FARM BUREAU MEET HERE AUGUST 25

C. H. Gray and Stanley Powell,
Legislation Representatives,
Will Give Addresses.

Chester H. Gray, Washington representative of the American Farm Bureau Federation and Stanley Powell, legislative representative of the Michigan State Farm Bureau will speak at twenty meetings held in various parts of the state during the next two weeks. One of these meetings of interest to people of the Thumb, will be held at the opera house at Cass City on Wednesday, August 25, at 1:30 p. m. These meetings will be known as legislative rallies.

Although the Farm Bureau is in no sense of the term a political organization, it is and always has been interested in all legislation, state and national, affecting agriculture. Mr. Gray has been in the very thick of all the congressional battles in which farmers were interested and he brings first-hand information direct from the nation's capitol which probably no other man in the country is able to give. The American Farm Bureau Federation have for the past several years expended a great deal of time and money in bringing the farmers' needs to the attention of Congress.

Mr. Powell has represented the State Farm Bureau at Lansing for five years and has first-hand information regarding state affairs. One of the principal reasons for holding these meetings is to find out how farmers are feeling toward various legislative questions. For this reason it is hoped that there will be a good attendance of farmers and any others interested in agricultural legislation.

Enthusiasm Shown in Club Work

The Boys' and Girls' Calf and Pig Club met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James D. Tuckey Friday evening. There was a good attendance and at the conclusion of the business meeting all enjoyed a weenie roast. The writer of this item is not a member of the club, only a visitor, and was quite impressed by the manner in which the affairs of the club were handled. The officers were in their places at the proper time, the president called the members to order, and went through the business routine without apparent embarrassment or nervousness. And the way the motions were stated, seconded and voted upon by the club members, showed the visitor that these young people know what they are about. Each boy and girl responded to roll call in an original way, some witty responses furnishing fun for everybody. Each member of the Calf Club responded by telling how he fed and cared for his calf. Then each member of the Pig Club responded by telling what would happen if his or her pig didn't win first prize at the Cass City Fair this week.

The members of the clubs were presented with pretty badges by Willis Campbell, director of the clubs. The badges are to be worn this week at the Cass City Fair. They are made of bright green satin and the lettering which is in gold reads, "Boys' and Girls' Livestock Club, Cass City Fair, Cass City, Mich., 1926." Those who wear the badges are entitled to certain privileges during the Fair. We are guessing that all the badges will be there.

During the business meeting Mr. Campbell gave a short talk, mostly about the club exhibits at the Fair this week. He asked each member to write a story about his calf or pig, or both, if he owns them. Prizes are offered for the best stories, which are to be handed to Mr. Campbell this week.

The young people are very enthusiastic about club work, and judging by the interest displayed by them, it won't be many years before the older stock men in this community will sit up and take notice when the Boys' and Girls' Calf and Pig Clubs are mentioned. Present indications are that they are a bunch of hustlers, under the leadership of a live wire—Willis Campbell.

PROF. PHELPS PICKS YEAR'S BEST BOOKS

Commenting on the Thrillers,
Literary Critic, Recommended Seven.

Prof. Wm. Lyon Phelps of Yale University delivered his annual lecture on English literature and the best books of the year at the Pointe aux Barques club house Sunday night for the benefit of the Hubbard Memorial hospital.

Prof. Phelps reviewed books which have appeared in 1926, taking in all kinds of reading, including biographies, religious books, humorous works, thrillers, and novels. Commenting on the thrillers, of which Professor Phelps recommended seven he said that some persons read to remember which others read to forget.

One of the most intensely interesting biographies of the year is "Abraham Lincoln" in two volumes, he said, by Carl Sandburg.

Other interesting books commented upon by Prof. Phelps were "Intimate Papers of Co. House" by Chas. Seymour, an "Ambassador's Memoirs" (Paleologue) and Albert Bigelow Paine's biography of Joan of Arc.

Professor Phelps recommended "Diary of a Country Parson," by Rev. James Woodford, as an ideal bed-book. The book is the diary of a pastor of the Church of England in two small English towns, from 1747 to 1803. It was not written for publication and deals with personal glimpses of the minister's life. The usual eating of that time is fully described in the book.

Other interesting books of a general nature are "Life Time with Mark Twain," a story of Katy Leary, a servant in the Clemens home, written by Mary Lawton; "Thomas Carlyle," by David Alex Wilson, and "John Sargeant" by William Downs.

An interesting book on history, he said, was Mark Sullivan's "Our Times," and he declared "Microbe Hunters" by Paul de Kruif, a wild exciting story, the only objection being that it was written in jazz.

Professor Phelps recommended seven thrillers which he absolutely guaranteed will make one forget his sorrows. The books are:

"Beau Sabreur," "The Black Glove," "Murder of Roger Ackroyd," "The Little White Page," "The Bat," "The Man Who Knew" and "The House of Crimshaw."

Four religious books mentioned by the speaker were:

"The Everlasting Man," by Chesterton; "According to St. John," by Charnwood; "These Sayings of Mine," by Douglas; and "The Book Nobody Knows" by Barton.

In speaking of books of poetry, Prof. Phelps stated that the most beloved poet and columnist of the country was in the room, in reference to Edgar A. Guest.

The humorous books were "What the Queen Said," by King; "Sam in the Suburbs," and "He Rather Enjoyed It," by Wodehouse, and "The Love Nest," by King Lardner.

The best novels of the year were reviewed shortly by the speaker. Among the best novels, Professor Phelps said, are "The Silver Spoon," by Galsworthy; "The Professor's House," by Willa Cather; "Miss Tiverton Goes Out," and "Hounds of Spring," by Sylvia Thompson; "Wild Geese," "Show Boat," Edna Ferber, and "The Golden Dancer," by Cyril Hume.

Jersey Day Was a Marked Success

The Jersey Day as put on under the direction of the Tuscola County Cattle Club at Fairgrove was a marked success. Thirty-seven head of cattle were shown and 375 people attended the show and meeting. In the aged cow class ten head were shown. Henry Lane of Fairgrove came first, Reid and Honsinger of Vassar, came second and Frank Crosby of Fairgrove, third. In the second class, with heifers two years old or under three, seven head were shown. Kenneth Parish of Fairgrove, won first,

Caro—A new hospital is being planned for Caro, located outside the village limits on East Frank St. on the property formerly owned by Henry Dodge. Mr. and Mrs. John Reno of Lapeer have purchased the property.

Kingston—The story that appeared in state papers last week that the oil sold from a Kingston oil station to Wm. Wilcox was highly explosive was without foundation. No report was made by state inspectors that tests made after Mrs. Wilcox and her little child lost their lives revealed that other ingredients were found in the kerosene. The story was somewhat sensational, but not true, it is said.

Port Austin—The trick of slipping money from an envelope and replacing it with cut papers was revived here, officers report, when two alleged slickers are charged with robbing Andrew Goreski, a farmer of Port Austin township, of $5,000. A deal was put on whereby Goreski was to buy land near Detroit which was to be subdivided at once. Goreski withdrew the money from the bank, and while counting it at the Goreski home, the slickers, it is claimed, substituted the cut papers for the bills in the envelope left with the farmer. Left with the "salted" envelope, Goreski was told to keep his "money" until the necessary papers were executed. His curiosity led him to open the envelope for another look at the money and then he discovered the substitution. Two Detroit men have been arrested charged with perpetrating the swindle.

Public Reception Honoring Teachers

All people interested in the teachers of the Cass City schools are asked to keep open the evening of Friday, Sept. 3. Under the auspices of the Parent-Teachers' Association, a public reception, honoring the teachers, will be held at the high school on that night.

Caro—On Saturday night, on the Kingston angling road about five miles east of Caro a small coupe and a touring car collided with disastrous results to both cars. In the touring car was Mrs. Albert Sepstuck and family of Dearborn. Mrs. Sepstuck was badly cut and bruised and was hurried to a Caro hospital. Although badly injured it is thought she will recover. None of the other members of her family were seriously hurt. The occupants of the coupe, thought to be from Detroit, disappeared immediately after the accident, leaving their wrecked car in the roadway on its side. A woman's lot of wearing apparel, musical instrument and kindred articles were among the debris when sheriff's officers arrived. The cars must have met with terrific impact, since they were forty paces apart and turned in opposite ditches after the crash.

Federal Officers Make Three Raids

Minnie Stinson, Otto Reiger, Cass Karpinski and Richard Evans of Pt. Austin, all indicted on a conspiracy charge for violating the prohibition law, paid $4,000 in fines in the district court at Bay City Friday. Minnie Stinson was fined $2,000, Reiger $1,000, Karpinski and Evans $500 each. They were released upon payment of the assessed sums.

Three were held to the grand jury at Bay City Monday night following their arraignment before the U. S. commissioner. William and Hazel Stokes, proprietors, of the Owendale hotel at Owendale, pleaded guilty to liquor charges against them and were held on $1,000 bonds, which each furnished. ## Robt. Adams Held Up in Detroit

Robert T. Adams, a member of the Class of 1919, Cass City High School, had the experience of many Detroiters in the last year in being relieved of his cash and jewelry while driving on the streets of the state metropolis. Saturday's Detroit News tells the story in the following paragraphs: Two fashionably-dressed youths swung jauntily aboard the new automobile in which Robert T. Adams, 25 years old, was taking his fiancée, Miss Marion E. Grier, for a ride last night at Collingwood and Petoskey avenues, flourished revolvers, ordered Miss Grier into the back seat and then forced Adams to drive on after taking a $50 watch and $12 in cash. Later they told the couple to get out, gave them 16 cents for carfare, and indicated they would leave the car at Pingree avenue and Twelfth street.

Adams is an attorney, living at 4359 Pingree avenue. He lost an arm in a boyhood hunting accident. Miss Grier is a teacher in the Oliver Wendell Holmes School. She lives at 4062 Vicksburg avenue.

"The bandits didn't know the district well, so I drove up every blind street I could think of to kill time, hoping we would meet a police scout car," said Adams. "When they ordered us out of the car they warned me not to squawk or they would 'get me,' as they said they belonged to a bad gang. If it hadn't been for the revolver I think I would have spanked them both."

It was at Kendall and Wildemere avenues that the bandits appeared to get their bearings and decided to put their victims out and drive on with the car.

In addition to the 16 cents for car fare, the bandits returned several checks and legal papers to Adams.

The bandits failed to leave the car at the appointed place, so Adams and Miss Grier were forced to ride home on the street car.

The fact that Adams had slowed up and was about to turn around when the bandits appeared, made it easy for them to hop on the running board.

Adams chuckled as he told of his attempt to find a police scout car. "They never suspected me," he said, "and they were so nervous that all I was afraid of was that the revolver would fire accidentally."

The Owendale hotel was raided Friday night by federal prohibition officers and a quantity of whiskey and about 30 bottles of Canadian beer were alleged to have been found by the officers. A soft drink saloon operated by Ornowski was raided the same night and a quantity of alleged moonshine whiskey was found. Officers also report the raiding of the Gagetown hotel a few night previous to the above raids and the arrest of Joseph Bowen and his bartender, Geo. Mullen, on a charge of violation of the prohibition law.

LARGE EXHIBITS IN LIVE STOCK DEPTS.

Cass City Fair Opened with Good-Sized Crowd on Wednesday.

The crowd on Wednesday, the second day of the Cass City Fair, was a larger one than the same day of last year, according to the estimate of fair officials, and gave the exhibition an encouraging opening.

While entries were not quite so numerous in the floral and agricultural halls as in 1925, the number of entries were greater in the live stock departments and some exceptionally fine animals are on exhibition. The exhibits of the boys' and girls' calf clubs are larger than last season and are attracting much attention.

Booths of merchandise displays in the floral hall have been placed by Zemke Bros., Michigan Electric Power Co., E. A. Corpron, N. Bigelow & Sons and G. A. Striffler. The Elkland Roller Mills have a merchandise display on the grounds as have G. A. Tindale, A. B. C. Sales and Service, and G. A. Striffler. In the agricultural hall are creditable agricultural display booths prepared by the Jolly Farmers Club, Roy Anthes and the Agricultural class at the school.

In the three races on Wednesday afternoon, 11 entries were made in the 2:24 named race, 9 in the 2:16 trot or pace and 7 in the farmers' run. This leads fair attendants to believe that there is an abundance of race horses and that Thursday's and Friday's events will also be closely contested.

The game between the Illinois Giants and Elktion proved a strong drawing card Wednesday afternoon. Elktion led the contest until the last inning when the Giants forged ahead winning by a 6-5 score. Grandstand acts and fireworks are claiming their usual attention and are proving to be a strong feature of the fair's entertainment program.

Paragraphs Concerning Michigan

(By Ed. Nowack).

O. B. Fuller, auditor general, points out that his office possesses records of the primary school fund from 1839 down to date. In 1881 the per capita of the fund for distribution to counties reached the $1 mark. In 1901 it reached the $2 and in 1924 the $14.00 mark, highest in history.

Eighty-one per cent of Michigan farmers own and operate their own farms—more than in Indiana, Illinois or Ohio.

Seventy-six per cent of Michigan families own and operate their own automobiles. That means there is one passenger car to every five men, women and children in the state compared to one for every seven persons in the nation as a whole.

There now are 563 teachers in Michigan on the annual pension rolls of the teachers' association who receive the maximum annuity of $500. Last year the total net income of the retirement fund which is made up of fixed assessments out of salaries, was $49,441.

Oscoda county, with 381 families boasts of 241 passenger cars and several trucks. Roscommon with 532 families has 358 cars. Montmorency, where Nels Farrier sells autos, has 895 families and 503 cars. Crawford, with 960 families boasts of 660 automobiles. Wayne with 258,245 families claims 204,537 cars.

There are 3,143 grocery stores in the lower peninsula outside of Detroit while all the state outside of Detroit has 760 drug stores.

The city of Grand Rapids boasts of 28,355 foreign born whites with less than two per cent of that total unable to read the English language.

Grand Rapids has in her population, 11,422 Dutch, 4,269 Poles, 2,837 Canadians, 2,433 Germans, 1,120 Lithuanians, 1,046 Russians, 883 Swedes, 628 English, 534 Austrians, 525 Italians.

In 20 years Flint has grown from a small town of 15,000 to the third city of the state. While the 1920 census shows 107,762, the estimated present population is 133,500.

Flint has 45 factories within her city limits that employ 40,000 persons. These plants have an annual output valued at $250,000,000. The average wage for males is $6.15 per day and for women $4.75.

Flint has a total of only 15,127 foreign born population or 16.5% of its total population. Canadians lead to the number of 4,960. There are 1,570 English, 1,470 Poles and 1,230 Austrians.

The city of Saginaw annually produces 45,000 tons of salt while her sugar factories produce 50,000 tons of sugar.

Mr. and Mrs. John Guinther and children of Redford and Miss Blanch Beach of Pontiac were visitors of Mr. and Mrs. B. Guinther Sunday.

FALSE FACES

BILL WITHERS and I—Bill lived across the road from us—had been reading "Bentley Burrows, or The Skeleton Hand," a tale of ghosts and bandits and general horror, continued from week to week in "The Saturday Night," a literary journal which our hired man bought every week at Cole's drug store in town. Shivering with fear, I was just finishing the last chapter in the dusk of a dull November evening, when I heard a knock at the door. I called "Come in," as was the polite custom in our community, and to my horror a real bandit entered—leather leggings, big revolver, bristling moustache, and all. I was frightened for a moment, and then I caught sight of a lock of curly red hair sticking out through a hole in the sombrero and a freckled ear protruding. It was only Bill Witherers wearing a false face and trying to fool me.

I have had the experience often since. I was at a party a few nights ago, where on the surface everything was hilarious. Through the dim light, however, I could see that all the fellows were wearing false faces. Above the din of the ragtime sounded out from the long-suffering piano I could detect the hollow unnatural voices issuing through the masks that the men were wearing.

I watched Mary Gay, rosy-cheeked and bright-eyed, and I thought I had never seen a happier and a more animated face. She was smiling on every one and showing a vivacity and an interest that held a pleased crowd about her. A few minutes later I came upon her unobserved as she was standing before the mirror in the hallway surreptitiously adjusting her false face.

I ran onto Jim Burton one Sunday this summer at church with his parents. He was looking pious, attentive, and altogether unsophisticated. As he leaned over to pick a hymn book from the floor I could see how crudely he had adjusted his false face, for underneath he was the same irreverent, irresponsible youth whom I had known at college.

The false faces which we wear or see every day seldom deceive anyone. They are like rouge or oleomargarine, or hair dye or face powder—no one ever thinks them real. We put them on to make ourselves beautiful or impressive to our teachers or our sweethearts or the tax collector or the home folks or the minister or our Creator, but more often than otherwise the lock of red hair escapes or the freckled ear sticks out and gives us away.

Sphinx Has Man's Face

The supposition that the head of the Sphinx was that of a female was dispelled by the discovery of fragments of a beard. Mr. Piazzzi Smyth says: "It is a man's face and had once a huge stone beard." When, through Count Cavaglia and Mr. Consul Salt, in 1817, the sand was cleared away in front, a part of this beard was found fallen between the paws of the lion figure.

Desserts for Foxes

On a fox farm near Los Angeles the animals seem to prefer fruit, especially oranges and apples. Foxes that are being raised for their pelts are fed a richer diet than the others and they are killed in December when their fur is at its best. The food given consists of bread and milk as a regular ration, with an occasional extra of eggs and raw meat with the fruit for dessert.

Named From Greek Letter

The name "delta" was given to a tract of land inclosed by the mouths of the Nile river, which was shaped like the Greek letter delta. Now the term is used for any land so situated.

Attractive and Well Arranged Home of Eight Rooms for Large Family

First Floor Plan.

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give ADVICE FREE OF COST on all problems pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on the subject. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

In spite of the vogue of small compact houses, there are still many families which require a rather large house, one which has a number of bedrooms and plenty of space for the large family. But even such a family wants as compact an arrangement as is possible in order that the care of the house may not involve too great an amount of labor and the construction cost may not be too great.

An unusual amount of space is available in this eight-room house, and it is conspicuously well arranged. There is an entrance from the grade-level porch directly into the living room, but a second entrance at one side opens into a reception and stair hall from a second and smaller porch. The living room and dining room extend across the front of the house. Back of these are service arrangements. These include the kitchen with a large serving pantry, separated from the dining room by a short hall, and the maid's room with separate bath. The latter rooms are also separated from the kitchen by another short hall in a most satisfactory manner.

In addition to a closet in the maid's room there is also a closet in the adjoining hall, a small closet off the kitchen, and a coat closet in the reception hall. Besides the large serving pantry there is a smaller pantry for the refrigerator off the kitchen, and of course a rear entrance through an entryway.

The stairs lead from the reception hall to a central hallway on the second floor. Here we find four full-sized bedrooms and two bathrooms. The provision of closets on this floor is most complete. Each of the three bedrooms has a large closet, while the fourth bedroom has two closets. This latter room is also provided with an attractive window seat and opens into one of the bathrooms. This bathroom may also be reached from the hall, and adjoining it is a large closet. At the other end of the hall is still another closet, while a linen closet is provided in the second bathroom.

Each of the bedrooms has windows on two sides and excellent cross ventilation is possible. While all are of good size, one is an exceptionally large bedroom, measuring 16 feet 11 inches by 22 feet 3 inches, and the second bathroom opens off this large bedroom.

A conspicuous and important feature of this home is the very complete electric wiring which has been provided. It is truly an electrical home, lights being provided at every desirable point even to those inside the closets. There are also convenience outlets to care for all the electrical appliances which are considered almost a necessity in the modern home and which do so much to relieve the labor of housekeeping.

In exterior appearance this home gives an impression of strength and permanence, not only because of the low foundation line and the roof lines, but also because of the solid pillars which support the porch roof. This roof is formed by the overhang of the second story, but heaviness is avoided by the use of the dormer on the second floor. In finish the walls are of stucco up to the second floor, and above they are of shingles laid wide to the weather.

The chimney, too, is of stucco finish as are also the porch pillars. Double hung windows have been used and the upper ones are equipped with shutters which add much to the general effect. With the background of trees and the well-planned planting of shrubbery, the whole effect has been enhanced, demonstrating the importance of the landscaping as the finishing touch to the well-planned home.

Flashings May Fail

Causing Much Trouble

Construction experts state that there is no more frequent cause of roof-failure than a rusty flashing. And yet one can easily avoid this expensive trouble by using sheet copper for this purpose.

By "flashing" is meant the sheet metal used on roofs at points where there are angles or valleys in which the roofing material comes in contact with the chimney, dormer windows, or other vertical projections through the roof.

Many are the times when, all unnoticed, a poor flashing material rusts and the resulting leakage causes costly damage to the interior of the house.

Concrete Forms

Spruce and Norway pine are acceptable for making forms for concrete and are reasonable in cost. For form work which requires great precision, such as window-sills and lintels and other pieces of ornamental concrete, white pine will be found the best lumber to use.

Good Roofing

Thousands of buildings go to ruin each year because of poor roofing. Many other buildings are saved for long terms of future service by re-roofing with slate and no inconsiderable amount of the roofing slate quarried is utilized for re-roofing purposes.

Slip-Proof Tile

Stair tile that is slip-proof should be used wherever hard service is called for or there is slip hazard. Thoughtlessness here may cause an unfortunate accident.

Koch's Great Discovery

The first physician to discover that tuberculosis diseases were caused by the existence of bacilli was Dr. Robert Koch, a German physician and bacteriologist. In 1890 he startled the world by announcing that he had found a remedy for the "white plague," but it was found that his "lymph" in its effect on the human body was worse than the disease.

The Sandman Story

Martha Martin

THE ELVES' PARTY

"COME to the ball," said Effie Elf. "We are giving a ball, we want every one to come."

And she went around asking all the friends of the Elves, and the friends of the Elves are many.

"You'll be sure to come, won't you, Fairy Princess Twilight-Bell?" she asked. And Fairy Princess Twilight-Bell accepted with much joy.

"You'll be sure to come, won't you, Fairy Princess Joy?" she asked. And Effie Elf invited Old Mr. Giant and Many Others.

Fairy Princess Joy said she wouldn't miss it for anything.

"You'll be sure to come, won't you, Fairy Ybab?" she asked. And Fairy Ybab said she would come and that the Fairies' orchestra would come, too.

"Then," said Fairy Ybab, "when the members of the Elves' orchestra want to dance we will play for them!"

And then Effie Elf asked the rest of the Fairies, and all of the Brownies, and Billie Brownie and his brother, Bennie, accepted for the whole family!

Effie Elf invited old Mr. Giant and Witty Witch and she invited Mr. Sun and Mr. Moon.

She invited the King of the Clouds and the Army of Raindrops and the Rainbow Brothers. She invited the Gnomes and Peter accepted for all of his family. She invited the Bogey family and the Oaf family and she invited the Cloud Fairies.

Some one asked her how she expected to have all of the guests come. It would not be possible to have the King of the Clouds and the Army of Raindrops and the Mist grandchildren and the Rainbow Brothers and the others all at the same time.

Effie Elf invited her guests to come in the afternoon and to remain until night. Some of the guests had other engagements and told her they could not stay all those hours, but they could stay for a while and that pleased Effie Elf.

Well, the party began. And all the guests came. The Fairies and the Brownies, the Gnomes and the members of the Bogey and Oaf families, Witty Witch and old Mr. Giant—every one of them appeared.

And then, all of a sudden it began to rain and then every one remembered that it had been said that the King of the Clouds and the Army of Raindrops and the Mist grandchildren had all been invited.

And how dark they made it and how they did pour down and what a splashing they made. But Effie Elf had called her guests to come within the great Elfland tent so they could look out from every side without getting wet.

Before long Mr. Sun appeared right while the King of the Clouds was coming down, and he called out:

"Hello, King, how are you?" It shows what a high-up creature Mr. Sun is that he feels entitled to speak to a king in such a fashion. And the King of the Clouds liked to be greeted in that way by so noble and high a creature as Mr. Sun.

And then appeared the Rainbow Brothers and Mother Rainbow looked over them. All the Rainbow children came, too, for Mother Rainbow always brings her children with her. They wore orange and green and pink and lavender.

Oh, then came the Cloud Fairies in fluffy white silvery costumes, and some wore sashes of yellow golden cloud silk which were very gorgeous.

Later Mr. Moon came peeping over a hill and Mr. Sun excused himself politely after a bit. But oh, such a gorgeous ball it was, and every guest came to it!

HOW

DANGER ZONE OF SNAKE HAS BEEN DETERMINED.

"The danger zone about a rattlesnake on a warm day in the open extends in all directions for a distance equal to the length of the snake." This statement is made by Joseph Dixon in Nature Magazine. With one exception, says Dixon, "I have not found a rattlesnake that could strike more than half its length unless coiled and ready to strike." The writer describes the exception referred to: "Upon being routed out the snake tried to escape into the open, but was headed off. He was a Pacific rattlesnake and this was on the floor of Kings River canyon. A moment later, when the snake was not coiled, but crawling along at a lively gait, my shadow happened to fall on the ground directly in front of the now thoroughly angry reptile. Without stopping to coil the snake doubled quickly back and struck so violently at my shadow that he reached out for nearly his entire length of slightly less than 30 inches. From where I was standing I could see, as did several others, that not more than four inches remained on the ground when it struck at my shadow."

How South Americans

Use Oxen in Packing

Oxen are used extensively for packing in Venezuela and Colombia. They are slow but sure and pack more than a heavy mule. An ox will navigate with a burden something near 400 pounds, as against 250 for a pack mule. They are also ridden in both countries. In Ecuador they raft live oxen, the process being as follows: They take a long dugout and lash poles across it and tie the horns of four oxen to the end of each pole until about 32 oxen are in place; then they catch the tide going down the river and get an early start. Men stand in the canoe and prod the oxen and with the current they do about 12 miles per hour, usually arriving at the slaughter-house at Guayaquil in the early afternoon, having done 80 to 100 miles.

They also bring them to the slaughter-house by small steamers from the coast ports. The way they are loaded is by slipping a noose around the horns and pulling Mr. Ox up by the neck and the way they are unloaded is by making them jump from the deck into the water and swim ashore. This is done at all the small ports of South America and in the river at Guayaquil.—Edgar Young, in Adventure Magazine.

How Radio Photos Come

Mr. C. Francis Jenkins, inventor of radio telephony, gives the following explanation of the making and developing of radio photographs: "At the London end radio signals are sent by means of a photo-electric cell which converts the light values of the photograph into electric current. This modulated electric current is then put on a radio carrier wave which is picked up in the United States. The incoming radio signals operate on an ink pen which puts dots of different sizes on a white piece of paper. The grouping of these dots, and the size of them, makes up the picture somewhat similar to the half-tone dots of the illustrations in the newspaper, which dots can easily be seen under a reading glass."

How Waves Are Measured

By means of a specially constructed camera, the exact length and height of ocean waves have at last been measured.

Ordinary waves are from 6 to 12 feet high. In a high sea they may rise to 27 feet, or in a violent gale to 36 feet. The length of the largest waves, from crest to crest, is said to be 900 feet, and it takes 20 seconds for one wave to replace another.

The tidal wave that followed the Lisbon earthquake of 1775 was 60 feet high, and a tidal wave off Peru once lifted a ship clean over a church and left it a mile inland.

How to Keep Brushes

A paint brush can be kept in perfect condition by placing it, when not in use, in a covered oil-tight tin containing enough raw linseed oil to cover the bristles. A slot is cut in the lid with a chisel to take the handle of the brush, and a nail inserted in a hole bored through the brush handle holds the brush suspended in the oil.—Popular Science Monthly.

How to Tell Basswood

Basswood can be distinguished from yellow poplar by the following characteristics: It is pale creamy brown in color, while the heartwood of yellow poplar usually is greenish yellowish brown in color. Basswood also has a characteristic odor, which is not pronounced, but it is easily recognized in whittling the wood, while yellow poplar is practically odorless.

How Hay Is Measured

Measuring hay in the barn depends somewhat upon the kind of hay, the depth of the hay and the length of time it has been stored. It is safe to count approximately 512 cubic feet for a short ton. This refers to hay that is well settled.

FARM POULTRY

BUILDINGS MUST BE COMFORTABLE

A poultry house which is dry, light, clean and free from drafts or sudden changes of temperature is essential for success with poultry. Hens must be comfortable if they are to be good producers.

It is not always the showy house that produces the best results. Conservatively built houses that provide comfortable quarters are often as good from a practical standpoint as more expensive houses. In fact, at the present time, the small house which can be moved from place to place is rapidly gaining in popularity on account of the benefits derived from moving the chickens to fresh ground in order to avoid diseases by germs that may be lurking in soil long occupied by poultry.

Poultry investigators agree that lack of vitality which has resulted in loss of birds when shipped is the indirect result of increased size of our flocks without a corresponding increase in housing facilities. This is another reason for added attention to poultry buildings.

From the standpoint of satisfactory returns poultry pays as well as any other class of live stock and no other live stock, unless it is the dairy stock, responds so readily to good housing conditions as does poultry. Good locations are essential in order to make good houses give results.

Poultry houses should be located conveniently to the other farm buildings and so that the chickens will range toward the house. If possible the ground should slope toward the south and face in that direction in order to give the birds the maximum amount of sunshine on short winter days. The house should be protected with a windbreak. If no natural windbreak is available some trees or shrubs should be planted to afford shelter.

A good many of the experiment stations have excellent bulletins in poultry-house construction. This is a good time of the year to build a house and get the benefit of it this winter.

Improper Feeding Will Cause Bowel Disorders

This is a time of the year when a good many bowel disorders come from improper feeding or from feeds that are not in first class condition. During warm weather it is very easy for some of the mixtures to spoil and if feeds of this type are fed to the chicks the results are usually diarrhea and sometimes death.

The commercial feeds of the large manufacturers are usually kept and sold under conditions which protect them from spoilage, but if large amounts are stored on the farm they should have a dry place.

Another danger at this season of the year is dead animals. Dead rats, mice, rabbits, and often chickens are allowed to lie where the chickens may pick at them. During hot weather such carcasses often develop ptomaine poisons with the result that a heavy loss of both chicks and mature fowls occur before the cause of the trouble is discovered.

Chicken Raisers Trying Canaries as Side Line

Chicken raisers and poultry fanciers in increasing numbers are interesting themselves in canary breeding. The man who raises chickens finds that he has enough spare time and experience on his hands to breed canaries, and the large profits in this business have attracted poultrymen in surprisingly large numbers.

One new reason for rising demand for canaries, according to the trade, is the fact that interior decoration methods now make such wide use of the bird cage in the average American home. That this is possible is due to the new type of cages, made of pyralin instead of brass, which come in a score of colors and soft, harmonious blends. Many are finished in the duco process. Tests are now being made to determine the amount of the favorable effect which such cages exercise on the canaries' singing.

Substitutes for Milk

There are several of the so-called milk substitutes on the market which are sold under various trade names. Good ones can also be mixed at home. One of the best home-mixed calf meals is the one known as the Purdue mixture. It consists of equal parts of hominy feed, linseed meal, red dog flour, and dried blood. This meal is mixed in the proportion of one part of the meal to seven parts of warm water and fed to the chicken flock in the form of a slop.

Moist Mash for Change

Sometimes it is advisable to feed a moist mash to the hens. Take the same mash that is ordinarily fed to the hens dry, and moisten it with buttermilk or sour milk until it is crumbly, not wet and sloppy, and they will relish it as a change. Hens appreciate a change in diet sometimes just the same as human beings do. In feeding moist mash, however, extra care is necessary and only as much of it should be fed as the hens will clean up quickly.

SIGNS OF DEPARTURE

FOR some reason or other a good many stories of financial disaster have for their heroes or their central characters colored persons. For instance, there is the time-honored yarn of the mulatto cashier who told a black depositor seeking to withdraw his funds "dat de intrust had done et up dat money!" And one likewise recalls the pathetic narrative of the ancient negro who, on being told by the state bank examiner that banks had busted before and that no doubt in the future banks would continue to bust, sorrowfully replied: "Yas, suh, I reckon you's right. But, boss, dis is de fust time I ever had one bust right in my face!"

I think of yet a third: An elderly person of color secured a job as janitor in a national bank. He put his savings on deposit in the institution, but after a few weeks withdrew the sum and transferred it to a rival bank across the street. News of this having reached the president's ears, he sent for the old man.

"Uncle Ike," he said, "of course your money is your own to do with as you please, but don't you think it looks peculiar for you to be working here for us and keeping your money somewhere else? What's the idea, anyhow?"

"Well, Mist' Blanchard," said Uncle Ike, "I's tuck notice dat you wears yore hat all de time you's in yore office. I ain't never seen you without you had yore hat clamped on yore head."

"What has my habit of wearing my hat constantly to do with the case?" asked the puzzled president.

"Mist' Blanchard," said Uncle Ike, "I ain't gwine tell you no lie. If you must know de truth, it's done made me uneasy. You looks so much lak a man dat's fixin' to go 'way somewhere in a hurry!"

THE WHY OF SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

MAGIC OF RAW SKINS

SIR WALTER SCOTT said that one of his earliest recollections was of lying on the floor of the grandfather's house wrapped in a bloody skin just stripped from a slaughtered sheep to cure his lameness. Sir Walter's people were of the border gentry related to the high Scottish nobility, educated and enlightened for their time, yet they apparently had full faith in this ancient piece of folk-medicine and looked for better results from its magic than from the learning of the medical faculty of Edinburgh who had been consulted concerning young Scott's affliction. And Edinburgh was then the very headquarters of medical knowledge.

It was about the time of the battle of Bunker Hill that Sir Walter lay wrapped in the freshly stripped sheepskin, but in some respects times have not altered so very much since that date. The warm and bloody sheepskin newly stripped is still considered in many parts both of this country and Europe as a sovereign cure for certain diseases. In different parts of the country different diseases are specified as the ones for which the fresh skin is to be applied. In one section they generally recommend it for inflammation of the bowels. There are kindred superstitions throughout the country with regard to fresh skins of other animals. In another section they cure chilblains by wrapping the feet in a "warm, bloody rabbit skin." This is nothing more or less than a survival of the primitive idea of disease transference. Modern science ascribes the transmission of disease to microbes; primitive man ascribed it to magic. Modern science conceives a transmission; Mr. Caveman went further and conceived a transference. Then since transference was possible why not transfer the disease to an animal or to the skin of an animal so newly stripped that it still retained the receptive qualities of the animal; in fact the magic of association of the animal itself?

And get a little rabbit skin To wrap the baby up in.

Titles Made Hereditary

The title "markgraf" or "margrave" was at first held only during the life of the incumbent. As these men became more independent and powerful their positions and titles became vested in the same line and they were established as a powerful hereditary order of nobility. This occurred about the Twelfth century. The margraves then acquired the rank of princes of the empire, between counts and dukes.

ONE RHINO, AND HE WAS FEEDING

By E. P. WARE

(© 1926, Western Newspaper Union.)

HENRY PARKER ceased pacing the floor of his small, dingy law office, and listened intently. Could those footsteps in the corridor be heralding the approach of a client? For six months, since hanging out his shingle, Henry had been expecting to see clients walk through his doorway; perhaps the person now approaching—

The flap on the outside of the door was raised, and a long, white envelope shot through the slot.

Only the postman!

"Nothing good ever came out of an envelope," grumbled Henry, savagely shaking a fist at the letter. "Lay there and rot, darn you!"

If the letter had obligingly rotted there would have been nothing further to record here. But it didn't. Henry's curiosity presently overcame his anger, and five minutes later he was reading the inclosure.

Typed on the letterhead of a firm of lawyers was the following information:

Henry Parker, Esq.,
Atty. at Law,
Warrentown, Mo.
Dear Sir:

By the terms of the will of your late cousin, Moses Abernathy, you are the sole heir to his estate. Mr. Abernathy, as you doubtless know, was the proprietor of a circus; that, as a matter of fact, formed his entire property. All debts have been discharged, in accordance with the instructions laid down in the will, and the residue will be turned over to you upon demand. The residue, as aforesaid, consists of one rhinoceros. The keeper, whom as agents we have retained, states that the animal is young, in good skin, and is feeding.

Arrangements for keep of the animal and his attendant have been made by us, in your name, of which we trust you will approve. Kindly advise at once.

Yours very truly,
COTTER AND BALL, Attys.

Not gracefully and by easy stages, as a well-bred person deposits himself in a chair, but pretty much as coal falls into a cellar, Henry sat down. For a long time he stared at the letter, trying to make himself believe that it was a joke; in bad taste, of course, but a joke. In moments of youthful indulgence, he recalled he had wished for many queer things; but never, at his wildest, had he ever desired a rhinoceros. Clients, a new suit of clothes, enough money to keep his landlady from actually ejecting him—those things he had even prayed for, but a rhinoceros—never!

And it was feeding! Running up food bills on him; at heaven alone knew how much per diem! And he, Henry Parker, with only nine dollars and sixty cents between himself and starvation!

There was Betty Noonan, too; the girl he hoped to marry when the clients should begin to stream in. What would she say to sharing their pretty bungalow—their dream one—with a rhinoceros? No doubt the beast was a ravenous feeder, and would eat him and Betty, if he ever succeeded in getting her, out of house and home.

"Feeding!" he muttered. "Eating his head off! So is the keeper. And I am paying the bills!"

The thought catapulted him toward the telephone. It was in Henry's mind to send off a message, with all the speed the telegraph company could put at his disposal, and the message would seriously interfere with the ration of one rhinoceros, young and in fine skin!

"Sorry. Having trouble on your line. We'll call you later."

Central's voice came faintly, and Henry hung up with a bang. If anything had been lacking to make him completely miserable, Central had furnished it. He looked at his watch. Four-fifteen, four-fifteen—

Why, he'd have time to catch the afternoon train! But he would have to hustle. Yes, that was the logical thing to do. When one wanted a thing done well, one had best be one's own agent.

"Maybe the thing can be killed, and—by jove! They make things out of rhinoceros hide; shoes and things! Maybe something can be gotten out of the brute's pelt. The feed bill, at least!"

He took hope out of the thought. Snatching up his hat, he dashed down the village street, reaching the depot just in time to swing aboard the last car of the train. He sat on the rear platform, panting, and speculating upon what he would do in case there should be some sort of law forbidding the slaughtering of the rhino. One needed a special permit in order to kill one's own horse, Henry knew. Suppose rhinos were likewise protected?

"Well," thought Henry, "in that case I'll just have to do the best I can—"

"What you doing here?"

Henry glanced over his shoulder, and became aware of two things he had not previously noticed. First, a tall, well-fed, middle-aged man was standing in the car doorway. Second, it was not the regulation slate-colored coach that he had boarded, but a flaming yellow one. Then some lettering on the end panels caught his eye, and communicated the following:

BELL BROTHERS CIRCUS
Advertising Car
No. 1

"You can't ride on this car," the tall man was saying. "It's against the rules of the railroad company."

"I don't want to ride on it!" exclaimed Henry. "I didn't even know I was on it."

The tall man withdrew inside the coach, partly closing the door and eyeing his passenger apprehensively.

"By jingo!" yelled Henry, suddenly getting to his feet. "You're a circus man! Say, how much does a rhinoceros eat?"

That was too much for the circus man. He closed the door almost entirely, leaving a very narrow crack through which he spoke soothingly.

"Never mind! Never mind! Don't excite yourself. I'll let you ride, only don't try to come inside."

"Say—," Henry began, then paused. This man took him for a lunatic! A pretty kettle of fish! Probably have him arrested at the first stop! A happy idea came to his aid. Drawing the unfortunate letter about his inheritance from a pocket, he thrust it through the crack in the doorway.

"Read that," he called. "Then maybe you'll understand my position—and my feelings!"

The letter was taken in gingerly, and the door remained closed for several minutes thereafter. Then the circus man, grinning, invited Henry in.

"What's all the excitement about?" he asked, motioning toward a chair.

"You appear to be the owner of the rhinoceros, in good skin, which means that he is a fine specimen. And, on top of that, he is feeding."

That word "feeding" electrified Henry.

"Feeding! Sure. That's what worries me. He's eating his head off, and I'm the meat ticket."

The tall man eyed him speculatively for a moment. A look of keen amusement came into his eyes. He took a pair of rich-looking cigars from his desk and extended one toward Henry.

"You don't know much about rhinos, I take it. Well, I am one of the Bells of Bell Brothers, and it so happens that I do know about 'em; a whole lot, in fact."

He paused and read the letter again. "Now, you seem to have a rhino, in good condition, that you don't want. Maybe you would sell it?"

"Sell it! Holy cats! Sure I'll sell—"

"Hold on, now," admonished Mr. Bell. "You want to get this thing straight. Lucky for you that you fell in with a big circus, one that can and will pay a fair price for what it wants. A rhinoceros, young man, is extremely hard to come by. They don't breed in captivity, so all specimens have to be brought overseas, at great cost and much risk. Hence they are high priced."

Henry sat up. "Huh! Is that a fact? Well, all that notwithstanding, what will you give me for mine?"

Mr. Bell, without answering, turned to his desk and spent two minutes writing on a blank form; then he addressed Henry, paper in hand.

"I have filled out an option here," he explained. "If the beast is young, in good shape and, as the letter reports, is feeding, I will take him off your hands when we arrive at our next stopping place. I will not pay you as much as I would have to pay an agent in New York to procure one for me, but I will pay a fair price—and the difference will represent the commission that a third party would have received. What do you say?"

"How much?" demanded Henry. Rhinos appeared to be somewhat in vogue, so to speak.

"All things being as represented, seven thousand dollars is the price I have in mind," said Mr. Bell, of Bell Brothers, pretty much as an ordinary person, one not versed in rhinos, would have said seven cents, or seven navy beans.

"You've bought!" exclaimed Henry, astounded and not even trying to hide it. He reached for the option and the proffered pen. "Say, by the way, what does that feeding business have to do with it, anyway?" he asked, pen poised above paper.

"When a rhino is feeding," Mr. Bell explained with a grin, "it means that he is reconciled to captivity—won't be any further trouble. He has given up hope of escape, and has gone to enjoying himself. If he is not feeding—look out. Chances are he won't be with you long."

Henry took a long breath. "Thanks," he said. "But, feeding or not feeding, this one ain't going to be with me long."

And he signed on the dotted line.

Bank Teller Wasn't Fooled

"They used to try all sorts of tricks on us in the older days," said a bank teller of 50 years ago. "I remember that a brisk and important little fellow came in one day and said: 'Friend of mine has just given me $50 in small bills. Let me have a 50 for them.' It is possible that I might have thrown the 50 to him after flipping over the end of the neat package with its white binder. But I didn't. I unpinned it and went through the lot, bill by bill. They were not neatly arranged under the binder. Some were upside down and when I went through them I found one of the fives was half there, and two of the twos were cut in two and made to do duty at both ends."

"Say, give me those bills," said the patron. "I'll find that fellow and smash him up!" And he grabbed the bills and rushed away at a great rate.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Ventilation and Good Lighting Important in Modern Dairy Barn

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all problems pertaining to the subject of building work on the farm, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on the subject. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

In building a dairy barn, if it is to serve its purpose in a satisfactory manner, careful consideration must be given to several points which are not immediately conspicuous in a superficial inspection. It is, of course, obvious that the building should be well and solidly built in order to resist the attacks of weather and the use of many years. It is now generally accepted that it should be fully equipped with the best of modern equipment to assist sanitation and reduce labor to a minimum.

The construction of a barn and its equipment is pretty well standardized. The usual form is rectangular with two rows of stalls along a central alley. The length will depend upon the number of cows to be handled. There is considerable disagreement upon whether or not the stalls should face toward the outer walls or toward the central alley, but there are good arguments on both sides of the question and very satisfactory barns have been built in both styles.

The barn illustrated here follows the plan of a central feed alley with stalls facing it from each side, and litter alleys back of each row of stalls. The equipment including stanchions, mangers, feed and litter carrier tracks and drainage gutters, follows the accepted practice.

Beyond these points however there are the problems of light and ventilation. This barn is conspicuous for its very full provision for daylight and sunlight. Both side walls are largely of glass as the windows are placed throughout the entire length as closely as construction will permit. This is a most desirable feature for plenty of sunlight is a great aid in maintaining sanitary condition and an essential in maintaining healthy, productive cows.

Ventilation is taken care of by a very complete system of ventilators such as have been produced by a thorough study of the problem of ventilation by experts in barn equipment. Plenty of clean fresh air is just as essential to sanitary conditions and healthy, productive cows as is ample sunlight.

There is another consideration, however, which neither the plan or photograph suggest and which is not so readily apparent in the inspection of the barn itself. This is the matter of insulation and it is of equal importance with any other point which has been mentioned. Barns are not, ordinarily, heated by artificial means, but solely by the animal heat. It, therefore, follows that the barn construction must be such that this heat will not be too rapidly dissipated.

This means insulation and its importance is particularly emphasized where large window area and an ample ventilating system tend to admit cold quite rapidly. Too cold quarters for cattle are just as bad as lack of sunshine and fresh air and chill and dampness may very easily cause a deadly epidemic of pneumonia.

It is important then, in building the barn, to see that it is not only built solidly to resist the wind and weather, but that the walls and more particularly the roof are so constructed as to reduce the heat loss to the minimum. There are being manufactured today a number of very satisfactory insulating materials ranging through a wide latitude of prices so that the barn builder may select just the one which is best adapted to his needs and to his financial resources. The use of some one of these insulating materials is worth its cost and is absolutely necessary to the colder climates of our more northern states.

Door Treatment Makes House Individuality

In European countries today, especially Great Britain, home-owners pay particular attention to their front doors.

So much variety of color and design is apparent in them that master painters often take their apprentices on Sunday afternoons on a "tour of the doorways."

As the main entrance to the house, the front door holds an important position. Considerable individuality may be expressed in its finish, or the whole aspect of the house may be sunk into one of mediocrity by painting the front door exactly as 49 other doors are painted, without considering whether the color scheme enhances or detracts from its architectural beauty.

The simplest way to treat a paneled door is to emphasize the panels with color contrasting with that of the frame. For instance, a blue trim, with panels of a strong warm gray, would be charming; also chocolate-brown panels with cream-colored interstices and frame.

Another interesting treatment is to paint the molding a contrasting color, or two colors. To illustrate: put dark moldings on white French casement doors; or add a red stripe to the dark brown molding where the door frame is green. Orange moldings are effective with a gray trim.

For Dutch half doors with large strap hinges, a blended treatment of brown and reds, with hinges painted black, is a suitable treatment. The intelligently individual doorway is an asset to any home.

Dining Alcove Popular Now in Small Homes

More and more, except in the larger homes, the dining-room, once one of the most important and carefully studied rooms in the house, is becoming less and less an essential.

In the smaller homes, the bungalows and cottages, the dining-room has been entirely displaced by the dining alcove. The space before devoted to the dining-room may become a library, an extra chamber, a sewing-room or a room for the children to play in. The dining alcove, however, should have plenty of natural or artificial light, or it is apt to become a dark and gloomy corner.

The kitchen, that necessity in every home of whatever size, should be so placed that the smoke and odors from the cooking foods are carried away from the rest of the house. Thus it would in most cases be at the northern end of the structure, where the prevailing winds of our climate will at least blow some of the odors away.

The kitchen may very happily be designed toward the front of the house, especially if the house faces north. There can be no possible objection to such a design. The service entrance may be at the side of the building, the drying-room and the service yard being inclosed with a lattice wall, a stone wall or a high hedge.

Thick Coat of Paint Protects Cellar Door

The exterior cellar door makes a most imperative bid for protection from the forces of decay. It is subject to very rigorous weather conditions from without, and to equally trying conditions from within. The atmosphere in the best-kept cellar fluctuates from cold and damp to warm and dry. Under these unusual conditions nothing but a thick coating of durable paint, properly applied, will prevent decay.

Keep Floors Beautiful

Beautiful floors are largely a matter of prevention—the great secret is to put them in perfect condition—and then keep them that way. Doorways, passages and tracks become worn and unsightly first. You can keep these spots looking well by waxing them frequently. This requires but little time and effort if a good quality of prepared wax and floor polishing brush are used.

POULTRY

RAISING CAPONS AND COCKERELS

With a view to obtaining definite figures showing the relative size and rate of growth of capons and cockerels, the author carried out experiments in 1919, at the Maryland agricultural experiment station. Forty-two White Plymouth Rock cockerels, all hatched on May 28 in the same incubator, were divided into two groups as nearly equal as possible, as regard health and vigor. On May 30, one of the groups were caponized. The two groups were kept entirely separate, and their gain in weight and the food they consumed were recorded.

Until October 1 both groups had access to poultry yards measuring 15 by 125 feet, and after that date they were confined to open-front houses 15 by 15 feet in size.

Until January 16 the following dry mash was fed to both groups ad libitum: Bran, 100 pounds, wheat middlings, 100 pounds, beef scrap, 30 pounds, bone meal, 5 pounds, salt, 1 pound. A mixture of white maize and wheat was also given as a scratch feed. From January 17, the following fattening ration was fed: Maize meal, 100 pounds, wheat middlings, 50 pounds, beef scrap, 20 pounds, lucerne meal, 30 pounds, salt, 1 pound, and in addition, wheat and yellow maize were given twice daily.

From May 23, 1919, to February 7, 1920, the average feed eaten (mash plus grain), by the capons and cockerels, respectively, was 63.25 pounds and 62 pounds, and the gains made were 6.66 pounds and 5.93 pounds.—R. H. Waite of Maryland State College of Agriculture.

Young Poultry Especially Susceptible to Disease

Turkeys, like other fowls, are subject to roup, but when the greater part of a half-grown flock dies there is a strong suspicion of something else than roup to be entertained, says the Rural New Yorker. Young poult are especially subject to blackhead and coccidiosis, two diseases which have made it almost impossible to raise any large number of turkeys on farms where good-sized flocks were formerly reared without trouble. These diseases show themselves by drooping, weakness in walking, gradual loss of flesh, more or less diarrhea, and finally death. They attack young poult from a few weeks of age until maturity. Usually a few survive out of any flock, but mature birds may also show these troubles and die after having become full grown.

There are two preventives that have gained some reputation in the treatment of these diseases, but nothing can be said to be anything like a certain cure. Powdered catechu may be given in the drinking water of the flock, one teaspoonful being added to each three gallons of water, this being done for three days at a time, with an interval of a day or two between the three-day periods. This is for coccidiosis. For blackhead, powdered ipecac, one teaspoonful in the mash for each twenty birds, old and young, may be given at intervals, beginning early. The symptoms of these two diseases are much alike.

Poultry Facts

The importance of strong, vigorous chicks cannot be overestimated.

One of the costs of running a poultry business is the death rate among laying stock.

Nothing is more discouraging than to start with a bunch of small, weak, puny chickens.

The poultry house need not be expensive or elaborate but must be roomy, well ventilated and convenient.

There are general rules for feeding, but sudden changes in weather, extreme cold or heat, or wind will make some change in the needs of the chickens. The age and breed of the laying flock also has its influence on feeding.

Some people cull their flocks quite successfully by selling those that are the last to leave the roost in the morning.

Blackhead is the most fatal turkey disease. Parasites causing it are carried by chickens, therefore keep the young "turks" and the chicks apart.

Male chicks grow faster than the females, and as early as two weeks of age there is a significant difference in the rate of growth between the sexes.

In order to lay well, a hen must have comfortable quarters. Hens may live and lay some, even when kept in a poor house, but a flock, kept in a good house and given good care, is much more likely to be profitable.

Fowls a year old, when properly prepared, make good roasters; taken from the general yard, they are tough and fit only for soup. Cockerels ten or twelve weeks old will, by special fattening and inactivity, become plump very quickly.

Some men are fortunate; they know exactly what they want the moment they see it. In this story a young man's consciousness had been filled for hours with the beauty of a woman's face, a face that he had seen but once for the duration of a dinner hour. But instantly this young man knew that one of life's greatest problems was solved. This was the girl. Somewhere, somehow, he was going to meet her. The working out of this resolution and the consequences that attended it, form the theme of this pleasing, typically Mac-grathian romance.

Obituary.

Lou V. Cooper was born at Augusta, Ontario, on August 14, 1850, and died Aug. 10, 1926. Her childhood and young womanhood were spent in Canada. She came to the states in 1877 and was married the following year to Robert O. Curtis. They settled in Novesta township, Tuscola Co., Mich., which was their permanent home. Here they labored together and made their struggles. Though providence left them childless, they were not without children, for they adopted two and cared for others all their days. The husband, Robert O. Curtis, passed away in 1921. The foster son, George, died 28 years ago. The remaining adopted child, Joshua, has always remained at home and with his wife and family occupy the old homestead. Hough of New York, Mrs. Elizabeth Ragsdale of Prescott, Ont., Samuel Cooper of Oxford, Ont., and James Cooper of Kingston, who are left mourning her departure. ## Cass City High School

Every boy or girl who passed the county eighth grade examination is cordially invited to attend the Cass City High School this coming year.

Courses are offered in College Preparatory, Agriculture and Home Economics and we expect to add a very strong commercial course when the new building pictured above is completed. The Cass City High School offers special advantages for students wishing to participate in debating, dramatics, athletics and orchestra. Numerous school societies provide valuable training. Added advantages are to be had in the splendid churches, the various lectures and gatherings which center in the community of Cass City.

The Cass City High School is on the University list and students graduating from here are admitted to the various colleges, universities and normal schools without examination. The Class of 1926 numbered 40 and the Freshman Class 89.

The total enrollment of the Cass City Schools is over 500. The high school alone has an enrollment of 208 which is an increase of 60 over the previous year. Greater interest is being shown each year by the non-resident students. Last year the number of non-resident high school students increased from 83 to 129. Careful attention is given each pupil in planning his course of study and in his work throughout the year. We have a physical director for students and a Dean for girls to look after their social welfare while attending school here.

Good roads make it possible for students to come from long distances. This year students living as far away as fourteen miles have driven back and forth daily to Cass City High School. Others living much farther away have been at home week-ends.

Provision is made at the school cafeteria for high school students to purchase lunches at cost, during the winter months.

Tuition is $75.00 per year. The home district must pay $60.00 of this per year if application for tuition has been made to the director of the home district.

Address inquiries to H. W. HOLMES, Superintendent.

THE AMERICAN LEGION

(Copy for This Department Supplied by the American Legion News Service.)

BOY SCOUT TROOPS IN LEGION POSTS

Plans calling for the sponsoring of a boy scout troop by each of the 10,000 American Legion posts of the nation, training of Legion scout masters to conduct the troops and the formation of a national Legion boy scout organization to expand further the Legion's co-operation with the Boy Scouts of America, were launched recently.

A national committee to carry out the plans is being formed with H. D. McBride of St. Louis, scout commissioner, as chairman.

The Legion's scout organization will consist of post, state, regional and national committees. Every Legion post will be encouraged to organize a boy scout troop. The committees will place definite emphasis on the camping out and outdoor activities of scouting. Where practicable, Legionnaires will attend scout training courses before assuming positions of active scout leadership.

Posts of the Legion will promote, provide or conduct permanent and temporary boy scout camps in every community, according to established standards. They will assist in organizing and conducting week-end hikes, rallies, athletic exhibitions and field events.

The Legion during the past three years has formed or sponsored 1,000 scout troops in the country.

"A special effort will be made to reach under-privileged boys, or those who ordinarily have no opportunity to join troops affiliated with churches, schools, etc.," declared Mr. McBride.

Millions of Dollars

for Disabled Veterans

Fifty-five thousand World war veterans and their dependents have received additional benefits approximating twenty-nine millions of dollars under the provisions of the Reed-Johnson bill, sponsored by the American Legion, and its amendments up to the beginning of the year 1926, according to advices from Legion service officials in Washington.

Approximately 80,000 of the 55,000 persons benefiting under the law had never before received compensation from the government in any form, and the others profited on account of increased payments.

Hundreds of thousands of cases that were lying untouched in the Veterans' bureau owing to the inadequacy of the law previous to the passage of the Reed-Johnson bill on June 7, 1924, are now being reviewed.

Veterans or their dependents have already benefited as follows: 12,000 tubercular veterans were awarded $13,000,000 in compensation; mentally incompetent veterans were compensated at a cost of $7,500,000; dependents of disabled veterans numbering 4,336 received $900,497 additional allowances and 12,344 dependents of dead veterans received increased allowances amounting to $1,154,280 for the care of 394 veterans and nearly a million dollars in compensation was awarded to 800 veterans suffering from so-called "willful misconduct" diseases.

Award Legion Medals to School Graduates

Grammar school boys of the nation who best exemplify the qualities of courage, scholarship, leadership, service and honor will be awarded American Legion medals upon graduation.

The national executive committee of the Legion has authorized posts throughout the nation to award the medals in connection with the Legion's national program of cultivating good citizenship.

The American Legion Auxiliary has authorized a medal to be presented to girls under conditions similar to those which govern the Legion award to boys. Posts may secure the Legion school medals through the Emblem division, national headquarters, Indianapolis, Ind.

Reasonable Explanation

A negro laborer had just fallen from the heights of a tall building being constructed. Head first and like a projectile he crashed downward and disappeared through an opening in the sidewalk connecting with the basement. The foreman rushed down, expecting to find a mangled corpse, but instead discovered Jazzbo reposing in a mass of waste paper.

"Man!" gasped the foreman, "how did you manage to escape being killed?"

"Boss, Ah dunno," groaned Jazzbo, rubbing his head. "Ceptin' dat cement sidewalk must of broke mah fall."

The American Legion Weekly.

Built an Airport

When it was pointed out that Boise, Idaho, needed an airport and the grounds for the port had been donated but no funds were available to build it, the local post of the American Legion said: "We'll build it." They did build it and now Boise's airport is receiving the fleets of the air.
