Immigration officials believe they had assistance both at Windsor and at Sarnia. The aliens, who will be deported, are: Sta Syoria, his wife and son, and four men, all from Jugoslavia. Peter Hlizjak asked permission to telephone his wife, in Windsor, and tell her not to attempt to cross the border with other aliens.

The new inland fishing bill, effective August 28, 1929, provides that all non-residents over 18 years of age must have a license for taking all kinds of fish, the fee for which is $3 per year; also that all residents over 18 years of age are required to procure a license to catch trout, the annual fee being $1. These provisions will not be enforced, however, until that the season is nearly at an end | length of 144 feet. When newly prewhen the act becomes effective.

Sheep that attacked others in the flock on the farm of Thomas Williams. former supervisor, in Forest township, were infected with rabies, according to Deputy Sheriff Rolland Harrow of Flint, who killed two of the animals to prevent further spread of the disease. A mad dog bit several sheep on the farm a few weeks ago and the farm tenant shot the canine. Two ewes died immediately and later two more sheep became rabid.

Rejected by a girl with whom he had been acquainted for several years, Howard Combs, 24 years old, of Hartland Township, living near Howell, took his own life in front of her home. His act followed a second attempt at a reconciliation. He walked to his automobile, took a vial of poison from the car and drank it. He died within a few minutes. Combs was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Combs.

HOW=

EXCLAMATION "BY JIMINY" MAY HAVE ORIGINATED .-Two theories have been advanced to account for the origin of "Jiminy" or "Jimminy" in the sense of a mild oath, or an expletive or exclamation. One regards it as a corruption of "Jesu domine," the Latin for "Lord Jesus." The other holds that it is a corruption of "Gemini," the plural of Latin "geminus," meaning twin. "Gemini" was applied in Roman mythology to Castor and Pollux, the twin sons of Jupiter and Leda. It is the name of a constellation and the third sign of the zodiac, which is represented by the twin gods, Castor and Pollux, sitting side by side. To say "By Castor and Pollux" or "By Gemini" -hv the twins-was to use a powerful oath in ancient Rome. The word is still sometimes written "Geminy" and "Gemini." It may be, however, that "by Jiminy" is of Teutonic origin, for it appears in various forms in German, Dutch and Scandinavian languages, and the oath and exclamation is generally used much more frequently by the people of those countries .-Exchange.

How Defect in Carbon Causes Light to Flare

The Niagara Falls Chamber of Commerce says that the lights which illuminate Niagara falls are operated with a carbon arc which is automatically fed throughout the period of lighting. The carbon is good for about two hours and a half. During perfect operation there is no flare in the lamp, the carbon being perfectly adjusted and its content being pure. Under such conditions there is an intensive arc which is reflected from mirrors and concentrated to establish the great amount of light given by one of these projectors. However, when the carbon is being fed toward the arc a slight imperfection or a small particle of foreign matter will cause a flame. This flame is only occasional. Probably there are few carbons that will not cause some flame, but the amount of flame seen depends upon the quality of the carbon used. With reference to the power of these lights, each unit ranges from 80,000,-000 to better than 100,000,000 candlepower, depending upon the adjustment of the lights and the concentration of the ray. It is perfectly possible to step one of these lights up to 200,000,000 candlepower. The average amount of illumination which is secured from the entire battery is 1,440,000.000 candlepower.

At first the sheets were rolled and tied with a string; later they were bound that have come down to us are made brittle by age and are light or dark

How Echoes Steer Ships

The fathometer, an instrument that measures the depth of water by timing electric echoes, guided the Leviathan across the Atlantic recently. This instrument enables the navigating officers to pilot their course as accurately in darkness and fog as in daylight and clear weather. It is particularly valuable when approaching land, where knowledge of depth is most important.

The fathometer transmits electric sounds downwards from the keel. The time required for return of the echoes is timed to a split second and is translated in fathoms of depth on a clock-faced dial.

How Tree Was Saved

Permission was given a business man of Upland, Calif., to cut down a stalwart old pine tree in front of his place of business because it obstructed his view. Just as the majestic monster, which had been growing in the same place before Upland was settled, toppled to the ground the radio in a shop across the street switched to another number on the program. The deep bass voice of a singer somewhere in the United States hurled this admonition to those who took the life of the tree: "Poems are made by fools like me; but only God can make a tree."

INFERTILE EGGS BEST PRESERVED

Only Fresh, Clean and Sound ning. Should Be Used

Only those eggs that are fresh, clean and sound of shell should be preserved or "put down" for use next spoil.

"To be absolutely sure that the eggs are fresh and the shells sound. they should be candled," says A. G. Oliver, extension poultry man at the Mrs. Arthur Moore, on Friday eve-North Carolina State college. "An old shoe box may be used for this purpose by cutting holes in it to fit the egg and fitting it over a lamp or an electric bulb. "This test will show up any porous

In preparing the solution, Mr. Oliver advises one quart of water glass to nine quarts of pure water. The water should be boiled and cooled before mixing with the water glass.

For containers, a clean stone jar is the best but tin or wood vessels may be used. A six-gallon jar will hold about fifteen dozen eggs.

Mr. Oliver states that the eggs at the top of the container should be covered by at least one and one-half inches of the solution. It is not necessary to fill the jar at one time as fresh eggs can be added each day, taking care, however, that the eggs on top are always covered with the solu-

The containers should be kept covered to prevent evaporation and should be stored in a cool place until needed.

Give Good Ventilation

During Summer Months Plenty of ventilation should be provided for brooder houses during the hot summer months, advises John Vandervort, extension poultry specialist of the Pennsylvania State college. Ventilators at the rear of the chicken house and windows at the front and on the sides should be kept open to allow free circulation of air, Mr. Vandervort says. Results of poultry demonstrations among college flocks prove that pullets reared in hot, stuffy houses are likely to be stunted and unprofitable.

Frequent cleaning of the house in the summer is necessary also to prevent flies from breeding and to keep the air in the building pure. Course Mr. and Mrs. Charles Young of wire netting placed around the roosts

The Hay-Ride

Ho! Ho! For the old-fashioned hay-ride! A better name for it is "play-ride," For oh, it was surely a gay ride, With laughter of girls and of boys! With shadows of nightfall to hide you, And "Honey Lamb" nestled beside you, It seemed there was nothing denied you-Your world was a kingdom of joys!

The horses were plodding and lazy, The moonlight was friendly and hazy-Your Sweetie was fair as a daisy, As dainty and sweet as a peach! The hay-wagon clattered and rumbled, As o'er it you playfully tumbled, It seems to me, now, that it grumbled-In fancy, I still hear it screech!

I still hear the laughter and squealing, That rose to the star-jeweled ceiling! And over me now there is stealing A rapturous mem'ry of old! The hands that I held on the hay-ride, When all life itself was a play-ride, Today I still tenderly hold!

> MAY @ DOUGLAS CASS CITY

F THE word "immortality" be used with the familiar formula, "Some ---, some achieve are born -, and some have --- thrust upon them," it will be found that the last phrase most aptly applies to George Mason, father of the Virginia bill of rights, which substantially constitutes the first ten amendments of the Constitution of the United States, Florence Seville Berryman writes, in the Boston Herald.

Such a man was George Mason of Gunston hall, in Fairfax county, Virginia, who was the fourth to bear this name in America. But although he was "as patriotic as Washington, more intelligent than Jefferson, and far superior to Patrick Henry in philosophy," as some one has said, his name is as yet obscure compared to theirs, because he ignored opportunities to immortalize it to an extent scarcely paralleled by any other pa-

Of English Descent.

George Mason exhibited, to a marked extent, qualities of mind and character which he had apparently inherited from his great-grandfather, the first George Mason of Brewood. Staffordshire. England, who had been a member of parliament under Charles I. and had fearlessly and eloquently opposed those royal measures which seemed to him arbitrary. Yet at the same time he believed in supporting the established order against radicalism, for he fought with the cavaliers against Oliver Cromwell, after whose victory he was obliged to escape to Virginia, where he settled in Stafford county, and soon gained wealth and prominence in the colony.

George Mason IV was born in Stafford (later Fairfax) county, Virginia, in 1725. No record of his birth has been found, and consequently there is extensive confusion as to the exact date. His education began early, for he attended a boarding school in Prince William county from the years 1736 to 1739, inclusive, at a cost of 1,000 pounds of tobacco annually for board, and 845 pounds for schooling and books. Such schooling had customarily been preceded by private tutorship at the young student's home. Mason's Service to State.

Throughout his career George Mason contributed to the political literature of the United States some of the most important documents ever writington, the near neighbor and close friend of George Mason, who was frequently associated with him in schemes for the public welfare, wrote to Mason warmly advocating non-importation associations, which should be bound by voluntary agreement not to import or use articles from England which were burdened with obnoxious duties. This scheme was thoroughly sound, as it Britain, the purses of her merchants. drew up the plans, which Washington was a member at the time, while Mason was not. Lord Botetourt, then governor of Virginia (and incidentally one of the sanest and most popular of all pre-Revolutionary incumbents of that office), had heard of these resolutions and felt obliged to dissolve the house before they could be offered. But its members met immediately afterward and unanimously adopted this Mason and Washington scheme.

Declined Seat in Congress.

George Mason was a member of the Virginia convention during the years 1775 and 1776. He was elected a delegate to the Continental congress in 1775 and again in '77, but he declined to serve, for his beloved had died in '73, only thirty-nine years of age, and he felt he owed his first allegiance to his motherless brood. Yet in all probability the services he rendered the cause of liberty in his own state surpassed in importance anything he could have done in the Continental congress.

Early in 1776, in Virginia's last colonial assembly before the Revolution. George Mason drafted the Bill of Rights, his greatest work, and also the first constitution of Virginia, both adopted unanimously by the convention. The Bill of Rights was substantially the inspiration of the Declaration of Independence, for Jefferson was an intimate friend and enthusiastic admirer of George Mason, his senior by 18 years, and often visited Gunston hall, where there is now a "Jefferson" room in which the great Democrat wrote an outline of the Declaration, Defended States' Rights.

Mason was one of the commissioners who made a compact with commissioners from Maryland on the juris diction of the Chesapeake bay, the Pa tomac and Pokomoke rivers. A conference held by these commissioners at Mount Vernon was in reality the first steps toward a new federal government, for Maryland, ratifying the compact, proposed that Pennsylvania and Delaware should be invited to join them, and Virginia favored inviting all other states to consider a uniform commercial system.

George Mason's next great role was that of a delegate from Virginia to the constitutional convention in Philadelphia in 1787.

His activities in the convention were highly influential and altogether creditable. He was ever alert to the proceedings and on his feet in an instant

He proposed the Virginia constitution (which he had written) as a model for the new national constitution. But although a great number of features were adopted in this new organ which Mason had consistently fought against. such as a single executive, he was willing to sign until toward the end of the convention, when it passed the clause giving indefinite powers to congress and to the executive, and "the power given to congress, by a bare majority, to pass navigation acts," which would bind over the minority southern states to the eastern states. So, on September 17, the Constitution was read and signed by all except Mason, Edmund Randolph and Elbridge Gerry. Mason returned to Virginia and led the fight the following year against ratification

Within two years, as we recall, the Constitution received ten amendments, which were substantially Mason's bill of rights; and the eleventh amendment prohibiting suits against states in federal courts is the direct fruit of Mason's arguments.

But his fight proved vain, and he retired to Gunston hall, where he died a few years later, on October 7, 1792.

BANDED BIRD FLIES OVER SEA TO AFRICA

Route Followed Mystifying as Feat Itself.

Washington.-The finding of a dead bird on a beach in South Africa may unlock a secret which has long puzzled American naturalists.

The bird, an Arctic tern, carried a small metal hand on one leg with the number 548.138 and, in abbreviated form, the address of the bureau of biological survey, United States Department of Agriculture.

O. L. Austin banded the tern at Turnevik bay, Labrador, on July 28, 1928. Four months later it was found in South Africa.

Scientists have recognized the Arctic tern as the Lindbergh of the bird world. It makes the longest migration of any bird, summering in the Arctic and wintering in the Antarctic. Eleven thousand miles to a winter resort is an all-time record.

What Route is Mystery.

By what route does the Arctic tern fly from the North pole to the Ant-

H. J. S. Heather of Durban, Natal, has communicated to the National Geographic society the circumstances of the important find, which may answer the question:

"The tern was picked up by Mr. Wackrill of Johannesburg, a few miles south of Port Shepstone. His discovery, the biological survey wrote the It suggests that the Arctic tern leaves ica, flies to Portugal, crosses the length of Africa and then 'hops' to the Antarctic continent.'

The new evidence adds about 2,000 miles to the previous 11.000 miles estimated airline flight of the species. The Arctic tern enjoys more daylight than any other living creature because it lives in regions where the sun never sets and only experiences night on its semiannual journeys across Terns and other shore birds travel more widely than any other feathered creatures. The golden plover raises a brood in Ungava or northern Labrador and in the fall wings out over the ocean, never stopping until it reaches Bermuda. On it flies, pausing perhaps at the Bahamas, or the Lesser Antilles on the way to South America. The first of the golden plovers have been reported arriving in Paraguay before the last have left the breeding grounds. They "winter" on the Argentine pampas where the summer sun makes food plentiful.

Even unadventurous appearing wargo to Mexico, thirty-seven push on she must go where they were. to Central America, while twenty-two out resting.

Probably the most remarkable nonstop oversea flights are those of the Pacific golden plover. Coming south It crosses 2,800 miles of open ocean. Hawaiian islands in the middle of the Pacific is a mystery of nature.

Remarkable Flight Records. Birds that nest in the southern hemisphere also have remarkable records for travel. The slender-billed shearwater makes a circuit of the Pacific ocean. It breeds in southern Australia, flies north along the Asia coast and returns south by the American coast.

Promotion of bird-banding has revealed many unknown and unsuspected Telltale bands have shown the male wren to be an extremely inconstant fellow who ought to be paying heavy worm alimony and have also supplied facts on which practical plans for the conservation of birds life can be made.

"At present nearly 1,200 banding stations are in operation in all parts of the country," writes E. W. Nelson, formerly head of the bureau of biological survey, in the National Geographic Magazine.

"The operators send the data reto the bureau, which has established Widespread interest is expressed in reports of the capture of banded birds, of which 13,734, presenting about two hundred species, have been retaken, either alive or dead."

Eureka, Calif.—One of the largest school of whales seen off the coast near here in recent years was reported by Capt. Willard Cousins. Cousins said there appeared to be about fifty of the marine monsters in the school. The spouts thrown up by the whales, according to Cousins, resembled a field of geysers.

(© by D. J. Walsh.) USANNE TAFT was eating toast and drinking cocoa alone at one end of the big table in the high, cheerless and rather chill dining room of her house on Cedar street. She ad a blue wool scarf about her full shoulders and the hand that held the thin Haviland cup to her lips was cold. Winter was setting in with a vengeance and the new furnace boy did not understand keeping a fire. She thought drearily that she was going to miss Mr. Pease a good deal. After many years of faithful service to the residents of Cedar street he had died suddenly a few days before.

There was another thing that made Susanne sad that morning. She had heard just last night that the old Boyd house next door was sold. It had been in the hands of the agent for a long time, but being a large and expensive place to keep up, nobody had seemed to care for it. A stranger had bought arctic? That has been the question, it. A stranger in the old Boyd house! It meant to Susanne the utter passing of many things she had loved and valued in her life.

She was a woman of forty-six, amply proportioned, with a clear skin, soft blue eyes and a great quantity of smooth, lightly graying hair. Not beautiful, but sweet and good and gentle, the kind of woman who makes men finder, was the most remarkable case and little children happy. But she was that has been reported in any country. an old maid. The man she had loved all her life had not wanted her and the northern reaches of North Amer- the other men she would not have. Therefore she had arrived at a time when she was alone in her house where there had once been the joyous bustle of many goings and comings. Her sisters had married and gone forth into lives of their own: vesterday Jane, the youngest, had written from France. Her oldest brother was in South America. In like manner everybody she seemed to have known or cared about in her youth had drifted away, leaving her a bit of flotsam to float alone on the current of time.

It came to her as she put down her cocoa untasted that it was folly for her to keep on living alone in this way, maintaining a house that was altogether beyond her needs and her income. Much better for her to do as her sister Helen wanted, sell the place to Mr. Gifford, store such furniture as she had an emotional fondness for, auction off the rest and with the proceeds see a bit of the world, accomplish a new system of living. "You are wasting your powers of mind and body there in dull old Westmore," Helen had written. Perhaps it was true. And blers travel far to escape the cold in any event she no longer had an breath of winter. He had left it just as it stood except for a few gifts to his How plovers are able to locate the parents' friends. And he had sold it just as it stood, furniture, hangings, china and all. The contents were oldfashioned and not very valuable, for nothing new had been brought during his mother's latter years. Yet to Susanne it was filled with the most precious furnishings of all-memories of John's youth and of her own. She wished to bid farewell to them while there was yet time.

She took the key from the sideboard drawer, where it had been undisturbed since John gave it to her almost five facts of bird migrations and habits. | years ago and leaving her breakfast unfinished, she put on her fur coat and her hat and went out of her house. round by the walk to the side door of the Boyd dwelling. A storm of sleet last night had made footing treacherous, but there was no snow. The lock yielded easily to her key and she entered into the sitting room, which had been the scene of so many happy gatherings.

It was not this room or the dining room beyond or the great double parlors she wished to see, but a little room on the other side of the house garding each individual bird banded which the Boyd boys, John and Ernest, had called their den. Ernest was an indexed card file of such records, dead now and nobody knew where John was except that he was a wanderer on the face of the earth. She hesitated before the door of this little room, then opened it, and, trembling with emotion, looked within,

A faint smell of tobacco smote her in the face. The shades were down, but she could see even in the dimness that somebody had sat in that deep chair before the fireplace where a fire caught a muskrat by the tail and im- had certainly been lit. Upon the table stood an old-fashioned kerosene lamp of starting a muskrat farm, F. G. by which somebody had been reading. A book lay face downward beside the lamp. She lifted it and her glance fell upon a well remembered page in "Aucassin and Nicolette," She had given John that book on his birthday long ago. It was as if he had spoken to her. It was as if he were there in that little memory-sacred room with her. She put away the possibility that the agent had probably brought there the purchaser a night or two before and that they had lit the fire and hunted up the lamp and sat there discussing the whys and wherefores of their bargain. Was not the little volume proof enough of John's presence?

She pressed her lips to the page and then sinking slowly into the deep chair she laid her face on its arm and wept, she who had believed all her tears were shed. The loneliness, the futility of her life and love passed over her in a devastating flood and she wondered if she could go into a future that seemed to promise no more than the past had given. Presently she lifted her face, dried her eyes and, taking the little book, went out, closing the doors softly behind her one after the other until she came to the outer door, which she locked. In a moment she was at home. The fire was making itself felt, her canary wanted his breakfast, her flowers needed watering. There was a meeting of the woman's clib that afternoon, at which she was sched uled to speak, and a sewing bee for the hospital that evening. The telephone bell was ringing. It was Mrs. Millard asking her to entertain the Ladies' Aid the following day. "You are the only one of us all who has room enough.'

It came to her that too many threads were attached to her; she could not break them all without vital agony to herself.

"No, I guess I'll stay right here. I'm needed. Maybe nowhere else could I be as useful," she thought.

At that moment somebody knocked at the side door. Without ceasing to pour water on her primroses she called "Come in!" Then as hesitation rather than neighborliness seemed to follow upon her words, she called "Do come in. I'm busy." The steps she heard were not old Mrs. Beecher's, as she expected. She looked over her shoulder and saw a man standing upon the threshold of the room.

Afterward she regretted the breakage of the old majolica pitcher, but then she could only realize dizzily that John Boyd stood before her. She shook hands with him, she gave him a chair, she excused the broken pitcher. "It's nothing, really." Then she sat down to visit with him.

"I came last night and spent the evening in the den. In fact, I fell asleep and did not awaken until daylight. Ther I went down to the hotel. where I had intended to stay, bathed and breakfasted and hurried back up here to see you." He smiled, winning a smile from her in return. Few women are ever so happy as to see their boyish sweethearts in the men who return after many years, but Susanne saw that John Boyd had scarcely changed.

"I've come back to stay," he answered quietly.

"Why, what-what put that in your head?" she asked.

"You. From a darkened room I watched you last night, sitting here in this lighted one, sewing, the same Susanne that I realized suddenly I cannot live without."

"But I am a left-over. John." "So am I." He came and stood beside her, looking down into her face. "I've nobody but you. I want you very much, Susanne." She didn't tell him that she had always wanted him. She didn't tell him that she had been in the room so full of memory and his presence and that as long as she lived the little volume of "Aucassin and Nicolette" should be her dearest treasure. And he didn't tell her that upon returning to the room he had smelled the famil iar perfume she always wore and had found in the chair a small tear-wet handkerchief embroidered with her each had a secret from the other, but they were secrets that made for happiness. Meanwhile they had plans to make for a long and bliss-

Old Romans Wrestled With Traffic Problem

Rome was the Detroit of ancient times. Roman mechanics and coach makers developed chariot making to an art, discovered the advantages of quantity if not mass production, and popularized the delights of surveying a world from above swiftly turning wheels.

With many paved highways leading out of the city, Roman chariot makers were pressed to meet the demand for their vehicles, and these soon became so numerous on the narrow streets that Caesar in 195 introduced a "taxi ordinance" prohibiting chariots for bire from operating in the city. His chief motive, however, is said to have been his desire to reserve the chariot for imperial processions. Thousands of nobles and tradesmen were owners of chariots and these, too, Caesar banished for awhile but such was the increase of employment, industries and communications that the decree soon was shelved. A postal service was established and Augustus authorized the use of chariots in carrying the mails.

Some of the vehicles had four wheels and covered tops similar to the recent coaches but most of them were two-wheeled like those used for racing. The most elaborate were inlaid with precious metals and gems. Having no springs, the pleasure chariot was elaborately fitted with soft cushions. When Nero went on a journey sometimes as many as 3,000 such vehicles made up his caravan.-Detroit News.

Cat Collects Traps

The inhabitants of Harrow, England, were mystified. They had been persevering in setting traps for the rats that had been frequenting their gardens, and every morning not only were there no rats-but also no traps!

A thorough search was made, and at last they ran to earth a large half-wild cat, whose lair was under a shed in the neighborhood. Investigation of this lair brought to light 14 traps snugly stored-but, needless to say, they were minus the rats!

Don't Let Your Community Make the Same Mistake

Within recent years many communities have made the mistake of paving their roads and streets at what they considered a "bargain price." The taxpayers thought they would save thousands of dollars.

In many instances the maintenance has not only wiped out the hoped for saving, but has exceeded original cost. And in many cases also it has been necessary to build entirely new pavements-of permanent construction.

There are communities, however, which know the cheapest is not always the best. Many of these also built roads and streets several years ago. And they built for permanence with concrete.

These concrete pavements, built in accordance with approved standards of construction, are in as good condition today as when they were built. Which of these communities will yours be?

According to the Mounties, Pavoo Poliak, Eskimo, whose home is up near Akalvik, within the Arctic circle, came out as far as a mission post. There he saw a lighting plant similar to those used on farms, in operation. He inquired the price. With the proceeds of his trapping and fishing he found he had sufficient cash to purchase one and did.

Loading it on sleighs he started back to his shack home, miles away. All the way he thought of the superior position the possession of such magic would give him, and the way seemed short. Arriving at his home he installed the plant according to directions and issued invitations to a house

Pavoo showed them how the switches worked, and then, one after the other, the visitors turned lights off and on. This lasted for hours until Pavoo had fed them all and sent them

Hypnosis Shows Anxiety Plays Havoc With Body

Atlanta, Ga.-New evidence that anxiety can play havoc with the body no less than with the mind has been obtained by use of hypnosis. The tests were made by Dr. J. C. Whitehorn, Dr. Helge Lundholm and G. E. Gardner of McLean hospital, Waverley, Mass., and were reported before the Psychiatric association American

The experiments indicate that when an individual becomes extremely anxious and fearful his body engine may race like a motor under pressure and strain. On the other hand, moods of depression, elation, or irritability do not appear to produce any certain increase in the metabolic rate, that is, the rate at which the body engine converts food into tissues and energy. Obtaining data on bodily processes during an emotional state is difficult because an excited individual is not likely to remain sufficiently quiet to permit the making of accurate tests with apparatus. A psychologist who consented to be hypnotized was used

Glorious Memories Bunker Hill

June, 1775-151 years agoduring two hours of a hot Satùrday afternoon, was fought the first battle of the war that made America a nation. There had been preceding skirmishes and bloodshed, but the engagements at Lexington and Concord were merely the unorganized resistance of a suddenly aroused countryside, a mob, fighting in self-defense. The sequel to his mob of Minute men was a mobilized army with an aggressive plan, and its engagement with the troops of England on this date was a battle in the military sense, that committed the Colonies beyond recall to open war. It was familiar to every one as the battle of Bunker Hill, and perhaps not one in a thousand are aware that it was not fought on Bunker hill, that the famous monument bearing that name does not stand on Bunker hill, and that Bunker hill has little more to do with that memorable fight than did any one of a half-dozen other nearby hills. The confluence here of the Charles and Mystic rivers has made an intricate and peculiar system of channels, bays and peninsulas. One of these peninsulas, separated from the one on which Boston stands by the Charles, rose here and there into hills that if fortified would command the water on three sides and also the town of Boston. These eminences were known as Bunker hill, Breed's hill, Morton's hill, Town hill, etc. Town hill probably took its name from the village of Charlestown, which stood on the peninsula; who or what Bunker's hill was named for the historians do not say.

Intrenched on Bunker Hill.

Bunker hill, its crest about ten feet above the water level, was the highest, but Breed's was within easy gun range of Boston. When the American army invested the city the fortification of the Charlestown peninsula was a matter of military importance to both belligerents, and the provincial command forestalled the British in its possession by sending a force to intrench itself on Bunker hill, the first eminence after crossing the isthmus. The commander of the detachment, after consulting with his officers, chose the next elevation, a half mile nearer Boston, and there built the redoubt. The work was mostly done on the night of the sixteenth, and the first intimation that the British had of it was soon after daylight of the seventeenth, when one of their frigates lying in the harbor opened fire on the fortifications where the provincials were still busy. It took from then till noon for the English to organize the attack. Incensed by sniping from Charlestown, the English threw red-hot shot that fired the village, and while it burned, to the accompaniment of cannonading of the fortified height by the English vessels and the batteries on the Boston shore, the redcoats marched up the hill slope three times, only to be mowed down each time and routed temporarily by the musketry of the patriots. Thousands of Boston citizens watched the fight from their

Great American Victory.

The defenders were driven out finally owing to their shortage of ammunition, but the effect was that of an American victory, and an important one. It taught the English what they had not before realized, that the Colonists were in deadly earnest. As one historian says: "From that moment there was no possibility of a return to a colonial position, and though more than seven years of battle followed, this battle of the beginning, the most bloody of all, and the most sharply contested, has proved to be also the most critical."

Concerning Bunker hill the same writer says: "The height on which the battle was fought had no distinctive name before that time, but was known as pastures belonging to different men, Breed being one of them. After the battle the hill was called Breed's hill. but as the detachment was sent to put up fortifications on Bunker hill, that designation clung to the fight. Hence the confusion of names which puzzles every reader out of Massachu-

Washington in Command.

It was on June 15, two days before Bunker Hill, that the congress elected Washington to be commander in chief of the Continental army. This was done on the initiative and strong urging of John Adams of Massachusetts and on the motion of Thomas Johnson of Maryland, and the vote was unanimous. We should remember, too, that the army thus created was called not the American but the Continental army, while that of General Gage at Boston was referred to as the Ministerial army; so general a civil war, like that between the parliamentary and royalist forces in Cromwell's time, and was not an actual revolution for severance from the British empire. On June 16, the

formally accepted the election, utterremembrance as a vivid and vital reve lation of the spirit of "the greatest man on that floor":

"Lest some unlucky event should happen unfavorable to my reputation, I beg it may be remembered by every gentleman in the room that I this day declare, with the utmost sincerity, that I do not think myself equal to the command I am honored with. As to pay, I beg leave to assure the congress that, as no pecuniary consideration could have tempted me to ac cept this arduous employment, at the expense of my domestic ease and happiness, I do not wish to make any profit of it. I will keep an exact account of my expenses. Those I doubt not they will discharge; and that is all I desire."

Colonial Army Inadequate

The next day, at the very hour when the battle was raging at Bunker hill, the congress, all unconscious of what was happening at Charlestown, formally approved the form of commission to be given to Washington; on June 19 the commission was signed and delivered to him; and on June 21 he set out on horseback from Philadelphia for Cambridge. Four days later, at New York, he first learned of the battle which had been fought eight days before; whereupon he pushed on with redoubled energy. He reached Cambridge on July 2, and slept that night in the Vassall mansion, afterward known as the Craigie house, and still later the home of Longfellow. On the next morning, July 3, he assumed command of an army of about 17,000 men, of whom not more than 14,500 were fit for duty. The pitiful inadequacy of equipment may be estimated from the fact that there was enough powder to provide only eight cartridges to each man. No wonder that Washington's first two letters to congress were urgent pleas for more ammunition!

Proved Colonists' Caliber.

Such were the circumstances of Bunker Hill; a battle of an hour and a half, in which the patriots never had vet which, according to a great British historian, "exhibited the Americans to all the world as a people to be courted by allies, and counted with by foes."

From the end of the Middle ages to the close of the Thirty Years' war in 1648, the most important conflicts were religious in character. For the next hundred years, struggles were dynastic or colonial. From Bunker Hill to Waterloo there raged the grapple of opposing political ideas. In another way Bunker Hill is notable. It was one of the earliest battles in which marksmanship showed itself a factor of possible decision. Twice the deadly fire of the colonists broke the stubborn British infantry and drove them back, and would have done so a third or fourth time had ammunition been supplied in proper quantities. Almost for the first time firearms, unassisted by either bayonets or maneuvers, showed what they could do when rightly used.

HIGHWAYS SAFER AND SPEEDIER

New Problems in Road Construction for Engineers to Solve.

(Prepared by the United States Department

Newer designs in motor cars, busses, and trucks, together with the more liberal speed laws in the majority of states have presented new problems in highway construction for highway engineers to solve, according to the bureau of public roads of the United States Department of Agriculture. The new vehicles demand that highways be designed for safer and speedier operation.

To meet this demand highway engineers today are planning roads with better grades and alignments than existed some ten years ago. The roads have wider and smoother pavements and easier curves. The curves are superelevated and widened. Roads are developed to afford greater sight distances on both horizontal and vertical curves. Guard rails are more substantial and better protection at railway crossings is provided.

Appreciate Natural Beauty.

Further demands are made upon the nighway engineer today by the dawning appreciation of natural beauty on the part of the general public. Highways must not only be travelable, but they must also be pleasing to the eye. The engineer develops road locations so as to bring out the natural beauty of the locality. This is particularly noticeable in the new road locations developed by the engineers of the bureau of public roads in the national parks and national forests.

They are making use of short tunnels and half-tunnel sections under picturesque overhanging cliffs and along precipitous canyon walls. Formerly it was the custom to blast away these irreplaceable landmarks, destroying fine scenes and leaving ugly wounds which took years to heal.

Save Desirable Trees.

Much can be done during the construction of highways to preserve and enhance their natural beauty, says the bureau, by intelligent clearing of the right of way so as to save desirable trees, by development of vistas of outstanding magnificence, and in building bridges and culverts to harmonize with the general character of the landscape. After the road is built much can be done by intelligent planting, with due care to avoid obstruction to view of intersecting roads, unnecessary interference with the cultivation of adjacent farm land, and use of plantings foreign to the natural character of the locality.

Car Skidding Is Studied by Iowa State College A brawny motor truck dragged a

touring car sideways across a smooth hard-surfaced field near Des Moines, recently, to find out exactly how much force it takes to make a car skid. Knowledge disclosed by this test by experts of Iowa State college is to aid in the design of banked turns on important highways. The pull of the truck was measured by a dynamometer, an instrument resembling a spring scale for weighing, that was inserted in a link in the towing chain. A pointer registered the pounds of force required to drag

Motor Busses to Carry Young School Children

A growing tendency to use school busses to carry city children between home and school is noted in a recent survey of the motor coach.

School officials have seen the wisdom of using busses to keep children off the streets, avoiding traffic hazzards and preventing loitering on the way to or from school. The survey also showed that busses offer speedier service than furnished by other transportation facilities. Six-cylinder school busses with four-speed transmissions and four-wheel hydraulic brakes are built by a reputable firm. Capacities range from 18 to 52 children.

THE MOTOR QUIZ

(How Many Can You Answer?) Q. Will a fully charged storage battery freeze at temperatures below zero?

Ans. No. Keep battery charged fully. Have generator rate increased to compensate for the greater use of lights during short days and less driving. What generally causes hard steering? Ans. Under-inflation of tires, also lack of lubrication, particularly of king pins and the joints in the tie rod connecting the front wheels.

Q. Why is it necessary to renew the oil filter after 10,000 miles of driving?

Ans. Because it becomes filled with foreign matter taken from the oil and loses its efficiency after this mileage. Renewing the cartridge makes the oil filter as good as new again.

Q. What savings are effected in a year's driving with an oil filter equipped car?

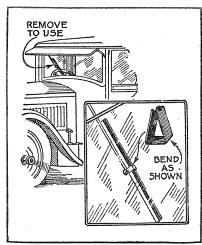

Ans. It is estimated the oil filter effects a savings of between $20 and $29 a year in oil besides minimizing engine

Windshield Wiper Goes

Bad Before Worn Out The average windshield wiper goes bad long before it is worn out. Constant contact with the surface of the glass puts a kink in the rubber edge so that it will not bend back and forth to clean the glass as it should. The picture below shows how to avoid this deterioration.

Take a small piece of sheet metal and bend it into a triangular shape.

Small Metal Guard Stops Warping of Rubber Windshield Wiper.

Then cut or file small notches in the upper edge. When the windshield wiper is not in use, the sheet metal piece is slipped over the wiper so that the hinge pin will rest in the notches and the rubber will be held away from contact with the glass. This will prevent the rubber from taking a permanent set.—Popular Science Monthly.

In Dollars and Cents---How Much Is a Liner Advertising "Result"

What would it be worth to you, in money, to be able to find "the right buyer" for your property —the buyer to whom your property, at its real market value, would be a "bargain?"

What would it be worth to you, in money and in peace of mind, to find a desirable tenant for that house or furnished room—over which the menace of "vacant" hangs threateningly? What would it be worth to you to find a good job—to get your name on a regular payroll, so that the weekly income is assured and ample? What would it be worth to you, in additional business, to secure the needed office employe—the worker who could show results, and help you to carry through your every plan?

What would it be worth to you to be able to sell that used car at a fair price—or those office fixtures which you no longer need—or that discarded but still useful furniture?

What would it be worth to you to secure a business partner, or a financial backer?

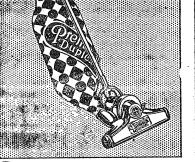

All of these "results" may be had through classified advertising—if it is persistent, intelligent-

And the cost of little campaigns of liner advertising is so small that in the final summing up you will have to consider that your result has been purchased at a "bargain price."
