, so glad to see you. Won't you sit down and just excuse me for a minute till I finish looking up this reference.' I

than ten minutes." Hewlett was that sort of manalways extremely busy but seldom occupied. One of his subordinates would be summoned hastily to his office for a conference only to find him dictating to a stenographer or reading some of his mail, or engaged in fumbling with some papers. "The greatest vice of American education," an Englishman recently said, "is that there is too much of it. The American student is engaged in too many things. He is so busy that he has no time to think, no time for the things which are for him the most important to do."

There are some men so busy that they have little or no chance of doing these. It is the unimportant thing on which he wastes his time, the trifling matter that keeps him constantly running round in a circle, trying, as it were, to catch up with himself. He gives himself no leisure because he is so busy. He gets very little accomplished because he can never get to Mrs. Wm. Jackson is numbered the things that are really worth while. He is burdened, swamped with work. If he were less busy he would get more done. His trouble is that he does not know how to dispatch work, and so to give himself a little time

Greeks Discovered Earth Is Round

That the earth is round was a well-established fact long before the time of Columbus. As far back as 400 B. C. estimates were being made on the number of miles around the earth. Aristotle put this figure at 40,000 miles, and later, about 200 B. C., Eratosthenes figured more accurately 25,000 miles. (©. 1926, Western Newspaper Union.)

Origin of "Tennessee"

The word "Tennessee" is said to be corruption of an Indian word which is usually written "tenasse," which means "river of the big bend," according to some authorities, and "a curved spoon," according to others. Your own car makes the whole country yours with its peace of color and coolness. Not far from your own home are scenic treasures—adventure fun—and romance. Find them! Follow the shores of sapphire lakes! Stop to fish in their cold, clear depths. Drink in the fragrance of wild flowers and scented meadows!

You will find color wherever you go - green of forests—gold of wheat fields—blue waters of lake and stream—crimson of flaming sunsets. And always the promise of the unknown luring you on! Below is a suggestion of the rich treasure of the Middle West.

- 1—Prairie du Rocher, Illinois, the only town in the French plan. Church records date back to 1720, House of first governor of Illinois where La Fayette was entertained used as post office. Near Evansville on State Highway No. 3.
- 2-Sully's Hill, an important wild animal preserve in North Dakota. State Highways No. 34 and
- 3—Lecompton, Kansas, where the "Lecompton Constitution" was framed in 1857. View of Kansas and Delaware Rivers from the bluffs. Near Big Spring on Union Pacific Highway
- 4—Storm Lake, Iowa, a beautiful resort region. State Highways No. 4 and No. 5.
- 5-Indian fortifications north of Fourteen Mile Creek, Indiana. Peculiar formation over 200 feet high and in one place hardly a rod wide. Near Charlestown on Wonderland Way No. 24
- 6—Mount Baldy, one of the largest sand dunes in the world, at Saugatuck, Michigan. State Highway No. 11.
- 7-Mille Lacs District in Minnesota, where the pine forests and oak forests meet. Fishing is very good in this district. State Highway No. 18 from Brainerd follows the shore of Mille Lac.
- 8-Sibley, Missouri, where Fort Osage was established in 1809, during Osage Indian War, one of the eastern terminals of the old Santa Fe Trail. Near Buckner on National Old Trails Road No. 6.
- 9—Trempeauleau Mountain, Wisconsin, where Perrot, the French explorer, landed in 1685. Name derived from the French meaning "the hill which soaks in the water." Bold piece of

AN ACTOR IN THE SHOE BUSINESS

By HERBERT L. McNARY

(©. 1926. Western Newspaper Union.)

CTORS are reputed to be poor business men as a rule, and it appeared that Ellery Crofton would be no exception to the rule. Ellery Crofton was a name with which the playgoers of a score of years ago were more familiar than are those of the present day; but Crofton had remained an active thespian until advancing age had made even stock company work too strenuous for him.

Now he was headed back towards the city which he had seen but infrequently in over a score of years, but which formed the setting for the pleasant recollections of his youth; the city he had always referred to as "home." Now he was coming home for good. It was a day he had long looked forward to, not exactly with joy, but with an acceptance of the inevitable; and he was not returning impoverished. He had saved nearly twelve thousand dollars out of all the large salaries he had received and this he now intended to invest in some little business that would net him a fair income and at the same time keep him active. There would be no benefits or "Actors' Home" for him; and now, as he gazed out at the broad expanse of green fields that rapidly swept by the train window, a benign smile on his unseamed features, he let his head, with its covering of snowy locks, sink back on the green cushion and permitted his blue eyes to close in reflection. He was disturbed by the arrival back from the smoker of the occupant of the parlor seat next to his. Crofton opened his eyes and smiled friendly. The other man, with active small eyes, responded to the smile. "We'll be pulling in soon and I'm glad of it. Travel much?" Crofton smiled. "Considerable. I'm an actor-or I was." "That so? Company fail?" inquired the stranger. "No. I retired. Got a little nest egg I'm going to invest and take things easy from now on." Crofton's eyes closed again reflectively and he did not see the stranger's eyes rest shrewdly upon him. Now the stranger spoke.

"If you'll pardon the question, about how much did you intend to invest?" "About ten thousand," answered Crofton innocently.

The stranger smiled. "Well, it's fortunate that we met. Now I have a friend who owns the Ye Lady's Shoe Shoppe and it's a splendid proposition, but his doctor has ordered him to the coast. He offered me the lease, stock and goodwill for ten thousand. It's worth fifteen as it stands, but I couldn't handle it. Now you-well, you make a fine appearance, if you will permit me to say it, and that's an asset in an exclusive Crofton listened attentively to the smooth stranger, and by the time the train had pulled into the station he was convinced, and in the end agreed to meet Mr. Elkins, the proprietor of Ye Lady's Shoe Shoppe.

All three visited the establishment on Sunday, for it was explained to Crofton that since the store was closed to business, Sunday would be 'a good day for conference. The store. done in maple and metal work of bright bronze color, with long seats covered with leather of the same bronze color, appealed to the old actor's esthetic tastes. It did seem that he was getting quite a bargain. The stock alone, consisting largely of shoes of black with white tops, had a book value of over ten thousand. Of course, there was a payment due, but with the shoes retailing at six dollars a pair this bill could be quickly met. Before they left the store the transfer was made and the old actor became the new owner of Ye Lady's Shoe Shoppe.

Monday Crofton was on hand early for business, retaining the three clerks and cashier. The store was in a good location and throngs passed by -but few entered. Tuesday and Wednesday showed the same lack of business, and lines began to appear on Crofton's kind features. On Friday a sharp-featured business man entered and briskly sought out Crofton. "I'm ready to make you an offer of two dollars a pair for your black and white shoes-for the lot." Crofton gasped. "But they cost over four a pair."

The other made a broad gesture. "What of it? They're not going. We can sell 'em on our bargain counter.

What do you say?" But Crofton couldn't say anything, he was white and speechless. The bargain seeker looked at him searchingly and then his bright eyes lit up with understanding. "I guess you must have bought this stock at its book value. You didn't know this style had gone out. That's what makes ladies' wear so risky; the styles can change over night. Well, when you're ready to sell I can give as good a price as, anyone. Here's my card."

In a daze Crofton walked to the back of the store and slumped down. He could sell the stock for barely enough to pay the final payment he had assumed. He would be wiped out. It was the "Actors' Home" for self. One of them wanted a pair of gray shoes she had seen in the window. Crofton brought a pair to her in time to hear the other girl say:

Two girls entered and, to divert his mind from his misfortune, Crofton hastened forward to wait on them him- Pelican.

"I'll need a pair of white ones for an evening dress I'm having held for me in Marston's—a wonderful bargain.'

"Long or short?" asked the other girl.

"Long. "I thought so. Don't take it, Cora. saw Irono Stoole in Black and White' in New York and all the gowns she wore in that picture were at least ten inches from the ground."

wo departed. Crofton smiled weakly. This was the kind of business in which he had sunk his money-influenced by what a "movie" star wore! Again he retired to the back of the store. A newspaper was there and he picked it up and instinctively turned to the dramatic page. A picture looked out at him. Irene Steele, herself. Because of his long association with the stage he had been somewhat prejudiced against this comparatively new form of art; but he knew that Irene Steele had become the latest idol of filmland, largely through her great success in 'Black and White." There was something appealing in the demure and dainty expression. and then he caught something in the article that demanded his attention. "The daughter of Elsie Salinger-" Elsie, who had played with him nearly twenty years ago-why this was little Irene herself. Her father's name had been Steele-and this was little Irene. Yesterday, the child he told fairy stories; and today a great

-slowly he laid aside the paper. Saturday afternoon came and Irene Steele was in the city. She had left word that not even reporters were to be allowed to see her-but Crofton insisted his card be taken up. Irene received him; greeting him at the door of her room with both her hands extended. "Why-you're perfectly handsome with your white hair. Are you still acting?"

He shook his head. "I bought out a business with my savings-and I guess I was taken advantage of. I am loaded up with three thousand pair of shoes that are out of style, and a payment still due." The sympathetic brown eyes of the famous star became moist with compassion that was quickly swept away by a bright smile. "But I can help you. I'm going to be frightfully rich with the profits on this picture."

Crofton smiled. "That's kind of you, Irene, but I don't want money. But you can help me," and then as she looked at him with eager questioning, he added, "by accepting this

Irene Steele took the box and opened it doubtfully, exposing a pair of small shoes.

"I hope they fit," said Crofton. "You see, they're 'black and white'-now do you see my scheme?" Her eyes lit up with understanding, but before she could speak Crofton explained his entire scheme in detail. "Now have that appear in the Morning Mail," Crofton said in parting. "I am sure it will work." Thus it was that all the young lady admirers of Irene Steele who turned to the article on her in Monday's Morning Mail, read that her trip to this city had been almost completely Mr. and Mrs. Frank Dillman. spoiled. Just before leaving New York she found she had shipped all her shoes back to Hollywood save only a pair of gray ones. Now, ever since the success of 'Black and White' she had worn only black and white shoes, and the fad had caught on. Indeed, so great had been the demand that she was unable to secure a pair in New York before leaving to be the guest of the Mail. Even in this city her maid had been unable to secure a pair Saturday night. Now it would be the worst sort of omen | phy. for her to appear Monday night without black and white shoes-and then, on Sunday, she herself, had seen a shoes in Ye Lady's Shoe Shoppe on Melvin Avenue! She was actually almost tempted to break the window! Every minute of her time Monday morning was to be taken up by her schedule, but at twelve o'clock, before anything else, she was going to the Ye Lady's Shoe Shoppe and buy a dozen pair. When Irene Steele arrived at the Ye Lady's Shoe Shoppe she had to force her way through a lane of policemen to get into the crowded store; and long after she had gone perspiring clerks were still selling black and white shoes at seven dollars a pair. On Tuesday three well-dressed men entered the crowded store and asked to see Crofton alone in his office. "Yeu got us," admitted the spokesman. "A pretty smart trick getting an option on the entire supply of the only factory able to turn out that | Miss Harriet Tindale returned home black and white shoe immediately. Now you can't sell them all, so name your price." After they had gone, Crofton looked at a check still damp with ink. "Well," he mused, "I guess we actors aren't such bad business people after all."

FOR THE SAKE OF TOODLEUMS

By HAROLD KINSABBY

(© by Short Story Pub. Co.) YOW, Bert, listen," said Mrs. Rodney, taking her brother into full confidence. "I want to talk to you. Tom is really the best husband that ever was. Of course I've never had another husband, but just think how he adores our baby-our Toodleums!"

Bert Loring glanced at his sister's face to gather that the last remark was as a gold seal on her husband's virtues. She was young, pretty, and winsome. She was also Loring's only sister. Nevertheless he rubbed his chin a trifle doubtfully, for Rodney was a sad failure in a business sense.

"Oh," well," he returned at last. "Since you say so, I presume that settles the matter. You ought to know, Mary. Personally, I've nothing against Tom.'

"No," she affirmed decisively. "No one could help liking Tom. He's just the most lovable fellow imaginable, so generous and kind-hearted toward every one."

'Uh-er-Oh yes!" nodded the brother. "There's no question about Tom's generosity."

He was thinking of the last occasion when he chanced upon Tom downtown. With great cordiality Tom invited him to lunch. It was a capital lunch, too, nothing wanting, onlysomehow Tom found it was unfortunately necessary to borrow five dollars to pay for it. He had forgotten to drop in at his bankers. By Golly! That was a joke on Tom, at which he laughed in the utmost good nature. His wife was quite right when she spoke of his kindly disposition toward every one. The waiter's smile bore witness to it, when helping to adjust Tom's overcoat. Loring went out with his overcoat collar bracing his ears. So much for the waiter's discernment.

"But, you see, Bert," explained Mrs. Rodney, "Tom's only drawback is that he has never been given a chance to prove what he is really worth. He's wonderfully bright."

"As bright as a new five-dollar gold piece," subconsciously acquiesced the brother. He was still thinking of the

"And ambitious for bigger things," added Mrs. Rodney.

"I don't doubt it," nodded her brother. It occurred to him that Tom was capable of ordering a mighty fine dinner.

"Then, Bert, why don't you get him a good position in your insurance

"What!" he cried. "Pardon me,

Mary, I didn't quite-" "Hush!" she laid a finger on her lips. "Don't be so noisy, Bert. You'll wake Toodleums. Yes," she went on in an undertone, "a good position in your insurance office. One in which Tom could shine and Toodleums feel proud of his dada. You know how attached you are to Toodleums-the precious!"

"Yes, but you see, Mary," her brother began to protest, "the shining positions | in our office are pretty well all occupied. I don't glitter much yet, and I've been years climbing up from the bot-

"But Tom is so brilliant-such a fine talker," declared Mrs. Rodney enthusiastically. "If he were once given the chance he would jump right up to the top. Everybody likes him."

"Well, our president has been pretty good to me," he remarked. "I'd really hate to see him lose his job-I mean within the next few weeks-even on Tom's account." "Bert, don't be ridiculous and sarcastic. Toodleums—the love—does not like people who are sarcastic."

"No, probably not. But honestly, Mary, you must see what I mean. If I got Tom a position in our office, he would have to take his chance with the rest. But, as you say, he is a good talker, and might do pretty well in out-he's made of. That's all I can promise at present." "Then you may kiss Toodleums," she added by way of great reward.

She rose and moved softly toward a lace ruffled and beribboned shrine. "And be careful, Bert," she enjoined, "you don't stumble over something lead to the confidence of millionaires, and the friendship of United States senators. Tom was quite enthusiastic. "Just the thing," he cried, slapping Loring on the shoulder. "The very position I've been looking for. Don't worry about the beginning at the bottom of the ladder idea. I'll climb up hand over fist. You watch me." So Loring introduced his brother-inlaw to the chief of the proper department, and with him Tom talked with much enthusiasm of purpose. He was finally told to report the next morning, when full instructions would be given. He was in such high feather on the way home that he bought a department the next morning was satisfactory in all respects. He appeared to grasp quickly the details of the various insurance policies, and spoke confidently of what he intended to do with the list of prominent citizens he was instructed to call upon.

"Mr. Vandermorgan. Sure! I'll touch him for a $100,000 policy right away. If I clean him up before lunch, I guess that would be doing some-

"I guess it would," agreed the chief, who knew how for many months they had fished unsuccessfully for Mr. Vandermorgan.

So Tom gathered up his papers and strode briskly out of the office. He took the elevator with the air of a man who talked in nothing less than six figures. Then he went out and walked around the block. When he came back to the majestic portals of the Long Life building he paused to reflect. An idea seemed to occur to him. That it was a corking idea, the pleased expression on his face indicated. He again took the elevator, and was shot up to the floor on which his brother-in-law's office was located. "Hello, Bert!" he greeted, looking in at the door.

"Hello, Tom! How's business? How are you getting along?"

"Fine! Just going out to tackle Vandermorgan."

"Good! Hope you'll land him." "Yes," Tom proceeded, drawing a chair up to his brother-in-law's desk, and spreading out his papers. "But I thought I'd have a talk with you first." "Well, go ahead. Glad to help out in any way possible." "Yes, that's just what I thought. Now, see here, Bert, how about your taking out one of our ten-thousand-dollar policies?" "What!" cried Loring, falling back in his chair. "Man alive! What on earth do I want with a ten-thousand-dollar policy?" "That's the point. That's just what want to talk to you about," argued Tom complacently. "Every man ought ness of his wife after his death. That's about how the chief said I might be-

"But you know I haven't got a wife," protested Loring.

"Well, that doesn't alter the case. Those near and dear to you will do as well," went on Tom sympathetically. "Those attached to you by the strongest ties.'

"By the strongest ties?" questioned Loring.

"Sure! There are Mary and little Toodleums. As you are going to be Toodleums' godfather do it for the sake of Toodleums. I'll just fill out an application in his favor. Of course we'd hate for anything unfortunate to happen to you, but every man should make a suitable provision for those who are dear to him. The chief said that phrase usually catches on "

"Well, I'll be hanged!" ejaculated Loring.

"I sincerely hope not," fervently added Tom, as he prepared to fill out an application blank. "Shall we make it twenty or thirty thousand dollars? he asked, looking up calmly.

"Make it five and then go and chase Vandermorgan," retorted Loring, fearful that worse might happen. "All right. Five thousand dollars in favor of Toodleums. See you later, Bert," and with a smile Tom strolled out of Loring's office to deposit the signed application with the proper clerk. Suddenly he stopped, drew a pad and pencil from his pocket, and began figuring.

"By Jove," he exclaimed, "not a bad beginning! My commission on that policy is just $41 and I landed it in less than an hour. That's $328 a day, $1,968 a week, and-"

His calculations were interrupted by Dick Williams, who grasped his hand and inquired: "How're you getting on, Tom, and where are you bound for? Bert tells me you've taken up life insurance."

"Congratulate me, old fellow. This very morning I dropped into a berth that pays me a hundred thousand a year. I'm through for today and am off for home to tell my wife. So long" -and Tom was gone.

He had not yet reached the elevator when he turned, called back to his friend, and going up to him, his face still wreathed in smiles, confided: "Dick, in my hurry to go down to business this morning I came away without even car fare. Loan me a five. Ah, fhank you. And come have a bird and a bottle with me at the club tomorrow. By-by," and once more Tom was on his way to carry the news to Mary.

一一四個的主義學的學 "I knew it and always told people you would make good if you only had half a chance," interrupted his wife, as Tom triumphantly related his morn-ing's success to her. "Oh, yes," agreed the husband. "I know how to get there all right. By the way, how's Toodleums and how does he like his new rattle?"

How Sap Travels

The ascent of sap in plants is so commonplace an occurrence that we seldom stop to consider what a truly amazing thing it is. Here is an apparent contradiction of the law of gravitation, going on all about us all the time. On every summer day, in every field and woodlot, water flows uphill, whether only a fraction of an inch in the humble mosses or a couple of hundred feet in a towering tree. A single full-grown maple or linden will evaporate from its leaves as much as a barrel of water in a single day, and this must, of course, be replaced by sap flowing up the trunk. The water sent into the air by all the plants combined, must be comparable in quantity silver rattle for Toodleums-on credit. with the water carried off by the riv-

Conowingo, a historic Maryland town of 300 souls, situated in a prosperous farming area about forty miles north of Baltimore, is to give way to the press of modern economics and progress. The little town, that has been in existence since the years preceding the Revolution, is in the center of the land that will be utilized for the new projected dam that will bridge the Susquehanna river to furnish power to the system of the Philadelphia Electric company, a distance of seventy-five miles away. Therefore Conowingo will soon be deep under water. The photograph shows a view of the village's main street with the old post office.

Condensed Plan Gives Efficiency of Large Home in Small Space

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give ADVICE FREE OF COST on all problems pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on the subject. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

The builders of small detached homes have been taking their cue from the most modern of kitchenette apartment architecture and are condensing into the smallest possible space the greatest amount of housing efficiency. This includes such innovations as the double use of rooms by the expediency of disappearing beds and dressing closets, dining nooks and the elimination of porches and reception halls. The tendency is all in accord with the times, and because of the many advantages of the new compact homes, there is little likelihood of any swing back to the old-fashioned big house of the past genera-

Of course this process of condensa tion appears in varying degrees in different houses, but almost every home now displays the effects of the new tendency. Most of the changes can be seen in the house plan shown here. There is a separate dining room, but the space might easily be used for some other purpose. It could well be made a part of the living room for, in the condensation of other rooms, the living room has been given more prominence and nere, it irequently serves as a sleep appeared there is a semienclosed vestibule with this plan which is a very worthwhile feature. It will be most appreciated in the cold winter months or on rainy days. With the dining room thrown into the living room tne breakfast room would ordinarily answer for the serving of meals. On the special occasions when a number of guests were to be entertained, the end of the living room could be used for setting a larger table.

Some people will object to the placing of the electric refrigerator inside the breakfast nook. It would undoubtedly be an improvement to move this back, around the partition, into the kitchen, even though the electric refrigerator of today is a really attractive piece of furniture. Though the kitchen is quite small, careful planning has made it even more convenient for the preparation of meals than a larger room would be. It is chair he had ever seen. It was made conveniently reached either through the dining room and breakfast nook in the back an' seat was woven picor through the hallway.

The bedroom is of a very practical size, and its large closet will be widely appreciated. With the big dressing closet, which hides the disappearing bed during the day, it affords ample space for the clothing of the whole family. Right by the bedroom door is the door to the bathroom. This bathroom is installed in an ex- person like ye be-butcherin' people ceedingly small space by the expediency of using a seat tub, and it permits the provision of a clothes chute to the basement laundry.

Use of Good Hardware

Is Safe Investment In the matter of cost, hardware and locks play a rather minor part, forming only from 2 to 3 per cent of the total expenditure. In the matter of service it is of prime importance, for it is the mechanism which actuates every door, every window or drawer. and is in constant use by every member of the household. There is a wide difference, not only in the quality and the finish, but in the shape and function, to suit each piece to the location where it is to be used. To have the hardware right, the owner of the building should consult the builders' hardware man of some good hardware store specializing in this class of work and inspect samples of the articles submitted for approval. In this way only can it be certain that the proper equipment is

It is also highly important that the order for the hardware be placed early -as soon as possible after the work on the building has been begun. There is an unusual demand for hardware for homes, caused by the present large amount of building, and the dealer should be given ample time to assemble and deliver the hardware required.

Simplicity Is Keynote of the Small House

A great many people have the mistaken idea that the very small house or cottage cannot be made so attractive nor so architecturally correct as a large house, but this is wrong.

Probably the reason for the growth of this idea is the fact that too often the wrong methods are used in the attempt to make the small house attractive. That is, it is ornamented with many fancy trimmings which have just the opposite effect from that which is desired.

Simplicity is a good rule in all house design, but it is absolutely essential in the design of the small house. Lines and materials are the means which should be used to make the small house attractive.

Beauty of Small Home

Enhanced by Pergola

The top work of the single pergola can be made as wide as six or seven feet, with benches between the posts. This will give the same seating possibilities as double pergolas. Also little garden entrances are generally considered as being necessarily double, but instead these can be very small, artistic arrangements of the two posts with a light top over them. Habit is the most fixed thing in life, and we are much inclined to follow some of the methods of the past in landscape gardening, some of which are absurd in meeting the present-day conditions.

By the use of skill now, instead of lumber and paint, just as effective and attractive garden embellishments can be had without any greater cost than years ago. The present age demands more skill and less habit.

Use of Stone

The proper use of stone requires careful consideration and study. In selecting stone for the walls of a building, three important conditions must be considered; the nature of the stone, its texture and color.

Choked Pipes

Corroded iron and steel pipes are choked by internal deposits. The amount of water going through them eventually will be reduced to a trickle. Better material, such as copper, should be used.

If the owner is careful of nothing else, he should see that the waterproofing of his house foundation is properly done, since repairs will be costly.

THE RISIBLE ROCKER

By E. M. HAMILTON

(© by Short Story Pub. Co.)

"ALKIN' about strange things a-happenin', did I ever tell of my 'great-grandfather?" questioned Captain Barker, gazing neditatively at the dancing flames in the fireplace. He had not, and we younger men who had gathered in the old captain's house for a social chat, urged him to ell the story. "Well, ye see it was this way: My great-grandfather — Peters was his name—was a sea captain, an' a pretty decent sort of chap at first, as I've heard tell. But he got into bad company, an' jest behaved scandalous, so that his wife left him, an' all his folks -that was 'way back in them old times-wouldn't have nothin' to do with him. "One day, as he was cruisin' along the Carolina coasts, he sighted an old tub of a ship that was a lumberin' along as though she was short-handed or didn't care whether she got anywhere. She didn't look very invitin', but, havin' nothing else to do, Captain Peters ordered her to heave to an' boarded her. She had only three men for a crew, an' after tyin' 'em up he went down into the cabin to see what he could find. An old woman was a sittin' there, knittin' away as calm an' industrious as though she had to make stockin's for the whole seafar-

"'Who be ye?' she said, countin' her stitches.

"I'm Captain Peters, an' I've took his ship. "'Ye have. Where ye goin' to take

"'I ain't goin' to take it nowhere. I'm a pirate, an' I'm after what money ye've got.' "'For the land's sake! So ye're a pirate!' she exclaimed. 'Sit down, Captain Peters, an' be sociable a bit, an'

tell me how piratin' agrees with ye.' "While she was talkin' she pulled forward a rockin' chair from a dark corner, an', lookin' at it, Captain Peters thought it was the curiousest of bamboo, or somethin' like that, an' tures of snakes an' signs of the zodiac, an' all sorts of hieroglyphical figures. Captain Peters looked at it, an' then at the old woman, hardly knowin' what to make of the outfit.

"'Sit down, Captain Peters, sit down,' continued the old woman with a wave at the chair. 'Piratin' must be dreadful harrowin' to a sensitive an' throwin' 'em overboard, as ye have to do sometimes. Ye need cheerin' up, an', besides, I want to talk to ye, as I may never see another pirate while I'm in this world, an' I'm mighty awful 'bliged to ve for comin'.'

"Well, Captain Peters was sort of flabbergasted by this kind of talk, an' fool-like he set down on the chair, not an' red in the face that he could barely giggle, an' the old woman laid her hand on his arm.

"There, now, Captain Peters, I never ag'in expect to see such a cheerful pirate as ye be this blessed minute-indeed, I don't! It must be very amusin' to board an old woman's ship an' take it from her. No wonder ye laugh. Ye needn't try to get up, 'cause ve can't,' as the captain made an effort to rise from the chair. 'Now, listen to me. When my husband was in India he saved the life of an old Brahman priest, an' bein' grateful the priest gave him the chair ye're sittin' on. The old feller said it was hainted or had a spell on it, so if any one sit down on it he'd start to laughin' an' couldn't quit or get up till the owner said so. Last summer my husband died, an' I got the chair an' am now its owner. D'ye get all these facts. Captain Peters?"

"'I guess so, an' I'll make affidavy they're facts-every one of 'em!' answered the captain feebly, between giggles. What do ye want me to do? I'll do 'most anything to get out of this infernal chair.'

"'I reckon ye would, an' I'm goin' to give ye the chair as ye seem to enjoy sittin' on it so much. Ye ought to be grateful, Captain Peters, for havin' such a hilar'ous time. Now ye may quit laughin' a bit an' hear me. I'm goin' to call down some of yer crew, an' ye must tell 'em to take ye, chair an' all, an' put ye on yer own ship. Then ye must sail away, an' when ye're out of sight an' hearin', so ye can't find me ag'in, ye'll be the owner of the chair an' the spell will be lifted from ye. An', mind ye, bein' the owner, if ye want to give any other pirate a season of hilarity all ye've got to do is to get him to sit down on the chair. Will ye do as I say, or do ye want to stay here an' die of laughin'?' "'My good woman,' said Captain Peters, solemnly, 'when I die I'don't want any laughin' a goin' on, either on my part or from anybody that's a lookin' at me. I may be a pirate, but a laughin' when he's a dyin'. It don't show a proper spirit.'

"'Sure not,' put in the old woman.

'It wouldn't be a bit proper.' "'Then,' continued Captain Peters, T'll do jest as ye say, an' ye needn't fear that I'll bother ye any more. I'm glad ye've give me this chair, for it'll come mighty handy in lots of ways. Every pirate ship ought to have one, an' I'm jest grateful for the gift. When I get back to my own ship I'll send ye a bag of English gold to pay

"Well, sir, it was really techin' how rlendly them two got to be as they kept on a talkin' together, like old acquaintances, as ye may say, an' when Captain Peters sailed away he made his crew dip the skull an' cross-bones flag, an' the old woman stood on the poop of her vessel an' waved her apron back at 'em. It was a beautiful an' techin' sight-it sure was!

"Howsomever, Captain Peters was glad to get away, for he was nigh on to used up from laughin' too much. He had the chair taken to his cabin an' bein' possessor an' owner he was mightily tickled in thinkin' of what he would do with it. After leavin' the old woman he pulled down his pirate flag, an' started south with the idea of cruisin' round the West Indies for a time. All the while he was jest itchin' for a chance to use that chair on somebody. He had an enemy-a rival pirate captain, who was tryin' to form a trust an' gobble up all the buccaneerin' business by underhand work -an' he was in hopes of meetin' him. But he didn't; he met somebody he didn't want to meet. He was sailin' slowly along one day, for there wasn't much of a breeze at the time, when his lookout sighted several English warships comin' toward 'em. The fleet was commanded by an admiral. Generally speakin' Captain Peters could outsail any ship in the English navy, or any other navy, an' if it had been only one vessel he'd have made a fight for it, but this time luck was ag'in him. In spite of all he could do they overhauled him an' he had to heave to. The admiral, himself, with two or three officers, all dressed in gold lace an' other trimmin's, stepped on board.

"'Is this Captain Peters, the pirate?" demanded the admiral, cockin' his eye up an' around to see what the ship looked like.

"'My name ain't Peters, it's Simpkins. This ship is jest a tradin' vessel, owned by some of the most religious folks in Boston, an' they sent me out with a cargo of baked beans. answered Captain Peters, feelin' desperate, an' not knowin' what else to "'A cargo of-baked beans?' ques tioned the astonished admiral. "'Sure! I've got a lot of other stuff, of course, but the baked beans go to the planters in Virginia. Come below, admiral, an' I'll show ye.'

"Captain Peters was gettin' his wits back ag'in, for he saw a way out of his predicament. The admiral was suspicious. However, he finally consented to go below, and ordered his officers to keep a close watch on the ship while he was gone. Captain Peters first led the way to his cabin, an' placin' a bottle of wine an' two glasses on the table he pulled forward the rockin'-chair.

"'Sit down, admiral, an' have a glass with me, then I'll show ye the

"'That's a very extr'ordinary-lookin' chair-very!' said the admiral. 'Where did ye get it?'

"'It was give to me by an old woman whose ship I saved from the nirates,' an' Captain Peters chuckled inwardly, for this was the first truth he had told so far. "Without further words the admiral filled his glass, drank it, an' then plumped himself down on the chair. Of course the same thing happened to him that happened to Captain Peters. He began to laugh, an' kept on a laughin'. It was so funny that Captain Peters laughed too. The admiral tried to get up, but he couldn't, an' he haw-hawed till he about bu'sted the buttons an' gilt braid off his coat.

"'Let me up, ye scoundrel,' he managed to say. 'I'll have ye hanged for

"'There ain't goin' to be any hangin' or dyin' on this ship, admiral,' answered Captain Peters cheerfully. 'Of course if ye insist on havin' a funeral by dyin' of laughin', ye can do so, but I don't b'lieve ye will. Now I'm goin' to do by ye as the old woman did by me-I'm goin' to give ye the chair. Ye must tell yer men to take ye-jest as ye are-back to the fleet, an' ye must sail away an' leave me alone. Bein' as ye can't help yerself, admiral, will ye promise?'

"Well, the admiral promised-what else could he do?—an' the fleet sailed away. But Captain Peters had a bad scare all the same-so bad that he concluded to guit the piratin' business for good. Callin' his crew together he told 'em so, an' takin' his share of the swag he was put ashore. He went back to Connecticut, made up with his wife an' family, an' lived peaceable till he died."

"What became of the chair?" some one of us asked.

"Oh-I don't exactly know," replied the old captain slowly. "Seems to me I did hear that the admiral kept it in his family for a good many years, an' finally it was put into the British mu-

New Air Liners

Four new air liners have been sedded to the fleet plying between London and the continent. The new ships are designed to carry 16 persons each, and special construction has eliminated a large amount of the vibration and I was raised all right by good people, noise previously experienced by those an' I don't think a feller ought to be who took the air routes.

THE CLOUDED LEOPARD

"I am not going to be friendly with nvone," growled the Clouded Leopard "I am not friendly by nature and I have no wish to change my nature. "I don't like people and I don't care if they don't like me. "It makes absolutely no difference to me at all."

"Oh, all right," said the Jungle Cat, snarling, "I don't believe anyone wants to be friendly with you. "I am sure they don't.

"Besides I am not so very friendly myself.

"I like to eat when mealtime comes, sleep when it is sleeping time, and take naps whenever I feel like it. "At all other times I like to think of how stealthy I am when I am free.

and how clever and crafty I have "From where do you come?" asked the Clouded Leopard in rather a bored voice. "I come from the jungles, but in regions where people live so far away. "How about you?"

"I was going to talk about myself," said the Clouded Leopard, "for after all there is nothing so interesting." "Depends entirely on the point of view," said the Jungle Cat.

"I know nothing of points of view and care less for them," said the Clouded Leopard. "I suppose you mean the opinions which different people have." "Well to continue about the interesting Clouded Leopard," said the Clouded Leopard, "I can climb trees, "I am that rare type of leopard known as the tree-climbing leopard. "I live in the jungles when I am free

-where it is warm I prefer it. "I have beautiful markings, lovely patches as you can see for yourself. "They make me handsome.

"I've heard the children don't always like to have patches—perhaps because they have to be sewed onto their suits and dresses-but I love patches -my nice, handsome patches of fur.

"In fact I once heard one of the Fairies, who was paying a visit here, talking to an Old Patch creature who said how his children were never welcomed by other children and never were wanted even though they always did take them along with them once they attached themselves.

"Oh no, Old Patch creature certainly said his children were not much loved. "But that is why they have called me the Clouded Leopard, because I look cloudy with my beautiful colors and the strange arrangement of the patches.

"Still, I am very delicate.

"I won't live in the zoo unless they take the most perfect care of me. "They give me this dimly-lighted cage because it reminds me of the dark jungles from where I have come. "Ah, if I were back there I would do some fine hunting and killing and my long teeth would be helpful.

"Have you taken a good look, a really good look, at my long teeth?" But the Jungle Cat had gone to sleep, so the Clouded Leopard talked on to himself, but he did not mind. for he did not care for a single creature except himself.

That was the way he felt and he acted accordingly.

Picture of Wrong Dog

Grace was in the first grade. She had been boasting of her prowess with the primer and at last her uncle took the book, pointed to a page whereon a dog was pictured, and asked her to read. Glibly she rattled off a succession of short sentences.

"Why, Grace," her uncle interrupted, "there isn't a word of that printed here.'

After looking closely at the page, Grace turned to her uncle and replied: "Why, of course not, Uncle Tom, that's the picture of the wrong

Why No Cost

Mary Jane, eight, said to her mother as they were about to go into a restaurant for lunch, "Mother, we won't have to pay in this restaurant because on the window it says: 'Ladies invited.'

INFORMATION OF INTEREST

The tourist traffic from the United States to Canada has been growing rapidly in recent years. In 1925, 2,-429,144 tourists owning automobiles entered Canada, as compared with 1,-822,874 in 1924. As a guide to tourists who are planning vacations in Canada this summer the department of commerce has prepared a comprehensive statement of the regulations in

The tourist entering Canada with a motor vehicle must be in a position to assure the customs officer that the motor vehicle is to be used for touring purposes only and not to be used for commercial or business pursuits while in the country. Motor vehicles may be entered for any one of the three periods as follows: First, not exceeding 24 hours; second, not exceeding one month; three, for six months.

Tourists desiring to enter their cars for the one month period or six month period must present a registration certificate and secure permit from the customs officials. The original copy is given to the tourist and surrendered on leaving Canada. If a tourist has a 30-day permit and desires to extend this he must present his permit to a collector of customs and excise for a permit for a six months' stay.

In case the tourist wishes a six months' permit a deposit of $25.00 must be made for each automobile and $10.00 for each motorcycle, and a bond must be issued for double the amount of the estimated duties. The deposit is returned and the bond cancelled on proof of the export of the automobile. The term "automobile" includes the outfit accompanying the vehicle .

Regardless of the time which a traveling salesman spends in Canada he must pay the full rate of duty on his car if taken for business purposes. The duty is not refunded on exportation. Licenses must be secured in each province covered and the provincial taxes also paid. Failure | Canada. to comply with the regulations makes the car liable to seizure. Also the automobile of a tourist not returning within the time limit of his permit is liable to seizure.

The Canadian government is lib-TO CANADA TOURISTS | eral in its treatment of equipment taken by tourists. Practically every type of tourist equipment is admitted free for the six months' period. The only requirement is that a deposit be made covering the amount of duties, which is returned upon exportation. The tourist must furnish the customs officer at the port of entry with a report or invoice of his outfit, one copy of which is returned to the tourist when signed by the customs officer with the amount deposited marked on > Duty must be paid on ammunition and provisions brought in with the outfit. Wearing apparel and personal effects, when not for sale, enter Canada free as travelers' baggage. Forty cigars or less and 100 cigarettes or less, in open packages, may also be taken by travelers who are not residents of Canada, without payment of duty.

> For the use of tourists and travelers the department of commerce has prepared for free distribution a complete circular giving further particulars as to the exact procedure. Copies of the entry, export and bond forms are also given. This circular can be had by writing to the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce, 607 Free Press building, Detroit.
