FAIR MEETS THE APPROVAL OF CROWDS

Live Stock Exhibit Exceptionally Good; Entertainment Program Enjoyed.

"A great fair!" "Fine!" "Was much pleased with exhibits and entertainment features." The unanimity of opinion of the thousands in attendance at the Cass City Fair is shown in the above expressions which are a few of the many favorable comments heard in praise of the exposition last week. Officers and directors are being congratulated over the success of the 1926 fair.

The weather up to Friday evening was very favorable. Wednesday's crowd was a surprise to officers and started out the fair encouragingly. Thursday's attendance during the day was below that of the same day last year, but the night crowd was a big one. A great number of farmers, delayed in their work by the rainy spell which prevailed about a week or ten days before the fair, were unable to leave their work during the day, but found it convenient to come to the fair at night and the night crowds on Wednesday and Thursday probably equaled the number of day visitors on these two days. Rain Friday evening caused the cancellation of the night program.

Exhibits in all departments were well displayed and of fine quality. The excellent showing of live stock probably caused the greatest number of complimentary remarks.

From a quality standpoint, it is conceded that the live stock showing of the Boys' and Girls' Pig and Calf clubs of the Cass City community is the best in the state. From club stock shown at the Cass City Fair last week, James Milligan's Aberdeen Angus steer and Grant Ball's Jersey have been selected to represent Cass City clubs at the State Fair. Chester White and Berkshire pigs to represent Tuscola county at the State Fair will be selected from Cass City club stock. Norman Carpenter's splendid two-year-old Holstein heifer won grand champion in club work in this community in a close class at the Cass City Fair. Lorine McGrath won first on her Chester White gilt in a class of 26. Ivan Hamilton was awarded 1st place on Duroc gilts and Clarence Bullock 1st on Berkshires. Grant Ball won grand champion female in the Jersey class. James McTavish won $5.00 as the best experienced showman and Ralph Rawson was first among the inexperienced showmen. Other prize winners will be announced later.

The special free acts at the fair were well received and the fireworks were as popular as ever with the night crowds. The Bay City Industrial Band furnished good music for the afternoons and evenings.

That fair patrons are as much interested, if not more so, in stunts put on by folks they know in this community as they are in high-priced talent in the platform acts was proven by the attention given and the applause which greeted participants in the team pulling contests and the boys' diving contest. The latter conducted by Miss Bench Bentum, high diver, on Thursday afternoon had eight participants and provided lots of fun for all.

In the hauling contest of light weight teams on Wednesday afternoon, 1st prize of $30 went to Wm. Simmons of Gagetown, 2nd prize of $20 to Frank Hutchinson of Cass City, and 3rd prize of $10 to Jacob Spencer of Cass City. On Friday afternoon, in the contest for heavy weight teams similar prizes were awarded. First was won by John Franzel of Argyle, second by Jacob Spencer of Cass City and third by Robt. Gallagher of Cass City.

EDSEL FORD'S PROTEGE TO GIVE CONCERT HERE

Miss Emily Mutter and Miss Gwendolyn Wilson Will Give Joint Program.

Many local and out of town music lovers are looking forward with keen expectations to the opportunity of hearing Miss Emily Mutter and Miss Gwendolyn Wilson on Thursday, September 9, at the Presbyterian church at eight o'clock in the evening.

These two young women are just completing a 12 weeks' engagement at the Pointe aux Barques club house where they give an hour's concert every evening.

Miss Mutter, who is but 13 years old, has been pronounced by prominent musicians one of the foremost violinists in America. Professor Stock of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra said, "She is the most wonderful child I have ever heard." Cass City needs no introduction to Miss Wilson, who has so generously and ably given her talent for local entertainment. Miss Angeline Wilson will give a group of songs, which will be greatly appreciated by the audience. Miss Wilson has been with the Redpath Chautauqua traveling through the southern states.

Edsel Ford, who has helped educate Miss Mutter, also presented her with the $4,000 Stradivarius violin which she so wonderfully uses.

The women who are sponsoring this concert, feel that it will be a real treat for the whole community, and music pupils will no doubt find it especially so.

Sanilac Co. Teachers' Meeting Sept. 4

W. J. Musselman, commissioner of schools of Sanilac county, announces the first teachers' meeting of the year will be held at Sandusky on Saturday, Sept. 4, with sessions both in the morning and afternoon.

The morning session, from ten to twelve o'clock, will be for the beginners in the teaching profession. The afternoon session, from two to four o'clock, will be for all teachers.

The speakers for both sessions will be W. D. Hill, of Lansing, the man who worked out the new school law. All teachers should therefore be present and find out their work for the coming year under the new law. H. Z. Wilber, of Ypsilanti, head of the extension department, will speak in the afternoon and make arrangements for an extension course next winter. Other speakers will discuss matters essential to the success of school teachers and their profession.

Death Takes Aged Resident

Miss Grace Cole passed away at the home of her nephew, J. A. Cole, on Monday afternoon.

Miss Cole was born in Ontario on November 26, 1840. Five years ago she and her sister came to make their home with Mr. and Mrs. Cole. The sister passed away at the Cole home in July, 1925. Miss Cole is the last member of that particular Cole family. She was an active and faithful worker in the Methodist church as long as she was able to attend.

Funeral services were held Wednesday afternoon at two o'clock at the Cole residence, Rev. W. W. Edwards officiating. Burial was in Elkland cemetery.

FARM BUREAU MEET WEDNESDAY

Michigan Changed from Agricultural to Industrial State in Past 25 Years.

The legislative rally under the supervision of the Farm Bureau at the opera house, Wednesday afternoon was not largely attended, probably due to the fact that the majority of the farmers are very busy, weather conditions in the Thumb having contributed to delays in farm work.

The meeting was representative of three counties, Tuscola, Huron and Sanilac, and was one of 20 meetings held in the state during a 10-day period. Earl C. McCarty of Bad Axe acted as chairman and extended greetings to the assemblage and introduced the speakers of the day.

Stanley Powell, legislative representative of the State Farm Bureau at Lansing, was the first speaker. He urged the importance of the farmer being informed about legislation concerning agriculture. He cited that banks and railroads; in fact, all other industries are posted on legislation, and stated that since 1920 the Farm Bureau has had a representative at Lansing during sessions of the legislature. He suggested that in order that all members of the bureau might be better informed on legislative affairs, that a committee of five "minute men" be appointed in each township throughout the state. This committee is to be composed of three men and two women. He stated that Michigan had changed from an agricultural to an industrial state in the past 25 years. In closing, he urged

The children enjoyed a large swing and hammocks, and bathing was included in the day's sports. An elaborate repast was served at noon under large oak trees. A short program of music closed the affair, and plans for a future meeting were made.

Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Louis Sherwood and family of Elizabeth Lake, Mr. and Mrs. Clare Smith, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. McCain and family, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Van Orden, Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus Pugh and family, all of Pontiac, Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Doyle and family of Sylvan Lake, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Wilcox of Port Huron, Mrs. C. L. Auto Races at Saginaw Sept. 6

Labor Day has been selected for the fourth annual 100 lap auto race that will be run off on the fast, dustless Saginaw Speedway. Sanctioned by the A. A. A. the first time a long distance race has ever been run under these rules in that city, the Labor Day classic gives promise of surpassing any motor race that has ever taken place in this state. Battling for the Michigan A. A. A. championship and a large prize list, the pilots are expected to show record breaking speed in the qualifying rounds as well as endangering all marks from 1 to 50 miles. Only drivers who have won points in the Michigan A. A. A. points table will be eligible to compete there Labor Day, indicating that the race will show not only the best drivers in that section, but will undoubtedly produce the keenest competition of any dirt track race staged in this state. A dozen or more cars are likely to be nominated with the fastest seven qualifying to face the starter. Interest in this year's event indicates that a record crowd will witness the premier dirt track event of the season with the Michigan A. A. A. championships at stake. Officials in charge of the race are leaving nothing undone to make this year's battle the greatest ever staged here.

Fifth Annual Palmtree Reunion

The fifth annual reunion of the Palmtree family was held at the farm home of Mr. and Mrs. Claude Shaw of Decker on August 21. Relatives were present from Spencerport, Hilton and Rochester, New York, Ft. Huron, Fargo, Avoca, Yale, Highland Park, Flint, Ann Arbor, Gaylord, Oscoda, Deford and Cass City. There were 97 members present.

Pot luck dinner was served on the lawn, after which the business meeting took place. Mrs. Jennie Dunbar was chosen president, Ambrose Hawley treasurer, and Mrs. Dorothy Clancy secretary.

Many games were enjoyed. The peanut and candy hunt proved to be real sport for the children, and a base ball game was played between the Stars and Hustlers, with Roy C. Colwell and Ambrose Hawley as captains. The Hustlers won by a small margin. The tug-of-war was also easily won by the Hustlers.

Cameras were busy throughout the day, "shootings" at various subjects, among the most interesting of which was the oldest member present, accompanied by the youngest member. The oldest was Fred Wilcox of Port Huron, 66 years of age, who when requested to do so, demonstrated his youth by standing on his head. The youngest was Pearl A. Colwell of Gaylord, nine months of age. Late in the afternoon, ice cream and cake were served.

The next reunion is to be held at the home of Mrs. Jennie Dunbar in Hilton, New York.

Local Merchant Friend of Valentino

Not many persons in Michigan villages have the distinction of knowing personally the much loved movie "sheik," Rudolph Valentino, who passed away in New York Monday, Aug. 23, after a brief illness. Alfred Fort, our local fruit dealer, was a boyhood friend and playmate of Valentino in Castellana, Italy, living within a block of his home.

As boys they played together every day, one of the favorite pastimes of the youngsters of the neighborhood being a game they called "graveyard." The corpses for the funeral occasions were lizards, which were plentiful at that time in Castellana. Mr. Fort has not seen Mr. Valentino since he was about 14 years of age, but had expected to go to Detroit this week to see him and renew their friendship. His disappointment is keen because of the passing of his friend.

CHAPTER I

Brandon Cathews.

Once upon a time there lay at Liverpool a great and seemingly ship. A young man, sartorially correct from his tan shoes to the Panama on his perfectly modeled head, looked over his rail. Suddenly he became conscious of the odor of violets. It came from behind; so he turned his head.

Supposing your consciousness had been filled for hours with the beauty of a woman's face. Say that you had seen it, but once for the duration of a dinner hour, at a table half way across the huge dining-room of the Savoy, and you knew that you would never forget it.

Supposing you had built an airy romance during that hour; an adventure wherein you rescued her from an unknown danger, fell in love with her and married her. Supposing you had been all alone in a mighty London that night, with no place to go, with a heart which was heavy with bitterness because fate had dealt you marked cards in the game of life, and cheated you abominably. And then, by a mere twist of the head, to see that face again, but three spans away from yours!

Some men are fortunate; they know exactly what they want the moment they see it. Instantly this young man knew that one of life's great problems was solved. This was The Girl. Somewhere, somehow, he was going to meet her.

She was lovely. That was the word. He knew that lovely was a universe all by itself; for it embodied beauty and intellect, valor and tenderness, youth and purity.

The westerner sun was in her eyes; thus, she was unconscious of the amazed scrutiny of the young man in front. She saw only a nebulous shadow. Immediately he called her the girl with the golden eyes.

This, however, was only a flight of poetical fancy. As a matter of fact, her eyes were intensely blue; but shooting out from the pupil to the rim of the iris were fine little threads of gold such as one sees in lapis lazuli.

The young man had no plan regarding his future procedure; he would need an hour or two of solitude for the formation of this. He was going to marry her in the end; that much was definitely settled. That she might have her own views on the subject was of no vital importance.

He hurried off to his first-class cabin, stowed his luggage, changed linen; then, a straw suitcase under his arm, took up his quarters in the steerage.

For he had work to do, serious work. He could have lived like the other first-class passengers, in idleness and luxury; but he was always in earnest, whether he played or worked, as will be seen.

For six days he was determined to live among the steerage passengers. To acquire the material he needed necessitated contact, not casual observation.

That night as he leaned against the rail—a thousand ineffectual plans having been scrutinized and rejected—he permitted a whimsical idea to enter his head. He raised his face toward the summer moon and laughed.

Why not? To approach the affair from a novel and unexpected angle; no winding in and out, no foreground to traverse with hesitant step. To take the plunge without bothering to feel the water with his fingers. The idea appealed to all that was romantic in him.

Her name was Elizabeth Mansfield, and they probably called her Betty. She was also the daughter of Dunleigh Mansfield. That put a double wall around her, millions and social prestige; tremendous obstacles which should have frightened him and chilled his ardor, whereas they but filled him with elation.

This young man was a crusader, with an ideal quite as lofty as that of Peter the Hermit and Walter the Penniless. He did not sail forth joyously with chanting and banners; he would not have gone forth at all but for the white honesty of his soul. He had inherited this obligation; it had been thrust upon him without asking his leave. He was a Crusader by force of circumstance.

As he climbed into his bunk there was but one idea in his head—to carry the outpost, her father, by storm. Two things were possible; either Mansfield would listen or he would call for a deck steward. Anyhow, to put it to the touch!

Dunleigh Mansfield might have passed for an elderly beau in a Pinero drama; a fine, courtly figure of a man.

"I Am Mr. Mansfield."

with a cold, hawklike countenance, quite handsome, with scarcely a gray hair in his head, though he was fifty. He was standing alone, that sunny morning, in the corner where the cross-rail joins the port.

"Mr. Mansfield?"

The iron magnate turned. He saw a hatless young man in a white cotton shirt, open at the throat, shiny blue serge trousers that bagged at the knees, and a pair of soiled tennis shoes.

"I am Mr. Mansfield"—coldly.

"I wish the honor of paying court to your daughter."

Mansfield was not quite sure he had heard aright. "I beg your pardon?"

The young man repeated his astounding request.

Stormy words burned the tip of Mansfield's tongue, but he pressed them back because the face he looked into was quite as handsome and hawklike as his own. Human faces were Dunleigh Mansfield's books. He recognized this type; the brow and eye of a dreamer, the nose and jaw of a fighting man.

But Betty?—he asked the honor to pay court to Betty? The infernal impudence! The thing was to get rid of the boulder without creating a scene.

"You don't look insane, young man. Are you offering me a pleasant?"

"No, Mr. Mansfield. I was never more serious."

"You have perhaps met me somewhere, and I have forgotten?"

"I have never met you before."

INDIAN PIPE FLOWERS

"CHILDREN love us," said one of the members of the Indian Pipe family to Fairy Ybab.

Fairy Ybab had gone out into the woods to practice some new music which she was going to teach to the members of the Fairies' orchestra. She had been singing the tunes to herself as she made them up, trying them over and over again to see where she could make improvements. Then she had stopped to speak to the group of Indian Pipes which she had seen.

Stopped to Speak to the Group of Indian Pipes.

"Yes," the Indian Pipe continued, "we are so different, so unusual, and children like us and they like our interesting name."

"We are fond of the family name ourselves. It's a nice name for a group of plants, we think. It has always been the family name, too. We have lived in these woods many years. And when I say that, you know, I mean our family has lived here. Oh, yes, my great-great-grandmother and grandfather used to see Indians coming quietly through the woods. Oh, how quietly they could walk, scarcely rustling the leaves as they moved along."

"We children have been told of all that. And such excitement as there used to be in those old days. Such excitement! You see, we're all brave plants or flowers, or whatever you would call us. Oh, yes! We don't hang onto each other. We don't cling as vines do. Vines haven't half the strength of character we have, though vines have their own sweet, lovely ways.

"I don't want to say anything against vines. Vines are so good about giving shade and they make porches so pretty, and they do a great deal to aid in making the world lovelier than ever. Anything or any number of things doing that should never be criticized. But you see how we are! We're different, that's all."

"We are all solitary, single, alone. Each one of use flowers is by itself. You know how some flowers are clustered together—many little flowers in one group. But each of us has just one flower, standing all by itself."

"You see, too, how we haven't even any leaves with which to shield ourselves. You can always tell us when you see us, for we are so unlike any other plants or ferns. Usually a number of us make our home around a certain part of the woods. We dearly love the woods, and in the woods you should look if you want to find us."

"Yes, each one is by itself. Each one has its own stem, and each one has just one white flower hanging over its stem."

"Many other flowers grow together on a single stem—lots of them to one stem. And we're all white! You'll find no green leaves about us, nor any green or brown stem. Our flowers have little black spots about them, and when the bud of a flower is closed it looks dark at the top. We're brittle, something like some kinds of candy, easy to break off."

"But we're not good to eat. I suppose people thought we looked like an Indian's pipe and so that was why we were named his name. We do look something like a white pipe, it is true."

"Of course we're white, and Indians are always called red men. But if we were just like Indians we wouldn't be called anything else but Indians. We're flowers with many of the same ways as those thrilling red men. And we look like pipes. Oh, we're very proud of the family name!"

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS
By H. IRVING KING

SHOE ON, SHOE OFF

IN SOME sections of the country they say that it is "bad luck" when putting on your shoes and stockings to completely dress one foot before beginning on the other. But in most places the superstition is that bad luck is brought on by having the left foot shod and the right foot bare; though there is a feeling among the superstitious that having one foot shod and one not, should, without reference to right or left, be avoided on general principles, even though right bare and left shod is the most orthodox form of the superstition.

The custom of having one foot bare and one shod at solemn or critical times existed from the dawn of history and many learned men have disputed over its significance. The fighting races of antiquity went, many of them, thus, to battle. The oracle warned Pallas, king of Ioclus, to beware of the man with his left foot shod and his right foot bare and when Jason appeared thus attired Ioclus knew that the "jig was up." On an ancient Greek vase is a picture of a man with his bare right foot on a sacrificial victim, his left foot shod and on the ground. When Dido was deserted by Aeneas and prepared her funeral pyre she appealed "to the gods and the stars" with her dress and hair loosened, one foot bare and one shod.

Professor Frazer of Cambridge thinks the explanation is to be sought in the belief in the magic virtue of knots, which tied sandals—as they now tie shoes—to the feet; and the learned Roman, Servius, in his commentary on Virgil, says that Dido went with one shoe off and one on in order that Aeneas might be entangled and herself released. But whatever the explanation it was practiced only at times of peril or distress and it is that fact which has brought it down to our own day as a "bad luck" omen.

By Rose Fulkerson

"WHO'S the cookie-pusher?" asked the House Detective.

"That's Marie Platt's husband," answered the Hotel Stenographer. "He worried her all one winter to marry him and she did it to get rid of him and it worked perfectly. She rarely ever sees him now. He only comes home to change his clothes and kick about the way the laundry mangles his shirts."

"He is a ham actor who cannot get an engagement on the road and so he goes out as an entertainer at club smokers and things and makes almost twenty bucks a week. With what Marie makes as a manicure they get along right nice from his point of view and punk from hers."

"When a man wants anything he is never happy till he gets it and then when he has it he doesn't care anything about it. His whole life is an affirmative argument that there is more pleasure in the pursuit of happiness than in the possession of it. This goes for a polo coat, a wife, a knowledge of the King Tut step in the fox trot or little side whiskers."

"That guy would rather be a 'ham actor and sing an old song, dance a few steps and get some applause from his friends than have a steady job as a plasterer and make 60 bucks a week."

"Marie has a nice little life she bought her on installments, most of which she had to pay, and she is mighty impressive when she tells her customers that her husband is an actor and away most of the time, so she works just to fill in the time. But I never saw her lonely."

"Kelly, the boy I marry has to be such a snuggle pup that he can barely leave me long enough to go to work. All the dancing he does he's got to do with me, and all the applauding must come from my lily-white hands. I want a husband of my own, not one who belongs to the public."

Play, but No School

The little boy was playing around the schoolyard during school hours. "What's the matter? Why don't you go to school?" asked a passer by.

"Why, you see," and the boy coughed violently, "you see I have the whooping cough and they don't want me in school for fear I'll give it to some other children."

"Well, what are you waiting here for?" persisted the passer by.

"I'm just waiting for 'em to come out at recess time so I can play with 'em a little while," replied the boy, wondering why the passer by exclaimed: "Well, of all things!"—Springfield Union.

The Man With Three Names

By
Harold MacGrath

WNU Service

Starting out to win a girl by making an enemy of her father, and adopting a further course that was calculated not only to injure her fortune but bring disgrace on her family, was a queer proceeding for a young man, very much in love, to take. But it was an unusual case and the young man was an unusual character. The game was a big one and required method, not only original but extremely daring. Win or lose, it was necessary to stake everything on a single, bold throw; a course of action that only the optimism of youth backed by self-confidence and a nimble brain would have undertaken. The interesting results, some of them quite unexpected, form the basis of an absorbing narrative of love, mystery and human qualities.

Harold MacGrath.

Here we have the story of one of those singular individuals who combine the characteristics of dreamer and man of action, the stuff of which crusaders, explorers and great reformers are made. The story is a general style and charm, and is a happy blend of the two. Mr. MacGrath who was born in Syracuse, N. Y., and stuck resolutely by the old home town to become one of its most distinguished citizens, has been connected with literature and journalism since 1890. During the years he has delighted the American public with a vast number of stories and novels. He had the good fortune to make a hit with one of his early novels, "The Man on the Box." This story lent itself so readily to dramatization that it had a long run as a play and is occasionally revived for that form of entertainment. It has also been adapted very successfully to the movie screen. Quite a number of his later novels have also been made into plays and movies. His plots are ingenious and agreeable, his humor of a highly entertaining quality and his style always graceful. His following is so large and so loyal that a new story by him is always assured a grateful reception.

"You have met my daughter, then?" "I have only seen her twice."

"Ah!" said Mansfield, as if this information cleared the air considerably. This was some kind of a joke, possibly a fool wager. Why not temporize and find out what lay behind this weird encounter?

"You might tell me something about yourself, before we proceed," he suggested.

The young man sensed the irony, the mockery. Two little points of fire appeared in his eyes.

"I am called Brandon Cathewe. By profession I am a writer." He hesitated for a moment. "I have a little money."

"A writer—with a little money. I should say that that was quite fortunate."

Suddenly there leaped into Mansfield's cold brain an idea, savage and ironic. Later he and Betty would have a hearty laugh over this idea. The impulsive bouncer!

"Brandon Cathewe," he mused. "That has an Irish lilt. So you wish to pay court to my daughter—object, matrimony?"

"With your permission."

"It is needless to ask if you are in love with my daughter."

"Quite needless, I am."

"The result of one meeting?"

"I have a happy faculty of knowing what I want."

"And of getting it?"—mockingly.

"Not always, to be sure, but generally. No doubt it sounds ridiculous to you; but the two times I have seen your daughter convince me that she is the one woman. Her beauty is the least of her."

An odd statement, thought Mansfield. "You have heard of the city of Bannister?"

"Very few people in America have not."

"Very good. I grant you permission to pay court to my daughter—conditionally. I'll waive my right to inquire about your family and your bank accounts. My terms are, Go to Bannister and make good; then come to me. I will introduce you personally to my daughter, provided she is not married by that time. Until you make good, you are not to seek to meet her. She is not to know that such a person as—Brandon Cathewe exists. I don't mean just making some money. By making good, I mean that you must become a force in Bannister. On the other hand, I am not going to keep my daughter locked up until you arrive. Those are the conditions," concluded Mansfield, very well pleased with himself.

"And I accept?"

"You—what?"

"Accept! But on your part you must agree to give me fair play."

"Fair play?" Why, the bouncer did not see the joke! "What do you mean by fair play?"

"You will say nothing to your daughter of this interview. I have come to you frankly and honorably, and I ask you measure for measure. If my conduct—my approach—seems outlandish, bizarre, it is because I am not afraid to ask for something I desire. I love your daughter, crazy as the statement may seem. I'm no fool. Your first impulse was to throw me over the rail. Being a gentleman, you reconsidered. You would punish my impertinence by placing insurmountable obstacles in front of me. I have accepted these conditions. If I fail, you will never hear of me. Good morning!"

The young man seized the companion-ladder rails and swung himself to the main deck without touching the steps. Immediately he disappeared.

CHAPTER II

Lord of Polygon Hill.

Across the shining threads of steel—the railway yard—a man ran lightly, with the sure foot of the athlete. He wore a blue checkered mackinaw and a woolen cap pulled down over his ears. Behind lay a sinister outline; giant furnace doors opening and closing, blinding rivulets of molten metal. Men, with the aspect of demons, flitted past these luminous backgrounds. Beyond the runner stood rows of forlorn tenements, evidently his objective. He was in a hurry. At any moment a mile-long freight might cut him off. When at length he leaped across the last rail he was fairly well spent.

At the curb—to be precise, the ditch—in front of one of the tenements, before which ran a crumbling far walk, stood a two-seated runabout, rusty and battered, but as faithful as a mongrel dog.

In the city of Bannister this ramshackle vehicle was as familiar to the sight as the police-van and the fire engines. You were quite as likely to see it reposing impudently before some handsome mansion on Polygon Hill as here in Poverty row, where, in truth, it seemed more at home.

The man in the mackinaw pushed his way into the hall of the tenement, climbed four gloomy flights of stairs and entered a forlorn room. In a window a newspaper served as a pane of glass. The surviving panes were dim with cobwebs.

At the side of a dilapidated iron bed sat a man in a fur-lined overcoat. He was Dr. Maddox, hale and hearty at sixty, white of hair and ruddy of countenance.

On the bed, under a tattered sheet, there was a body, sinistinely rigid in outline.

"Dead?" asked the man in the mackinaw.

"Yes, son. He was dead when I got back from telephoning you."

"I came as fast as I could. How did it happen?"

"He was old and slow, and got in the way of a swinging crane. There wasn't a whole bone in his body."

"Could he talk?"

"He mumbled something about the seventh plank from the west wall, naming you. What's your interest in him? He wasn't a Bannister man."

"Human."

The young man walked over to the west wall, counted off six planks in the floor, and pried back the seventh.

From the cavity he extracted a bundle of papers. "Doctor, do you know what doubled Mansfield's fortune after the war began?"

"What?"

"Those barb-wire machines. The dead man on the bed there was the inventor. These papers are the documents in the case. Is there nothing sinister in the fact that he lies there dead? Why should he be doing manual labor at three dollars a day, working at a kind of charity job, when he should have had all the comforts of life? Think of that! Eighteen dollars a week, with the music of his own creation in his ears, day after day, and another man taking all the profits!"

"You mean he was cheated and robbed?"

"Legally, no; morally, yes!"

"Brandon, have you anything personally against Dunleith Mansfield?"

"I asked the doctor."

"I hadn't when I came here to take charge of the Herald," answered Cathewe, as we know the man in the mackinaw. "I came to Bannister upon an almost unbelievable adventure. Some day I may tell you about that. No; at the start I had nothing against Mansfield. But for three years I've done nothing but stumble over cases like this; mean and contemptible, cold-blooded, but always within the law. What's the object in piling up more gold? He can't count his millions. He doesn't need money, and yet he robs a man like this!"

"What are you going to do—print this story?" asked the doctor, indicating the poor, broken thing on the bed.

"Yes! I've known all along what kind of a man Mansfield was. But I dared not attack him until I'd made the paper go. Now I can start the guns. Before I'm through I promise to render Mansfield impotent for future harm. I have facts, facts! My audience has learned to trust me; and they'll believe the Herald. I am going to protect these poor human beings who don't know how to fight for their rights."

"He will break you. What can you do against his tremendous power, which reaches from here to Washington?"

"I can speak the truth and back it up with incontrovertible facts."

"Mansfield has a daughter who believes him to be a demigod—as mine believes me to be."

"Ah, but you are one! Nancy Maddox has a right to believe that. But Mansfield's daughter! What is she but an inconsequent butterfly?"

"She is young. In judging her you may be a little hasty. Nancy, who is visiting her in Washington, says she is lovely and lovable."

"I was wondering what had become of Nancy. Miss Mansfield will improve. She can't help it, and be with Nancy Maddox."

The doctor's eyes sparkled. If only this odd, clean boy and his Nancy might fall in love with each other!

"Doctor, what would you say if I told you I was a man with three names?" asked Cathewe as they left the house.

"What? Three names?"

"Yes. My own and two others."

"What's the joke, son?"

For a block Cathewe remained silent. "After all, a doctor is like a priest—the repository of secrets. One more don't hurt you. I am going to talk to you as to the family physician."

"It is nothing I ought not to know?"

"I am not a fugitive from justice."

"I beg your pardon, son!"

"But I'm a kind of Ishmael. I am pursued by the Furies. I am in the same category as a ship beset by a typhoon—a victim. Three names. I have an assumed one. By that name I make a modest living, honorably. Brandon Cathewe are my given names, the tail of the kite, which is Hollowell. Have you ever by chance heard of Digby Hollowell?"

The doctor repeated the name ruminatingly. "Seems I've heard the name somewhere, but it escapes me at this moment."

"You will recall it with a little digging," said the young man. "And when you do, remember I'm Digby Hollowell's son and my mother is his widow. Here we are. Thanks for the lift. When you pick the Herald off your doorstep tomorrow morning, you'll see some interesting facts relative to Dunleith Mansfield, 'the Lord of Polygon Hill.' I'll call him! That will make a good catch phrase!"

When Dunleith Mansfield greeted his daughter and Nancy Maddox in his Washington home his face was expressive of pleasure and amiability. "I shall have to leave you two after dinner," he said. "I am expecting to wind up a contract. You are not afraid to ride about alone?"

"The dark," said Nancy, "has no terrors for either of us. If all depends upon what you read."

"And what do you read?" asked Mansfield, who was really a fine scholar.

"Good books, books about human beings who are striving to better themselves. I like that 'Proseal Lives.' The author wrote from his heart."

Mansfield picked up the book from the table. "A green young man. It is quite patent that he wrote from his heart, not from a brain that had gathered the facts first-hand and sifted false ideals from the true. A good book, a worth-while book, must be the result of a nicely balanced brain and heart. If you let the heart dictate, you generally invite trouble. It is as if a soldier were giving orders to his general. A well-written book, but green."

"But what an odd name to assume!" Betty balanced the book on her palm. "George Cottar; Kipling's Brush Boy. And there you are," declared her father. "A dreamer, not a doer; a dweller in a fairyland of his own making, observing life through roseate clouds!"

"But what would we do in this world if there weren't any Brushwood Boys?" asked Nancy. "Don't we all make believe at one time or another? Do you mean to tell me that you've never built any dreams?"

"Oh, when I was a youngster, probably—the kind of dreams you mean. I have my dreams all right; but they come to me in the form of blue-prints. And I have the advantage over your George Cottar, for my dreams come true."

"Didn't his?" said Betty, softly.

"But that's a story only. It happened in a book," and Mansfield started for the hall.

People in Bannister, on the morning, when they picked up the Bannister Herald off the front steps, sensed a shock, at once pleasurable and sorrowful. By noon the whole city was aware of the fact that Mansfield had been boldly and skillfully assailed in his castle-keep.

Between the counsel for the Mansfield interests in Bannister and Mansfield himself there were exchanged a series of brief telegrams. An excerpt of the story had been telegraphed to Washington.

From Washington: "Is it blackmail? Give the editor a scare."

From Bannister: "No blackmail. He won't scare. Have seen his proofs. We can't do anything through courts."

From Washington: "Buy the sheet."

From Bannister: "Editor says it is not for sale."

From Washington: "What is editor's name?"

When Mansfield received the answer to this query, he was in his study. Impatiently he ripped open the yellow envelope and drew out—Mansfield's head! Anyhow, he stared at the sheet, motionless and stonily, in a kind of petrified astonishment. He had all but forgotten the man and the incident.

"Brandon Cathewe!"

THUMB NOTES.

Caro—F. H. Schuckert of the Temple Theatre Co., returned Wednesday night from his trip to Germany. His return across the Atlantic was aboard the Mauretania which made the trip in five days and five hours. He docked at 10:30 a. m. Monday at New York. Mr. Schuckert had not heard from his parents or family in years and had not been to his old home in Pomerania since he left as a boy of 16. He found that both his father and mother had died, but enjoyed a fine visit with two brothers and a sister. A feature of his trip was an airplane trip from Germany over Belgium, to Paris, across the Alps, over Rome and Venice, crossed the Rhine six times, over Trier and back to the starting point. The air voyage was 1,100 miles in length and was made in eight hours. He is full of stories of observations made of conditions in the European countries.

Caro—News of the sudden death of Charles F. Vaughan, a former Caro man, came as a shock Friday to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Vaughan and friends in this village. His death occurred Thursday, Aug. 12, at Huntington, W. Va. He was a traveling salesman for the Pennsylvania Rubber Co., and had gone to bed the night before in a hotel in Huntington, apparently in his usual good health. His lifeless body was discovered the afternoon of the following day by hotel employees. The body was brought to Caro for burial.

Caro—Fifty years of married life were celebrated Thursday, Aug. 12, by Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Perry at their home in Caro. Only the immediate family were present, but these consisted of 31 children, grandchildren and great grandchildren of the couple. There were 34 more who were unable to be present. Mr. and Mrs. Perry were presented with gifts of gold in remembrance of the occasion. Mr. and Mrs. Perry have seven children, Barney N. Perry, Byron Perry, Mrs. Frank Seeley, Mrs. E. Hutchinson of Caro; Bert Perry of Fairgrove; Mrs. Melvin O'dell of Cass City, and Mrs. Elmer Conant of Gaytown.

North Branch—Arnold Thomas, son of Dr. J. O. Thomas, was badly injured Wednesday afternoon while assisting R. G. Green at some electric light wiring at the fair grounds. In jumping to the ground from an elevation at which he had been at work, he was caught beneath the left arm on the sharp point of a picket of the race track fence, sustaining a deep ragged cut that required many stitches in dressing. The attending physicians say his escape from even more serious results was by a slight margin as the severing of an artery might have caused death by bleeding before surgical aid could have been available.

Fairweather's delivery horse should have a mirror placed over its outbox—to give assurance that its hat is on straight. SCHOOL NOTES.

Workmen have been busy at the public school for the past few weeks in preparation for the opening of school on Tuesday, Sept. 7. This date is a week later than the customary one, but the added repairs have taken longer than the Board of Education anticipated. The interior has been re-decorated and desks have been re-dressed. Several new seats have been added in the assembly room to take care of the increased enrollment.

Owing to the large number taking chemistry, the laboratory has been fitted with movable arm chairs, folding tables have been added and better water facilities have been installed—all of which will greatly add to the convenience of teaching. Equipment has been added to take care of the unusually large bookkeeping class.

An enrollment was taken for each subject in June and all indications show that all classes will be much larger this year. The course of study is offered to meet the requirements of the small high school. The school has a two year accrediting. The tuition for the year is $60.

Supt. Koefgen, with her staff of teachers will be at the schoolhouse on Monday to discuss plans for the year. Parents or pupils may feel free to ask for information at any time.

The following is the teacher assignment: Principal, N. W. Wilber, Life Certificate. Asst. Prin., Mrs. Ruth Brown, A. B. and a graduate of the University of Michigan. Intermediate, Ina Crawford, Life Certificate. Primary, Margetta Wilson, Life Certificate. Librarian, Katie Yeck.

DIPPING INTO SCIENCE

Phosphorus

Usually manufactured from bone ashes and phosphate rock, is an extremely poisonous, wax-like substance, yellow in color and should not be handled except under water. A burn from phosphorus is slow to heal, and a very small amount taken internally will cause death.

Diseases of the bone are very common among people who assist in its manufacture.

Making the Home Town "Just a Little Better"

There are several things a fellow ought to do for the old town.

One step in the process will be to study the other man's town. Learn how he made his success. Use his methods where they will work to advantage. Mix a little brains with observation and improve on the past. Why shouldn't you put the plus on his success?

Then, too, one must line up the resources of the old town. Practically every place has some advantage. That should be capitalized to its full worth. Not in our likeness to other towns but in our differences lie the distinctive agencies that will insure success.

And not least among resources should be the good will of its people. Few towns put forth any real effort to cultivate the interest of their citizens. If people are interested they work for the town, usually for what they can get out of it. Our proposition calls for lining up everybody as a matter of patriotic duty.

The next step is to sell the town to folks outside of it. Don't be afraid to tell your town's advantages. When other towns advertise match the "ad" with one of your own. Even if you don't sell much to other folks the process will add much to your own esteem.

So, boost the old town. It will add dividends and raise the place you live in to one of pride and satisfaction. It's a great game. Try it—Kansas City Times.

Carelessness of City Visitors to Country

No longer are spring flowers the chief adornment of our country roads. The hepatica has had to yield place to the pop bottle, the wind flower to the wind-blown fragments of the Sunday supplements, the adder's tongue to the tin can.

Out of our cities pours an increasing horde of people who sally forth at dawn, after the fashion of tent caterpillars, to leave destruction in their wake. Accustomed to a life where the ever-ready "white wing" and the garbage collector function as regularly as the rising and setting of the sun, these city dwellers have little or no conception of the beauty and dignity of clean earth. They break down fences, strip flowering shrubs, and all too frequently lead one to wonder why the word "urbanity" ever came to mean what it is supposed to mean and why "civility" should have been the distinguishing mark of those who dwell in cities.

Our large centers of population sometimes wonder why they are so unpopular in the rural regions. One reason is to be found in the trash littered along our country highways.—Editorial in The Outlook.

Look to the Driveway

Nothing adds more to the beauty of any home than walks and driveways. These are nearly always built of concrete, and the pleasing light-gray color dresses up the appearance of the home surroundings in a delightful manner.

It is advisable that all walks, approaches and drives be constructed at the same time the home is built. Then the contractor has his material and equipment on the job and the cost of the work is lessened considerably.

In addition to lending charm to the home place, concrete walks and drives prove a boon to the housewife by eliminating the tracking of mud into the house.

Trees Not for Streets

It is a mistake to use a tree for street purposes just because it is rapid-growing, because most such trees are short-lived, weak-wooded and generally dangerous. Among such trees may be mentioned:

Silver maple—a maple that has quite pendulous branches and deeply cut leaves. The branches have dark bark.

Box elder—a maple with divided leaves. A more or less globular, low-branched tree.

Western catalpa—very short-lived. Flowers are very mussy.

Also the following: willows, European ash, birch, Carolina poplar and tulip tree.

Clean Up Stable Manure

House flies are here with their perennial transportation program for disease germs. They specialize as common carriers of typhoid fever and diarrheal bacilli. They ply between the germ incubators and the dining room. What they lack in per capita horse power they make up in preponderance of numbers. Stable manure is the most prolific breeding place of the fly, a pair of which can become the ancestors of many million offspring in a single season.

Make Home Beautiful

It doesn't cost any more to make your home beautiful than to have it ugly—beauty is not gained by dressing the house up with scroll-saw ornaments, cut-up roofs, dormers and fancy-shaped windows. A well proportioned house looks beautiful without all these. Your local architect is experienced in these problems and can help you here. It will pay you to consult him.

Wanted Her to Shrink

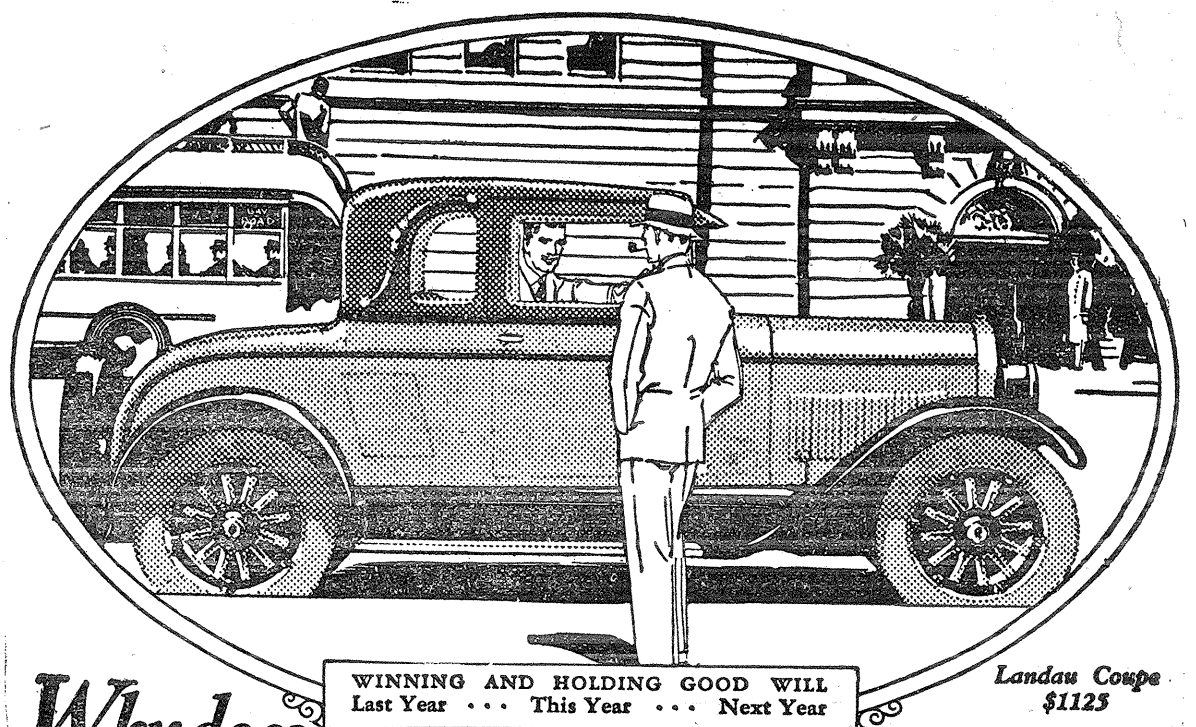

Little Ellen heard it explained that "shrink" means "to grow smaller." A few evenings later we went to a movie and in front of Ellen's seat sat a very stout woman. After squirming around for some time in her seat, trying to look past the wide shoulders of the woman in front, Ellen leaned over and whispered, "Please, lady, do you mind shrinking a little so I can see the picture?"

First "L" Line
The first successful elevated railway line in the world was opened to traffic in New York 48 years ago. This was the Sixth Avenue line, part of which, the extension to Fifty-eighth street, was recently torn down. Later in the same year the Third Avenue line was opened. An attempt had been made ten years previously to construct an elevated railway.

Substances in Grindstones

Grindstones are usually made of a siliceous sandstone, in which the grains are sharp and there is little cement to bind them together. Artificial grindstones of very uniform and perfect texture are made from emery. Grindstones are now also made of carborundum.

An Exposition Worth Seeing

Double Profits by Association Methods

Tuscola county dairymen can practically double their profits from the cows by adopting cow test association methods, says the Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics. The average test association cow in Michigan produces 3759 lbs. more milk and 132 lbs. more butter fat than the cow not in association work.

A glimpse of what ordinary farm cows will do when subjected to cow test association conditions and practices, is to be had from the report of the Wayne county cow testing association, covering the entire herd of 45 cows on the Institute Research Farm at Redford, Michigan. These cows were such as any farmer can pick up with no previous record, and during the year were subjected to the vicissitudes of experimental work which the Institute herd is maintained. Yet figured for the cow test year, and including dry periods, the average production of the entire herd of 45 cows was 10,003 lbs. milk and 336 lbs. butter fat. This is fully 6159 lbs. milk above the average production for cows in this county. The ten high cows in the herd range in milk production from 11,591 lbs. to 28,774 lbs., and a butter fat production of from 445.8 lbs. to 826.3 lbs. The profit over feed costs for these ten high cows for the year, range from $124.14 to $298.30.

Cow testing associations are the greatest influence for good within the dairy industry, according to Charles Staff, secretary of the institute. "By the use of the milk scale and the Babcock test the spotlight is thrown on each cow's records, enabling the dairyman to weed out the unprofitable animals and to feed the remainder according to known production. By comparing the records of dam and daughter, promoting the ownership of better sires, encouraging the use of proved sires, and teaching the advantages of feeding a satisfactory, well-balanced ration, cow testing helps the dairyman build up a high production herd of profitable cows bringing him returns far beyond the small cost of carrying on the cow testing work."

Death of Mrs. Sarah McCartney

Last Wednesday, the Angel of Death entered the home of George Coulter, and took away Mrs. Sarah McCartney, an aunt of Mrs. Coulter. She had been visiting in the Coulter home for the past three weeks, on account of ill health. After her death the body was removed to her home in Deford.

Funeral services were held in the M. E. church at Deford on Sunday, with a very large attendance.

The deceased was born in Canada March 25, 1876, and came to Michigan at the age of 12 years, with her parents and four brothers and one sister. At the age of 23 years, she was united in marriage to Wm. McCartney of Wilmet. To this union one daughter, Phoebe, was born.

Mrs. McCartney leaves her invalid husband, Wm. McCartney; one daughter, Mrs. Lawson Stinger of Orion, and one brother, Thomas Davis.

Praise Became Reproach

The word "Hum" was a term of reproach given to the Germans by their enemies from the beginning of the World war. It seems to have first been associated by William II with his army as a term of praise. He used it in an address to his troops about to sail for China from Bremerhaven, July 27, 1900. For many years the German Socialists used the word "Hum" in attacking the militarists in that country.

Dollar Lost 21 Years Ago Comes to Light

Twenty-one years ago, when a cyclone hit the townships south of Cass City and brought utter destruction to so many buildings, the little home of Mrs. Susan Slack of Novesta suffered total annihilation. Three dollars in silver had been tucked away in some handy place against the day when Mrs. Slack should go to town. As money was one of the most-needed things after the storm had swept away every article which Mrs. Slack had accumulated to make of her house a home, a search of the wreckage brought to light two of the dollars.

Mrs. Slack recovered from the catastrophe and lived to a good old age dying about five years ago.

A few weeks ago Mrs. Alex Slack found in the garden what is believed to be the other of the three lost dollars and Alex Slack now carries the coin as a souvenir of the never to be forgotten cyclone, a memento rich with sentiment, and memories of his mother.

FARM BUREAU MEET WEDNESDAY

the farmers to take courage and suggested team work as a means of progress in Farm Bureau activities. The second speaker was Chester H. Gray, who is legislative representative of the American Farm Bureau at Washington, D. C. He stated that the purpose of these rallies was to inform the minute men and officials of the legislative programs of the Farm Bureau, state and national. He urged them to study the situations and upon call from headquarters to help put the programs over. Mr. Gray cited the change of England from an agricultural to an industrial country three hundred years ago, then stated that our own country is now undergoing the same change. He mentioned the present industrial period as the "consuming" period. The Farm Bureau aims to keep agriculture on a plane with other industries. He mentioned the program for the coming winter along legislative lines. They are: Farm Relief, or distribution of surplus; Merchant Marine; Muscle Shoals; Inland Waterways; Federal Taxation; Standard Containers, (uniform containers for fruits and vegetables); Long and Short Hauls, a question of transportation.

The meeting closed at 4:30. Mr. Powell and Mr. Gray were scheduled to address a meeting in Saginaw on Wednesday evening.

Early Baseball

The first baseball "diamond" was square instead of a diamond as used now. The bases were wooden posts that stood out of the ground 4 feet. The sides were made up of from 10 to 14 players. The rule of play was one out all out. The score was 100 tallies up. The side first scoring 100 runs was the winner.
