FACTS REGARDING INFANTILE PARALYSIS

From an Article Prepared by C. C. Slemons, State Health Commissioner.

The Michigan Society for Crippled Children is circulating an article concerning infantile paralysis which was written by C. C. Slemons, M. D., commissioner of the Michigan Department of Health. The article is a timely one and is printed here for the information of Chronicle readers in the following paragraphs:

Poliomyelitis is a disease concerning which there is liable to be much of mysticism among both the medical profession and the laity. It is true that compared with such diseases as typhoid and diphtheria we know little about it. Great Britain Forced to Abandon the Gold Standard-Steel Cuts Wages—President's Appeal to the Legion.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

GREAT BRITAIN started off the week with a bang that could be heard around the world. The national government, finding the gold reserves

Criticism abroad concerning the British government's expenditure in keeping the unemployed on the dole. The adverse balance of trade, which he said "has been seized upon and exaggerated."

The new government's inability to command a united front in the house of commons.

The naval unrest "exploited in foreign newspapers, causing general nervousness abroad." Mr. Snowden explained that as a result of all this people began to take their possessions away from England, but added that the actual crisis started chief banks in Australia.

J. P. Morgan, who was in London, gave one of his exceedingly rare interviews to the press.

"This step seems to me," he said, "to be the second necessary stage in the work of the national government. the first being the balancing of the budget. The completion of the government's work will be the restoration of trade in this country. This being the case, it seems to me to be a hopeful and not a discouraging event, and one which brings the great work of the government much nearer to accomplishment."

JAPAN'S action in seizing Mukden and other South Manchurian cities was causing a lot of trouble not only for China but also for the Japanese government. The aggressive course, it appears, was taken by the war office without awaiting the approval of the government at Tokyo, and the cabinet was badly split. War Minister Minami aggravated this rupture by sending reinforcements to Manchuria from the Corean gar-

Shidehara risons on his own initiative. Foreign Minister Kijuro Shidehara was especially roiled, for he hoped to settle the quarrel with China by peaceful negotiations, and apparently Premier Wakatsuki was of the same mind.

On demand of Alfred Sze, Chinese delegate to the League of Nations, a special meeting of the league council was called to hear Nanking's protest against the action of Japan, and a mild resolution was adopted. Mr. Sze charged that Japanese troops, without provocation, opened rifle and artillery fire upon Chinese soldiers at Mukden, bombarded the arsenal and barracks, set fire to the ammunition depot and disarmed Chinese troops in other cities. He asked that the league act to prevent further development of the situation and determine the amounts and character of reparations due China.

Yoshizawa, Japanese spokesman, announced to the council that Japan would respect in every way the stipulations of the league covenant and of the Kellogg pact in her policy toward Manchuria.

T. V. Soong, Chinese minister of finance, proposed a Sino-Japanese commission to try to solve the Manchuria problem and this suited Tokyo, but it was rejected flatly by Nanking. President Chiang Kai-shek in a message to the Chinese people, declared that "if the League of Nations and the Kellogg pact signatories fail to uphold justice between China and Japan. the national government is prepared for a final and supreme struggle. I shall lead the army and the entire nation in the fight for the preservation of our race. I shall go to the front and, if necessary, fall with other patriots."

The Canton rebel government ceased its hostile campaign against the Nationalist regime in order that all China might unite to combat Japan.

Soviet Russia took a hand in the melee, making formal protest to Japan against the latter's course in taking steps in Manchuria without first notifying Moscow. Russia says her interests in Manchuria are as large as those of Japan. The tone of the Moscow press was warlike.

On Wednesday Secretary of State Stimson sent notes to both Japan and China urging them to cease hostilities, and the League of Nations council cabled to Tokyo asking Japan to permit a neutral commission to investigate the situation.

The President outlined the financial plight of the country, and said he was convinced that the Legion would seek to add no further burden.

When the President finished and had left the hall with cries of "We want beer!" ringing behind him, he was driven directly back to his special train which left at once for Washington.

After a warm debate the Legion adopted a resolution condemning the Eighteenth amendment and calling on congress to hold a nation-wide referendum on the repeal or modification of the dry laws. The convention also voted not to press for full payment of compensation certificates at this time. Henry L. Stevens, Jr., of Warsaw, N. C., was elected national com-

DIRECTORS of the United States Steel corporation, the Bethlehem Steel corporation and the Youngstown Sheet and Tube company announced that wage rates of their employees would be reduced about 10 per cent, effective October 1. At the same time the General Motors corporation announced a readjustment of salaries, the cuts ranging from 10 to 20 per cent; and the United States Rubber company gave out word that its entire organization would • on a five-day week, without change in the hourly scale of wages but involving a reduction of one-eleventh in salaries. These readjustments by huge corporations were not unexpected but were greatly regretted by the Hoover administration. The wage cuts were bitterly resented by organized labor whose officials feared they would lead to reductions all along the line. As a matter of fact, several other big concerns did put in effect similar cuts.

PLANS for a general armaments construction holiday go on apace. The League of Nations armaments committee invited the United States to participate in its discussions of this subject in a consultative canacity and Uncle Sam gladly accepted. Then Secretary of State Stimson an-

ican minister to Switzerland, had been instructed to inform the committee that the United States is favorably inclined toward the idea of an interand naval armaments. Mr. Wilson will report to Washington on any plan of action advanced and will then receive further instructions from the administration. Another hopeful sign is the fact that Premier Laval of France has accepted an invitation from President Hoover to visit Washington. It is expected he will come some time in October.

TOUETT SHOUSE, chairman of the executive committee of the Democratic national committee, is one of those who believe it is not always wise to let sleeping dogs lie. He knows his party is bound to come up against the prohibition question before or during the next national convention, and he consequently has stirred up the animals by publishing "some platform suggestions" in the organ of the Woman's National Democratic club.

Jouett

In general Mr. Shouse stands on the liquor question with the Smith-Raskob faction of the party. He favors the submission to the states of a substitute for the Eighteenth amendment whereby wet states could restore the manufacture and sale of liquor, while dry states could remain dry. Pending such action he would have light wines and beer legalized by congress as nonintoxicating in fact.

His suggested plank on agriculture calls for the repeal of the federal farm board legislation, which he terms a costly failure, and he advocates something in the line of a surplus control device employing the equalization fee as a means of assessing the farmers instead of the taxpayers generally for the cost of stabi-

The discussion which Mr. Shouse's article already, has aroused is welcome to National Chairman Raskob, who is openly seeking to crystallize party views on the major issues.

DESPITE the President's determination to be a second of the second of th ation to keep down governmental expenditures, it is revealed now that the budget estimates for the 1933 fiscal year which have just been submitted to him call for expenditures that would break all records since the days of the World war. It was stated authoritatively, that the estimates top the estimated 1932 expenditures by almost a quarter of a billion dollars. Mr. Hoover, it was said, was having a hard time deciding just where to use the pruning knife, but it seemed certain that he would use it effectively, for he has virtually pledged himself to hold down the cost of government in 1933.

Five years afterward, when Pascual Ortiz-Rubio assumed the presidency of Mexico, Tellez, conforming to the custom in diplomatic missions, tendered his resignation, but this was declined. Later when Ortiz-Rubio and his family visited the capital they were the guests of the ambassador.

Most noteworthy among the deaths of the week was that of Dr. David Starr Jordan, venerable chancellor emeritus of Stanford university. He passed away at his campus home after a stroke of paraysis, at the age of eighty years. Doctor Jordan had achieved distinction as a scientist, an educator and a philosopher, and for many years had been an advocate of world peace. In the field of science he was best known as an ichthyologist.

LET SCALES TELL THE COW'S RATION

Feed According to Records, and Save Money.

Science has double crossed the cow. Regardless of her appetite, dairymen know how much feed they can feed a cow profitably; but first they must know how much milk she gives and what proportion of her milk is butterfat. C. G. Bradt, of the New York State College of Agriculture, who supervises the dairy record clubs, says dairymen are using their record club figures to lower the cost of milk

Ralph Hallock of Marathon, Cortland county, reports that he saved 53 cents a 100 pounds on the cost of producing milk, by reducing the amount of feed according to the cow's records. His low milking cows got less grain and the better milking cows got more grain, but he saved grain and got more milk

Rupert Bays of Virgil, another member of the record club, took some grain away from his overfed low milkers and gave it to the better milkers according to the amounts they gave. He gained a can of milk a day without increasing the total amount of feed used.

The new way of testing cows by mail is becoming increasingly popular with New York state dairymen, Mr. Bradt says. The charge is by the cow rather than for the herd which makes the test available to dairymen with small herds. The testing is supervised by the college of agriculture and is done at regional laboratories at Gowanda, Middletown, and Ithaca. Several counties have county labora-of Herd Improvement An encouraging report comes to us from the Canton (Penn.) Dairy Herd Improvement association. It states that on account of low prices for the product the dairymen are even more interested than ever in testing and eliminating the unprofitable animals.

This is exactly the attitude that the dairymen should take. Too often a herd improvement association is looked upon as a means of getting high records in order to sell cows or their offspring at a higher price. There improvement associations is to help the member make more money from the cows he milks through the establishment of a bookkeeping system. For that reason the lower the production in a herd and the less the profit the more the dairyman needs the benefits which can come from testing his cows and keeping records on them. That means that herd improvement associations are needed more right now even than when prices are good. -Successful Farming.

the summer months has a direct bearing on the next winter's production. This is shown by the experience of a Johnson county (Iowa) Herd Improve ment association member, says a writer in Successful Farming. He did not feed grain to cows on pasture in the summer of 1929. Then when he took the cows off pasture and started winter feeding, he noticed they were run down in flesh and that their milk production did not come up to what it should. The cows utilized the grain to build up their bodies.

Last summer the owner fed grain mixture according to production through the pasture season. The ration consisted of 500 pounds of corr and cobmeal, 500 pounds of ground oats, and 100 pounds of high protein concentrate. His cows were in good condition when they came into the winter feedlots and were able to in crease production and give normal re sponse to winter feeding and care.

Lice on Calves

During the winter season, the calf is often infested with lice. Under such conditions, it cannot be thrfty, as the lice sap the calf's vitality. Probably the most efficient treatment for lice is an application of a 2 per cent solution of a coal tar dip to all parts of the calf's body. Another treatment in a week or ten days will usually eliminate most of the trouble. This treatment should be applied only when the calf is in a warm place and can be rubbed partly dry. During the severe weather, a mixture of equal parts of kerosene and lard or a good commercial louse powder will usually control the lice. Thorough cleaning and disinfecting of the calf shed will help to control the lice.

Green Clover for Cows When dry weather wilted his dairy pasture and made it unpalatable H. B. Wideman, Medina county, Ohio, mowed red clover and oats and fed them green to his dairy herd. "It doesn't pay to let a cow go off in production," said Mr. Wideman. "As soon as my cows showed a slump I began to give them extra green feed and they came back up in their milk. The extra feeding paid and I shall repeat it whenever drought cuts my pasture.—Capper's R. N. McCullough, Auctioneer

Mr. Shapiro's Dead Labor that objects to wage reductions may find some comfort in the fact that a 10 per cent reduction may mean before long a 100 per cent in-

Benjamin Meyerson of the Shapiro gang boasted that he was "the bestdressed racketeer in Brownsville." His next costume, not fashionable, will be supplied by an undertaker.

Joseph Grottali, another gangster, was killed near the spot on which Meyerson was placed. Both ex-convicts had been released or let out on bail after crimes that should have made it impossible for them to do any harm for twenty years at least.

The chief of their gang, Shapiro, recently killed, had peculiarities. He was not afraid of bullets, and proved it. "But he would run, sobbing, if anybody pulled a knife on him."

Starting a fad for corduroy trousers and then cashing in as a salesman of the same, giving finger waves to your more prosperous friends for 35 cents, selling five cents worth of stones for $1 after carving initials on them, taxiing couples to dances in an ancient horse drawn hack, and many other strange yet profitable money making schemes are invented by the hard pressed student who finds his or her stay in college threatened by lack of crease in general prosperity, with funds, according to a study made by Professor Robert C. Angell and students of his sociology classes in the MYRON GLENDENNING and His

Carefully prepared questionaires were submitted to 273 students chosen pends on the surplus earnings of at random from the student body, and workers and their ability to buy what investigations of student organizations and activities, interviews with town business men, landladies, fraternities, sororities and University officials were made. Comparison of the situations of individual students and general conditions for the years 1929-1930 and 1930-1931 was the object of the survey.

A wide variety of facts were more pounds; and more pounds, until brought forth. Notable was the relatively slight increase in withdrawals from the University for financial reasons, 112 in 1929-1930 and 130 in A miracle from the deep comes to 1930-1931, For men the figures were encourage those that love and respect | 104 and 102 for the years given, while courageous men. > The average income of students for 1930-1931 during the first semester was slightly less than the previous year, the average for all being $472 and that of working students $452. Source of this income changed but little, while income from work during school, summer work, loans and miscellaneous sources increased in proportion in 1930-31. The slight decrease in allowances indicates that college expenses are one of the last places where families economize. That many wholly or partially self supporting students were hard pressed is indicated that the University loan requests were almost double those of 1929-30, and that private organizations such as fraternities reported early exhaustion of such funds.

The brighter side was the many ways of earning extra dollars that students invented, and a tendency to demand and get lower living expenses. The word "lunatic" comes from the Latin word "luna," meaning moon, and it is a old superstition that the moon has a direct effect upon the brain of human beings, hence the superstition that sleeping in the moonlight causes blindness, insanity and kindred calamities. ## All Sales Strictly Cash

Effective October 1, 1931.

Farmers expect, and rightly so, to receive cash for their crops when delivered to our elevator.

We must also pay cash for all other merchandise we buy.

The credit situation throughout the country is tight and therefore, to assure the farmers of a market where they can at all times sell their beans or grain for cash, we must now sell merchandise for cash only.

Retail prices will be made as low as possible consistent with the market and quality of the merchandise. Customers will thereby receive the benefit of lowest cash prices.

We are confident that our many friends and customers will see the wisdom of taking this measure at this time.

Caro high school football team pened its season at Pigeon Friday with a victory, defeating the Huron county school, 19 to 0. An all day rain made the field slippery and prevented much use of the forward pass.

Jule, 10-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Clarkson, of North Goodland, is wearing a very broad smile these days, as his purebred two-yearold Holstein heifer, Elmlot Pontiac Ormsby Bessie No. 1432180, gave birth to twin calves, a male and female, this week. CHAPTER I—Six bandits come aboard the steamer, Midnight Sun, while she is tied to the bank of the Mackenzie. Father Claverly and the other passengers on the boat are amazed at the sight of banditry in this amazed at the sight of banditry in this Great Waterways country, a thousand miles north of Edmonton, Jimmy Montgomery, who had spent years with the Canadian Mounted, draws hisgun in the face of the covering rifles and fires upon the ruffians. He is shot through the heart by a half-breed. The bandits get away with gold dust and choice peltry.

After a brief dispute over plans with his incompetent superior, Inspector Haskell, Alan starts out after the bandits in the big police launch with the corporal and four constables.

CHAPTER III.—Reaching the Midnight Sun, they stop long enough for Alan to board her and consult witnesses of the crime. Alan asks the skipper to put Jimmy Montgomery's orphaned four-year-old daughter off at Fort Endurance and leave her in the care of Alan's fiancee, Elizabeth Spaulding. At the MacMillan trading post on the Big Alooska, Joyce MacMillan is alone, awaiting the return of Dave, her father, from a fur-buying trip. She is thrilled when the police launch ties up there for the night, as she has not seen Alan Baker for months. Secretly she had hoped to marry him; then she was stunned by the news of his engagement to Elizabeth. She is happy now to perceive from his halting talk that the planned marriage is not definitely certain. nitely certain.

As Alan finished his reluctant indictment, her resolve hardened. . . . She was going to fight for her father and defend him with every weapon in her power.

One way shot into her mind. Her proud head dropped a little, and she asked hesitantly: "Alan, do you have to arrest him? Only you and Mr. Younge and I know about these furs being here. If you could-if we could some way cover it up-"

She checked the plea. She could not bring herself to put Alan in so fearful a dilemma. Looking up, she met his gaze squarely again. "No I can't ask that of you. I'd never ask that."

He chose his words very carefully. "The question with me, Joyce, is this: How deeply is your father involved? I can't think he'd go the whole length with these bandits. I can't think he'd countenance murder or even so brazen a robbery as these men staged. Perhaps they deluded him about their intentions. If they're caught, they're going to lie and throw as much of the blame on him as they can. But if I can have the truth as a working basis. I can nail their lies. We can't hope to save him from a penalty, but we maybe can save him from the-the worst."

Joyce blanched at the last word, at the specter it aroused. Her father stood charged with murder. In her heart the Law suddenly became a tangible and fearsome thing.

Alan went on: "You stand a better chance of getting the truth from him than I do, Joyce. He'd suspect me if I tried to talk to him. But with you he'd be more frank and open. When he comes in, won't you try to find out what you can?"

"You mean I'm to watch him and gather what hints I can, and perhaps ask questions that seem innocent?"

"That's exactly it, Joyce. Exactly what I meant. If you'll do that for me, if you'll help me that much . . . Joyce, don't you see why I told you this? Don't you see it's because I'm going to stick with you? I won't see your dad railroaded. I'll help him to the limit I can-because he's your father."

He was facing her in the ghostly morning light. Again he was conscious that his four months of absence, breaking the friendship between them, had invested her with an aura of strangeness to him; and that all during this brief fateful visit he had become aware of her in a quickened sense. How brave and comradely a girl! And in spite of her hard life here, in spite of her efforts to be a good bush-loper, how winsome and girlish and adorable she was!

Unwilling to detain him. Joyce offered him her hand, wishing him success today, hiding her fears for him when he should come up with these men. Alan hent nearer her, he henf down a little to kiss her, as more than once he had done in the years past, It was an impulsive act; he was swept by admiration of her bravery, of her girlish prettiness. And it was a humble act of contrition, too, and self-reproach; for he had said to himself that if he had kept up his visits here, instead of leaving Joyce all alone to the battle, he might have halted Dave MacMillan's plunge into crime.

She went with him down to the wharf and stood watching the patrol embark. At the first bend above, he turned to look back. Vaguely through the mist he saw Joyce still standing on the wharf in the gray chill of earliest morning. He waved to her and caught the tiny white of her kerchief answering.

When the mist had hidden her from him, he turned his eyes ahead. Somewhere on up the spruce-buried Alooska were those six bandit strangers, riflearmed and desperate and certain to give battle. Against them he was pitting his life and the lives of his men today. Fifty miles above the MacMillan trading store, Alan ordered Pedneault to swerve in toward the north bank and stop.

He believed those bandits could not be very far ahead now. Across this silent wilderness the roar of the launch's engine carried for five or six miles. Warned of pursuit, those criminals might lift their canoes back into the timber and let the police go harmlessly past. Likelier still, they might lay an ambush where the river was narrow, and open on the launch with repeating rifles at a murderous pointblank range. But if he located them on up-stream, he could slip upon them quietly in the paddle craft and lay a deadly ambush himself.

Taking a pair of binoculars he splashed ashore and hurried up a hill to its summit. There he had a clear view of a long river "straight" reaching twenty miles up-stream.

He moved his glasses slowly upstream, praying for a glimpse of those two outlaw canoes. Carefully focusing, he scrutinized the river, the banks on either side with their little curves and hollows: and searched above the trees for a wisp of camp smoke. Nothing, nothing whatsoever, of two creeping black, dots. The bandits were twenty miles ahead at least.

As he hurried back down to the launch, he began to realize that those two canoes had traveled more swiftly than he had thought possible. For the first time in his police experience Alan found himself ill at ease and uncertain of what he was running into. Though he could understand, on the assumption of Dave MacMillan's guilt. how the bandits knew just the right moves to make in this dimly known country, still he was utterly unable to explain how six absolute strangers could get into this country unseen.

from, how they had got in here un- in their hearts to goad them on. known to everybody—the whole thing was uncanny. He hardly knew what to expect of them next. Splashing back upon the launch, he told his men tersely: "They're not in sight yet, and I could see for twenty We've got to meet up with them before they reach the Forks. They're making tracks. Ped. you've light to drive by now. We'll take our chances."

Twice more that morning, between edneault's reckless dashes, he hurried ashore and futilely searched ahead. Something had gone wrong. The patrol should be within sight of them. Estimating their speed and the speed of the pursuing launch, he knew the police craft should have overhauled them about eighty miles above the MacMillan trading post. He had come a hundred and twenty, and no sight of them yet. They had either dodged aside, or had done something to give them a big edge over what he thought possible.

It was afterward, when the waters of the Alooska had given up their ghastly secret, that Joyce MacMillan listened to the accounts of several Yellowknife men and gazed upon certain grim evidence, and pieced together the story of how those bandits were able to keep in the lead. But Alan knew nothing of that harrowing story now; he knew only that something had upset all his calculations.

Fifteen miles from the Alooska Forks he went ashore a last time and climbed a squat tree. He had a clear view to the Forks. The glasses picked up a sight that set his heart pounding madly against his ribs.

Far ahead, three short miles from the Forks of the Alooska, a pair of tiny black objects, like bugs crawling along a silver ribbon. He jumped out of the tree, leaped down the slope. Splashing aboard, he flung all caution to the winds. . . . "Throw into it, Pedneault! We've got to beat them to the Forks. We'll close in on them in the launch. Got to! They'll hear us but they won't stop, won't fight, if they can make it there. Open her up! To h-1 with rocks and mud bars now!" His last words were drowned in the engine roar as Pedneault opened out the launch. With the wind stinging his eyes and the spray lashing him. Alan clutched the painter to keep from being flung bodily overboard, and gave Pedneault what help he could. The craft careened around the last bend, a scant mile from the great Y of the Alooska. A clear open stretch lay in front. Dashing the blinding spray from his eyes. Alan rose precariously to his feet, looked ahead; and his heart sank as the truth was borne in upon him.

Those canoes had beaten him to the Forks.

It was maddening, his defeatdoubly maddening for its closeness to a smashing triumph. He had come within five minutes of overhauling them in the launch, and then had missed, had missed by a mile that loomed gigantic as two hundred. They had beaten him. They had heard the thundering boat, had flung their whole strength into the race; and now were whipping on eastward along one or other of the Alooska branches.

The launch would have to be abanoned at the Forks. police boat would be stranded or wrecked within half a mile if it attempted to go up either of those shallow streams. He would have to take to paddle canoes and split his party. Unbeaten, he planned swiftly. The chances were ten to one that the bandits had darted up the left branch leading northeast into the Thal-Azzah. He decided quickly: "I'll follow that left branch. I'll take one canoe and two men. I'll take Bill with me: he's a red-haired devil in a fight, he's our best shot, he'l be dependable in whatever comes. But the third man-Ped or Larry?" Both splendid men, both experienced veterans of many a patrol.

He made up his mind: "I'll send Ped up the right branch with Burgoon and Whipple. Bill and Larry and I'lle shoot up the left. We'll be the ones to do the business.' As the great Y of the Alooska loomed up, he turned and gestured to Hardsock and Larry. Silently understanding, they crept back to the stern deck, unlashed the canoes and had them ready by the time that Pedneault, slowing down the launch. steered it in between two little willow islands at the Forks and stopped.

Alan ordered him: "Ped, take these two men and whip up the south branch. Larry and Bill and I'll cover the north. If you sight them, don't pitch into that pack. You'd be fighting six men single-handed. If they did happen to go that way, you drop back here to the Forks and wait for us. We'll be able to track them in that timber country. Let's pile out. They can't be over a mile and a half away." Bill snarled: "H-l's blue blazes. Alan!-let's stick together. Us split ting this up like this, it's the d-desi fool trick I ever heard of!"

"Shut up!" Alan snapped. "General's orders, not mine. Every d-d thing you say or do will be tattled to He tossed the launch anchor into the mud. "I said pile out. Let's be moving." He stepped down into a canoe, stood rifle between his knees, caught up a paddle.

Cursing beneath their breath, Bill and Larry clambered in with him. The two canoes separated.

Alan's estimate that his quarry could not be more than a mile and a half in the lead, was true enough; but a

Who they were, where they had come haustion, they had the fear of death

A whole hour, an hour of terrible labor, went by, and still no sight or sound of the bandits. With the responsibility of this patrol on him, with human lives, the lives of comrades, at stake, a fear gripped Alan that those bandits had taken the south branch of the Alooska. If they had, Frank Pedneault and those two raw recruits might run into an ambush; or Ped might attack them, reckless fellow that he was, practically lone-handed,

The chase was entering the Thal-Azzah itself, that watery wilderness of lakes and labyrinthine channels and muskeg thousands of square miles in extent. Not far ahead the branch split into a dozen channels leading in every direction. Pursuit would end there. A few miles more, and those canoes would be swallowed up in the watery oblivion of the Thal-Azzah.

But then, as he skirled around a headland, his prophecy yesterday to Haskell, and his conviction, founded on long man-hunting experience, that those bandits would surely follow this left branch, were suddenly proved true to the letter. On ahead, a scant thousand yards, he caught one fleeting glimpse of two heavily laden canoes that carried six men.

Dipping faster, deeper, he and Bill and Larry paddled at a furious pace to come up within rifle range. The river was so winding that they could see only a few hundred yards in front. There was danger, a terrible danger, of running headlong into a blind ambush where all three of them would be killed outright and their canoes sunk before they even could start to shoot back. Every stroke, every curve, every clump of flags they skimmed close past, was a deadly peril. They knew it, but they dared not slow up. They were taking their chances.

As they skirled out upon a shallow little lake fringed about with tall flags. Larry suddenly heaved back on his paddle.

"Lift out! Look! Alan, look over there!"

Alan looked where he pointed, at the north shore, at the wall of dense reeds. A path had been broken through the flags there; the reeds were parted, some of them trampled. their tops bent to either side. It told the story to him. Hard-pressed, those men had whipped ashore to shake off pursuit: had lifted canoes to shoulder, and were trying to cut north and hit another channel. Oblivious to ambush danger, they skimmed over to the telltale break in the flags and drove out upon the mud, Alan and Bill slung the canoe upon their shoulders; and with Larry in the lead, following the signs, they started at a lope back through the

Within a few hundred yards they came to a little creek, a sluggish muskrat highway that led north. The bandits had taken to it. Too shallow for a canoe, they had had to wade. So recently had they passed, the water was still roiled from their boots.

The little creek took Alan's party a thousand vards north to a lake, a deep blue lake covering several acres and there, within the Thal-Azzah itself, late in the afternoon, the long relentless chase came to its end.

Larry, a dozen steps in the lead. glimpsed the silvery sheen of water head: and stopping dead-short tioned Bill and Larry to be cautious. They bellied forward toward the lake edge where the flags were thin and they had clear view.

After several minutes of waiting. Larry pointed across the lake and stated quietly:

"You see that big patch of brownish flags over there, about thirty or forty yards back from the water? See that little run leading back into them? That's where our men are hiding. They're laying low along that little run. I just noticed a rat start up that run. He come back in a hurry. Then. there's a silent spot over there where I don't hear any bird or animal calls. And then some other signs.

He was silent for half a minute. Finally he whispered: "I'll show you a sign. You see that pair of canvasbacks a-coming this way? They're flying low, making for this lake. Canvasbacks like blue water. Watch 'em close." Skimming just over the flags, the pair of graceful ducks came on; but just as they stopped beating and started the glide down upon the lake. they suddenly breasted high up in the air, exactly over the spot Larry had indicated. Veering away, they winged swiftly out of sight into the west.

Lying there in the reeds and bog. Alan studied the bandit covert and tried to plan. If all five of his men had been along with him, the outcome would have been swift and certain. He could have come at the bandits from either side, cut off any chance of escape, boxed them between two fires and deliberately shot them down. But he had split his party at the Alooska Forks, as Haskell ordered. Now, at the crucial hour here in the Thal-Azzah, Pedneault and those other two men. uselessly following that south branch, were a hundred and forty miles away.

He planned, rejected and planned again, and finally came to a decision. "We've got to carry the fight to them, and we've got to keep them from getting away by that creek yonder. There's only one way we can do both those things. Bill and I are going to circle around them on foot and come at them from the other side. We'll get there somehow, even if we have to swim part way. With any luck at all we ought to get into a position stern chase is a long chase, and if where we can put two or three those bandits were aching from ex- of them out of business at the very beginning, before they wake up to us. They won't fight if they can help it. Why should they take chances on some of them getting wounded or killed, if they don't have to? They'll try to whip back across this lake and dodge into that channel yonder. Now, Larry, you'll stay here to head that off. Keep out of sight yourself; have a couple or three extra magazines handy, and wait till they get into the middle. When they get in good range, open up on them. Sink those canoes We don't care about those men. Let them swim ashore and hide if they want to. On foot a man can't make ten miles a week in this muskrat country. With no tent, no shelter, the mosquitoes and flies would drive them crazy in less than a day, and they'd fall into our hands. If you understand now what's cut out for us. we'll be starting." Both men nodded. Bill and Alan backed away with infinite caution, for one flushing waterfowl would raise all the others. Yard by cautious yard the two men slipped back into the rushes till they were a safe distance from the lake. Then they began the long hard job of circling around the bandits. Wet, muddy, tortured by insect pests, they pushed steadily on, mindful of coming twilight.

It took an hour and a half to make the wide careful circle and start coming in toward the bandits from the north. With the sun cut in two by the western horizon and the chill of twilight in the air, those six men would shortly be on the move. But Alan's hopes had risen again; it seemed that he indeed "had taken his luck along." The bandits did not know they were being stalked. In half an hour more, if luck held, he and Bill would be in position to open on them all unawares.

Dropping at last to hands and knees, the two of them crawled along through muck and water, keeping only their guns dry. They came up within a hundred yards of their quarry.

As he parted the reeds in front of his face Alan saw the tops of a clump sway suspiciously. A moment later he glimpsed the dim outline of a man standing up, stretching himself, sitting down again.

In actual sight now. had killed Jimmy Montgomery! And only a pistol shot away! But to take them . . . Alan cursed savagely at the thought of Pedneault and those two men a hundred and forty miles distant. As he remembered what Haskell said about the Law being behind his patrol, his lips curled in scorn at the cant expression. . . "The Law that's supposed to be back of us. I wonder where in h-1 it is now! What does it mean to Bill and me now?" Here in this watery wilderness in the creeping twilight, he and Bill were going up against six men who had stood off fifty and who had murder charges hanging over their heads. And if they broke away, Larry single-handed would have to stand the whole brunt of stopping them.

At his gesture Bill slid cautiously up beside him. In whispers, Alan said to him: "Bill, we've got to get closer. We've got to get across this pond. Those muskrat houses out there are particularly good luck for us. By keeping down in the water, with these little reeds to help hide us, we can sneak from one house to the next. The last one isn't a dozen yards from those men. If we make it we'll have point-blank range and the best kind of cover to shoot from."

Taking off their hats and jackets. they wriggled carefully out of the tall flags, eased into the water and squirmed toward the first muskrat house, which stood up four feet above the surface and entirely hid their approach. Behind it they stopped a moment, chose their next one, and sank back into the water.

As they crouched down behind the third little dome of mud and reeds, a towering red-bearded man parted the flags they were staring at, bent and scooped up a hatful of water, took a swallow, threw the rest down with an oath at its vile taste; and then, shaking the water out of his hat, he disappeared again.

Alan's last secret doubt about these bandits being utter strangers in the country was dispelled now. He had had a clear view of this huge redbearded leader; he could say positively, as Ashmun and all the passengers had sworn, that he had never laid eyes on the man before.

To Bill he whispered: "When we reach that last house, I'll splash or do something to draw their attention. They'll come out to the flags edge vanished into the twilight and were again to see what it is. Don't shoot when just one man shows up. We'll wait till we have three of them in plain sight. If we get three of them at the first crack, we'll be fighting the other three on even terms. Now, Bill, when you're looking down a rifle barrel at those men, don't hesitate. Aim straight. We can't make prisoners of that outfit. This is a finish fight. One or the other party is going to get wiped out."

They started for the fourth muskrat house. Halfway there, disaster overwhelmed them, sudden and stunning. It came from the air, in the shape of a pair of red-throated loons. Flapping heavily out of the west, the birds dropped with a loud splash not ten feet away from the two men.

At the splash Alan heard a muffled oath over in the flags; then a rustling movement, as though the bandits had nervously jumped for their guns; then silence. And then a voice from the twilight among the reeds:

"Nothin'. Jus' a pair of divers plumped down."

The alarm would have blown over if the loons had swum off. But the birds, crop-heavy and indolent, stayed where they were, showing no intention of moving away. As the female started preening herself, the mate turned its eye suspiciously at the two strange objects sticking above the water.

What startled it Alan never knew Bill did not move; he himself did not bat an eyelash. But in that jumpy taut silence the male suddenly threw open its beak and sent up a raucous maniacal shriek, as though some animal had seized it by the neck.

Instantly its mate joined in. The jarring, ear-splitting discord set muskrats diving off their houses and flushed every waterfowl in the lake a hun dred yards distant. With a last fran tic peal the loons taxied over the water, finally managed to take wing, and flapped heavily away.

But the damage had been done beyond retrieve. All that hour and a half of careful stalking, all the great caution and pains of slipping unawares upon the bandits, had been set at naught by the crazy shriek of a crazy loon.

Over in the murky twilight of the flags there was a commotion, sharp orders, the click of rifle bolts. At the edge of the flags a gun cra-aa-chek, a rope of flame reached out, a bullet ricocheted off the water.

It was a shrewd maneuver from the bandits, a tentative shot to draw the fire of their stalkers and discover where they were. Alan was quickwitted enough to see their motive and to lie low; but Bill jerked his rifle against his cheek and shot point-blank at the spurt of fire.

A cry of pain went up. His bullet had scored. But the shot gave away their hiding. With all hope gone now of getting the drop. Alan scrambled behind cover of a muskrat house, fairly dragging Bill after him.

Half a dozen rifles exploded in the flags. Alan thrust his rifle over the top of the house and emptied it at the flashes. A bullet from a Savage, a sharp-cracking deadly Savage, hit his weapon, smashed the mechanism. numbed his hand, and drove jagged fiery bits of steel into his fingers.

For several minutes the bullets of the bandits beat a thudding tattoo ett. against the mud mound. As best they could Alan and Bill lifted their beltguns over the top of their shelter, and fired back. They heard no more yelps of pain. They were shooting wildly, aimlessly. Realizing this, believing the bandits had crept into the run and were sheltered by its banks, Alan stopped shooting and checked Bill.

Yonder in the reeds the fire died away raggedly. A silence fell. A minute lengthened into two, three, four. Alan heard, or thought he heard, a faint rustling, a faint gurgling of water. He listened intently, but did not hear it again.

With his plans all shattered, with the twilight steadily deepening, he was torn with desperation. If he and Bill moved, it was sheer suicide. If they crouched much longer where they were, the bandits would certainly slip away from them in the coming dark. As he fought to think of a plan that would break this deadlock, he heard a long whistle, a clear shrill whistle from Larry's direction. It was

Larry signaling. He sprang up. "Bill! They've backed away. they've slipped us. they're breaking for the lake! Larry's alone. We've got to help Larry!"

They splashed out of the pond and into the flags, in a frantic effort to reach the lake edge. The marsh reeds clutched at them, tripped them, wrapped around their legs. Savagely they tore their way on through to get into the clear in time to help Larry stop those bandits.

As he swung his clubbed rifle. smashing a pathway in front of him. Alan heard a lone gun cr-aa-ck over on the lake, and heard the snarl of half a dozen repeating weapons answering it like an echo. They drowned, they overwhelmed it. gun did not speak again.

It seemed hours to him that he fought and tore through the dense flags, to reach the open and help a comrade who was standing up against six rifles. Before he broke through to the clear, the uneven battle had ended. As he burst out to the lake edge, he had a glimpse of the police canoe drifting helplessly out in the middle; and across at the far side he saw two long blurred objects just entering the deep-water channel.

Numbed and dazed at those six men escaping, there was a moment when Alan could only realize that his patrol had failed. That those criminals had ost in this watery wilderness, with pursuit utterly hopeless now.

In the next moment he heard a sound, a sound like a groaning voice calling his name. It drew his eyes to the drifting police craft. What was it doing out there? Like a flash he understood what Larry had done. When the bandits started across the lake to escape, Larry must have seen he could never stop them in the semidarkness except at point-blank range. In the police canoe he must have come fearlessly out at them, alone. This first deadly volley had got him. That groaning voice was Larry's.

Bill came bursting through to the clear. Alan whirled on him:

"Bill! They got Larry. wounded. Hard hit. Here Tossing Bill his belt-gun and broken rifle, he ran out into breast-deep water and struck out powerfully for the drifting canoe. By a provident mercy he reached it in time. With half a dozen holes spouting water into it, the craft was filling, tilting, about to overturn. Larry lay at the bottom of it, writhing in pain.

By heroic struggles, swimming, pushing a dead-weight ahead of him. Alan got the craft into shoal water, put his hand under its keel then, and kept it He dragged it to the bank just as

Bill came splashing around the lake edge to join him. "Alan! What happened? Where'd they go?' "They got away. They're gonegone. Forget it. Help me, Bill-with Larry-' Together they bent over their bleeding, stricken comrade, and together they lifted him tenderly ashore.
