P. T. A. SUCCESSFULLY OPENS NEW YEAR

Reception Given for Teachers Friday Evening Was Well Attended.

The first meeting of the Parent-Teachers Association held Friday evening was well attended and opened successfully the year's program of the society. At the beginning of the program, teachers and member of the board of education and their wives Plan Two-day formed in line and the new instructors were introduced to all present.

Mrs. A. J. Knapp, the retiring president of the P. T. A., acted as chairman of the evening and the program was opened with community singing in charge of Mrs. I. D. Mc-

Mrs. Lester Bailey, the new president of the society, very graciously welcomed the teachers to the community. Miss Phyllis Lenzner gave a reading and responded with an stood the exposition will take permaencore. Mrs. I. D. McCoy gave a piano solo and G. W. Landon a bass solo. Both these artists are popular with Cass City audiences and their numbers were heartily applauded. They responded with encores.

George Munro, president of the P. T. A. at Gagetown, spoke interestingly of the success attained by the Gagetown association. He said the society had done much to help their schools and had brought about a hearty co-operation of teacher and parent. He attributed much of its success to the work of good committees and the willingness of all to take

Following the program, light refreshments were served and a social hour enjoyed.

Sept. Weddings at Distant Points

Lick-Corkins.

(From Pontiac Gazette).

The Central Methodist Episcopal church was the scene of a very pretty wedding Wednesday evening, Sept. 1. when Miss Hazel Ormerd Lick, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Truman H. Lick of 94 Norton avenue, became the bride of Ivan Wallace Corkins, also of Pontiac, son of Mr. and Mrs John C. Corkins of Cass City. Rev Parley Bingham of the Central Methodist church performed the cere-

The bride was attired in a parisienne gown of duchess satin and lace and carried a shower bouquet of bridal roses and swansona. The maid of nor, Miss Helen Corkins, twin sister of the groom, wore robin's egg blue taffeta and carried shasta daisies. The bride's maids were Miss Carmen VanStone, Miss Edna Meddaugh, Miss Vera McKinstry, and Miss Belva Marion of Pontiac, Miss Ora Millerwise of Sebewaing, and Miss Helen Rumford of Detroit. Their gowns were of taffeta and chiffon of canary yellow, pale green and peach pink, and all wore large picture hats and

The service was read at high noon by the brother of the bride, Rev. Wm. Helrigel, at his home.

The house was tastily decorated in pink and white with a background of ferns and gladioli as the bridal bower. The bride gowned in a silk crepe over white satin, carried a shower boquet of shell pink roses and lily of the valley. The bridesmaid, Miss Lois Stokoe, was dressed in pale green georgette and carried deep pink roses. Miss Helen Helrigel was ring bearer. The groom was dressed in the life. The Man With Three Names

WNU Service CHAPTER IV

An Encounter. On the sunny side of a huge bowlder, on the top of a rusty green hill, sat a man with a small book on his knees. He wore a gray flannel shirt, tieless; a pair of brown corduroy trousers, much the worse for wear; and a pair of ugly russet walking boots. oots. Eastward, several church spires

Eastward, several church spires were visible in the late September haze. There lay the city of Bannister. Nature, hating the ugly, hid it as well as she could. For there east, a drab smudge, which seemed to shut off the world beyond, Whenever the man's gaze went back to his book, his expression was one of Whenever this gaze shifted toward the spires, an ironical smile twisted up the corners of his lips. He frowned, for they were after him down there. Nearly all the local advertising had fallen away, the stockholders were exhibiting signs of restiveness; and that signified that Mansfield or his agents had approached them.

His thought went to his mother. What a thoroughbred she was, to stick to him on his crazy adventure, to follow his fortunes, when she might have remained in the peace and seclusion of the villa up Fiesole way, with that riot of roses in the springtime and the sun on the red roofs of Florence! Cathewe, her maiden name; and to be forced to prefix it with Mrs. in order to share his fortunes!

There came an interruption-the whine of an automobile. A plague of them; a man had to climb the Matterhorn these days to find solitude.

"Sandy!" cried a woman's voice from the far side of the bowlder. "Sandy, come here! . . . Sandy!"

The automobile whizzed by. Cathewe recovered his book and stood up resentfully. But this resentment died swiftly.

On the slope just beyond the ditch, where he had been flung, lay an Airedale, motionless. Kneeling beside him was Betty Mansfield, her hands clenched against her bosom, her eyes full of unshed tears.

"My dog! My friend and comrade!" Cathewe dropped his book, ran across, looked at the dog for a moment or two, then picked him up tenderly and carried him back to the sunny side of the bowlder, where there was a patch of warm clover. The girl followed, dumbly. Not a word was spoken until Cathewe put his hand over the dog's heart.

"Is-is he dead?" she whispered. "No." His hands roved hither and yon over the dog's body. "We'll wait a minute. I can't find any breaks. Probably stunned.'

"My poor Sandy!"

A moment later Cathewe received a slight but pleasurable shock. He had reached for the dog's head the same instant as she, and their hands touched. A great bitterness swept over him, for the aftermath of that pleasurable shock was the knowledge that he still cared.

A shudder ran over the Airedale; and presently the stump of his tail began to beat the turf, feebly.

"Sandy?"-joyously. "He's all right," said Cathewe, confidently. "Simply knocked out. He's in luck. It's mighty hard to keep a dog these days; and yet I can't honestly blame the motorists. The animals will run at the cars. This is a particularly fine breed. Never saw anything like him around these parts. Big and strong enough to tackle bear." He began to pat the broad head. And the wag of the tail became more energetic.

The girl on her part began to observe. First, the hand, which was lean and brown and well kept. The sleeve of the shirt, however, was frayed at the cuff. The shirt also lacked the top button, and there was a sunburned patch at the base of the throat. Brown corduroys, such as Italian roadmenders wore; and the hems were tucked into dusty russet half-boots. (As a matter of fact, Cathewe kept these togs in the office where he could don them whenever the lure of the highway called, which was every day when the weather was good.) The sight of his face, however, had the effect of a blow. Where had she seen this handsome, vigorous face before? Somewhere; she was positive of that. Fine, sensitive gray eyes and a mouth which would have been called beautiful in a woman. And above this mouth she saw the replica of her father's nose. Then, from the corner of her eye, she saw the book. Jean Fabre, in the original! The face and hands of an artist, the clothes of a day-laborer, and a volume of Fabre on insects! She almost his tail wagged a little.

Sandy is all right. Eh, old top?" Cathewe held out his hand. The dog eyed the hand, quizzically. and approached. He permitted the "Well!" said Betty, getting up. Sandy never permits strangers to touch him."

"But all dogs know me," said Cathewe, picking up his book. "Fine comrades, aren't they? I had a little dog a while gone. He was just plain dog. But that didn't matter. We unlerstood each other at once."

Of all the unusual men! was her thought. What a beautiful head! Certainly she had seen it before. But where? She must find out who he was. No man so odd as this one could wander about Bannister without being known.

"Pardon, but have I ever met you before?" she asked suddenly. "I dare say you have seen me from your car."

"Probably that is it. Fabre. You are reading him in the original?"

"Good mental exercise."
"I suppose the ant's life must be very interesting to you." "Indeed, all life is interesting. Come along. I will show you an ant city, a Canton of the insect world,"

Presently the philosopher came to a broad, flat stone. Very carefully he put his fingers under the edge and with a dulck heave sent the stone over.

The cavity was aswarm with ants.

Rattainons and regiments scurried 77.00

She gazed fascinatedly at the black atoms. They were taking hold of the eggs and drawing them rapidly into innumerable subways.

Ostensibly Betty was interested in the new ant city, but her eyes did not convey any memorable impressions to her brain; that was busy with conjecture. A gentleman of her own sort, because he was courteous and unembarrassed. Apparently he knew that she was Dunleigh Mansfield's daughter, and was not in the least awed by the fact. That rather pleased her.

He did not introduce himself, which was another good sign. It left her free to recognize him the next time they met or pass him by. She was quite confident that he was not a native of Bannister. An out-of-doors man and a scholar; the shabby clothes now fitted into the scheme of things. Men did not pursue their studies in natural history, dressed as for a tea party. Who and what was he?

Nancy Maddox would know, for Nancy knew everybody in Bannister. He would be very easy to describe. Doubtless she would be meeting him during the winter. She still retained the vague impression, however, that she had seen him before, and not in

"Thank you," he heard Betty say. "It has been very interesting. I have read Maeterlinck on the bee, but Fabre is an undiscovered country.

Sandy; we must be going." There was an impulse to offer her hand to this unusual young man, but she smothered it. She turned back toward the highway, the dog leaping and barking joyously. "A lucky dog," said Cathewe, smil-ng. "He has defied the law of irresistible force and lives to tell of it.

Good afternoon." He crossed over to his boulder and once more reclined against the sun-warmed granite surface. He waited for a little time, then peered around. Her hat was just vanishing down the drop of the hill. He opened his book -unside down. "The postern gate!" he murmured.

At half after five Nancy was agreeably surprised by the advent of Betty. "Nancy, I've had the queerest adventure," began Betty at once, and rather breathlessly. "No; I don't want any tea. I came for some information.

It was so droll and unusual." And lightly, with those Gallic gestures which came so naturally, she recounted what had taken place on the top of the hill.

"Dressed like a tramp and reads Fabre in the original," mused Nancy. She was about to hazard a guess when the telephone in her father's office rang. "Just a moment, Betty. Telephone. It may be some patient of father's." Once at the instrument she recognized Cathewe's voice. "Nancy, I've had rather an odd experience; and I'm going to depend upon you to help me out. I've met Mans- Extension of time limit for payment field's daughter. foreboding? At last she returned to the living room. ""Dressed like a tramp," she repeated, "and reads Fabre in the original.

It might be one of your father's chem ists, Betty." Nancy hated lies, and she hated herself for telling this one, when it was not obligatory in the least. She was a "Better?" she asked softly. "I am always better when I am with you, mother. Life is an astonishing mess, isn't it? For the innocent as well as for the guilty. I, who have never wittingly harmed anyone or done á mean thing, I must always carry with me the sense of being hunted, the fear of being found out. And I have dragged you into it."

"Sonny, I'd be very happy with Nancy as my daughter," she changed

Tales of the Thumb

DOING AS THE OTHERS DO

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK Dean of Men, University of

of OR I had gone with the multitude," David wrote thousands of years ago, but he was going to church, and not everyone goes in that direction now, though there is still a good many people who follow rather than lead.

It is curious, however, to what extent we do follow the multitude and justify ourselves in doing so, and even turn the critical eye upon those who do not. I am looked upon with some curiosity because I never played a game of mah-jongg, nor have I listened in on a radio, nor invested any money in Florida, nor talked a great deal either for or against prohibition.

It is far easier to follow the multitude than to keep out of its way. One attracts less attention, arouses less comment, is less likely to be thought freakish or queer. Those who wish to be inconspicuous must conform.

Many young people who are going to college these days are merely following the crowd. They have joined themselves to the multitude. They are chasing down the intellectual streets without purpose or definite intention. They don't know whether they are going to a fire or to a fight. They move because the crowd is moving.

"Why did you come to college?" asked Browning. He seemed not to be working much; he was absent a great deal; he was passing little or nothing. "I don't know," he replied, "I never thought much about it. The other fellows whom I knew were going, so I thought I would go, too."

He was going to college as David was going to church. I have never known whether or not David was interested in church for its own sake or whether he was going because the others were.

Everyone was riding bicycles thirty years ago-for pleasure, for profit, for exercise. Four of us went off on a jaunt of a thousand miles or more right in the middle of July, too, with the sun pouring down fit to roast us alive and the roads in some places inches deep in dust. Everybody rode then-young and old, rich and poor, as people drive cars today. They were all doing it and boasting of how many "centuries" they had made and in what time they could go a mile. I recall now two old people, past eighty both of them, who cycled out every day just for the pleasure of it, as many today are practicing the strenuous movements of the charleston. They could not resist the influence of the crowd.

If some prominent person would start the custom of going to church, we should be as enthusiastic as David was, no doubt, and fall in line because our neighbors were doing so.

Mistakes in Building One's Home Are Costly

All normal men and women plan, some day, to have a home of their own; a place with trees, flowers, a garden; a home for the children. But most people building their first house usually make mistakes that can be avoided. An architect, in an article on home-building in Liberty Magazine, "Most architects make a mess of the first house they build for themselves. I made one of mine. I was joshed about it so much that I decided to let a few of the wife's wishes prevail in my next one-there was bound to be a next one, for the mistakes in the first were too accusing. "Instead of going at the job from a running jump the next time, I'd take counsel with my wife all the way through. Tuscola County's Road Progress During Gov. Groesbeck's Tenure @ @

This map shows in bold relief just where Tuscola county stood on highway matters when Gov. Alex J. Groesbeck first took hold of road building in this state. There was one small stretch of concrete pavement in this county, two stretches of macadam and the gravel roads were dotted with unimproved bits of dirt road. Compare this map with the other. Then decide for yourself if an increasing highway improvement program is desirable for Tuscola county—a highway improvement that will be carried on under Gov. Groesbeck without increasing the general property tax. The state tax rate this year is $2.31 per thousand of assessed valuation. This is lower by 13 cents than the 1925 lévy and the lowest state tax levy in many, many years.

Tuscola county's highway system under Gov. Alex J. Groesbeck's administration is expanding as rapidly and as consistently as good business administration and prac-

This year bids have been let on about five miles of concrete on the Vassar-Richville road. Bids are to be taken within a few days on the Caro-Wahjamega road, to be built with concrete. A section of concrete at Mayville has been authorized. Under Gov. Groesbeck the gravel road system in Tuscola county has replaced the dirt road and the strides taken in the past in improving this county's highway system will be continued without question or interruption in the future with Gov. Groesbeck in the executive telescolisa della L If you favor better roads, as well as better business administration; if you want to see the sponge of state inefficiency kept squeezed dry from wastefulness and costly duplication, then a vote for Alex J. Groesbeck for governor at the Sept. 14 primaries will insure this to you.
