GREEN NOMINATED BY BIG MAJORITY

ator by Two to One Vote over Gettel.

Col. Fred W. Green, manufacturer of reed furniture and mayor of Ionia for 13 years, carried all but a half dozen counties to win Tuesday's Republican gubernatorial primary by a majority that has approximately 152,000.

Luren D. Dickinson is leading the race for the nomination of lieutenant governor by a vote of about 4,000 votes more than that received by Geo.

Most of Michigan's 13 republican congressmen were renominated without opposition. Fights developed, however, in the First, Sixth and Eleventh districts. Grant M. Hudson, congressman from the Sixth district running with endorsement of the anti-saloon league, defeated J. Brad-

Rubber

The usefulness of rubber was discovered by natives of South America hundreds of years ago, although it was not introduced into Europe until 1820, where it sold for $1.50 an inch. Its real value was not realized until Charles Goodrich, an American, perfected the process of making it into a hard substance by adding to it heated sulphur. (©. 1926, Western Newspaper Union.)

Betty sat curled upon the broad window seat, watching the receding gold and scarlet of the September sunset. In reality, she was just recovering in New York. The best man they had from a stunning, paralyzing mental low. The door to the Apocalypse and opened slightly. On her knees ay a crumpled newspaper. She found t on the floor of the limousine, where some sardonic jester had tossed it. "My father! They lie, they lie!"

Down below, in the study, a local banker eved the end of his cigar through half-closed lids. Mansfield, his fingers pyramided, watched him expectantly.

"Do you want some unsolicited ad vice?" asked the banker, finally. "Go ahead with it," said Mansfield smiling tolerantly. "Clean up these grogshops, which you really own. Tear down your rot ten firetraps. Give the reform candidate the city hall to play with for two years." Mansfield laughed.

"Dunleigh," continued the banker, "the people are thinking. They are finding the true cleavage between right and wrong. I warn you, they are going to do away with this political game as you and I know it. This fellow Cathewe is no ordinary disturber. I defy you to find a libel in his editorial comments. That boy goes down among men. He hasn't accused you of doing anything criminal, as understood by law. He attacks you from the moral side. Mark me, he'll soon be after your new munitions plant. The temporary hospital you have erected is too near the tanks. An explosion would knock it to flin-

"Let the city fire department advise me about that," answered Mansfield, shrugging his shoulders.

"They are afraid of you, and you know it. If anything does happen out there-for lack of water-it will be criminal negligence; and this fellow Cathewe will hang your hide on his need is to have him lose his follow-

"And he isn't losing it. The paper's circulation is growing daily, despite the fact that you struck off his local advertising. Something really vital is going on. The poor are beginning to boycott the shops that have withdrawn their advertising at your command. Soon the advertisers will drift back, of necessity." Mansfield frowned.

"Dunleigh, there's a mystery I can't get to the bottom of. There are four banks in Bannister. Being president of one of them and a stockholder in all of them, I am in a position to find out things. This young fellow Cathewe has an active account in each bank and it is evident that he is paying the losses out of his pocket. Once a month he replenishes these withdrawals."

"Drafts on New York?" "Cash. Nothing traceable."

"How much is his active account in

"One hundred thousand dollars,

"Nearly half a million?" gasped Mansfield, with a full feeling in his

"Yes," continued the banker. "Four hundred thousand will keep his paper going without advertisements for ten years. Another queer thing. I don't know about the other banks, but at mine he has two accounts, one general and one special. The general account is never more than two or three thousand. The special account is never drawn against except to pay the paper's pay-checks and expenses. Four hundred thousand, behind a newspaper like the Herald, has a tremendous power. My advice is to get your political and financial house in order.'

A droll idea entered Mansfield's head. He was not without humor. So he returned to his desk, looked into the telephone book, and called a number. A woman's voice answered.

"I wish to speak with Mr. Cathewe." "Just a moment, please."

Three or four minutes passed. "Hello! This is Mr. Cathewe. What do you wish to speak to me about?"

"I wish to ask you some questions, frankly. Why do you hate me?" "I do not hate you. My attitude is absolutely impersonal."

"That's blunt enough. What would you say if I expressed the opinion that you carried out your part of the bargain, and that the hour had arrived for me to carry out mine?" A long pause.

"Events have made that impossible. I release you." "You do not hold me, then? Still, I am a good loser. I will introduce you to my daughter." "Between your daughter and me there is the space of two worlds. I regret that folly on board the ship. Moreover, I am a poor man. Every dollar I have in this world I earn by honest

"I don't quite get that. I have been duly informed that you have on deposit nearly half a million."

Another pause. "That money does not belong to me,

Mr. Mansfield." That was the end of the conversa-

Mansfield then wrote two letters. The first was local. It was to the chief In the great manor on Polygon hill, of police. It demanded as quickly as possible a good photograph of Brandon Cathewe. "Is Miss Betty down?" "She begs to be excused, sir."

Mansfield ran upstairs and rapped on the door of his daughter's boudoir. "It is father, Betty. Are you ill?" "No, daddy. Just tired and head-

"May I come in?"

He heard the key turn in the lock. and he pushed in the door. He saw instantly that she had been crying.

"I . . . I saw that article in the Herald," she sobbed. "It made me wild with fury. After you have done so much for Bannister!"

A warm glow pervaded his heart. "You mustn't waste any tears on that twaddle. Betty. It's just politics: it's all a part of the game."

"Come along to dinner. I've got a surprise for you. I'm sending for your aunt, your mother's sister. You ought not to be the only woman in this big house. Your aunt is a charming woman. And there is one thing, little lady, I want you always to remember: Your mother's fortune makes you rich in your own right. Do as you please with it. And when the day comes and you find a man of your fancy, marry him. I'll trust you to pick out one worth while."

He laughed, tucked her arm under his, and led her to the stairs.

Around about ten that night you would have found her on the floor before her boudoir fire, reading her letters. She would read so far into a letter, and then a picture would drift in between: blue sky, blue water, the vague scent of clover, and an odd young man bending over flat stones.

She wanted to throw the letters into the fire. It was imposible. She knew that she would have regretted the act throughout her life. But to find some way out of the thralldom!

She put the letters in a Florentine box, which she restored to a drawer. She was about to close this when her eye was attracted by a slip of paper. It was a typewritten list of the bonds and stocks and accumulated funds of which her private fortune consisted "But I don't want the rag. All I Away down toward the end she came upon something which she had not noticed previously: "Fifty shares the Bannister Morning Herald!"

"The only way you can break an editor," she murmured, "is to buy his sheet and turn him adrift."

Thereupon a great and glorious idea popped into her head.

CHAPTER V

George Cottar.

Mansfield could not read. He tossed his volume upon the table and got up. He lighted a cigar; then he went into the hall for his hat and topcoat. He left the house through the conservatory door.

It was moonlight, and a stroll about the gardens might settle this unusual mental turmoil.

He passed along the aisles of rose bushes. There were still some flowers in bloom. He pushed through the bushes to the next row, where there was a magnificent pink Arends. He cut it with his penknife and drew it through his buttonhole. He threw away his half-consumed cigar. Then he glanced again at Betty's window.

It was dark. In the very center of the gardens was a marble basin, with a faun seated at one end, his pipes emitting thin streams of water. The tinkle of the water sounded pleasantly on Mansfield's ears. Pipe tobacco; and good tobacco, too. One of the gardeners'? No; they all smoked abominable weed.

"Who's there?" he demanded sharply The shadow began to move. Mansfield, being in vigorous health and sound of wind, ran along the path. He made a short cut, and arrived at the sidewalk as the other ran across the street diagonally. This maneuver set his face under the full glare of the street lamp. Mansfield stopped. Cathewe, prowling around in the gardens? The fool, then, was really in love with Betty! He could give up the woman he loved for the sake of an ideal—an ideal which, if pursued unfalteringly, might break her father. Mansfield returned to the house, his usually cold and precise brain off its balance. The whole affair was so absurd that it resembled a dream rather than a reality. He hung up his hat and coat mechanically, plucked the rose from the buttonhole, and proceeded to his room immersed in reverie. He had missed something. No; it wasn't romance. He had had his fill of that-in steel. He knew what he had missed. It was the thing that had lured that fellow Cathewe to come prowling into the gardens, merely to stand under Betty's window. Love!

Slowly he rose, picked up the vase in which he had placed the flower. tiptoed into the hall, and set it before Betty's door. Next morning Betty came into the problest room with a journe much rose by my door?"

She walked over to him and stooped "You may kiss me for that." He took her head between his palms and kissed both her cheeks, soundly. She ran back to her chair and began to volley French at him. Finally he laughed.

"You're too much for me. My French is motor-truck style."

"Daddy, I want to go back to France.' "But I need vou, honey!" he cried.

And as the words passed his lips, the miracle lay revealed. That was it, he red heheen "Why do you need me, daddy?"-ir kind of terrified whisper. "Because I love you. Because I've only just found it out."

Cathewe's newspaper, for all that it was losing money daily, was a success. Its editorial opinions began to be copied far and wide across the land. He thought and wrote clearly upon all subjects. His editorials were full of punch and prophecy.

But he was losing money. He had heard tales about Moloch, and now he understood. Each additional boost to his circulation made a corresponding loss. Without the local advertisements this ascending popularity was becoming more and more costly. And any day his stockholders might sell out. This would not nullify his control, but it might add infinite confusion, internal warfare.

So far he had won two big battles. He had made the health department an efficient organization and he had blocked a deal by the local traction company (Mansfield's) to charge a six-cent fare. And he had made the last election of Mansfield's congressional candidate extremely difficult.

At noon one day in October Cathewe came down for his breakfast, a frown between his eyes. "What is it, sonny?" asked his mother.

"What is what?" "The meaning of that frown."

"Oh, well, I had a curious experience at the office last night. I heard an ahem and looked up. Bang! went a flashlight; and before I could recover from my astonishment, the photographer had vanished. Took a picture of me-stole it. But I can't let that worry me. I must get that new book done. Our funds are getting low." Shortly after, he entered his study and closed the door. She saw no more of him until four, when he signified that he was off for a walk in the hills. He had not been gone more than twenty minutes when Nancy's smart runabout stopped at the curb. Two or three times a week she carried Mrs. Cathewe off for a ride in the THE SEA OF SEA OF country. At the same hour today father's chariot of mercy rolled under the Mansfield porte cochere. But more of that anon.

Mrs. Cathewe had to change, so for a few moments Nancy was left to her own devices. She saw the study door wide open and stepped across the threshold. Books were scattered over the floor, the air filled with the strong scent of tobacco, a desk littered with paper, a wicker basket filled to the brim with closely written sheets, a waste basket choked with crumpled, discarded efforts. The one thing that had a touch of orderliness was the stack of blank paper arranged before the empty chair. She could see that something had been written on the top sheet, so she bent to see what it was. A name, repeated many times. "George Cottar," "George Cottar," repeated perhaps a dozen times.

"George Cottar!" She spoke the name aloud. A pile of manuscript and the name George Cottar! The illumination left her temporarily blinded. The Brushwood Bov-George Cottar—Brandon Cathewe! Why, Brand was the novelist; and hiding his light under the bushel like this

What did that signify? Impulsively she reached down into the waste basket and picked up one of the crumpled sheets, and smoothed it out. A rejected sheet; he would never miss it. So she folded it and put it in a pocket. Then she stole forth, her eyes shining and her cheeks aflame.

Mansfield had an odd experiencefor him-that afternoon. A representative of the local merchants called to ask him to release them from their promise regarding the boycott of the Herald.

"We are sorry, Mr. Mansfield." he announced. "but we can't carry this on any longer. We don't want to offend you or lose the trade of the thousands you employ, but we have come to the conclusion that it would be far more profitable for us to cater to the other seventy-odd thousand and let your people go. What answer shall

I carry back?" "That they are under no further obligations," answered Mansfield

"Our thanks, Mr. Mansfield. We shall renew our contracts with the Herald at once."

As he went out he passed Doctor Maddox coming in. "John," Mansfield said, "I sent for you because I wish to ask an honest man a few simple questions." Maddox, plainly distressed, pulled his beard. "What's happened to you?" "An inconceivable thing. I've fallen in love with something."

"What?" "My daughter."

"Nothing abnormal about that. Tell me what you want to, and I'll answer as an honest friend.

"What do you know about this fellow Brandon Cathewe?"

"I know him to be as clean and white as a hound's tooth, Dunleigh. I'm glad you've fallen in love with Betty. It's bound to change your point of view. You've made Bannister prosperous, but on a rotten foundation. You have set out to break Cathewe because he is the first man who ever dared oppose you openly. And I don't believe you will succeed.' "Why?"

"Because he represents Right and you represent Might." "That's plain speaking, John."

"You asked for it." "All this is quite complimentary to me," said Mansfield, dryly. "Then you advise me to throw up my hands? John, my position is impregnable."

"On the money side, yes. Man, there's a great thing under your hand. Make a clean breast of it to that Mansfield drew his palm across his forehead. "First, I've got to find out where Cathewe got his four hundred thousand. Did you know that he had that amount in the local banks?"

notized you!" "Not noticeably," "So you have written down your boyhood friend as a rogue!"

"I won't answer that. I'll abide by what you have written down yourself" -shrewdly.

Mansfield laughed. "I'll travel on my own. But you won't find anything you'd call mean in the deal. I can promise you that. But one of us must break."

"I'm on the boy's side, Dunleigh," replied Maddox, getting up. "But I'll repeat my advice: Call up Cathewe; give him what he wants." Then the doctor left.

That night as he sat before the fire in the library, his office hours over, his pipe going comfortably, Nancy walked over and sat down in his lap, took the pipe from his teeth, and laid it on the ashtray. Then she seized his ears and drew his head right about

"Father Maddox, who is Digby Hal-His start nearly upset her. "Where did you hear that name?"

"From you." "From me? But that's impossible!" "Don't you know that you have lately acquired the habit of muttering out loud when you are overtired? Half a dozen times I have heard you mutter that name as if it were some tremendous thing."

"Nancy," he said, gravely, "you will do father a great favor if you will forget vou ever heard me utter it. I feel, by uttering that name aloud, even unconsciously, that I have broken my faith as a physician.

When the advertising men of the various shops penitently entered the business office of the Herald the next morning, asking to renew their contracts, the business manager called up Cathewe, who had an extension telephone at the side of his bed. Drowsily Cathewe caught the first few words, then he became wide awake.

"All of them?" "Yes, sir. They want their spaces back tomorrow.' "The old contracts are dead."

"I've got new ones all ready, with the cash line blank. Do you want to come down, or shall I handle it?" "I'll leave it to you. But listen carefully. The Herald has gained twenty thousand since those chaps

"Not a whimper. One year, with a many of our farmers. twenty per cent raise, and they seemed glad to sign. In a couple of months-if the print-paper holds outwe'll be carrying money to the banks.' "I'll be with you at four."

Cathewe set the telephone down with a bang, kicked the bedclothes high into the air, turned a somersault and landed with a thud on the floor. He picked himself up, laughing, flung his bathrobe across his shoulders, and dashed down the hall to the bathroom. It was only after nine, but that did not matter.

"I've won mother," he said, as he came storming into the dining room, his eyes glistening and his fine skin

"Think of it! The most puzzling, tantalizing. quicksilvery thing on earth-the public-went out and won this fight for me because they saw I was playing fair!

"Queer sheep that they are, they would turn against me tomorrow, if they knew! Mother, I'm being watched. I can't prove it, but I sense it continually. Mansfield has just received a bitter blow to his prestige. He's not going to leave any stone unturned to do me injury."

He ate his breakfast hurriedly, then bolted into the study. For a little while she could hear him humming some bars from the "Second Polonaise"; then silence. Thereafter she and the maid moved about their work without sound. He wrote steadily until three, on his book; then he went to the office. He worked hard, arranged a new advertising schedule with his business manager and left the office at five o'clock. It was growing dark. He always walked home, even in bad weather.

It was dark, but still a little too early for the street lamps. The darkness was partly due to the heavy rainclouds that were sweeping across the sky. Obliquely he saw two men across the street apparently talking to a woman. What made him turn his head and look squarely, he never knew. Ordinarily, he would have continued on. This single look was enough. He broke into a run. When he arrived he did not ask questions. He knocked one of the men flat and whirled the other into the gutter.

"Can I be of assistance?" he said, turning to the woman. Then he saw who it was. "Miss Mansfield! What in the world are you doing alone in this quarter of the town? Here, take my arm. My home is only a few blocks away. I'll call a taxi and you can have a cup of tea while you wait."

"If you please! I . . . I'm rather upset. One of them touched me!" Cathewe stopped. "No, no! Please do not go back. My chauffeur must have misunderstood my directions, for "By George, that fellow has hyp-I left him by the curb here."

"I'm so glad I happened along." "So am L'

And they started on, but neither could think of anything else to say. "Here we are," he said, when they at last reached the house.

"Is that you, sonny?" What a pleasant voice! thought the girl, her astonishment at full tide. "Yes, mother. Will you ring for lights and tea? I have company-Miss Mansfield, whose chauffeur misunderstood her instructions."

The girl heard a flurry of skirts in the room beyond, the tinkle of a bell, and then in a kind of dream Betty entered the living-room. "Can you see the lounge?" he asked. Almost at once the maid came in with a Roman candelabrum, which she placed on the piano.

"You'll excuse me a moment," said Cathews, "while I call a taxi"; and he stepped into the hall. Mrs. Cathewe sat down again and played Greig's "Papillon," played it without taking her gaze off this flowerlike voung woman; and Betty felt powerless to shift her eyes. She had entered an enchanted castle, and the mystic inhabitants had laid a spell upon her. She was not conscious of moving. Did she drink a cup of tea? She could not remember. She recollected nothing until the door of the taxicab slammed behind her.

Betty peered from the side window, and received a distinct shock. Why, this Ali Baba's cave was almost opposite Nancy's! Nancy knew them. She must know them!

The moment she arrived home she was astonished to note that it was seven. She had been in that quaint house almost two hours. She ran to the telephone and called a number. "Doctor Maddox, please." She had to wait a minute.

"This is Betty Mansfield, doctor. I've a question to ask. Who lives in that little white house across the street from you, the house with the picket fence?"

"Hello!"

"There are four or five white houses across the street."

"Thanks!" With an indignant gesture she set the receiver on the hook. Cathewe usually remained at his desk until the paper was ready for the deserted us. A Complete Showing of Fall Merchandise Which Speaks for Itself

Every department in this store is filled to its capacity with merchandise, such as the public of this community demands. It is not the policy for this store to carry merchandise such as it cannot stand back of. It is not our aim to see how cheap an article we can buy, for cheap goods are only cheap at the time of purchase, but very costly in the end, not only for the customer, but for the merchant who intends to stay in his little town, as well.

The time has passed when merchants could make customers believe that they were giving them something for nothing. They have come to realize through actual experience that they received just what they paid for and nothing more, regardless of whether purchased in one's own little town or some far-off city.

If you are not as yet ready to make your purchase right now, come in, pick it out, and we will gladly hang it back for you. We can conscientiously say that the woman who buys her coat early this season will have advantages over the later buyer on account of the great strikes. By this we do not mean that there will be no coats on the market later on, but coats of quality will be limited.

BALANCED RATIONS

In making up rations it is necesessary to adhere to standards within certain limits, but some feeds may be substituted for others, as barley, wheat, and oats for corn. However, meat scrap and other animal-protein feeds cannot be replaced by highvegetable-protein feeds. All changes should be made gradually, as sudden changes may decrease egg production.

A great many poultrymen and live-stock feeders now believe that if the animal has a free choice it will select the ration that is most suitable. At the government farm at Beltsville, Md., the following mash was made up by keeping account of the amounts of the different feeds a laying flock consumed:

Mash. 16 pounds corn meal 6½ pounds meat scrap 1 pound bran
1 pound middlings
Scratch Mixture.

1 pound cracked corn 1 pound wheat 1 pound oats Here is a simple ration that has given very good results with Leghorns, but that has proved too fattening for Rocks and Wyandottes. Meat scrap, it will be seen, makes up over 25 per cent of the mash:

3 pounds corn meal 1 pound meat scrap Scratch Mixture. 2 pounds cracked corn 1 pound oats

For birds that are made too fat by the preceding ration, the following, containing only 16 per cent of meat scrap, but having considerable protein in other feeds, has been found a good

Mash. 1 pound corn meal
1 pound bran
% pound meat scrap
1 pound middlings
1 pound ground oats
Scratch Mixture. pounds cracked corn pound wheat pound oats pound barley

Poultrymen resort to every possible means to get their hens to eat a great deal of feed, especially in the winter when the days are short. One way is to cut the morning scratch feed to about half. The hungry bird then goes to the mash trough and gorges on the dry mash. Then to increase the consumption of mash, some of it is fed wet at noon and the hens will eat it when they would take no more of it dry.

Provide Separate Pens

for Males for Breeding

The breeder who carries over only the males he needs in his own pens may let them run with the flock as the easiest way for himself, if not the best. But the man who carries sur- FOR THE GANDERplus males for breeding must provide separate quarters for them. Preventable accidents and injuries are the ones that the breeder troubles hate to give 'em up. over. It is maddening to feel that a for lack of shutting up the pugnacious old cock; or failure to separate two cockerels that are suffering from incompatibility of temperament.

The cockerel house needs small pens and a good outside run. A coop that will house three hens is about ten. right for one male. Too small a coop in height and width will damage feathers and comb. Movable coops about the size of a good shipping coop, or a double exhibition coop, are very satisfactory since they are easily moved to fresh grass, and in winter can be gathered under one roof with

Value of Green Feed

The general practice of allowing the chicks to run outdoors, where they have access to direct sunlight, green plant-food and soil, is well founded. From the results of this investigation it appears that green plant-tissue will not prevent leg weakness and that the chick of its own accord will not eat enough green clover to prevent it. Green feed undoubtedly is of value in the ration of a chick; but the Ohio folks do not believe it can be fed in sufficient quantities to act as the sole source of the antirachitic factor.

Cause of Leg Weakness

Leg weakness is a condition brought about by different causes. It may be due to overfeeding of a forcing ration, or to an excess of bottom heat, or a deficiency of mineral elements in the feed. Sometimes leg weakness is caused by disease, but there is no mistaking the leg weakness of a chick that is otherwise well, and the leg weakness of a sick chick. The disease may be cured when the cause is found out. If the ration is faulty correct it.

Roosts for Chicks

A good rainy-day job is to provide roosting space for the growing chicks. Whether raised with or without hens, all too often the providing of roosts is delayed to the detriment of the chicks. It is not always practical to clean the floor of the coop or brooder house each day during the summer. To compel the chicks to spend night after night huddled among the droppings of previous nights is the best invitation for lice, unthriftiness and disease to attack the flock.

In addition to her duties as a student, Miss Colwell acted during the summer session as official assistant to Howard Yale McClusky, instructor in the Psychology Department of the School of Education, as well as assisting Mr. McClusky in statistical research work, which he was conducting personally. Miss Colwell graduated from the Cass City high school as valedictorian of the Class of 1913, after having made an unusually high standing throughout the four year course. Cass City friends are proud to say that according to her own statement a large proportion of her success in school work is due to the excellent foundation afforded by the instruction in the local high school. After graduation she attended Albion college for two years and was placed on the Scholarship Honor Roll there and became a member of the Honorary Scholarship Fraternity, Delta Eta Sigma. Other college work has been done at Ocean City, N. J., and at 🕼 George Washington University, Washington, D. C.

While in Washington during the World War, Miss Colwell was enrolled in the U. S. Keep in Trim!

Good Elimination Is Essential to Good Health.

THE kidneys are the blood filters. If they fail to function properly there is apt to be a retention of toxic poisons in the blood. A dull, languid feeling and, sometimes, toxic backaches, headaches, and dizziness are symptoms of this condition. Further evidence of improper kidney function is often found in burning or scanty passage of secretions. Each year more and more people are learning the value of Doan's Pills, a stimulant diuretic, in this condition. Scarcely a nook or hamlet anywhere but has many enthusiastic users. Ask your neighbor!

Costume Jewelry Trends to Elaborate Designing

Fashion's latest sensation registers in the form of a jewelry ensemble which matches the earrings to the elaborate pendant necklace. Just how strikingly beautiful such a compose set can be is told in this picture of lovely Escelle Clark, whose success on the screen has been so flattering. The necklace which she wears is of antique Florentine workmanship, each pendant, with matching earrings, being exquisitely wrought in gold filigree and the best of it all is that this beauteous ensemble was a gift from Estelle's father, who brought it to her from Venice, Italy.

United Central America

In 1823 the five Central American states were united into a national federation, which subsequently adopted a constitution modeled after that of the United States. The federation was partially ended by 1833, practically dissolved in 1839, and com-

Swiftest Sea Bird

The frigate bird is the swiftest of all sea birds. In the equatorial isles of the Pacific these birds are fed by the natives before they learn to fly. They soon become so tame that they will return to their perch at night, after a day of perfect freedom.
