

LEGISLATURE ENDS LONG SESSION

Appropriations, Death Penalty Provide Last Minute Controversies.

The record of another session of the Legislature has been written and the lawmakers have returned to face their constituents. The Senators and Representatives can offer as convincing proof of their unselfish, earnest devotion to duty the fact that they stayed in session longer than any other Legislature in many years, despite the fact that they received a flat salary of $800 per two year term no matter how much or how little law-making they do.

During the final days of the session the solons approved a proposed constitutional amendment providing that the pay of a member of the Legislature would be $3.00 per day during the period for which elected. This looks reasonable enough to win the approval of the voters when submitted in November 1928. It is interesting to note, however, that the straight wage of $3.00 per day would amount to $2,190.00 per two-year term.

As is the usual case, the closing hours of the session were devoted largely to an effort to reach an agreement between the Senate and House as to terms of many of the more important appropriation measures. Just how many millions the lawmakers finally appropriated and what amount will be spread on the tax roll for the next two years as a result of their action cannot be stated definitely until a careful check has been made of the final figures embodied in each of a multitude of budget bills.

A feature of the last week of the session was the failure of the Senate and House to reach an agreement regarding the terms of the capital punishment bill. A compromise report prepared by a Conference Committee of Senators and Representatives was approved by the House by a majority of more than 2 to 1, but was rejected by the Senate by a vote of 10 to 20. The Representatives insisted, that no referendum clause be tacked on to the bill while the Senators were equally determined in their views that the death penalty should not be restored to Michigan statute books without the approving action of the voters.

The lawmakers added considerable volume to the sum total of their enactments for the session when they approved the new school code, a bill of 324 pages prepared by the Superintendent of Public Instruction and introduced by Sen. Norman B. Horton of Fruit Ridge. This bill repeals and replaces by one orderly law more than 100 disjointed and confusing statutes relative to educational matters.

Another school bill of no little interest passed during the final week was the Turner bill appropriating $1,000,000 a year from the general fund of the State as special aid to the more needy school districts.

Of far reaching interest to both farmers and sportsmen is the passage of the Horton-Brake bill which requires all hunters to obtain the permission of the owner or lessee before entering upon farm land or farm woodlots connected therewith. This measure relieves the farmer of the necessity of posting and places the burden of responsibility upon the hunter.

Nine Divorce Decrees Granted

Nine divorce decrees were granted in circuit court in Tuscola county last week. They were: Doris Coleman Larabee vs. Nelson Larabee; Chas. Hazzard vs. Golda Hazzard; Warren Little vs. Martha Little; Celia M. Havers vs. Frank A. Havers; Lena Fritzer vs. John H. Fritzer; Helen Schaefer vs. Geo. R. Schaefer; Jesse E. Treiber vs. Wilhelmina Treiber; Grace Phillips vs. Carl Phillips; Clare Turner vs. Pearl Turner. None of these were contested except the last named case. The court room was crowded by spectators when this case was called Saturday morning and the crowd was disappointed when court officials and attorneys left the court room to conduct the hearing in the court chambers adjoining the court room. Witnesses were left in the court room until called to give their testimony. Judge Boomhower, who presided, reserved his decision for one week.

On May 12, in the case of John C. Atkinson et al vs. Wm. J. Moore, assumpsit, the jury, on direction of the court, returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff of $10,916.66, and it was order by the court that judgment be rendered for the same.

On May 13, in the case of the Southern Surety Co., a corporation, vs. W. J. Moore, assumpsit, the jury without leaving their seats and on direction of the court, returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $944.15 and it was ordered that judgment be rendered for same.

Judge Guy E. Smith of Gladwin presided at the hearing of these two cases.

Court will convene again on Tuesday, May 24, when the will case of the Estate of James W. Rossman, Deceased, will be heard by a jury.

No mother on "Mothers' Day" was greater surprised or more gratefully remembered than Mrs. John Moore of Minden City. Last Sunday morning about half past four, she was awakened by her telephone ringing. On answering she heard her son, Percy, of Los Angeles, California, talking to her. Before the conversation ended she also talked with Percy's wife, Mrs. Moore says she could hear each of them quite distinctly. There is more than three hours difference in time between here and California, so it was about one o'clock at night in California when the conversation took place.—Herald.

The Last Day

Rena Crandell Receives Diploma

Miss Rena Kathleen Crandell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Crandell of Cass City, was among the 231 graduates who received diplomas and badges at the annual community exercises of the Detroit Training Schools of Nurses held Thursday evening, May 12, in the auditorium of the Masonic Temple, Detroit. Dressed in white uniforms, the graduates entered the auditorium from entrances on either side. Two hundred graduate nurses, also in uniform, followed and took seats just back of the graduates. Rev. Reinhold Niebuhr, pastor of the Bethel Evangelical church, gave the principal address of the evening, after which the graduates stood and recited the Florence Nightingale pledge. Chorus were sung by the Schubert Choir of Windsor.

Miss Crandell was a member of the Henry Ford Hospital class and their diplomas were presented to them by Mrs. Henry Ford and the badges by Mrs. Edsel B. Ford. Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Crandell and Harry Crandell of Cass City attended the exercises.

This is the Florence Nightingale pledge recited by the graduates: "I solemnly pledge myself before God and in the presence of this assembly, to pass my life in purity and to practice my profession faithfully. I will abstain from whatever is deleterious and mischievous, and will not take or administer any harmful drug. I will do all in my power to elevate the standard of my profession and will hold in confidence all personal matters committed to my keeping, and all family affairs coming to my knowledge in the practice of my calling. With loyalty will I endeavor to aid the physician in this work and devote myself to the welfare of those committed to my care."

"Whoee-ee!" Says Lad, "Schoolzout!"

"Whoee-ee! Schoolzout!" shouted a bright faced lad Tuesday afternoon, as he raced for the door of the Paul schoolhouse, at the conclusion of the exercises which marked the last day of school for the year. He was shoved almost headlong down the front steps by the rest of the boys and girls, all eagerly trying to proclaim at the same time, "I've passed, I've passed. I got my diploma!" "See here, it's blue paper tied with a pretty pink bow!" The goal for which these 46 boys and girls had attended school, rain or shine, since last September, had been reached, and they now held in their hands the written rewards for their efforts. Their faces were wreathed with smiles as they shouted and ran here and there over the grass covered lawn.

The parents and friends of these happy youngsters were in the schoolhouse yet, where they had spent a few social hours as guests of the teacher, Miss Irene Hall.

The guests arrived about eleven o'clock and at high noon enjoyed a bountiful self-serve pot luck dinner.

There were nearly 100 persons present.

After dinner, Miss Hall announced a short program, which consisted of songs, readings and recitations by her pupils. The numbers were greeted by hearty applause.

Then came the hour for which they had waited, the awarding of the promotion certificates, each child receiving one. Three of the pupils also received large diplomas for attendance and punctuality (no absent or tardy marks during the whole year). These were: Hazel McLean, Aletha Wright and Lucile Anthes.

This social gathering was enjoyed by the members of the district; it was an opportunity to become better acquainted. The real value of it was expressed by Mrs. Zreema McIntyre, who said to a friend with whom she chatted: "I like these gatherings because it gives me a chance to get acquainted with my neighbors. You know, I have lived here a long time, and the older generation is leaving gradually, and new families are taking the places, and I meet them here and get acquainted with them and their children." Mrs. McIntyre's home is located just south of the schoolhouse, where she has resided many years, and witnessed many changes in the little school.

The company dispersed about three o'clock.

Miss Hall, who has had a successful year, has been re-engaged to teach the Paul school the coming year. She has been granted an increase in salary by the members of the school board, which consists of Walter McIntyre, Walter Anthes and Homer Hower.

Croswell Raises Tuition to $90 Year

According to a letter sent to the parents of non-resident students of Croswell high school by Superintendent Heemstra, the board of education recently passed a resolution raising the price of tuition from $75 to $90. This is to take effect at the beginning of the next school year. This action was taken as a result of a study of school costs, which showed that $75 was actually too low to be a fair proportion of costs for non-resident students.

Figures show that during 1925-26, says the Jeffersonian, $20,520 was spent in running the high school plant. This represents an expenditure of $135 per student, of which $92 per student was paid for instruction. The board deemed it fair and just that non-residents pay as a minimum the cost of the instruction. Hence $90.00 was fixed as the future tuition cost.

Death Summons Chas. E. Ale

Charles E. Ale, who spent his boyhood days in Cass City, was stricken with apoplexy on May 2 at Aberdeen, Washington, and died within a half hour in St. Joseph's hospital. He was a well known figure in Grays Harbor, lumbering for a period of 25 years. The Aberdeen Daily World of May 3 says:

"Mr. Ale was 56 years old and had lived on Grays Harbor since about 1905. He had been affiliated with the Greenwood Timber company, Hart-Wood Lumber company and other timber concerns.

pany in Raymond until he was forced by eye trouble to retire in 1924. He lived in Raymond for about a year in 1923 and 1924, returning to Aberdeen upon retiring.

"Mr. Ale was in 1917 part owner of a shingle mill on North River. He sold his interests upon joining the Hart-Wood company.

"He lived in Aberdeen with his sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Bender, before her marriage and afterwards lived alone here. He was single and is said to have had no relatives other than the sister, who now lives in Spokane. Mrs. Bender is now enroute to Aberdeen to make funeral arrangements.

"Mr. Ale was well known to lumbermen all over the Harbor, principally as an expert accountant. He was highly regarded both personally and for ability in his work."

21ST ANNUAL CO. FIELD MEET JUNE 10

Events for Girls and Junior Boys in Addition to Regular Program.

Events for boys below the high school and an athletic program for high school girls will be on the program as well as the regular events for high school boys at the 21st annual field meet of the Tuscola Co. Athletic Association which will be held at the county seat on Friday, June 10.

Medals will be given to the winners in the regular events which are as follows: 100-yard dash, 200-yd. dash, 440-yd. run, 880-yd. run, one mile run, 120 yd. low hurdles, half mile relay, running broad jump, javelin throw, discus throw, high jump, pole vault and shot put. The championship base ball game completes the day's program.

Principal Paul Gibson of Vassar is president of the county association, Superintendent Francis Ode of Fairgrove is vice president, and Superintendent C. P. Kline of Akron is secretary.

At the 1926 field meet, two new records for Tuscola county were established. Severance of Cass City made 20 ft. 11½ in. in the running broad jumps. The former record in this event was 19 ft. 10½ in. Parsell of Caro threw the javelin a distance of 167 ft. 6 in. The previous record in the javelin throw was 136 ft. 6 in.

Representatives of eight high schools of the county at a recent meeting of the association voted to discontinue girls' interscholastic games in basketball and will confine activities in that sport to interclass games. A. F. Westphal, state supervisor of physical education of the department of public instruction, in addressing the meeting stated the reasons he opposed competitive basketball between girls' teams of different schools. It is natural for girls as well as women, he said, out of a sense of loyalty to exceed their strength in such occupations. Boys, when not in condition to play their hardest, will not exert themselves beyond natural strength. The results on the health of school girl athletes from overtraining in basketball have been bad, Mr. Westphal said. The speaker also spoke of the necessity of rigid physical examinations of students before being allowed to participate in athletics.

Sod Turned for Se- bawaing Condensery

Actual construction of the Detroit Creamery Company's milk condensery plant in Sebawaing was started with the turning of the first sod for the building Thursday afternoon. The first shovel of dirt was turned by President J. E. Wurm of the Sebawaing Chamber of Commerce, with the assistance of G. F. Gremel. Appropriate ceremonies attended the turning of the first sod, which was witnessed by a committee of the Chamber of Commerce, B. A. Long, field man for the Detroit Creamery Company, and others. Mr. Long, in a few words, expressed his company's appreciation of the ready co-operation they have found and hoped that it would continue. President Wurm responded that there was no question about that and ventured the prediction that in five years or less the plant now building would be receiving 50,000 pounds or more of milk daily. The F. R. Patterson Construction Company of Detroit are the builders.—Blade.

Phun and Philosophy

By Uncle Dud.

Uncle Dud says: "Inconsistency is a fault but inconstancy is a sin. Swelled head never made a fat friendship list."

No radio bug ever gets ecstatic over static.

Failure envies success but seldom seeks to emulate it.

Cheerfulness is the only asset that hard times cannot wipe out.

No matter how uncertain the weather may be, it is a safe bet that we'll have more or less of it.

When a man gets bawled out he generally thinks it is a crying shame.

Curiosity may have killed a cat but it is certain that it has caused many lively catastrophes.

It is all right to hope for the best but a lot more so to get out and hustle for it.

Passing the buck is simply some folks way of admitting that they are not competent to handle the proposition.

The main reason why there is such a large amount of law-breaking is because there is so much law-making.

A mirror casts reflections because it is bright but a lot of folks do the same thing for the opposite reason.

It is true that perfection cannot be attained in this life—which is all the more reason why we should seek to attain it.

"America for American" is a dandy good slogan. Now, all that is necessary is to decide who are Americans and we'll be all ready to go.

Occasionally a business man will make a success of his business without newspaper advertising but it is so infrequent as to be remarkable.

Generous deeds and unselfish purpose are the strongest bonds of a community. No man can live unto himself alone. Be what you want your neighbor to be and you'll find that he is just about what you wanted him.

Funny thing but a positive answer is lots of times expressed by the emphatic negative word "no."

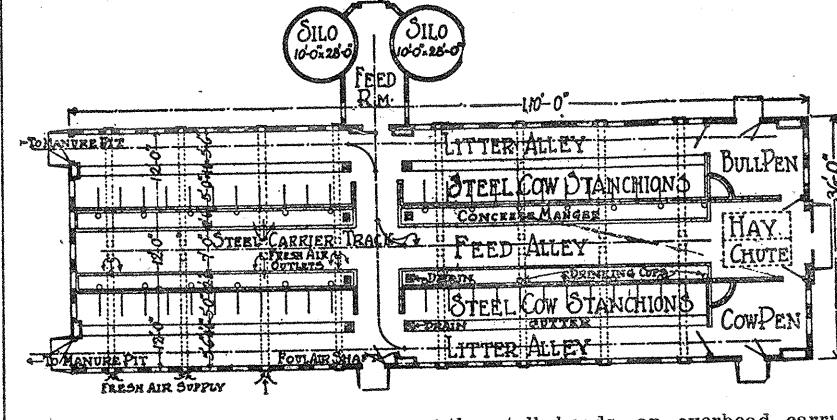

Down in Missouri a man named John Bird was married to a lady named Mary Wren. The preacher who tied the knot was called Sparrow and the attending witnesses were Fred Finch and Lucy Hawk. There was a big wedding reception after the ceremony and we'll hazard the guess that there were a lot of Swallows in evidence.

A True Saying.

Yesterday I sought with ardor for a man to hoe my spuds and today I pleaded harder with the local loafing bloods. But my pleadings went unheeded by the guys who're out of work and my garden's still unweeded and is looking far from perk. The I offered princely guerdon to the man who'd wield a hoe, no one raised the white man's burden and the dratted weeds still grow. On the corners sit the loafers, cussing life both fore and aft, and they envy those whose "showfurs" whizz about in shining craft; but, when e'er a job comes drifting down their way, as jobs will do, from the scene you'll see 'em sifting—pulling off a quick skidoo. Then I sought out Hiram Hipper who is busy as a flea from the morn till the big dipper swings athwart the modern sea; and he promised that tomorrow he would seek my garden patch and would hand out deepest sorrow to the whole darn weedy batch. There are lots of old time sayings that are false as false can be—nothing but the aimless bayings of some guy who talked too free—but there's one that still is perking and is just as good as new, "If you want a man for working, get a busy gazabo!"

Qualities that make a man feel superior are usually ones that cause his acquaintances to rate him as inferior.

Lime Plaster Affords Variety in Finishes

Lime plaster is used to produce many finishes, because lime has certain qualities not found in any other material. It works smoothly and easily on the plasterer's trowel. This fact is well illustrated by the common saying of plasterers that lime "spreads like warm butter." This plasticity helps them to do more and better work.

Concrete Has Many Uses in Construction

Concrete is made by mixing portland cement, sand, pebbles or broken stone and water in certain definite proportions, according to the kind of work for which the concrete is to be used, and then permitting the mixture to harden under the proper conditions in forms or molds.

Cover Old Shingles

Now you can build a better roof right over the old wood shingles. You not only save the expense and bother of tearing them off, but you get a roof that's fire-safe, unusually weather-tight, long-lived and trouble-free and one that adds many dollars worth of beauty to your home as well.

the stall heads, an overhead carrier system for transporting the feed to the mangers and to remove the litter, and a ventilating system that insures a continuous supply of fresh air for the animals, and without any draft.

The equipment enumerated is essential in these days of high labor costs, for it makes the numerous details of properly caring for a dairy herd easier, and cuts the cost of the labor required to perform the work.

The exterior view of the building shows the continuous rows of windows that admit sunshine and warmth to the stable floor. The stalls are ranged on two sides of a central feeding alley, with the cow facing the center of the building. The gutters are in the rear and are in range of the sunshine admitted by the windows, an arrangement that helps keep the building sanitary.

Above the stable is the mow floor, where there is plenty of room to store the roughage this number of animals will need during the time they are housed. Adjoining are twin silos for the fresh feed that is supplied to the cows during the winter.

Cheap Plaster Costly Experiment in the Home

So-called cheap construction is usually expensive construction, in that it causes constant care and expense when deterioration begins. Reasonable construction can be obtained only by paying a reasonable price.

Keep Cows Clean

Custom has long decreed that horses should be kept clean. The same custom should include the dairy cows. The body of the dairy cow, especially that part of the body, flanks and under which are above the milk pail, may be the source of much of the contamination in milk. The best method of preventing contamination is to have the cows clean at milking time. It is much more important that the cows be properly groomed than the horse.

Quality Dairy Products

Prof. H. W. Gregory, of the dairy department, Purdue university, is responsible for the statement that one of the largest and oldest butter companies in Boston is to begin immediately to feature pasteurized butter from tuberculin-tested herds. He states that this is an indication of the trend in the industry, and that if dairymen in the Middle West are to avoid having their product discriminated against, they must use care in putting out only a high grade product.

The DAIRY

PASTURE IS HALF OF FEED PROBLEM

The real value of a good pasture is so little realized that on only a few farms does the pasture play the part that it should in providing the year's feed for dairy cattle and other stock, says W. J. Fraser, dairy farming specialist of the college of agriculture, University of Illinois. A good productive pasture will feed the dairy herd for practically one-half the year and so is entitled to as much consideration as all the other crops combined that make up the winter half of the ration, he pointed out.

"A good pasture not only saves land and labor, but also provides for and stimulates production and has a fine conditioning effect on live stock, especially on milk cows in getting them in shape for the winter's production on barn feeding.

"One-sixteenth of the area of the farms in Illinois is unutilized land and bluegrass is the pasture crop commonly used over this large area. It is a well-known fact that bluegrass gives a low yield of pasture in mid-summer. For this reason the college of agriculture, University of Illinois, conducted a pasture experiment to determine the actual amount of feed received from bluegrass each week throughout the growing season, for four consecutive years. The result showed that bluegrass produced only about one-seventh as much feed a year as did the same area in corn or alfalfa; only one-half as much as oats, and one-fourth as much as red clover.

"The low yield is not the only trouble with bluegrass pasture. The worst of it is, it turns up its toes and stops growing entirely when the rains cease, because it is shallow rooted. And this drought usually comes when there is the greatest need of feed, because of the excessive heat of mid-summer and the tortuous files.

"One of the four years it would have required nine and one-half acres of bluegrass pasture to support a cow after June 1. Two years there were periods of three and a half to four months when bluegrass pasture was practically worthless as a crop to produce feed for stock, as it would have required 30 acres a cow to furnish barely sufficient feed. Now it is easily seen that when pasture is this poor it ceases to be a pasture and becomes merely an exercising ground.

"These tests and common experience show that bluegrass fails more than half the season and fails at the busiest time of the year, and when stock need the feed the worst. The most certain thing about bluegrass pasture is its uncertainty, and the loss that comes to the whole herd from lack of supplying sufficient feed during the hot dry weather of mid-summer. The loss thus sustained in the year is almost beyond comprehension. It may easily amount to the difference between success and failure to the dairy farmer.

"The cow's requirement for feed is continuous throughout the summer, and in order to solve the pasture problem economically we must have some pasture crop that will furnish an ample and continuous supply of feed for the six summer months. The results on eighty-one dairy farms in Illinois show that three-fourths of an acre of sweet clover pasture is enough to support a cow during the six summer months. This is the average efficiency of sweet clover pasture, not in a few exceptional cases, but the common experience in all sections of the state and under all the varying conditions on these farms. The reason that sweet clover continues to grow in dry weather is because it has a large and deep root system, growing from four to six or more feet deep, while most bluegrass roots are in the top six inches of the soil.

"To show that cows will produce well on sweet clover pasture, it is only necessary to mention that I have had a cow on my own farm that produced 50 pounds of milk a day without grain. I have seen four other cows that produced between 65 and 75 pounds of milk a day on sweet clover pasture alone without grain."

Keeping Switches Clear

Many a train delay in winter weather used to be due to snow and ice choking rail switches. Oil fires once were burned on the ground around important switches to keep ice melted out. Nowadays it is done by laying lengths of electric heaters between the ties so that switches can work in winter with as little interference as in summer.

Concluded from first page. Home Economics department, is studying design. The girls are doing novelty dyeing, experimenting with various dye stuffs.

Caro's baseball team comes to Cass City next Tuesday, May 24. The second game of the week will be played Friday, also here, with Akron. The boys need your support.

First Grade—We are building a farm yard as a project. We have visited farms to get ideas, and are constructing an ideal yard. In our last spell down the girls won from the boys.

Second Grade—This week we are studying the life of the children's poet, Robert Louis Stevenson, and enjoying reading his poems. Frisky Squirrel, by Arthur Scott Bailey, is being read during our story period. We are all glad that Enid Barnes is able to be in school again.

Third Grade—Betty's and Patty's number classes are studying hard to win stars in their number downs. Friday, Patty's class won the two stars, and so far this week, is three stars ahead of the other class. A robin's nest was built this year in a tree just outside of our window. There

VOGUE OF ALL-BLACK ACCENTED IN TAILORED SILKS FOR THE MATRON

WHAT Paris so enthusiastically indorses the all-black vogue returns to the good fortune of the matron. No mode is quite so distinctive for the woman of dignity and years beyond flapper age as that of a handsome black silk costume.

Because of the especial importance at present of the black silk coat, also the black silk tailored suit, likewise the black silk one-piece afternoon frock, rich black silk weaves are of paramount interest throughout exclusive fabric displays. These place special stress on taffeta, faille, bengaline, moire, reversible satin, also heavy crepe.

That moire silk lends itself admirably to semi-tailored smartness one must agree after studying the style-points of the frock here pictured. While this dress has a sanderizing effect, yet fullness is introduced ever so adroitly in side panels held in place under scallops arranged in tiers. All the scallops are bound with crepe satin. Another favorite frock for the ma-are baby robins in it now, and we are very much interested in watching them. The nest is so close to the window that we have been able to watch the robins' housekeeping ever since they began the nest. We are reading "The Tapestry Room" by Mrs. Moleworth for our story hour. Fourth Grade—We are studying all about Michigan this week. We are learning how to use correctly troublesome words. Even though this work comes in our language class, we are trying to continue it in all our classes. We are reviewing the multiplication tables. Sixth Grade—We are memorizing "Gradatim" by J. G. Holland. We are making maps of the north and the south poles. On them we are drawing lines showing the longitude and the latitude. Part of the problem is to show the proper curve of these lines on the flat surface of the paper.

London's False Teeth

Most persons have the idea from his books that Jack London was a huge, roistering fellow, prime of health and ready of fist. He was, alas, a shorty, and Frank O'Connell, a New York newspaper man, who was on many bouts of other than fistic kind with London and who lived with him for a considerable period, relates that Jack had a set of false teeth which he carefully put on a chair beside his bed every night.—McNaught's Monthly.

Minstrels as Outcasts

It is said that the minstrels of the Middle ages were usually of questionable virtue and honor, and laws were enacted to repress them. They were called "shadows" or "roving men," and under the law they were not permitted to inherit property, to collect debts or to take part in Christian sacraments.

Ground Hog Fast

North America has several species of marmots, but the common eastern woodchuck is known to everyone as the ground hog, says Nature Magazine. Woodchucks do not store food, but eat heavily during the early fall and become excessively fat. In October or November they retire to their dens for a long hibernating sleep which lasts until spring. Length about twenty-three inches, weight eight pounds.

WHY

Man Is Not Adapted to Long-Distance Running.

Long-distance running is unnatural for man, it has been decided by some doctors investigating the question, "For what kind of running is man naturally built?" A study of the muscular activities of primitive man has led to this conclusion.

In the primitive state he does not resort to it as a means of protection from wild beasts, which are little likely to attack him unless molested. Nor in his hunting expeditions is he called upon to run long distances, for his method of hunting is essentially that adopted by most carnivora, i. e., by stalking. In short, under natural conditions man rarely, if ever, has occasion to run long distances. When trekking in search of fresh pastures he walks. Short-distance running serves most, if not all, his purposes, as in play and seeking shelter.

It would thus appear that long-distance running is not natural to man, and, such being the case, say the doctors, it is difficult to see what good purpose can be served by it, as regards either health or physique. It is evident that it must put considerable strain on the heart, since the vigorous rhythmic contractions of practically all the voluntary muscles of the body drive the blood into the right cardiac chambers in quantities many times greater than during rest or moderate exercise, and unless the right ventricle is able to deliver its contents into the lungs with sufficient promptitude, dilation of that chamber is apt to ensue.

On the other hand, in games involving intermittent strenuous exercise, such as tennis, the heart is afforded ample opportunity to recover itself after each bout, and this game can be played with impunity for hours together by many people past middle life, provided the heart muscle is healthy and well equipped with blood, and provided, also, the arterial blood pressure is low.

Why Most Women Do Not Reveal Real Age

A possible explanation of woman's reluctance to tell her real age is offered by Thyra Samter Winslow in an article in Liberty. "A lot of women have deceived their husbands about their real age," she writes. "It doesn't seem possible to the male population, but the supposedly gentler sex will know that I'm right—though that may be one of the things they are not admitting to their own particular men, for reasons of their own. In fact, the same little wife who looks up into her husband's eyes and coos, 'Darling, I don't see how a wife can live with a man and not have him know her real age,' may be rather glad that her own husband believes her to be the age she says she is and doesn't do any real investigating to find out the truth.

"I've known many a girl to be one age one year and a good five years younger the next, when Mr. Right came along," Mrs. Winslow explains. "No real intention to deceive, of course; but must you tell a man everything? Mothers and sisters and a girl friend are only too glad to enter into a conspiracy and to assist in the deception of making the girl seem younger—and happier; and who cares whether a man knows the real age of the girl he's marrying?"

Why Ships Have Keels

Why has a big ship three keels? All big warships and large merchant vessels have, in addition to the ordinary keel at the bottom of the ship, two other keels, one on each side below the water line, which are known as bilge keels. They are fitted in order to reduce the rolling of the vessel, and their success in this is remarkable. Bilge keels add greatly to the comfort of passengers traveling by large ocean-going liners.

The bilge keels are sometimes three or four feet in width, and vary in length to nearly its total length. It was at first thought that bilge keels would reduce the speed of vessels, but this has been proved not to be the case.

Why Salmon Run Fell Off

The latest explanation of the fallure of salmon runs in the Fraser river, Vancouver, during the last few years comes from a coastal Indian who believes that the salmon have been offended by the prevalence of jazz music. The women of the tribe, whose duty it is to sing soothing melodies from the banks of the river, have forgotten the old-time favorites of the salmon, and are resorting to the modern syncopated melodies. Meanwhile the salmon are believed to be taking refuge from jazz in mid-Pacific.

Why Wires "Hum"

The mournful humming noise given off by telephone wires is produced by vibrations of the wires set in motion by the wind. The intensity of the humming is determined to some extent by the tightness of the wires and the distance between poles. The greatest noise is heard at the poles, the wood being set in vibration by the wires.

Why People Sing Flat

A defective musical ear is the chief cause. Much can be done to overcome this defect. Ear training exercises will help. Proper breath control is also beneficial. Learning to play some musical instrument is a good thing, and a knowledge of musical intervals will also assist the singer.

POOR ECONOMY TO GRIND DAIRY FEED

Grinding soy bean and coarse alfalfa hay, in an attempt to make them better feeds for dairy cattle, is of doubtful economy, judging from the results of investigations carried out last year by the dairy department of the college of agriculture, University of Illinois.

Comparison was made with whole hay and with hay chaffed by means of a silo filler. About 14 per cent of the whole soy bean was refused, the refuse being coarse stems, while only 2.5 per cent of the chaffed hay and 2 per cent of the ground hay were refused. The gain in digestible matter through chaffing and grinding was estimated to be about 50 pounds a ton, or about 5 per cent for each process. This small gain was due to the fact that the stems were so much lower in nutritive value than the other portions of the hay. The labor and power required were about five times as great for grinding as for chaffing.

There was less advantage in grinding and chaffing the alfalfa hay than in the case of the soy bean hay. Only 5 per cent of the whole hay was left uncut, and chaffing and grinding resulted in the refusal of only 1 per cent of the hay prepared in these ways. Here again, grinding proved a much more expensive process than chaffing.

The results of the feeding trial showed that, in both the soy bean hay and alfalfa hay trials, the amount of milk produced a ton of hay fed was practically the same regardless of whether the hay was fed whole, chaffed or ground. The Pennsylvania Experiment station has reported that digestion trials carried out with alfalfa hay showed practically no effect of grinding upon the digestibility of the hay. It is concluded, therefore, that grinding of hay is of doubtful economy unless labor and power are relatively cheap and hay and other feeds relatively high priced. The chaffing of soy bean hay having coarse stems proved to be a fairly economical procedure.

Self-Feeders Not Good for Calf, Says Expert

Dairy calves do not have sense enough to balance their ration for suitable growth. After three years, the South Dakota agricultural college finds that calves get too fat or eat such expensive feeds as to make their gains too costly.

The self-feeders were filled with corn, ground oats and whole oats, linseed oil meal, bran, alfalfa and the minerals salt and bonemeal. During the experiment the calves developed rickets. This is a result of insufficient minerals or poor assimilation. As plenty of minerals was supplied, it was assumed that the calves could not assimilate what they ate. The calves were kept in a barn rather better supplied with sunlight than the average. However, the sunlight came through the ordinary glass. Calves should be exposed to the direct rays of the sun at least one hour daily, says Thomas Olson, who conducted the experiment.

Registered Animals Not Always High Producers

Too many farmers seem to be of the impression that if the animal is registered it will bring about the necessary improvement in their herd. But such is not always the case. Many a pure-bred animal is a scrub for the reason that there has been very little improvement in the family for several generations. The average farmer, when he buys a bull, looks only at the pedigree and thinks that if the animal has the papers it is just what he wants. The pedigree should be studied to note the records of the dam and the grand-dams as far back as the fifth and sixth generations. The records of the females are the first things that should interest, then consider the bull. If the pedigree is satisfactory, then study the bull to determine whether or not he will do for the herd.

Rich in Minerals

Milk is very rich in mineral matter and the milk producing organs of the cow are so constituted that they can produce milk of only a certain definite composition. That is to say the milk of a given cow, when she is in normal condition, always contains certain definite percentages of protein, sugar, fat, mineral matter and water. Through breeding and selection we have produced cows that yield several times as much as nature's cows.

Dairy Squibs

Fall freshened cows give more and cheaper milk and butter fat.

Two misfits in any dairy herd are the masculine cow and the effeminate bull. Both are far too common.

Dairy stables must be properly ventilated in winter or cows will not produce so well nor keep healthy.

CHAPTER IV

Under Cover

An hour later, in spite of the discomforts incident to a first day in the woods, Thomas Brent was undergoing a feeling of half contentment for the first time since he could remember. The meal which had started with frog legs had ended gloriously with light bread and cream gravy cooked by Freck. And the strangest part of it had been that, although Mr. Brent approached every bit of food gingerly and with suspicion, and with many maledictions against the physician who would send him there, he kept on eating and relishing just the same.

Freck was nodding a few feet away. Mr. Brent allowed his eyes to travel upward toward the tree above him, then far down to where the stream lay.

"Freck," he asked presently, "don't I see a light down there?"

Freck rubbed his eyes, gazed hard, even stepping out of the range of the fire that he might see the better. "Yeh," he answered authoritatively. "It's a light."

"What's it doing there? I hear somebody talking—sounds like a couple of folks."

Freck started back again to his place against the rocks. "Guess it's old Mammy Taylor and Mammy Bacon. They come out here crawdadding once in a while."

"Crawdadding? What's that?"

"Catching crawdads. They're little hard-shelled things with flippers on that live in the water." Freck tried his best to give a vivid description as he could. "We'll get some of 'em tomorrow. We've got a lot of things to do, Mr. Brent. We got to go swimming, and hunting, and rob birds' nests, and lots of things."

The answer was only a grunt from Mr. Brent. He closed his eyes and soaked in the sounds of the night, the faint screeching of an owl in the far-away hickories, the droning of the crickets, the creaking of the tree toads, the lapping of the water, and the ripples far below.

Freck's voice at last aroused. "Guess Mammy Taylor and Mammy Bacon are going to stay all night. They've built a fire."

"Huh," said Mr. Brent dreamily. "Wish I had something to put on my feet. They are sore as bolts."

"Yes, Mammy Taylor and Mammy Bacon are the biggest women in town, I guess. One of 'em weighs more than two hundred pounds. She's got an uncle that's a voodoo."

"Colored?"

"Yes," replied Freck. "They are getting crawdads for a party maybe."

"Well, I wish they'd move on. I don't like 'em." Brent settled against the rocks again. His face was assuming the grouchy appearance which the frog legs for a few minutes had driven away. His mind was working on business again.

"If I had a fellow like that Edwards, it wouldn't make so much difference," he was saying to himself. "Scrotles doesn't know anything and I'll be blamed if I'm going back there and handle that business and kill myself. I'll stay out here and die first."

There was a heavy roar from above; a crash. Thomas Brent sent a glance upward to note nothing but blackness.

"Here comes my rain," averred Freck.

A flash. The branches of the trees swung lower than ever. The red of the fire paled momentarily in the greenish light. A drop of rain sizzled in the fire; a roar. The lightning broke again.

Thomas Brent leaped to his feet. "Back in the cave, Freck," he shouted, and the boy jumped with him. The rain had come—solidly, with the roar of a waterfall. They saw the fire flare, fall, and rise again before the onslaught of the enemy. They saw it flicker and fall. They were in darkness.

There was nothing to do but sit there and listen to the rain and the swishing of the branches without. Nothing to do—but nothing for Thomas Brent to do sit there and reflect that rain would bring dampness, and dampness would bring rheumatism, and dampness would bring rheumatism, possibly a cold, possibly pneumonia, if it were nothing else, it would be typhoid fever, or some kindred ailment. In the horizon of Mr. Brent's thoughts there was nothing good.

"A fine chance I've got," he muttered again and again; "a fine chance. Why, two weeks out here and they'll be taking me home in a wooden kimono. Huh! Why?"

It was then that there came from afar a wall that caused Thomas Brent to pause in his reverie. Again it came—and again.

"Hear that, Freck?" Brent's voice was somewhat anxious.

"Huh?" came sleepily from beside him.

Again that wail, drowned out at last by rain and thunder. Again Brent perked his head forward.

"Great Scott! It's those crawling-dadders," Brent crept to the opening of the cave, then slunk back again precipitously. There was a feeling of gladness that he at least was under cover.

From afar came: "Lawdy, lawdy, lawdy! Oh, for mussey sake! Oh, for mussey sake!"

Mr. Brent crawled to the entrance of the cave. "Hello," he yelled.

The answering call was a wild wail of nothing in particular, made even more inarticulate by crashes of thunder.

"Get under cover somewhere, darn it!" went forth the order of Brent as he crawled back again.

But the command did no good. Again he tried to sleep. Again the wildest of screeches broke forth from the far below, screeches and prayers and howling cries for aid. Once more Brent sought the entrance to the cave.

"What's the matter?"

There was a lull in the storm, enough for him to hear:

"Oh, lawdy's sake, somebody come and get us, somebody come and get us! We's in de middle!"

"In the middle?" bawled Brent.

"Middle of what?"

"Middle ob de ribber, middle ob de ribber. Oh, l-a-w-d-y!"

"Well, get out then, you dern fools!" came from the cave as Thomas Brent went grumbling back to his pallet.

"Just the way," he mused; "try to have a decent little storm and it's got to be all bungled up by a couple of fool crawdadding women! Shut up down there!"

But there was no shutting them up. Wail after wail arose. Howls, screams, shrieks, screeches, cries, yelps—all came seething through the storm and into the angry ears of Mr. Thomas Brent, clock turner. He stuffed his fingers in his ears, but it seemed to do no good. Still he heard the cries from below. And still he thought of the storm without, the dry comfort within, and stayed away from the mouth of the cave.

Then there came from below, fraught with fear and with terror: "Oh, Heaven, we's drownin'!"

Angered at their foolishness in staying in the rain when there must be shelter near, Mr. Brent crawled to the mouth of the cave, and for one brief instant stepped on the slippery ledge beyond.

The one instant was enough. A wild howl from a fat throat, a frantic clutching at nothing in particular, a scramble, grunts, imprecations and bumps followed in quick succession. Mr. Brent had slipped and now was traveling down the long, slippery bank toward the river.

"Demmit!" he gurgled, and grasped wildly. He caught two handfuls of mud and grass, and nothing else. "Woo!" He had bumped against a jutting rock, stopped, scrambled to his feet, slipped again and was traveling once more forcibly downward. "Flump!" He had landed against a tree, grasped it with mud-greased arms, failed in his hold and gone on again. "Splush!" he was at the bottom, sitting vaguely in water, and gazing out to a broad rock in the middle of the stream, where the lightning had revealed two very fat and very much terrorized negro mammies.

Mr. Brent grunted, attempted to rise, then sat back in the water.

"What's the matter?" he asked, somewhat excitedly. "What are you standing out there for, huh?"

"How's we gwine he'p it?" was shouted back. "We done get out heah an' de flah went out."

"Well, get off!"

"How's we gwine get off, man, when we doan know the way?"

"Can you beat it?" Mr. Brent asked himself, splashing water with both hands to emphasize the state of his mind. "How're you going to get off? Why, you nuttonheads, walk off!"

"How's we gwine walk off, when they ain't nuthin' to walk on, man? Foh goodness sakes, come he'p us!"

"I'll be dinged if I will," said Brent angrily. He was still thinking about the scramble down the hill.

"Den we's gwine drown! We's gwine drown! Oh—"

"Going to do nothing of the kind! Shut up and stay there until daylight. Darn it, you've broken every bone in my body!"

He suddenly ceased. Another flash of lightning had shown him a queer picture in the middle of the stream.

One of the women was kneeling on the great rock, chanting in her plantation manner:

Oh, frow out de life line.
Frow out de life line—

"Shut up, Lizzie Taylah!" came shoutingly from the other, "cause dey ain't gwine be no life line. Dat ar man's jest gwine let us stay out heah an' drown our poah hoids off, an' ef he doese, lady, I'll hant him! I'll hant him 'till his fohlock hangs down like a shaepskin at de cable end ob a tuikey roost. Stop yoh chantin', Lizzie Taylah, an' stahnt hantin'."

Mr. Thomas Brent listened in amazement. Then dazedly and drippingly he rose from the water and in desperation started for the rock. The fattest of the women saw him coming. As he drew near, almost shoulder-deep in the water, she allowed one more screech to echo forth and then plumped down upon him.

"What the—"

That was all. Brent went under, to come up with a struggling, gasping, two-hundred-pound negro mammy in his arms.

"Whaffo yo'—" she began, "whaffo—"

"That's enough," grunted the man, and started back to shore. Ten minutes later, panting and exhausted, he dragged the woman up on the bank and left her there as he started for the other.

Once again there was a struggle, once again he went under, this time with Mammy Taylor, both to flounder and to blow water like porpoises. Then, reaching the shore again, Brent stood angrily defiant. "Now!" he shouted.

"Yeh, now!" came back in feminine tones. "Now we's gwine to lay out oheah an' get striked wif lightning. Yeh, now."

"Gwine git pnoomonias, dat's what we's gwine git!" came from Mammy Taylor.

"Shut up!" yelled Mr. Brent.

"We's gwine die ob de pnoomonias."

"Gwine die," chanted Mammy Taylor.

"Gwine die," added Mammy Bacon.

"An-n-n-n-n go to Hebbin'!"

"Gwine die!"

"Stop that singing!" ordered Brent angrily.

"Gwine leave us—" began Mammy Taylor again with two-hundred-flesh power.

"On de bank!"

"All a-lone!"

"Oh-h-h, gosh!" The exclamation was Mr. Thomas Brent's as he seized Mammy Taylor and half dragged her to her feet. "If you're going to sit out here in the rain all night instead of doing the sensible thing, well, grab hold of something."

And thus the start up the hill to the cave was made. Thus it was begun, but thus it was not finished. They went twenty feet and then slipped back ten; then thirty and slipped back twenty. Puffing, blowing, trying to talk and merely gasping, Brent clung to trees, bits of shrubbery—anything that would help him with his hefty burden.

At last he succeeded, placed the chattering figure in the cave by the side of the sleeping Freck, and turned to go down the hill again. And he repeated his former descent, with the difference of receiving a few more bumps.

Once again at the bottom, Mammy Bacon was waiting, chanting again, singing hymns of the camp meeting, while her eyes glowed white and big in the flashing of lightning, and her clothing ran more and more water with every fresh outburst of rain. Mr. Brent pulled himself to his feet and tried to size up the burden that he must haul to the top of the hill. It was impossible in the darkness. He merely grabbed, managed to seize an arm and started.

A half hour later, a huddled, miserable figure of a man sat hunched in the darkness on the little ledge beyond the cave. The rain had changed to a drizzle now, but that, instead of helping, only made his clothing cling to him the more uncomfortably and clammy. He vaguely felt that his body was black and blue and purple. He knew that every muscle twitched and that rheumatism was beginning to get out its sledge hammers for classy work in various parts of his anatomy. His stomach was craving for food that did not exist. His lungs were still sore from their puffing. His bare feet were bleeding. From within the cave were coming sleepy sounds:

"How's yo' all, Lizzie Taylah?"

"Ah's all done wrapped up in dis yere blanket. How's yo'?"

"Ah's comf'ble. Ah done guess we'll have to call dat man de sailah 'cause he done cum out in his lifeboat an' saved ouah lives."

Outside the man of many bruises and discomforts snorted.

Again came the sounds from within.

"Lizite—"

"Min-hum-m-m-m."

"Dat sho is a luvable man; done give yo his cave lak dis yere."

"Sho is, Sallie."

"Know what Ah's gwine do? Ah's gwine t' plump right out theah an' frow mah arms aroun' him. He sho' wouldn't mind O' Mammy Bacon."

It was right at that moment when Mr. Thomas Brent, former cave dweller, sent his hands spasmodically into the air.

"Back to nature!" he murmured angrily again as his prize sore toe bumped into a jagged stone on the downward descent. "Back to boyhood! It's back to town for me!"

The Poor Polyglot
A well-known blind beggar, who is able to say "Thank you" in several languages, wears a placard saying, "This blind man is a polyglot." A good woman passing near stopped to leave her offering, and having read the placard, said to her companion, "That poor man! Not only blind, but also polyglot!"—Paris Le Figaro.

SHABBONA SCHOOL NOTES.
"From beginning unto end, school towards exams does tend."
We approach the end of the school year with mixed feelings. One is of joy of the anticipated freedom, one of sorrow as we remember that no more shall we meet as we have again and one of anxiety as we think of the future and what it will mean of weal or woe to the young lives whom we have been so closely associated.
Our school has been the smallest of late that it has been this term. This cause is the scarlet fever epidemic and scare. Thursday and Friday the younger members of the school had a foretaste of vacation. The reason is that the seventh and eighth grades were writing the state exams.
The number writing here was the smallest in some time. Reason, the same as what makes our school small.
Thirty-one pupils wrote on seventh on Thursday and sixteen wrote on the eighth on Friday.
JASON A. KITCHIN, Teacher.

PAINT THOUGHTS.
Here are a few thoughts about the selection of paint. An outside paint that flats after it is applied lacks protective qualities. It is protection from absorption of water that is needed.
Flat paints lack oil which forms the tissue which offers that protection. Inexpensive paints must necessarily be deprived of some of the essentials of quality, in order to make an attractively low price. Low price and paints that have merit never travel parallel with each other.
Many agents of paints have no knowledge of the consistency of a quality paint and care less. Your protection is the formula which should appear on the can, or the purchasing of same from some person who has a knowledge of paints.
Even hotheaded men occasionally get cold feet.
