

Breezes from the Hill

Andree Bliss, School Editor.

Kindergarten.

Our interest just now is centered upon the study of the Eskimos and the North Pole. In connection with this, we are trying to understand all about the earth's travels, the sun, the causes for day and night, and for the seasons. We are also learning Stevenson's poem, "Bed in Summer."

The First Grade and Kindergarten band is nearly ready for its first public performance.

Second Grade.

All back to work except four of us. We were sorry to find that Sharlie, Shirley, Freda and Floyd have the chicken pox.

Ancient numbers of the Romans we are learning to write. We are also learning to tell time.

The picture, "Age of Innocence," painted by Sir Joshua Reynolds, furnished very interesting material for a picture study lesson.

Class One was very proud to find they could read some new books named "New Stories."

We made posters and learned rhymes about keeping our teeth clean. If we clean our teeth we can place our tooth brush on our chart.

Doll and Toy Day was an interesting day last week. Stories were made about their favorite toys.

Third Grade.

We are glad to get back to work again after having had a nice vacation.

We are glad that so many of us recovered from the chicken pox during vacation. At the present time only one person is absent because of the chicken pox.

In hygiene class we are studying the care of the teeth and we are planning to make a poster.

Our pet rats have decided to help us to keep the room clean. They pick up all the scrap paper they can find and carry it to their cage. It is very interesting to watch them.

For opening exercises we are hearing "Five Little Peppers."

Fourth Grade.

We are back in school again and enjoy our work after having such an enjoyable Christmas vacation.

Mrs. M. B. Auten was a caller in the Fourth Grade on Wednesday.

Our travel club is visiting the beautiful country of Switzerland with its mountains, lakes and rugged snow-capped mountain peaks.

The art class is making a frieze for the back bulletin board and the reading class are enjoying the story of "Moni, the Goat Boy."

We have a new pupil this week, Leonard Mallory, who comes to us from Northern Michigan.

For morning exercises we are reading the story of "Hitty" by Rachel Field. Hitty is a real doll, made over a hundred years ago, of stout ash wood. She has been taken on some long trips over land and sea. In this way, Hitty's horizon was broadened and she acquired ample material to make her memoirs exciting and instructive.

Fifth Grade.

We were glad to come back after our pleasant vacation and find our room had been cleaned. Everyone reported having had a good time and as being beautifully remembered by Santa Claus.

This week in English we have been working on stories suggested by pictures cut from current magazines. Our aim was to increase our descriptive vocabulary. Ivan O'Connor, Martha McCoy and Phyllis Koepgen produced the best stories.

Our arithmetic class is doing very good work; the competition is very keen between the two classes.

We expect to have a spelling match today to complete our week's work.

Sixth Grade.

We have been reading stories about Augustus Caesar in history. We learned that he became Ruler of the World. Caesar built many beautiful buildings in Rome. He said that he had found Rome brick and left it marble. He also had a month named after him, and he was made a god. Surely no one could be greater than he! Yet a greater man than he was living at the very same time in the Roman Empire. This man lived in the eastern part of Augustus' empire in a tiny village called Bethlehem. His name was Jesus Christ. Jesus taught that there was one God over all. He taught brotherly love and the golden rule.

High School.

A new set of Compton's Pictured Encyclopedias has been added to our grade library material. The set consists of sixteen volumes and should prove to be of considerable value.

English Nine have finished Stevenson's "Treasure Island," a book written especially for young people as Stevenson wrote it to entertain his step-son.

Thursday evening, January 8, Professor Klingbeil, Head of the Department of Public Speaking of the Junior College at Bay City, and acting as sole judge in the debate between Cass City's negative debate team and Bad Axe's affirmative, gave his decision in favor of Bad Axe.

This debate concluded the preliminary series of debates which has been held in the high schools throughout Michigan. A summary of these four debates shows Cass City to have won one and lost three but this does not mean that the time and effort spent along this line was wasted for victory doesn't always indicate benefit received. Whether a team wins or not, the experience of appearing before the public and matching their arguments with the other team and the displaying of good sportsmanship when defeated are of lasting value to those taking part.

"The Hilltop Players," Dramatic Club, have started rehearsals for their three one-act plays to be given early in February.

A new Mercurial Barometer has been added to the Physics and Chemistry Laboratory equipment. This is to replace an old one which has been out of commission for some time.

Semester examinations will be held the week of January 19. The schedule has been arranged in such a manner that classes will meet as usual throughout the week. At the beginning of the second semester, Jan. 26, the following change of classes will take place: Advanced Algebra to Trigonometry, Animal Husbandry to Farm Management, Commercial Arithmetic to Business Practice, Economics to Civics, and Farm Crops to Horticulture.

A Governor Entertains

The governor of the people sat in his chair in the large white building called the state house. He was very busy thinking of ways to make people happy and contented. The clock on the wall ticking was the only sound that reached the governor's ears until suddenly he heard a faint pitter-patter in the outside hall. It came nearer and nearer and nearer. Then it stopped, directly in front of his door.

"There must be some one outside, but who can it be?" said he to himself.

He laid his pen on the desk and listened. Soon he heard a gentle scratching. It sounded as if the same one wished to be allowed to enter.

"That's odd," said the governor. "Everybody who comes to this office knows that it is polite to knock on the door."

He was a kind-hearted man, and after a moment thought, "Perhaps it is some one very old who is not strong enough to knock or some one very young who does not know what to do when calling on a governor. I'll see for myself." He tiptoed to the door and opened it slowly.

There on the sill sat a black and white cat, his head held on one side in a very knowing manner.

"Oh," said the governor, "won't you come in, pussy?" At once the black and white cat walked quietly into the great room.

The governor closed the door. "Now what can I do for you?" he asked. "Can I get you some milk?"

"The black and white cat paid no attention.

"Then would you care for some meat?" asked the governor.

Still the black and white cat paid no attention.

"Ah," said the governor, then, "you have just come to make a call? Please take a chair."

With a light spring the cat hopped into a chair, and purred softly.

"Now," said the governor, "I know you cannot talk, but your manner is enough to show me what you intend. You have come to speak for the animals who live in this state. You wish the people to be kind to them. Is that true?"

The black and white cat purred louder. Then after a moment it hopped from the chair, gratefully rubbed its back against the governor's chair and walked politely toward the door.

"So," said the governor, "I see you also know that governors are very busy people and can give only a few minutes to all who come to call upon them." He opened the door that his unusual visitor might go out.

"I am very glad you called," said he. "I shall write a proclamation about animals telling all men and women and boys and girls to be kind to them and love them. Good-by, pussy. Call again!"

The governor watched his visitor walk sedately down the long hall, and then, closing the door thoughtfully, chuckled to himself. It is quite certain that as soon as he could he wrote the promised message to his people, but only a few know of the unusual visitor who helped to write it. Aren't you glad to be one of those?

Fun With Tin Can Tops

By MARION BROWNFIELD

Doris loved to watch people paint. When the painters gave her house a fresh, clean coat of white, in the spring, it was fun to watch them.

Finally, Mother said, "The chairs are all painted, and don't they look bright and new?"

"Yes," said Doris, "and there's a little paint left over in each can."

"You can have that, if you'll keep your apron on," said her mother, "and take it outdoors to paint with a newspaper spread out. But remember, painting is a game to play two days!"

"How?" asked Doris.

"You paint one color one day, and let it dry until the next."

"First," said Doris, "I will paint this nice round tin top from the paint can, for a tray."

Just then Mother came outdoors. "What a dear little tray!" she said. "Why there are many tops left over from cocoa, coffee and shortening cans, with neat little rims."

"Oh," said Doris, "I want the oblong cocoa top, first, for Virginia Belle (she was Doris' doll, you know) needs a long platter."

"If you want a coaster set," said her mother, "I think the tops from vinegar and catsup bottles would make nice tumblers when turned right side up."

"So do I!" answered Doris, "and I'll paint them blue and orange to match the tray!"

Neighbors!!

THE SUREST WAY TO GET AHEAD IS TO USE YOUR OWN HEAD.

Now a word to the thrifty and canny folks among you. You have read about the dangerous disease that has been gripping our nation called DEPRESSION. It started back in Eden when Adam was thrown out of work. Before it gets too firm a hold on our community, we intend to hit it as hard as we can with what is called the low price stick. Our financial year ends Jan. 31, and lest some of these fellows call on you with a swift Cadillac and ask you for the use of your money with no interest for an indefinite period, we have decided to give you a chance to spend some of it with good interest added and we will put it in Ernest's hands. And we believe it will take some persuasion to make the Scotch give it up.

We purpose to give you a chance from

to do your bit. If you have something to buy, BUY NOW, and you will soon find out that you will have made it possible by demand created, for the other fellow to go to work. Then comes the demand for what you have to sell. Then everyone gets busy and that's the end of the disease. Simple, isn't it? Don't argue with me about it; go to the fellow that agrees with you. Misery loves company.

Champion Poster Advertising Co. of Cass City has already posted 36 of the first posters designed, to stimulate more bread consumption and thereby help the wheat situation. The posters that will go up within the next ten days carry the slogan, "Eat more farm products and you speed industrial employment. Some mothers worry the children a lot by getting a meal on the table just when they are busy at something else and haven't time to eat.

Others are saving money on their flour and you can too by exchanging your wheat. Try it.

Cavalier coal is just another name for concentrated heat. It's a wonderful coal to burn and gives you a fine oven heat.

Here's a New Version. "Have you heard that Edna is engaged?" "No, who's the plucky fellow?"

You don't have to take a memory course to remember our telephone number. It's just 15—say that again, please!

We don't have to brag about the results Wayne calf feed gives. Our customers do that. Ask Phil McComb what he thinks of it.

They tell us a tourist asked Chas. Day where he could find a filling station. "Hamburger or gasoline?" says Charlie.

"What kind of coal do you want?" we asked a customer over the phone this morning. "Cavalier coal, of course," he replied.

The protein that your ordinary winter feed lacks is made up in Wayne 32% Dairy

Once upon a time an enterprising poultryman crossed his hens with parrots to save time. He used to spend much time hunting the eggs but now the hens walk up to him and say, "Hank, I just laid an egg. Go get it." Enterprising poultrymen everywhere are feeding Wayne Buttermilk Egg Mash and getting more eggs.

Finish out the season with Cavalier coal. It is fine for light firing because it holds the heat so well.

CALL THE S. P. C. A. The teacher was teaching his class about parrot fever, and warned the pupils never to kiss animals or birds, especially parrots, canaries, and so on.

Depot Literature "There's one good thing about your railroad," said the tourist to the conductor on the Mosquito Bay line.

Observant Youth "Say, Bob," said the small girl to the small boy, "what are relations?"

Methuselah's Hard Luck "Methuselah had a few hard knocks I'll bet."

PORTABLE TYPEWRITER

"He takes his typewriter in his car with him everywhere he goes."

Books and Problems We read of problems great and small. No novelist relaxes.

Defined Candy—There's a big difference between a botanist and a florist. Mowks—Is there, really?

Business Getter Guest—What! Out of all the dishes in the menu you can only offer me sausages and mashed? What on earth are all the others down there for?

The Sarcastic Lover "And after we're married, dear, we'll never quarrel and fight like other people."

Better Not Infringe "What kind of a humorist is this?" "Heh?"

BOVINE OBJECTION

"College boys can't work their way to Europe on cattle boats any longer?" "No—the cattle kicked."

Guessing A man will struggle hard and long to gain what he esteems success. He wins it; feels that he was wrong. And starts in on another guess.

Always Guilty Wife (on their return from the party)—Do you realize what you did? Husband—No, but I'll admit that it was wrong. What was it?

Versatile "That new soda boy of yours seems to be able to hold the trade." "Yeah, if we're out of fudge, he gives 'em applesauce."

GIVES HINTS ON SAVINGS ON FOOD

A plan to make every cent for food count in preventing malnutrition and in maintaining health has been developed by the Bureau of Home Economics of the U. S. Department of Agriculture for the president's emergency committee for employment.

Throughout the country are confronted with the problem of getting a satisfactory food supply with very little ready cash," says Doctor Gilbreth.

Doctor Gilbreth has appealed to the women of the country, and to the many organizations that worked with Mr. Hoover on food during the war period to rally and meet the demands of this new problem that faces the nation.

"Because of the drought there is less than the usual reserve of home produced foods and in many rural sections practically everything must be bought," she points out.

Most of the food shown are what are known as staples, so, with the exception of meat, the price fluctuation throughout the country is not especially great.

Family Food Guide.

Every meal—Milk for children, bread for all. Every day—Cereal in porridge or puddings. Potatoes, tomatoes (or oranges) for children.

Two to four times a week—Tomatoes for all. Dried beans and peas or peanuts. Eggs (especially for children). Lean meat, fish or poultry, or cheese.

Families, with limited incomes, as a rule, do not need to be reminded that simple meals are always best, says the Bureau of Home Economics.

The meat allowance is small but its flavor can be extended and the whole meal made more palatable if vegetables are cooked with it.

Potatoes and one other vegetable or fruit should be served every day for dinner. Some days the vegetables may be served raw as a salad.

Market News.

When fresh milk costs more than 10 to 12 cents a quart we suggest that unsweetened canned milk or dry skim milk be substituted for the greater part of the milk allowance.

In choosing your meats be sure to adapt your menu for the day to the prices in your local markets. There are many inexpensive cuts to choose from ranging in price from 8 to 25 cents a pound.

Potatoes and the other root vegetables are reasonably low in price this year as are citrus fruits. Tomatoes or citrus fruit are essential to the diet of families living by the food index. A No. 2 can of tomatoes, which is medium size, ought not to cost more than 12 cents. Flour is cheaper than it has been in years, about 4 1/2 cents a pound.

The Subways council at its meeting Monday night voted a reduction in electric light rates to conform with utility company rates. The new rates will be as follows: First 30 kilowatts, 9 cents; 31 to 100 kilowatts, 4 cents; 101 kilowatts and over, 2.7 cents. The old rates were: First 30 kilowatts, 9 cents; 31 to 100 kilowatts, 5 cents; 101 kilowatts and over, 3 cents. The municipal light plant generated 47,940 kilowatts in December and has been showing a gradual monthly increase. Consumers now number 515, of which number 34 have electric ranges.

William Davidson, lineman in the Brown City and North Branch territory for the Wolverine Home Telephone Co., left the employ of the organization Jan. 1. He plans to leave soon, with his wife and child, for Scotland, their former home.

Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Watkins of Lapeer celebrated their sixtieth wedding anniversary Jan. 8. Mr. Watkins conducted the Star Roller mill at Lapeer for many years.

Mrs. Henry Bartley, wife of a former mayor of Bad Axe, died unexpectedly at her home Friday. Besides her husband, she is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Charles Howard, of Detroit.

A man in Minden City had a peculiar experience caused by a mouse. His radio started to get lower and lower in tone until it could hardly be heard. Thinking that some of his tubes were at fault he purchased new ones without getting any better results. Finally he determined to see if the works could not be taken out and sent to some shop for repair. While looking inside for bolts and screws, he discovered a mouse lying on top of two wires. When taken out the radio worked as well as ever. Mr. Mouse must have either been electrocuted when the radio was turned on or else scared to death by the loud tones given out.

Over the protests and in spite of determined efforts on the part of Valley Center and Maple Valley people to prevent the closing of the Pere Marquette station at Valley Center, the railroad company has taken unfavorable action in the matter. The new order became effective Monday, since which time there has been no agent at the depot.

Ever since the telephones were installed in Crosswell and Lexington there has been an arrangement whereby there was free service between the two exchanges. This was ideal because so many on the farm lines could use both exchanges without cost, making it a real convenience. Many farmers living between the two towns probably transact all their business in Crosswell, though perhaps are nearer Lexington. An order has been made that hereafter a toll charge of 10c between the two places be charged and the dividing line on the farm phones is to be the quarter line between the Ridge and Wildcat roads. This does not listen good to the greater part of the farmers east of the line and they are up in arms over the matter. Many will refuse to keep the service if it is to cost them 10c a call to their business town, and just what will be the outcome remains to be seen. The order was to commence charging toll last Monday, but the new scheme was postponed one week for further investigation.—Crosswell Jeff.

Dr. M. Cole Seager, Detroit physician, has located in Brown City. The gravel streets in Harbor Beach will receive a bath of road oil this coming spring instead of the customary calcium chloride, as a dust layer. This decision was reached by the city council at a recent meeting.

On Saturday, December 3, the P. M. railroad station at Silverwood was closed, and trains will stop on flag signal. This will do away with telegraph, passenger, freight and express at that point. All business for that station will be handled from Clifford.

MAKE SURVEY OF DAIRY INDUSTRY

A county wide survey is being made in Sanilac county in anticipation of the Dairy Profits Conference at Sandusky on Jan. 27. This survey is being made by eighth grade school boys. One boy from each school district will do the work under the guidance of the official delegate from the district.

The information collected by these boys and the official delegates will be used at the conference in outlining a long time program of work that will fit the dairy needs of the county. It will include the number of dairy cows and heifers, the number of bulls over twelve months and under that age and whether these bulls are purebred or scrub.

This information will also be of great educational value to the schools of the county giving them a true picture of dairying in their own district, township, and the county. Extension dairymen from Michigan State College are satisfied that this plan of work for Sanilac county will help improve the individual dairy profits realized by the dairyman. The survey conducted by the school boys under the guidance of the official delegates will have an important bearing on the effectiveness of the conference.

BRUCKER TO SPEAK AT FARMERS' WEEK

Concluded from first page. Thursday night during Farmers' Week, February 2 to 6.

Neither of the teams has ever been defeated in a pulling contest. The pair of Percherons owned by George Wilcox, Greenville, Ohio, has been in contests in Ohio and Indiana while the team of Belgians owned by R. F. Langley, Flint, have met and defeated Michigan horses. A third team which is owned by J. F. Gohr, Lansing, which has won two pulling contests previously at the college, will be third entry in this year's event.

The Wilcox team held the world's pulling record until late this fall when the Langley team raised their mark 25 pounds in a contest at the Hillsdale fair. The mark now held by Langley's horses is equal to pulling nine 14-inch plows set to plow six inches deep. The pulls are measured by a dynamometer which registers the weight which the team lifts, and this weight has to be pulled at least 27.5 feet before a record is allowed. The top weight now is 3575 pounds, and those in charge of this contest believe that a new world's record will be set.

All the teams are practically equal in weight and have been well trained. Their drivers are out to win the trophy which will undoubtedly carry with it the prestige of world supremacy.

Ten Italian Planes Make Flight From Africa to Brazil at Cost of Five Lives—Doings in Congress—Unemployment Decreasing.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

Gen. Balbo

ITALY'S "air armada" conquered the Atlantic ocean, but at the expense of five lives. Of the fourteen big seaplanes that started from Rome for Brazil, ten made the flight across the sea successfully. Two crashed immediately after the take-off at Bolama, Portuguese Guinea; one man was killed in the fall of the first, and the entire crew of four perished when the second fell and burst into flames. The two replacement planes that were in the squadron were ordered into flight after these mishaps, and both of them were forced down by mechanical trouble not far from the Brazilian penal island of Fernando do Noronha. Their crews were picked up by Italian destroyers that were patrolling the route.

Of the ten planes that got across safely, the first to land at Natal, Brazil, was the one piloted by Gen. Italo Balbo, Italian air minister, who commanded the armada. The second was piloted by Colonel Maddalena, holder of the world's distance and endurance records. General Balbo was highly elated by the success of the flight, saying it was greater than he had expected, despite the misfortunes at Bolama. The aviators were given a great welcome at Natal, and later in the week, when they flew on to Rio de Janeiro, were the recipients of a wonderful ovation in that capital city. The planes are all to be sold to the Brazilian government, but may first be flown to Buenos Aires and back. They are of the Savoia-Marchetti "55" type adapted as bombing planes by the Italian navy and on the transatlantic flight each carried four men and radio telephone and telegraph sets.

NEARLY seven months of intensive and careful work by detectives and newspaper men has resulted in the arrest of the man who is declared to be the murderer of Alfred Lingie, a reporter for the Chicago Tribune. The law authorities in Chicago assert that mysterious crime that excited the entire country is now cleared up. The accused man is Leo Brothers, a gunman of St. Louis where he has a long police record. He was quietly arrested in Chicago on December 21, but the capture was kept secret while the officials completed their investigation.

Brothers, who in Chicago went under the name of Louis V. Bader, answers the description of Lingie's assassin and is said to have been positively identified by witnesses to the murder. The officials declare he was hired to slay Lingie, but refuse for the present to tell who hired him or to name the witnesses who identify him. Neither would they reveal any of the proof they say they have of his guilt.

CONGRESS resumed its session after the holidays than the opponents of the administration resumed their troublesome tactics. These centered for the time being largely about the appropriation for drought relief. The house passed the bill carrying $45,000,000 for this purpose, but the senate promptly amended it by adding $15,000,000 for the purpose of loans to farmers for food, Senator Caraway of Arkansas sponsored this move. He declared he knew there was extreme suffering in the country districts of his state, and his assertions were strengthened by the reports that hundreds of farmers had rioted for food at England, Ark., and were appeased to some extent by gifts of food from the Red Cross.

John Barton Payne, head of the Red Cross, in testimony before the committee on appropriations, denied there was a riot at England and said that 500 persons had been quietly fed after "about forty men came in with some excitement" and demanded food.

The administration does not think congressional appropriations for food are necessary or wise. The radicals and perhaps some other members of congress more than intimate that President Hoover and his advisers are cold blooded and heartless in this matter.

EIGHT United States marines were ambushed and killed by Nicaraguan bandits on New Year's day, and as a result the senate, on motion of Senator Johnson of California, called on the State department for a comprehensive report on the use of our marines in the Central American republic. Evidently the old question is to be debated again in congress. However, Secretary of State Stimson said the administration plans to keep the marines in Nicaragua at least until after the 1932 elections. This will be in accord with the wishes of the Nicaraguan government. President Jose Moncada stated he believed it would be unwise to withdraw the marines at this time; he added that he would like to insure additional co-operation of Nicaraguans with the United States force in an effort to stamp out banditry. His government, he said, is trying to obtain a loan of $1,000,000, part of which would be used to strengthen the national guard for this purpose.

BEST news of the week was that many thousands of men were being put back to work, especially by the railroads and the automobile manufacturers. The tension of the unemployment situation was appreciably lessened. The Chicago & Northwestern system returned nearly 7,000 employees to their jobs in the mechanical and car departments which had been closed since December 24. These departments were reopened on a three day a week basis. The Monon lines took back nearly 800 men on a part time basis, and the Santa Fe and the Rock Island lines were preparing to give at least temporary jobs to hundreds. Other thousands, mainly shopmen, were returned to work by the Illinois Central, the Norfolk & Western, the Missouri Pacific, the New York Central and the Southern Pacific.

In Detroit and Cleveland the automobile factories were humming again. Twenty-two thousand men were recalled to the plants in the Detroit area Monday, and in the Ohio city not only the motor car makers but many other industries added to their pay rolls.

RESPONDING to a resolution of the senate asking for information on the subject, Secretary of Labor William N. Doak reported that approximately 400,000 aliens are now illegally residing in the United States, and that of this total, 25 per cent, or 100,000, are deportable under the provisions of the immigration act. In order to facilitate the federal program of deporting undesirable who are illegally residing in the country, several suggestions were made by Mr. Doak for changes in the present law, among them one for strengthening the law relative to the deportation of those aliens "who are affiliated with organizations which advocate the overthrow of the government of the United States."

That last phrase, of course, means chiefly the communists, and it is interesting to note that a big anti-communist mass meeting, presided over by Martin W. Littleton, was held in Carnegie hall, New York city, Friday, at which a resolution calling for the exclusion of those disturbers was adopted. Representatives of the leading civic, patriotic, labor and church organizations of America took part in the meeting, and Congressman Hamilton Fish told something of the findings of his congressional committee of investigation into the activities of the Reds.

TREASURER JOSEPH R. NUTT of the Republican national committee told Senator Nye's committee that Robert H. Lucas exceeded his authority and made a mistake of judgment in pledging the national committee's special account to secure the $4,000 he borrowed to finance his anti-Norris propaganda. But Mr. Nutt said he didn't blame Mr. Lucas for fighting Norris and added that he had loaned Lucas $3,500 a few days ago to pay off the bank loan. The committee's special account, he said, was not a slush fund but was created to help out in certain congressional districts.

MORE trouble for the administration is brewing in the matter of immediate payment of the World War veterans' adjustment certificates in cash. Representative Patman of Texas, sponsor of the bill for such payment, said it was likely the house would discharge the ways and means committee from further consideration of the measure so that action could be obtained. He asserted a petition for this course had been signed by members from many states who believe, with him, that unfair tactics have been employed to defeat the bill.

Senator A. E. Vandenberg of Michigan, an administrator supporter, was actively seeking to bring about some sort of compromise. He favors legislation to permit veterans to borrow up to 50 per cent of the ultimate value of their certificates. But this doesn't satisfy Patman. "Our nation," said the Texan, "is the wealthiest on earth. It owes less in proportion to wealth than any other country. It has given billions of dollars to other countries in recent years and much of it was used to pay their own veterans adjusted pay and bonuses up to $7,000 each."

"We can pay the veterans in cash now by selling bonds at the lowest interest rate in the history of our nation and retire the last one of those bonds in three or four years. By diverting payments from the public debt, which is already overpaid up to this time, no increase in taxes will be necessary now or later."

PANAMA started the New Year off with a bang and added to the list of Latin American nations that have set up new governments by force. This revolution, however, lasted less than twenty-four hours and was accompanied with very little bloodshed. When it was over Florencio H. Arosemena had given up his office of president and was under arrest at the home of a cousin who was one of the revolutionists. The government was in the hands of a junta and Dr. Harmodio Arias was named acting president.

The office of president was at once offered by cable to Ricardo Alfaro, Panama's minister to the United States, asking him, if he accepted, to return at once from Washington. Alfaro took only four hours to decide, and then accepted the call and began to wind up his affairs in the American capital. He is a veteran liberal and has been minister in Washington for nine years. It was believed by the revolutionists that his close relations with the American government would tend to hasten the recognition of the new regime by President Hoover.

For a day or two it seemed likely that Panama City would be attacked by a small army of armed farmers from the Chepo district where is the county seat of Vice President Tomas Duque, an adherent of Arosemena. But the provisional government placed machine guns on the highways leading into the city, and the counter-revolt faded into nothingness.

Secretary of State Stimson conferred with President Hoover on the matter of recognition, and, while no statement was given out, the indications were that the Alfaro government would be recognized after some delay.

MODIFICATION of the so-called consent decree of 1920, ordered by Justice Jennings Bailey of the District of Columbia Supreme court, greatly loosens the restrictions imposed on the big packing companies. The Armour, Swift, Cudahy and Wilson concerns are now permitted to engage in the manufacture and sale of nearly all classes of food commodities. But they are not allowed to enter the retail field, Justice Bailey holding that retail activity by the packers "would probably result in almost complete annihilation of the independent retail grocers."

ONE day after flatly denying the report that he was about to resign, George Akerson, secretary to President Hoover, handed in his resignation—to the considerable relief of the Chief Executive's supporters. As his successor prominent Republicans in Washington are urging Representative Franklin Fort of New Jersey.

Mr. Fort will leave public life on March 4. He was the unsuccessful dry candidate for the Republican nomination for the United States senate last spring, being defeated by Dwight W. Morrow.

FRANCE laid the Lion of the Marne at rest with all possible honor, and the name of Joseph Joffre, marshal of the republic, is now added to those of the other famed leaders in the World war who have passed on. Clad in the black tunic and red breeches he wore in 1914, Joffre lay in state for two days in the chapel of the war college. On his breast was only one decoration, the Medaille Militaire which is granted only to army commanders and privates. Tuesday night the body was taken on a gun caisson, escorted by cavalry holding torches, under the Arc de Triomphe to the Cathedral of Notre Dame, Wednesday morning in the cathedral the services were conducted by Cardinal Verdier, archbishop of Paris. The remains were then placed in a vault in the chapel of the Invalides besides the biers of Napoleon, Foch and other national heroes. They will remain there for several weeks and will then be buried at the Joffre country home at Louveciennes, not far from Paris.

When the news of the marshal's death was given to the world, messages of sympathy poured in on the family and the French government from all countries. German war commanders and the German press were as lavish in their praise of the dead man as were those of the allied nations. One of the warmest tributes came from Gen. Hermann von Kuhl, the man whom Joffre defeated at the Marne. All of which was highly gratifying to the marshal's mourning fellow countrymen.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I—With his English wife, Catherine, and a twelve-year-old son, "Jeems," Henri Bulain, French settler in Canada in 1749, cultivates a fertile farm adjacent to the Tonteur seigneurie. As the story opens the Bulain family is on its way home from a visit to the Tonteurs, Catherine's wandering brother, Hepsibah, meets them.

CHAPTER II—Hepsibah, as is his custom, has brought presents for his sister and her family. To Jeems he gives a splendid piece of crimson velvet, laughingly telling the boy it is to be a present from Jeems to Toinette, small daughter of the seigneur. Hepsibah also gives Jeems a pistol, bidding him perfect himself in marksmanship, for the people of the frontier are constantly in fear of attacks by Indian war parties, allies of the English.

CHAPTER III—Hepsibah fears for the safety of the Bulgains in their isolated position, but Henri laughs at the idea of danger. Jeems presents the velvet to Toinette. Her cousin, Paul Tache, a few years older than Jeems, contrives to throw the parcel away. Jeems resents the action, and attacks Paul, but the latter whips the smaller boy.

CHAPTER IV—Next day Jeems, feeling he was wrong in brawling before Toinette, goes to her home to offer his apologies. He hears Madame Tonteur refer to him as a "little English beast," but makes his apologies and goes home, saving nothing of what he had overheard. Hepsibah takes his departure. The Tonteurs go to Quebec, where Toinette is to be educated. After four years, during which Jeems practically reaches manhood, the Tonteurs return. War between Britain and France rages, and French settlers hasten to join Dieuskau, friend of commander. Henri and Jeems remain at home. Absent one day on a hunting trip, Jeems sees from a distance his home in flames.

CHAPTER V

For a space Jeems could not move as he gazed at the crimson sky. His home was in flames. This alone would not have daunted him with horror. His father was there to care for his mother, a new home could be built, the world did not end because a house burned. But there were two fires—and the other, farther on, reflecting itself dimly and yet more somberly, was the one that terrified him. It was Hepsibah's fire talking to him through the night!

Then the choking thing in him gave way, and as the power to act returned, he saw Odd facing the lighted heavens—and in every muscle and line of the dog's rigid frame the Indian sign was clearly written.

He set off at a run down hill, and as he ran bushes whipped at his face and shadows gathered under his feet and long arms of gloom reached out from among the trees to hold him back. He could not come up with Odd. Like two shadows in a playful night, one closely pursuing the other, they ran until Jeems' breath began to break from his lips in gasps, and at the end of a mile he fell back to a walk. Odd lessened his pace to his master's. They climbed a lower hill, and once more Jeems could see the glow of fire. In the upper vault of the sky it was fading to a ghostly pallor against the sweeping arc of the Milky Way.

They ran on, and the spirit of hope began to fight for a place in Jeems' brain. This ray of light gave life and force to the arguments with which he now made an effort to hold back the grimmer thing. His home was burning. But it must be an accident, nothing that should fill him with fright. The other fire—off in Forbidden valley—was no more than a coincidence, probably a conflagration started by a careless Indian or a white man's pipe.

He paused again to get his breath, and Odd stopped with him. His shaggy body was trembling with the pent-up emotions of suspense and passion which possessed him when he caught in the air the deadly poison to his nostrils—the Indian smell. Jeems struggled not to believe the evidence which he saw, and told himself that if by any chance there were Indians at his home they were friends helping to save what they could from the tragedy of the fire.

Out of the silence Jeems heard a sound which rose above the pounding of his heart. It was so far away, so indistinct, that the stirring of the leaves had kept it from his ears.

But Jeems had heard.

He had heard the firing of guns. Over the hills and forests the sound had come to him from the direction of the Tonteur seigneurie. He did not wait for the oaks to droop again. Odd led him in their last heart-breaking race into the Big Forest. Leading weights seemed to be dragging at his feet before they were through it. He had run too hard. He stopped and sagged against a tree, with Odd growling in a low and terrible way close to his knees. He was not trying to prove or disprove matters now. A catastrophe had happened to his thoughts with the firing of the guns. Taking the place of hope, even of his fears, was the one great desire to reach his father and mother as quickly as he could. His exertions had beaten they came to the edge of the forest and he could have run no farther without falling. Before them was the slope, a silvery carpet of the starlight. At the foot of it was what had been his home.

That it was a red-hot mass without form or stability, a pile out of which flame rose lazily, its fierceness gone, added nothing more to his shock. He had unconsciously looked for this. The barn was also a heap of blazing embers. Everything was gone. Even this fact was not the one which began to break down his reason, which he had struggled so hard to keep. It was the stillness; the lifelessness; the lack of movement and sound that appalled him at first and then closed in about him, a crushing, deadening force. The fires lit up the bottom land. He could see the big rock at the spring. The paths between the gardens. The bird houses in the nearest oaks. The mill. But he could see nothing that had been saved from the burning house. He could not see his father or his mother or Hepsibah Adams.

Even Odd's heart seemed to break in these moments. A sound came from him that was like a sob. He was half crouching, no longer savage or vengeful. But Jeems did not see. He was trying to find some force in him that could cry out his mother's name. His lips were as dry as sticks, his throat failed to respond. The silence was terrific. In it he heard the snapping of an exploding ember, like a pistol going off. He could hear no one talking, no voices calling.

Fear, the repulsion of flesh and nerves to danger, was utterly gone from him. He was impelled only by thought of his father and mother, the mystery of their silence, his desire to call out to them and to hear their voices in answer. He did not fit an arrow to his bow as he walked down through the starlight, his feet traveling a little unsteadily. What was there or was not in this crawling but not changed by an arrow.

Unexpectedly, he came upon his father. Henri was on the ground near one of Catherine's rose bushes, as if asleep. But he was dead. He lay with his face turned to the sky. Fire-light played upon him gently, now increasing, now fading, as the embers flared or died, like fitful notes in a strain of soundless music.

As softly as the light, without a sob or cry, Jeems knelt beside him. He spoke his father's name, yet knew that no answer would rise from the lifeless lips. He repeated it in an unexcitable way as his hands clutched at the silent form. The starlight lute nothing unrevealed; his father dead, his white lips twisted, his hands clenched at his side, the top of his head naked and bleeding from the scalping knife. Jeems slumped down. He may have spoken again. He may have sobbed. But the thing like death that was creeping over him, its darkness and vastness, hid him from himself. He remained beside his father, as motionless and as still. Odd crouched near. After a little, an inch at a time, he crept to the dead man. He muzzled the hands that were growing cold. He licked Jeems' face where it had fallen against his father's shoulder. Then he was motionless again, his eyes seeking about him like balls of living flame. Death was in the air. He was breathing it. He was hearing it. At last, irresistibly impelled to answer the spirit of death, he sat back on his haunches and howled. It was not Odd's howl any more than it had been Jeems' voice speaking to his father a few moments before. It was a ghostly sound that seemed to quiet even the whispering of the leaves, an unearthly and shivering cry that sent echoes over the clearing, with grief for company.

It was this which brought Jeems out of the depths into which he had fallen. He raised his head and saw his father again, and swayed to his feet. He began seeking. Close by, near the pile of apples which she had helped him gather from under their trees on the slope, he found his mother. She, too, lay with her face to the sky. The little that was left of her unbound hair lay scattered on the earth. Her glorious beauty was gone. Starlight, caressing her gently, revealed to her boy the hideousness of her end. There, over her body, Jeems' heart broke. Odd guarded faithfully, listening to a grief that twisted at his brute soul. Then fell a greater silence. Through long hours the burning logs settled down into flattened masses of dying embers. The darkness came which precedes the day, and after that, dawn.

Jeems rose to face his blasted world. He was no longer a youth but a living thing aged by an eternity that had passed. It was Odd who led him in the quest for Hepsibah Adams. He sought like one half blind and yet sensed everything. He saw the trampled grass, the moccasins-beaten earth at the spring, a hatchet lost in the night, and on the hatchet an English name. But he did not find his uncle.

In the same gray dawn, stirring with the wings of birds and the play of squirrels among the trees, he set out for Tonteur manor.

He carried the hatchet, clutching it as if the wood his fingers gripped held life which might escape him. Because of this hatchet there grew in him a slow and terrible thought that had the strength of a chain. The weapon, with its short hickory handle, its worn iron blade, its battered head, might have been flesh and blood capable of receiving pain or of giving up a secret, so tenacious was the hold of his hand about it. But he did not see the iron or wood. He saw only the name which told him that the English had come with their Indians, or had sent them, as his uncle had so often said they would. The English. Not the French. The English.

And he held the hatchet as if it were an English throat.

But he was not thinking that. The part of him conscious of the act was working unknown to the faculties which made him move and see. His thoughts were imprisoned within stone walls, and around these walls they beat and trampled themselves, all ways alike, telling him the same things, until their repetition became a droning in his brain. His mother was dead—back there. His father was dead. Indians with English hatchets had killed them, and he must carry the word to Tonteur.

Thought which had been wrecked and beaten until now possessed him with a flame behind it that began to burn fiercely but which seemed to give no heat or excitement to his flesh. Only his eyes changed, until they were those of a savage, flinty in their hardness and without depth in which one might read his emotions. His face was white and passionless, with lines caught and etched upon it as if in bloodless stone. He looked at the hatchet again, and Odd heard the gasp which came from his lips. The hatchet was a voice telling him things and gloating in the story it had to tell. It made him think more clearly and pressed on him an urge for caution. As he drew nearer to Tonteur manor, the instincts of self-preservation awoke in him. They did not make him leave the open trail or travel less swiftly, but his senses became keener, and unconsciously he began to prepare himself for the physical act of vengeance.

To reach Tonteur was the first obligation in the performance of this act. Tonteur still had a few men who had not gone with Dieuskau, and as Jeems recalled the firing of guns, a picture painted itself before his eyes. The murderers of his father and mother had swung eastward from Forbidden valley, and the seigneur, warned by Hepsibah's fire, had met them with loaded muskets. He had faith in Tonteur and did not question what had happened in the bottom lands. Before this no doubt had crossed his mind as to Hepsibah's fate. The English hatchets had caught him, somewhere, or he would have come during the long night when he and Odd had watched alone with death. But now a forlorn and scarcely living hope began to rise in his breast as he came to a lone figure lay on the ground. Jeems went to it slowly. The sprawled-out form was Tonteur. Unlike the others, the baron was fully dressed. He undoubtedly had been armed when he rushed forth from the house, but nothing was left in his hands but the clods of earth which he had seized in a final agony. A cry broke from Jeems. He had loved Tonteur. The seigneur had been the one connecting link between his old years and the dreams of his childhood, and it was because of him that he had never quite seemed to lose Toinette. He crossed the dead man's hands upon his breast and loosened the earth from his fingers. He could feel Toinette at his side, and for a brief interval the sickness in his head and body overcame him so that he could not see Tonteur at all. But he could hear Toinette sobbing.

Against this clouding of his senses he felt himself struggling as if swimming in an empty space. He picked up his hatchet and his bow and rose to his feet. He had not lost sound of the mill wheel even when Toinette's sobbing had seemed to be at his side. It was crying at him now, but before he turned toward it his eyes rested on Tonteur's wooden peg. It was half cut off, a mark of grim humor on the part of a butcher. The mill wheel part was forcing his attention to that fact. "Look—look—look"—it said, and then repeated the old song, calling him an English beast.

He faced it in a flash of resentment, not because of the wheel alone but on account of what lay at his feet and what he knew he would find nearer to the walls of the manor. His mind was hurling anathema at the wheel. He wanted to tell it that it lied. In this hush of death he wanted to cry out that he was not of the murderous breed who had sent the killers. Proof was over there, in the valley which at last was well named. His mother. His father. His Uncle Hepsibah. Not one of them were dead by his hand. He had been left alive—by chance. That was proof. The wheel was wrong. It lied.

He looked at Tonteur again, strengthening himself to go a little farther and find Toinette. He knew how it would be. Toinette's young body, even more pitiful than his mother's. He forced himself to turn toward the smoldering walls. Toinette—dead! His father might die, and Tonteur, and all the rest of the world—but these two, his mother and Toinette, inseparable in his soul forever, the vital sparks which had kept his own heart beating—how could they die while he lived? He advanced, pausing over one of the slaves, a woman almost unclothed, inky black except the top of her head, which was red where her scalp was gone. In the crook of her arm was her scalping infant. White, black, women, babies—the loveliness of grimness—it made no difference.

Jeems scanned the earth beyond her, and where the smoke lay in a white shroud he saw a small, slim figure which he knew was Toinette. Another young body might have lain in the same way, its slenderness crumpled in the same manner, a naked arm revealed dimly under its winding sheet of smoke. But he knew this was Toinette. The dizzying haze wavered before his eyes again, and he put out his hand to hold it back. Toinette. Only a few steps from him. Dead, like his mother.

Odd went ahead of him halfway to the still form and stopped. He sensed something Jeems could not see or feel through the smoke mist which undulated before their eyes. Warning of impending danger confronted the dog, and he tried to pass it to his master. In that moment, a shot came from the mill, and a flash of pain darted through Jeems' arm. He was flung backward and caught himself to hear echoes of the explosion beating against the forested hills and the wheel at the top of the mill screaming at him. He answered the shot by dropping his bow and dashing toward the mill. Death might easily have met him at the vaultlike chamber he had entered, and there was no sound in it except that of his own breath and his racing heart. Odd went to the flight of narrow steps which led to the tower room and told Jeems that what they sought was there. Jeems ran up, his hatchet raised to strike.

He must have been an unforgettable and terrifying object as he appeared above the floor into the light which forced its way through the dusty glass of three round windows over his head. There must even have been a little of the monster about him. He had left some of his garments with his mother and father, and his arms and shoulders were bare. Char and smoke and the stain of earth had disfigured him. His face appeared to be painted for slaughter and a greenish fire glittered in the eyes that were seeking for an enemy. Blood dripped to the oaken planks from his wounded arm. He was a Frankenstein ready to kill, dishevelment and fury concealing his youth, his stature made appalling by his eagerness to leap at something with the upraised hatchet.

If the hatchet had found a brain, it would have been Toinette's. She faced him as he came, holding the musket which she had fired through a slit in the wall as if she still possessed faith in its power to defend her. Her eyes had in them a touch of madness. Yet she was so straight and tense, waiting for death, that she did not seem to be wholly possessed by fear or terror. Something unconquerable was with her, the soul of Tonteur himself struggling in her fragile breast to make her unafraid to die and giving to her an aspect of defiance. This courage could not hide the marks of her torture. Death had miraculously left her flesh untouched in passing, yet she stood crucified in the mill room.

Expecting a savage, she recognized Jeems. The musket fell from her hands to the floor with a dull crash, and she drew back as if retreating from one whose presence she dreaded more than that of a Mohawk, until her form pressed against the piled-up bags of grain, and she was like one at bay. The cry for vengeance which was on Jeems' lips broke in a sobbing breath when he saw her. He spoke her name, and Toinette made no response except that she drew herself more closely to the sacks. Odd's toenails clicked on the wooden floor as he went to her. This did not take her eyes from Jeems. They were twin fires flaming at him through a twilight gloom. The dog touched her hand with his warm tongue, and she snatched it away.

She seemed to grow taller against the gray dusk of the wall of grain. "You—English—beast!" It was not the mill wheel this time, but Toinette's voice, filled with the madness and passion which blazed from her eyes.

With a sudden movement she picked up the musket and struck at him. It had been loaded, she would have killed him. She continued to strike, but Jeems was conscious only of the words which came from her brokenly as she spent her strength on him. He had come with the English Indians to destroy her people! He and his mother had plotted it, and they were alive while every one who belonged to her was dead! The barrel of the gun struck him across the eyes. It fell against his wounded arm. It bruised his body. Sobbingly, she kept repeating that she wanted to kill him, and cried out wildly for the power with which to accomplish the act as he stood before her like a man of stone. An English beast—her people's murderer—a fiend more terrible than the painted savages.

She struck until the weight of the musket exhausted her and she dropped it. Then she snatched weakly at the hatchet in Jeems' hands, and his fingers relaxed about the helve. With a cry of triumph, she raised it, but before the blow could descend she sank in a crumpled heap upon the floor. Even then her almost unconscious lips were whispering their denunciation.

He knelt beside her and supported her head in his unwounded arm. For a moment it lay against his breast. Her eyes were closed, her lips were still. And Jeems, sick from her blows, remembered his mother's God and breathed a prayer of gratitude because of her deliverance. Then he bent and kissed the mouth that had cursed him. To be continued.

George W. Snyder, M. D., of Chicago, Said This

"It is more important to use an antiseptic for the stomach, bowels and kidneys than an antiseptic for the mouth and teeth for the reason that 95% of all diseases arise from intestinal disorders. I have prescribed Dr. Burnham's SAN YAK as a laxative and kidney diuretic for swelling of the limbs, high blood pressure with rheumatism, dizziness and diabetes and found it the one and only product I would be willing to tie to. San Yak is the only laxative I ever prescribed that does not irritate and flush away the mucus membrane of the lower bowel. Hence its use in moderation is highly commendable to health." Sold at Burke's Drug Store. Be sure and get Dr. Burnham's San Yak.—Advertisement.
