Three long tables extending nearly the length of the large auditorium and the speakers' table were decorated with potted plants and boquets of cut flowers. Candles and indirect lighting thrown from balcony to ceiling of auditorium by spotlights produced an autumnal effect in the banquet room. Hand-made programs in orange, blue and green were pleasing products of the art department of the local school.

The menu served follows: Fruit cocktail, fish entree, baked ham and apple sauce, scalloped potatoes and squash, head lettuce salad, celery, olives, pie a la mode, coffee, mints. GOV'T TRACTORS PLOW PEACE PACT PLEDGE

Local Congregations Voted Unanimously that Officers Sign Historical Agreement.

As a patriotic phase of the mornng worship hour in the Evangelical church of Cass City Sunday, the entire congregation, on request of Rev. Charles W. Lyman, their pastor, arose to their feet in a pledge of acceptance of the World Peace Pact, to which our nation, together with other great nations became a signatory on January 15, 1929, and which became binding on all participating nations on July 24, 1929.

After slowly and carefully reading the pledge of acceptance, the minister asked the standing audience: "Do you approve this pledge of acceptance?" the people, as with one voice, answered: "We do!" Then, with the congregation still standing reverently, a representative from each official branch of the church came forward and affixed his and her signature to the historical agreement. The document will be suitably framed and hung in a conspicuous place on a wall of the auditorium.

A service which centered around the peace pact acceptance was held at the Sunday School session which followed the morning preaching service at the Baptist church. At this meeting, the pledge of acceptance was the County Council of Religious Eduread to the school and then signed by the pastor, Rev. Curtis, and the superintendent of the school. At the Methodist Episcopal church Sunday morning, the pledge of acceptance was unanimously adopted by a standing vote of the congregation and in their presence was signed by Rev. Hill, the pastor, and officers of the church in behalf of its members. A similar service was held at the Presbyterian church Sunday morning when a unanimous vote of the congre- for Creative Leadership in Our gation authorized officers of the church auxiliaries to sign the acceptance of the World Peace Pact.

OLD CHRISTMAS

TREES OR FUMIGATOR?

A common musteline mammal, well known for its power of ejecting an offensively odorous secretion, fell into a cement walled depression which Hester, Mayville; 6, Lyle Clark, Iming Friday night. Nightwatchman Thomas Keenoy heard a rattling at Caro. the window, and on examination, found the animal trapped in the depression. Being assured of no danger of burglary from that quarter and having other duties in another section of town. Thomas decided to let well enough alone, and departed rather hurriedly.

The next morning bank employes sought advice and help. Dougald 5, S. E. Aspin, Freeland. Krug, a neighboring business man, advised shooting the animal through the head with a rifle. He said such action would prevent any regrets and offered to undertake the task. He was awarded the contract.

After the killing, Cashier Croft told friends that Dougald either missed the animal's head or else he was mistaken in prophesying results.

"Smells like they're burning old Christmas trees," remarked one customer to another Saturday morning, while another inquired if a contagious disease in town was the reason for the fumigating. All efforts to subdue the odor proved unavailing until several pails of earth were poured into the depression and saturated with several gallons of oil which were set afire. This killed the odor and restored happiness to the neighborhood.

THREE RULES

Dr. Caldwell watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed are obliged to leave and seek employ-nent in other towns. John Hillman and sons spent last week with A. Patrick, sr. was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for consti pation is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the most delicate system and is not habit forming. The Doctor never did approve of dras-tic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for human beings to put into their system. Use Syrup Pepsin for yourself and members of the family in constipation, biliousness, sour and crampy stomach, bad breath, no appetite, headaches, and to break up fevers and colds. Get a bottle today, at any drugstore and observe these three rules of health: Keep the head cool, the feet warm, the bowels open. For a free trial bottle, just write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. CHAPTER VII

A stricken silence prevailed in the sturdy little touring car that Eddy Jackson guided carefully along the country roads from Red Thrush to Pay Dirt. Not one word was spoken. But in the rear seat, Miriam, the sensible twin, sat with one of her father's hands crushed tightly between both of hers, and now and then she pressed it against her cheeks in a wordless passion of sympathy, longing to comfort. It was not until the car stood before the side porch of the big white house, and Miriam, with firm, light hand, had led her father up the steps, that Eddy spoke.

"Mr. Tolliver," he said awkwardly, "don't worry. It's a raw deal, all the way round, but honestly-they mean all right. We'll do something about it, that's all."

"There's nothing to do, Eddy. And they not only mean all right, they are all right.

"And if it goes through the way they have planned, we'll start something on our own account. We're right in the midst of the farming district here, and a lot of these people don't bother to go so far to church. Pay Dirt is big. We'll build a little chapel of our own, and run it to suit ourselves. It -don't want you to leave Red Thrush.'

"You're a good friend, and a good man, Eddy," said the other gratefully. "But don't have me too much on your mind. It's all right. I will never do anything that does not completely accord with the policy of our church, you understand. Good night, my dear boy, and to repeat your own words, don't worry."

Silently, up the stairs to the right wing, Miriam guided his steps. She turned back the covers of his bed, carefully spread out the things he would need for the night, placed a fresh towel on his rack.

"Father, shan't I read to you a forgive me. I was surprised, and I while?" she offered. "Until you feel lost my bearings. But just for a little tired enough to sleep." while."

"No, thanks, dear, not tonight. You're a nice girl, Miriam, but I don't want to be read to. I have many things to think of."

"But, darling-they aren't nice things.' "Well, some of them are. You, for sight of the touring car unloading its ensconced on the foot of her bed with files, orangewood sticks and buffers. Then she went to the studio with a sigh of relief. There she settled down to a complete balancing of her accounts. She counted the dimes in the doll's trunk. She made careful entries in her huge ledger.

Her waste basket she found full to overflowing of discarded letters, little white angels, which had accompanied the contributions to the home. Ginger was systematic and orderly. These angels were to be burned. So with waste basket in one hand, lantern in the other, she made her way carefully over the narrow beams, and down the wabbly ladder.

She noted, comfortably, that the two doors remained closed as she had left them, and a pleasantly soothing stillness pervaded the house. Softly. happily, with waste basket and lantern, she slipped around the curve of the circular staircase and stopped. She stopped aghast, electrified, spellbound. For beneath her, before her very eyes, there lay revealed a scene whose unutterable disgustingness was beyond her power of description. The wide living room was lighted, dimly lighted, by one small corner reading lamp, and in the shadowy, semi-darkness, Ginger saw two figures -her sister, Marjory, and Hiram Buckworth-whom she had left behind their seperate closed doors not twenty minutes previous. By what strange intuitiveness each had discovered, behind those barring doors, that the other was descending to the common meeting ground of the living room below, Ginger never knew-nor even which had made the initial move. But one fact was evident-there they were. One of Hiram's arms was about her sister's shoulders, and his free hand was fondling very gently, very caressingly, the soft gold of her hair. Marjory herself, plainly not to be outdistanced in madness, was raising her soft white fingers to his cheek, his lips, his eyes. Ginger's irrepressible gasp startled them. They looked up at her, gravely. They did not move. "Excuse me." Ginger's voice was cold and subdued, very small. "I thought you were in different places-

The day passed dully, a busy day, as Saturdays always are in parsonages where arrangements are always leading up to the climatic Sabbath. Hiram Buckworth remained down town for luncheon. "Father," her voice was low, almost apologetic, "father, you know we are so used to each other, you, and we girls, living together all the time, and arguing, and quarreling, and making We-never say the real things that are in our minds. But father, in our hearts, we-all of us-think you are just wonderful, father."

His arm tightened about her shoulders. "And I tease you girls, and laugh at your little tricks, and your vanities, and what Ellen calls your man-madness. But all the time I know you are the very best girls in the world."

"Oh, father, we aren't. Well, Helen, she is awfully good. . And Ginger is good, too, in her funny way. But Marjory and I are not much."

There was silence between them, as each smiled tenderly into the darkness, thinking of the thousand sweet, ridiculous, whimsical, pathetic happenings of the shabby old Methodist parsonage. But after a little while, he sent her back to bed, and to sleep. But Wesley Tolliver himself lay awake all night, thinking of many things.

When Miriam entered his room the next morning she found him standing by the window, fully dressed.

"Oh, father, you're getting too smart for me," she said regretfully. But when he turned to look at her, the expression on his face sent a swift glad brightening over her own.

"Oh, father," she cried again. "You've thought of something! Everything is all right again, isn't it?" He laughed quite merrily at her young eagerness. "Perfectly all right again," he assured her.

"Oh, tell me all about it," she begged.

But this he denied her. "You must wait to share it with the rest of the family. How impetuous you are geting-why, you are quite another Ginger!"

So Miriam was obliged to content herself by straightening his tie, and giving a careful brush to his hair, before she led him down to breakfast. Here, apologetically, he asked an additional favor at the hands of Eddy Jackson.

"You have done so much, Eddy, and you are always so kind that I really hate to ask anything more of you. But I must go in right after breakfast to speak to my daughters. I shan't be gone long, but I must go.

Helen was born, I dedicated my life to the Lord's work. I dedicated my service, my time, my money-even my family. Well, what then? He has used me-a blunt and stubborn instrument many times-for all these years. If He has finished with me, what of it? If He wants me again, He will show me where, and how. What have I to do about it? Nothing. See how foolish I was."

Ginger triumphantly.

"Father," gasped Ginger in a shocked low voice, "do you mean that you are not going to try-even to try -to get well any more? Are you just going to give up-and let go?"

"Most certainly not, my dear child. I am going to stay at Pay Dirt as long as I can, and get just as strong as I can. I shall go to Chicago for all the care we can possibly afford. And I shall pray without ceasing for God to bless the means we use. But the outcome-what difference does that make? None. If I am not to be used in Red Thrush any longer, what difference? Perhaps I shall be of service some place else. If I have completed by labor entirely, that is entirely satisfactory to me. I am perfectly content, I have no fears, not even for my dear daughters, for whom I wished to do so much. Foolish of me! Did I not dedicate my family cares along with the rest of my life? How foolish it was for me to worry."

"I am not laughing, Ellen, I believe you. When the times comes, I know that you truly will take care of me.

And I am glad to have it to be sure of." They did not try to plan for the selves with the knowledge that whatever came to them must be good. They did not look ahead to the winter-without a church, without a parsonage, with a meager twenty-five dollars a month to provide food and clothes and a roof over their heads. They merely accepted the present that was given them, and smiled at each other, and strove in every way pos-

Whether the present experiments in at Burke's drug store, and by all the will be succeeded by some other form, nobody, not even the most intelligent "Reds," will venture to predict. It took France nearly ninety years, after the Revolution of 1789, to get down to a stable governmental basis, trying several different methods in that period. The one prediction that can be made about Russia is that its people will never return to the old, tyrannical Czarist system. Meantime, Russia is Americanizing its industrial methods, importing engineers and advisers as well as machinery and materials "rom the United States, striving to lift its immense hordes of peasantts out of their semibarbarous state by making them want things which they can only get by changing their whole scheme of life. That is what civilization means, the multiplication of human wants and the discovery of means of satisfying them. Russia is starting on the road to civilization.

Aviation— One hundred and sixty-nine passengers flew in a single airplane over Lake Constance. Germany, forbidden by the Treaty of Versailles to build military aircraft, has outstripped the whole world in both commercial planes and dirigibles.

Armstrong, American engineer, is actually going ahead with his anchored floating islands in the Atlantic to provide landing stages for ocean flyers.

Look for regular air lines between Europe and America in another five or perhaps ten years. And look for the largest and fastest of them to bear the flag of the German republic. Perhaps, now that the Stock Market debacle is over, the big capitalists of the United States will invest more of their funds in the development of commercial aircraft to compete with able the Germans. So far, practically all of our important flying developments have been paid for by the Govern-ment. Aviation will not become a business, and cargo and passenger carrying by air will never be efficiently done, until private capital is invested in it as it is in the railroads.

Shares in the best aviation companies, bought not as speculations for a ment 3.
