pet to his ear, this time hearing seemed to him to be the sounds of distant jingling bells.

"Surely it isn't Christmas time," said he. "I hear a great many bells jingling, Mr. Jogalong, do you? I think they're sleigh bells."

"Certainly not sleigh bells, Boy. They are nothing more nor less than the Spring Peepers giving their usual twilight concert. We're getting very near to their concert hall. The voices are louder now."

The ground underneath the feet of the Jogalong and the boy was swampy and they had to be very careful in stepping to find some that was firm. They reached the edge of what seemed to be a very large pond. It seemed to be very large, but perhaps that was because the boy and the Jogalong had grown so small.

"Do you see anything?" asked the Jogalong in a whisper.

"No," replied the boy, "not a thing." The Jogalong had carefully stepped close to the edge of the pond and hidden himself under a tall sweet-flag. The boy did likewise.

"Now look straight out there," said he to the boy. "Do you see anything?" "Only a small frog sitting on a floating twig," the boy said.

This was too much for the Jogalong. He rolled over on the bank and laughed. Immediately the concert stopped. When the Jogalong could again stop laughing and find his voice, he said between chuckles, "Why that's the Spring Peeper, Boy."

"That little thing!" exclaimed the boy. "Why I expected to see a great, huge creature. How can he make so much noise?"

"Sh-h-h-h, he's about to show you," replied the Jogalong. "I laughed and disturbed the concert for a time, but there, it's about to begin again. Watch that frog on the floating twig! There are many, many more just like him hidden around this pond and when he starts singing, the rest will join him.

You'll be able to see how they do it." The small frog on the floating twig was scarcely an inch long and sudden-

"That's old Grandfather Bull Frog," said the Jogalong. "There he is under that lily pond leaf." "He's just talking, but just for fun we'll fool him and follow his advice. Come on !" As they walked they snapped some twigs and Grandfather Bull Frog rolled the covering down over round his ball eyes, spread out his wide webbed feet, and using his two four-fingered hands, swam hastily out of sight.

When they reached the other side of the pond Grandfather Bull Frog had beaten them.

"Better-go-round, better-go-round, better-go-round," he croaked.

"Here, here," laughed the Jogalong. That's what we have done. Change your tune, old thing!"

Whereupon the bull frog croaked as loudly as he could: "Be-drowned, bedrowned. be-drowned !"

"Not if we can help it," laughed the Jogalong again. "Not if we can help it." And just as he was laughing at the bull frog he-but read next week's Jogalong tale.

The new Ford is an economical car to own and drive

Low first cost, low cost of operation and up-keep, and low yearly depreciation mean a distinct saving to every purchaser

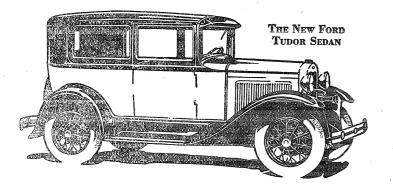

THE NEW FORD is a splendid car to own and drive because of its attractive lines and colors, safety, comfort, speed, reliability and long life.

There are, in addition, three other features of importance to every far-seeing automobile owner ... low first cost, low cost of operation and up-keep, and low yearly depreciation.

During the life of the car, the day-by-day economy of owning a Ford will amount to considerably more than the saving on the first cost. You save when you buy the Ford and you save every mile you drive.

The reasons for this economy are simplicity of design, high quality of materials and care in manufacturing and assembling. Many vital parts are made to limits of one one-thousandth of an inch. Some to three ten-thousandths of an inch. Throughout, the new Ford is an outstanding example of fine craftsmanship in automobile engineering.

The more you see of the new Ford-the more you talk to Ford owners and experienced mechanics-the more certain you become of this fact. . . . It brings you everything you want or need in a motor car at an unusually low price.

Pleasing Air of Distinctiveness Features French Type of Home

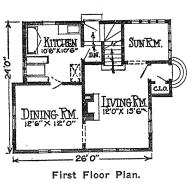

A French type stucco home is shown in the illustration. The home contains six rooms besides the sun parlor which is made possible by the projections. The dormer makes a break in the long sweep of the roof and adds an extra bedroom. The house is 26 by 24 feet.

By W. A. RADFORD By W. A. RADFORD Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to practical home building, for the read-ers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the bickect authority on all these subhighest authority on all these sub-jects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 407 South Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

The architect who designed the home shown in the accompanying illustration calls it a "French type." However, the plain walls with the steep pitched roof might be called English, as well as French, because this type of home is found in the British countries, although usually built of stone instead of stucco.

The view reproduced gives an idea of the distinctiveness of the house.

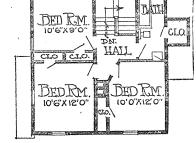

The flat, plain, stuccoed walls are broken at regular intervals with windows, while the roof lines take it out of the commonplace in home design. This house contains six rooms, bath

Little Details Make Houses Livable Places "Early American" is a far-reaching and elastic term, carrying with it a wealth of romance and beauty to the home decorator and furniture collector. necessary will wear out anything that | is not made to wash easily. The many, windows allow much more dirt to enter here than any other room in the house, and the constant use that is given this cheery place by all the family wears out all but the most serviceable materials.

For all the reasons it is wise, therefore, to buy a good quality of wall paper, and after it is hung to varnish it. The colors in a good paper are able to withstand the sun and the varnished surface may be washed and washed without wearing down or peeling off.

The varnish besides making the paper waterproof, makes it adhere much more firmly to the walls, and so withstands both heat and dampness.

The wicker 1.1 a sunroom furniture should be painted a bright color and the black and vermilion bird cages with their brilliant feathered occupants add the last touch of summery brightness and lovely color.

Standardized Homes,

Built Alike, Deplored It is a common sight in residential sections of our cities to see unsightly rows of houses of the type which are built by the mile and sold by the foot.

They are identical in design, planning and setting. If careful attention had been given to the fundamental principles of good planning and designing, these same dwellings could have been built with far more pleasing results and at no greater expense.

Those who build small houses become responsible not only for creating the desire to build attractively and economically but also for preserving the ideals which lead people to build beautiful homes with loving hands and eager hearts.

Good Frames Will Keep Windows Waterproof

It is always wise economy to select casements that are well made, not just put together. Frames have a great deal to do with the weatherproof quality of any window. Unlike the double-hung window which fits within its frame, the casement must depend upon its locking hardware to bring the sash tight against the frame to avoid drafts and rattles and leakages of heat from within or rain from without.

CHAPTER IX

Guarded like a precious jewel on all sides, a hidden town literally as well as in name, Chenufsio was one of the greatest of the strange social centers of the Indians to which prisoners with white skins were brought to be adopted by their captors. That such places existed was a fact which had but recently gained credence in both the English and French colonies. Not until 1764 was Colonel Boquet to free the "white" population in the first of these mystery villages, and then the deliverance which he brought about resulted in less of happiness than of tragedy, for the life and associations which he disrupted in the name and claim of the Colonies had their roots as far back as the third and fourth generations. Hearts and homes were broken as well as prisoners' shackles.

Chenufsio was the Rome of a wide domain in that period of its history when Jeems and Toinette came with Tiaoga and his warriors. In it were three hundred people, and at full strength it numbered sixty fighting men. It nestled at the edge of a large meadow which the river embraced in a horseshoe curve and its center was a stockaded stronghold with longhouses, storage buildings, cabins, and tepees sufficient for the entire population in times of stress.

The Senecas had vineyards and fine orchards of apples, cherries, and plums, and they also grew tobacco and potatoes on a considerable scale. In the cornfields and growing from the same hills were pumpkins and beans. and everywhere were sunflowers of a dwarfish kind grown for the oil which was extracted from their seeds.

When the season was good. Chenufsio lived in comfort during the long winter months. The granaries were full. large quantities of dried fruits were in the storehouses, and underground cellars were stocked with apples, pumpkins, potatoes, and squashes. When the season was bad, Chenufsic drew a belt tightly about its stomach for five months of the year. For three of these months it starved.

This was a bad season. Spring frosts had killed the early vegetation and had blackened the buds of apples and plums. The corn was so poor that, after roasting time, only enough was left for the next year's planting, and beans and potatoes had suffered until there was less than a third of fish to a slender pole which was carried on the shoulders of two men, the hair of one of these scalps reaching almost to the ground. With the scalp carriers in the lead, they came to the hill at the edge of the plain and looked down on the valley of Chenufsio. At Tiaoga's command the men bearing the scalp-laden pole had gone ahead, and now Tiaoga followed with his men in single file. Toinette and Jeems were midway in the line. Wide slave collars of buckskin had been placed about their necks, and Jeems was stripped of his weapons. The warriors did not hurry. Their step was slow and steady, and not a man broke the silence with a whisper or a word. A sea of torches advanced. It rolled in and out of hollows like a flood, then came to a level place and formed two streaming lines of fire. The scalp bearers reached these a hundred yards ahead of Tiaoga and his men. Toinette could see them enter the light of the torches, and in these moments the voices of the savages rose to the heavens. Tiaoga paused, and not until the scalp bearers had paraded their grisly burden the entire length of the gauntlet of flame did he proceed again. Toinette felt stealing over her a strange faintness of body and limb. Stories which she had forgotten. stories she had heard of the Indians from childhood, stories that had sent shivers through the hearts of a thousand homes along the frontiers all crowded upon her at once. Wild tales of appalling torture and vengeance, of stake and fire and human suffering. She had listened to them from her father's lips, from passing voyageurs, had heard them in the gossip of the seigneurie. And she remembered by name this ordeal which awaited them. It was Le Chemin de Feu-the Road of Fire-through which they must pass. Others had died in it. Roasted by pitch-filled torches. Blinded. Killed by inches. So she had been told. Tiaoga and his warriors moved slowly. They were like bronze men without flesh or emotions. Their heads were high, their bodies straight, their jaws set hard as they stalked at a death-march pace between the columns of their people. Jeems fell into this rhythmic movement as the mouth of the torch monster began to swallow them. And then with eyes that became flame-lit pools of fear and exhaustion Toinette saw that not a hand gave a sign of rising against them. The torches coughed and flared, but not a spark touched their skins in passing. No eyes gleamed hatred at them. No fingers clenched, no hand was raised. The things she had heard in the land of her people were lies. The Indians killed in war but they did not torture. They did not pull out eyes and thrust sticks through quivering flesh. They were men and women and children like all other men and she thought she had discovered for herself. But one thing she did not fully know. She might have learned it had she caught the low-voiced whisperings which followed the passing of the warrior . "She is Tiaoga's daughter-she is the spirit of Soi Yan Makwun returned to us in the flesh-now our good fortune will return-the sun will shine-light and laughter will comefor Soi Yan Makwun is here, out of death to live with us again !" crossed a field of the hands of the Thrush drawing her They paused at the edge of the circle, and for a little while no one moved or spoke. Then there was a break in the ring behind the Seneca chief, and through it came Jeems, escorted between Shindas and another warrior. Toinette gasped and almost cried out. There was an amazing change in Jeems. He was stripped to the waist and painted in stripes of red and yellow and black. His face appeared to be cut in crimson gashes. His thick blond hair was tied in a warlock from which streamed a feather showing he had killed a man. At Tiaoga's command there advanced from the circle an old man with a wizened face and white hair and a vounger man whose form was bent almost double because of a deformity. Behind these two came a little girl. The old man was Wuskoo, the Cloud. came into them. The younger was his son, Tokana, or To be continued. Gray Fox, a name of which he had been proud in the days before a tree fell on his tepee and crooked his back, when he was the fastest runner in the tribe. Tiaoga spoke again. He exulted in the fortune which had sent another son to Wuskoo, a son with a white skin and a strong body who would care for him and who would be a brother to Gray Fox. With his thin and quivering hands, Wuskoo took the slave collar from Jeems' neck and stamped it joyously into the ground while the broken Gray Fox raised a hand in brotherhood and friendship. There was something so wistfully sweet in the big dark eyes of the little Indian maiden that Jeems drew her to him and put an arm protectingly about her. It was then Toinette left the Thrush and ran to him, so that all saw her held in his painted arms, with Wanonat, the Wood Pigeon, a happy partner in the moment when Toinette proudly and a bit defiantly told Chenufsio and through it the whole Seneca nation that this was the man to whom she belonged. Like a flood burst loose from a dam. the night of feasting and rejoicing began. It was preceded by a combat among the dogs in which Odd established his right to a place among the four-footed citizens of Chenufsio. After a time he found a scent on the beaten ground that led him to the tepee which had been prepared for Toinette. Here he found Toinette and the Thrush, whose name-a long time ago-had been Mary Daghlen.

* * * It seemed to Jeems that from the beginning his freedom among the Senecas was as great as if he had been born of their blood. Gray Fox took him to the tepee of his father, which was to be his home, and food and drink were brought to him. Then he was left alone, for even the de lighted old man whom Tiaoga had honored by the gift of a son could not women and children. These truths be kept away from the celebration which was in progress. The thought came to Jeems that no impediment had been placed in his way if he chose to steal off into the night and disappear. The ease with which he might have set out on this adventure was proof of his helplessness. Like the others, he was a captive forever.

There was no escape from Chenufsio unless one accepted death as the route. He did not think of escape because its desire possessed him. He was measuring his world and adjusting nimself to its limitations with dressed her in the prettiest raiment left by Silver Heels. There was something about the long yellow feather, the filet of scarlet cloth, and the boyish closeness of her dress which made Jeems give a wondering cry. It was as if they had come to her from an obscure and distant past and had always belonged to her. He had dreamed of this lovely wilderness princess; through years of boyhood hopes and plannings he had built up worlds about her, and in those worlds he had fought for her and had adventured with her where he alone was her champion and her hero. He had carried gifts of feathers to herfeathers and fawnskin and a piece of cloth like that which she now wore in a crimson band about her forehead! To him it was the precious red velvet, there in the glow of the moon. He opened his arms, and Toinette a crop. But the people of Chenufsio wore no appearance of gloom on the day when Tiaoga and his triumphant warriors were to arrive from the east. Tiaoga's messenger had brought the news that not a man had been lost in their invasion of the territory of their enemies. This was unusual, and it put fresh courage into the hearts of those who had seen the year go against them. Tiaoga's homecoming with the spoils of war was an augury which more than discounted empty cellars and granaries.

As a part of these spoils, they knew Tiaoga was bringing a daughter to take the place of Silver Heels.

This convinced them that fortune was bound to smile on them again. They had loved Soi Yan Makwun. With her death had come bad times, Now the spirits would give them an easy winter, and next year would see the earth flowering with good things. Chenufsio made ready for the feast. There were still plenty of earthy things and a supply of late green corn packed away in husks and kept for this occasion.

The last day was long for Toinette. It had begun at dawn, and though Tiaoga halted his men at intervals to let her rest, it had not ended with dusk. Darkness came before they reached a plain on the far side of which was a hill. Beyond this hill was Chenufsio. They could see the glow of a great fire lighting the sky. Toinette forgot her exhaustion at this sign of the end of their journey. She observed that some one took from Jeems the scalp of the man he had killed, which he had tried to conceal from her eves under a flap of buckskin. Then she saw all of the scalps taken by the Senecas fastened like dangling

JUNGLE SWALLOWS FAMED LOCOMOTIVE

The John Lucas Ends Days in Dutch Guiana.

Philadelphia.-Like a scepter haunting the march of time, the John Lucas, once a bright and shiny monarch of the road that roared its way over the tracks of the Camden & Atlantic railroad 50 years ago, is resting, rust encrusted, in the mud of the tropical jungle of Dutch Guiana.

A tale of the battle put up by the old engine against the onward rush and popularity of electricity for railroad use which relegated it to its place in the jungle is told by F. T. Flinn, who held the controls on many of the old engine's jaunts. Flinn is now assistant trainmaster for the Pennsylvania railroad.

Built in 1878.

The engine was built in 1878 by the Baldwin Locomotive works and named after John Lucas, the late paint manufacturer and a stockholder in the railroad. A light tank engine, it could popping an eye. run either forward or backward and had a cowcatcher and headlight on both ends and was the first locomotive to be equipped with air brakes.

Day and night the John Lucas strutted proudly along its 6.74-mile route from Camden, N. J., to Haddonfield, never missing a trip.

In 1890 the John Lucas was sold to do the chores of the common herd, in the yard of the Middletown (Pa.) Iron works. Still young in years, the engine gave its best and tried to prove that the faith it had been entrusted with was well deserved, but it was not enough. Again the monster electricity forced the little engine to take a side track.

Taken Off Scrap Pile.

Rescued from the scrap pile, the engine stepped out to try its luck in foreign climes when a doctor conceived the idea of introducing American railroad methods into Dutch Guiana. A company was organized and the John Lucas was the first purchase. Down into the wilds it went and everything seemed to be going fine, but business was slow and so was the interest on the stockholders' money. No money means no fuel. So the company was debanded, the engine left in the jungle grave.

A short time ago, more than 30 years after the burial of John Lucas, a New York architect, Robert Nilse, Jr., making a tour down the Maroni river in Dutch Guiana, saw a funnel protruding above the trees. Investigation proved that the funnel topped the John Lucas, deep in the mud of the jungle.

If they also served popovers, I should not pass. * * * A friend of mine has a horse for sale. It is a noble looking steed, well gaited and of incredible stamina. The only thing wrong with the animal is that his brakebands need tightening. He coasts once around Central park before you can stop him. But he would make a great charger for any retired sailor, who has brought an anchor home from sea.

I believe that Will Rogers once bought a horse from a rodeo cowboy, stranded in New York. The story was that the cowboy also sold the horse to Douglas Fairbanks and Tex Rickard. It was a good horse, even cut three ways. The cowboy rode a pullman home.

to a quiet subway station, I saw two newsboys rolling dice. One of them was earnestly requesting the cubes to "Come seven!" I wondered if he would have the slightest interest in knowing that the ancient pagans believed the odd numbers stood for good. Three represented Egyptian heaven, four earth. Added together they equalled seven-the entire Cosmos. There were the seven jewels of Budda: the seven emblems on the footprints of Vishnu. Pythagoras called seven "the mystic number." But somehow I decided all this would, for the African golf players, lack any element of thrill; so I went on home.
