> Most Michigan farmers keep some records, but only a small percentage of them avail themselves of the opportunity to obtain account books which were designed for their business in this state. These books are distributed at cost by the county agricultural agents or by the farm management department at the College.

Provision is made in the books for each farm enterprise, either in crops or livestock. Space for housenold accounts is also provided. Most of the account books are started early in the year when the supplies of grains and forage are the lowest.

The farm management department staff helps many of the state farmers in opening their books, checks them at least once during the year, and closes them at the vear's end.

Mortgage Discharges Increase in 1931

Mortgages discharged in the past year in Tuscola county were 219, the records of Stanley Osburn, register of deeds, show. This is 42 more than in 1930 when the total reached 177.

Sheriff's deeds were seven more in 1931 than in the previous year when the total was 58. Sheriff's deeds are given upon the foreclosure of property.

Mortgage assignments numbered 130 in 1931. New mortgages filed were 318. A county official points out, however, that this number does not represent that many additional obligations against properties in the county as several of these new mortgages were refinancing propositions in which only the name of the mortgagee has been changed.

Broadcast of Home Economics Talks

Beginning Monday, January 4, and continuing each Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday afternoons until May 28, the home economics radio hour will be resumed over Michigan State College's station, WKAR. The talks, presented by members of the teaching faculty and women connected with the extension department, will be given each afternoon between 3:05 and 3:15 o'clock, and will vary with the different phases of home economics.

During the month of January, the talks will be based on "Nutrition." Dr. Marie Dye, dean of home economics, will open the series with an introductory talk on Monday, with the remainder of the talks during that week to be given by Miss Elizabeth Whittaker, on the subject, "Dietary Standards."

What's New in the New Chevrolet Six

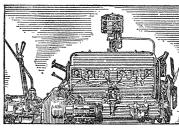

When you read what's new in the new Chevrolet Six, you, too, will agree it's the Great American Value for 1932. Syncro-Mesh and Free Wheeling combined for the first time in a low-priced car! Engine and chassis improvements that raise performance to new heights of power, speed and smoothness! The finest Fisher bodies Chevrolet has ever introduced. And the same qualities of reliability and economy that have won the approval of millions of Chevrolet owners. All these you will find in the new Chevrolet Six at one of the lowest prices in the market! That's why the new Chevrolet Six is called the Great American Value for 1932!

Syncro-Mesh Transmission

Syncro-Mesh permits you to shift gears with marvelous quickness, quietness and ease. It even enables you to shift rapidly from high back into second, any time you want to use the braking force of the engine.

A Smoother, Improved Six-Cylinder Engine

Chevrolet now has down-draft carburetion, new cylinder head, manifolding, counter-balanced crankshaft and rubber mounting, increasing power 20 per cent to 60 horsepower.

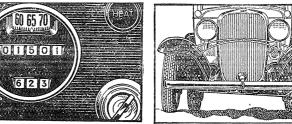

Simplified Free Wheeling

To take advantage of Chevrolet's Free Wheeling, simply press a button on the dash. Until you pull it out again, you "Free Wheel." You coast when your foot is off the accelerator. You shift with magical ease.

Smart New Fisher Bodies

Chevrolet's new Fisher bodies are the smartest ever to appear in the low-price field. Furthermore, Fisher craftsmen have added new elements

Vital new features in Chevrolet's six-cylinder engine enable it to develop 65 to 70 miles an hour. Stopwatch tests show an acceleration from 0 to 35 miles in 6.7 seconds.

KEEPING TAB ON AGES OF CHICKS

Good Reasons Why Matter Is Important.

The question may arise in the minds of some as to why it is necessary to be able to tell the differences in ages of pullets.

The answer is that when it is time to put the pullets in the laying house, there are some that are not worth keeping. These should be sorted out, and it is well to keep all of the same age and development by themselves. The earliest maturing pullets are usually the

If pullets of all ages are allowed to run together on range, it will be impossible to tell the difference between the slow-developing ones of the earlier hatches and the fastgrowing ones of the later hatches. Naturally, such birds are not all of the same value and should not be placed in the same pen.

Unless pedigree hatching and breeding are done and all chicks banded, such pullets cannot easily be told apart. They can easily be marked by toe punching or slitting the webs between the toes. By using different combinations it is a very simple matter to know definitely the ages of the various pul-

Good Laying Hen Makes

Money for Her Owner

Take 84 pounds of grain plus one good laying hen and you have 12 dozen eggs. With grain selling at one and a half cents per pound and eggs selling 30 cents per dozen this means a value of $3.60 for the grain, or a profit of $2.32 over the cost of the feed; or, selling grain at a price of $4.28 per hundredweight. Here are some more figures. The hen which lays only 25 eggs causes a loss of 64 cents over the cost of feed for one year; the hen which lays 50 eggs causes a loss of one cent; the hen which lays 100 eggs creates a profit of $1.25; the hen which lays 150 eggs produces a profit of $2.49; while the hen which lays 200 eggs brings profit of $3.74. Watch the danger line and get rid of the boarders.

Plan Now to Increase

Production of Eggs One of the imperative needs of the poultry industry is to increase the consumption of eggs, said Reese Ricks of the International Baby Chick association, in addressing the American Institute of Co-operation at Manhattan, Kan. Other foods are giving eggs a battle for a place on the breakfast table, and according to Mr. Hicks, this is what can be done about it.

The first step toward increasing egg consumption is for producers to supply high quality eggs. The second step is in standardizing the product so that the public will know what it is buying. The third step is for co-operatives to join hands with other agencies in the poultry industry to educate the public as to the value of eggs.-Nebraska Farmer.

POULTRY HINTS

Poultry diseases cost poultry growers $4,000,000 a year in Ohio

The fact that the poultry industry can expand or contract rapidly with conditions makes it a stable one.

Bacillary white diarrhea of chicks can be controlled by testing breeding hens and eliminating the germ

Many poultrymen find that night lighting of baby chicks increases the growth since the chicks eat and drink at night.

Culling should be a continuous process, starting at the time chicks are received from the hatchery and extended over the entire laying Artificial light for poultry merely makes a normal condition during an abnormal time and is not a forcing process, if used with reasonable judgment.

In cash income poultry ranked fourth among agricultural products in the United States in 1928-29, being exceeded only by dairy cattle, beef cattle and hogs.

The careful division of pullets into laying units makes their management and feeding in laying flocks during the pullet year easier, more economical, and more exact.

A poultry man who continuously selects his breeding hens from the late molting group in his flock, may expect a higher egg production during the late summer and early fall.

Principal defects of eggs delivered to candling stations which materially affect their sales value are dirt. yellow yolks, murky whites, shrinkage, heat, looseness and poor shells. Westport.

ROBOT CAN ASSORT

Ingenious Device Solves Disagreeable Problem.

Chicago.—The Middle West is soon to see a one-eyed robot that can read and assort millions of ordinary printed cards at a high rate of speed. The latest scientific tool for use in accounting departments of electric light companies, banks, railroads, hotels, telephone offices and other large organizations for classification of bills, checks, tickets and other records, was announced by F. T. Whiting, northwest district manager of the West-

Developed and designed by Douglas A. Young, an engineer of the Westinghouse organization, this ingenious machine reads and places cards in any of the 100 compartments of the machine where they belong without human hands touching them. The machine, operated by a single "electric eye" or photoelectric tube, reminds one of a man playing solitaire, and resembles in appearance a miniature railroad being routed over its proper track.

This firm, like many others. bill customers monthly, and stubs are returned with remittances. Thousands of these stubs returned each day upset the organization as it is almost impossible to keep help on the tedious and monotonous grind or sorting and filing remittance stubs. The one-eyed electrical machine was developed.

Operation of the newest robot is so simple that it requires the services of only one person. When the names and addresses are stenciled also. This number guides the sorters in classifying the stub when returned. With the new sorting machine, this same principle is carried this system of code, it is possible to get more than 100,000,000 combinations of numbers on a card 11/2 inches wide by 31/4 inches long, and still have enough room for customer's name and address.

Electric Eye Used.

Cards are placed in the feeding receptacle and a weight is placed on top of the cards exerting pressure on the bottom card. WALKING DRESSES REVIVE PROMENADE

Walking dresses are well in the running this season. The apparently lost pastime of the promenade is being revived and whether the lovely street frocks are a cause or a symptom it is not for us to discover. Wool, of course, is about the most popular fabric and is used in its various weaves, with the corduroy weave being a tremendous favorite. Despite the apparent simplicity of these frocks, there is a vast amount of fine workmanship and detail about them and fine furs are smartly used to complete the scheme, although the model must never be overburdened with fur trimming. Harmony and restraint must of necessity be the keynote of the really fine frock meant mostly for outdoor town wear.

Modern Clothes Given Touch of Old Styles

Even if we sometimes cannot exactly date any particular coat or frock, there is no gainsaying the charm and gracious lines of the new autumn clothes. And why should it be necessary to tag a historical epoch onto a garment that is quaint and picturesque, with a touch or feature that is reminiscent of other days.

If any particular garment was definitely of the Second empire or of mid-Victorian days it would look dreadfully out of place in a modern building. No, the new clothes are splendidly up-to-date.

Designers are far too wise to go in for sartorial anachronisms. They use just enough of the bygone styles to give a different look and feel to ultra-modern clothes.

COLORS TO RELIEVE BLACK SOMBERNESS

Browns and Dark Greens Popular for Winter.

The bright and exciting color schemes of last summer, toned down to deeper, riches harmonies. will continue into winter fashions. For the first fall in many years dark brown costumes promise to be more numerous than the proverbial black. Dark greens-including a new, deep green, of an olive castare prominent in the picture, and so, too, are a number of lovely burgundy tones-prune color, muscatel, rich purple-reds. All of which would lead us to believe that our everyday winter fashion fare, coats, street dresses, suits, that used to be so persistently black, is going to be surprisingly varied this year. Various colors are going to the relief of solid black. Maggy Rouff, in one of her more striking ensembles, combines a black velvet skirt with a geranium-red velvet jacket, trimmed with black seal, a white satin tunic with a geraniumred scarf at the neck. Scarfs an Accessory

That Merits Attention Scarfs are an accessory that merit attention this fall. The latest among them are made of flat fursuch as barunduki, leopard, lapin, caracul-and designed to complement tailored wool street or sports dresses. A popular variety is the straight fur scarf, slightly narrower in the middle, that is worn crushed around the neck, the two ends either crossed over or hang ing straight, and pulled through the belt in a gilet effect.

For sports tweeds and country top-coats, separate scarfs of wool, in brilliant colorings, worn tied in an ascot fashion or merely crossed inside one's coat, provide dashes of bright contrast for monotone wool outfits. Short ascots of novelty knitted materials, sometimes matched to sports turbans or berets are included in the school or college girl's wardrobe. Tailored scarfs of silk and of silk and wool in plain colors are being shown for the knitted jacket suits in vogue gowns. Women are carrying stitched felt pocketbooks in colors to match their costumes.

Every smart winter wardrobe includes a short fur jacket, the same to pose over a bright-toned woolen skirt. * ************

MUCH DIVERSITY IN NEWEST FUR COATS

There is much diversity in fur coats this year, and, more types suited to the young girl than we have seen in many a season. In the first place, she must have one of the new fur jackets. Fortunately, this is not an extravagance, for in many of the shops it is possible to purchase cloth frocks—plus fur jacket -at a price surprisingly low. Barunduki, lapin or seal are the furs most frequently used.

For a sports coat three-quarters is the smartest length, and there are lots of new tricks as to scarf collars, drop yokes, sleeves, etc. If no belt is worn, the coat is usually shaped slightly at the waistline, although some coats are cut with a real raglan flare. Kidskin and lapin-the latter in the new Patou brown—are very good, as is logwood brown Alaskan sealskin, which costs more but wears forever.

Ermine on Black Now

Favored by the Mode Black is the favorite tea-time coat color, although a new putty beige and deep reds, greens and purples, so dark they are almost black, are offered to color the mode. Ermine, once reserved for the robes of queens, is one of the smartest furs: Black broadcloth coats with swirling ermine collars and melon cuffs are the fashionable Parisian's favorite tea-time wraps.

Brown Predominates in Latest Suits and Coats Brown, combined with fall oak leaf tones, is the principal shade this season in women's suit-dresses and coats, with black, green and some dark blues also being favored. Tweed coats and corduroy and wool suits with raccoon or blue fox collars are proving popular.

Ireland's "Big Wind" The "big wind" in Ireland occurred on the night of January 6, 1839. In Limerick, Galway and Athlone hundreds of houses were blown down and hundreds more were burned by the spreading of fires from those blown down. It was called the "big wind" because it was the worst of its kind known to the people of Ireland

CITIES USE RADIO IN WAR ON CRIME

Police Broadcasting Stations Prove Effective.

Washington.-A rapidly increasing use of radio in a nation-wide battle against crime and racketeer ing is shown by records of the radio commission. These disclose that in the short space of three years twenty large cities and several smaller ones have installed special police broadcasting stations and equipped patrolmen on duty with apparatus enabling them to receive orders from headquarters within a few moments.

The proved value of the radio in facilitating rapid communication and in many cases assisting in the capture of murderers and other criminals whose activities cost the nation hundreds of millions of dollars annually, has prompted thirty additional cities to make preparation for joining in the radio war against crime. Of this latter group, twenty-two hold construction permits for the establishment of radio stations and communication sys-

Eight Especial Channels. Finally realizing the importance of drafting the radio for service in the crime war, the radio commission has set aside eight channels especially for police work. The bands are all within a few meters of each other and lie below normal broadcasting channels. In some quarters it is predicted that ultimately so many cities will utilize the radio for police work that it will be possible to evolve a nation-wide network for the broadcasting of police alarms.

The success achieved by police in Chicago and Detroit was largely responsible for the rapidly growing popularity of police broadcasting systems. As far back as 1928 Detroit inaugurated its first broadcasting system, one of the first big ones of the country. Today Detroit officials credit more than 800 arrests son. solely to the speed with which radio facilitated broadcasting criminal reports to officers stationed throughout the city and outlying districts.

Chicago's first experiment, initiated by WGN, a newspaper station, were so successful that that city now has three stations.

Pennsylvania Towns Put Curfew on Radio STAMPEDE BACK

Shamokin, Pa.-Councilmanic ordinance set 11 p. m. as the curfew hour for all radio sets within Shamokin borough.

At that hour all sets must be heard outside the house and all windows must be closed when the radio is playing.

Shamokin was not alone in seeking to place restrictions on radios playing late at night.

At Wilkes-Barre police announced that they would respond promptly to any complaint against excessively loud radios and would direct set owners to cut down the volume immediately.

Bright Colors for Little Ladies

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

MOTHERS and others who cater to the needs and whims of the younger generation declare a growing interest in fashions on the part of the little folks of the present day. Since the little ladies of our land with true feminine instinct are making it so clearly understood that they have their own definite ideas about what to wear, it brings it up to those who have to do with creating juvenile modes to live up to the expectations of those now-sosophisticated youngsters.

A tour of the juvenile specialty shops and departments is most gratifying in this respect, for the fall and winter collections there displayed are without a doubt as attractive as practical and as versatile as creative genius can devise.

The reaction to this demand of the very young for modish dress is especially keen in the fabric sections, for after all the chic and the wearability of a child's dress or coat depends first of all upon the material of which it is made.

To discriminating mothers who demand and know values, fabrics of synthetic yarns are proving of special interest. Wear and tear is a major factor and frequent laundering an essential, weaves of fiber structure are winning increasing recognition from those seeking media which will give super service, at the way of smart and winsome appear-

John Gresham's Girl

Concordia Merrel (Copyright.)-WNU Service.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—A chance meeting with Lucy Gresham, young daughter of Sir John Gresham, wealthy ship builder, brings to a climax James Lee's obsession for revenge for a wrong done him years before, when, unjustly accused of robbing the Gresham firm, and sent to prison for three years, he was denied a hearing by Gresham and condemned by Gresham's business manager, Oliver Ames, Lucy's cousin. Lee is wealthy, through inheritance from a cousin, at whose behest he has changed his name from Warrington, which was his at the time of his disgrace. A diabolical scheme for revenge on Gresham and Ames, through Lucy, is evolved in his mind. He secures an invitation to the girl's birthday party. CHAPTER I .- A chance meeting

CHAPTER II.—Lucy, through a family understanding, is in a manner engaged to marry Ames, but the pact is not formal, and the girl, overwhelmed by Lee's ardent courtship at her birthday festivities, breaks the engagement, convinced that Lee is the man she loves. On his part, his only desire is the forwarding of his plans to hurt Gresham and Ames.

CHAPTER III.—A girl friend, Jocelyn Upton, reproaches Lucy for her "conquest" of Lee, but in her happiness she makes light of the incident Lucy, with her father's approaches the state of the second of the second to be second t proval, is formally engaged to Lee, whom the older man does not recognize as Warrington, and three weeks later they are married. On the wedding night, after a struggle with his better nature, Lee stuns the girl by telling her he not only does not love her, but, in fact, "hates her whole breed."

"My dear, he was not mistaken. . . The evidence proved that the wretched man was obviously guilty. . . " He broke off, ously guilty. . . ." He broke off, because Lucy had risen abruptly, and was looking across the room toward the door, a curious, startled look on her face.

Sir John turned and saw that his son-in-law was standing in the doorway "I'm interrupting you," Lee said,

"You were talking of . . .?" He paused questioningly. "An unfortunate affair that happened some years ago," began Sir John, but Lucy suddenly looked up square into her husband's face. "About that man I told you of, Jim . . . who . . .

"Jim," she interrupted, "I don't need to bother you for my personal expenses. I've got heaps of money of my own. All that daddy settled on me, and all that mother left me, too. Mother had an immense fortune, you know. Did you know I had so much?"

"Yes, your father told me that your mother's money came to you when you married. But I'm not interested in your money. Whatever else you can say of my mo tives for marrying you, at least your money was not one of them he said, unpleasantly.

"I understand." He went into details as to amounts, and she let him have it his way entirely. Next day they went up to town.

While they had been in the country. St. Abb had been busy getting the flat ready for its new mistress, and they found it in apple pie order. Lucy found it a little difficult to seem genuinely hearty in her approval of what he had done. This was the home that she had imagined was going to be a paradise of love, and her heart ached as she thought of how tragically differently things had turned But she played her part out. pluckily and well, and St. Abb didn't guess what it cost her.

As soon as they came to town Lee became immersed in business which kept him either busy in his study with St. Abb. or else took him out, so that Lucy saw very little of him.

One of the first things to happen as soon as they were fairly settled was that people began to call. Lady Cordelia was the first. all appearances. Lucy was radiantly happy. Even Lady Cordelia's eagle eye could detect nothing wrong. It was less easy to pretend to her father, when he came to see her the first time. His adoring eves were so very searching. Lucy felt that the miserable truth must be as obvious to him as if it were written in letters of flame around her head. But it wasn't. He was predisposed to think her happy, and put her nervousness down to natural shyness.

"Oliver's back," he told her. "He came to see me and then went straight to Gresham's. . . . I don't fancy he'll call yet awhile.

He's pretty hard hit, darling. afraid so, dad. . . . He doesn't take things easily she answered. "But . . . I couldn't help it. .

He smiled.
"No." he agreed; and then: "My girl happy?" Lucy felt the pressure of tears in her throat, but she answered with a gallant little smile:

"What do you think?" And the old man was content. She even managed to steer the conversation round to Gresham's, and from there on to the story of the man who had been imprisoned for robbery with violence, and talked of it without a tremor. She wanted to hear just exactly what her father had to say of his part in it, and when he had told all that he knew of the affair, she sat silent for a long time. Then: "We went on that cruise," she said slowly. "We went on that cruise while he . . . that man . . . went to prison. . . . Daddy, why didn't you see him when he asked you to?'

"My lord, what could I have done? Oliver had the matter well in hand. . . . Oliver is a just man, Lucy. . . .

"A just man," she repeated. "But the most just of men can be . . mistaken."

"Instead of which you . . .?" asked Lee smoothly.

Lucy rose suddenly. "Instead of which, daddy and I went on a yachting cruise," she said. "We went out on the open sea . . . while . . . he. She caught a breath and stopped.

"My love," said Sir John, "you are too tender-hearted. The man deserved all he got . . . Gresham's us no use for highwaymen. Nelther has the world at large. . . What do you say, Lee?"

"I? Oh, I'm afraid I was scarcely listening, sir," said Lee with a short laugh. "I was thinking. . . . "Yes. . . .?"

"Just wondering whether it had occurred to you to speculate as to what he might do . . . when he comes out." The words fell slowly.

Sir John laughed easily and rose. "I think he's out by this time Three years was his sentence, if I remember right. And he hasn't turned up so far. Well, au revoir my children. . . " He made his adieux and left. When he was gone, Lee faced Lucy. "Well, I've warned him," he said challengingly.

"Yes," she said, through unsteady lips. . . . "We were out there, Jim . . . on the sea . . . while you. . . ." The words broke from her and died shakily away.
"I don't want your pity!" he said roughly. She raised her blue eyes to his. "I'm not pitying you, Jim. This has been too . . . big for pity. But believe I-understand.

In a way, it was hard to lay the blame on any one person, as far as she could see. Ames had obviously acted in all good faith. Her father very probably could have done nothing-and yet they were responsible for this appalling warping of a living soul. Everything that was fine in him was in deadly peril of destruction from the spirit of revenge that held him in thrall. Perhaps upon her lay the onus of delivering him from the power of the enemy.

How was she to decide what was the first thing to do? She knew nothing of his plans in any detail. Nothing of how he intended to wreak his vengeance upon her father. . . . Had he any definite scheme . . .?

"If I asked him, point-blank," she mused, "I wonder if he would tell me. . . . He is so . . . queerly honest with me . . . that I almost believe he would. . .

But she didn't ask him immediately. She was afraid of rushing things; afraid that by one false step she might spoil her chances of success. So instead of saying more, med and left him.

CHAPTER V

The Truth About Linforths.

INCERTAINTY and wondering made her restless, and two weeks went rather wretchedly by. One day she had been to see her fa ther, and as they were having tea together, he was called to the telephone. When he came back, it was clear that he was a good deal wor-disturbing news, most disturbing! It's that Norwegian deal. It hasn't gone through, after all. . . "Oh, daddy, I am sorry. But is it terribly important?" "It means losing some of the best timber we've ever had the chance of. Oliver imagined that a definite arrangement had been reached be fore he left, although the contract hadn't actually been signed." "What a pity he left before it was signed," put in Lucy. "He was wanted over here, and had to come back. And now Linforths . . ." With the name, Sir John thumped a fist on the little tea table with a force to make the tea things rattle. . . . "Linforths have gone over our heads and collared the deal." "Linforths

"Well, they are our traditional enemies, dad. Always have been. I suppose Linforths made up their mind to beat us at this at any cost, and went all out over it.

"I suppose he is," said Lucy. "Oliver takes his responsibilities so tremendously seriously, doesn't he?" Sir. John agreed with a nod. and they continued to talk the matter over for the remainder of Lucy's

At dinner that evening, a good deal to her surprise, Lee asked her where she had been during the afternoon. He did not usually ask questions as to her movements. She told him that she had been with her father, and noticed that he gave her a quick little look, but he didn't say anything further. But later, when she was in her room, preparing to go to bed, she was startled to hear him knock on the door that divided her room from

"What's the matter? D'you think I'm going to eat you up?" he asked abruptly. "Don't be ridiculous . said, with an attempt at lightness.

"Don't look afraid of me then," he countered. "I'm not afraid. Only you startled me. What do you want, Jim?" "How was your father when you | saw him today?" he asked. She was surprised at the question; utterly unable to see its drift. "He was very well," she answered. "But a lot worried. Linforths have beaten us over a big deal." She looked at him to see how he'd take it, but his face was expressionless.

"It gives you pleasure to hear that, I suppose?" she added sharp-But he didn't answer. Instead, he looked round the room, as if he were noting everything in it.
"Your room," he said, only half aloud. . . . "And I've scarcely seen it . . . since it has been yours." His eyes came round to her face then, but hers were lowered. She didn't know how to meet this mood in him: didn't know what he meant. His manner was so changed. His suggestion that she was frightened by him, was absurd. But her heart was beating hotly, all the

"I've never seen you with your hair down before," he said, in an odd voice. She flashed a quick look up at him, and saw that his hand was half outstretched toward the long ripple of gold that lay over her shoulder. She was amazed. And, quite suddenly, angry, all on edge, she stepped back, shrinking away from the big, shapely hand. "Don't touch me, Jim!" she cried sharply, in a low voice, just as she had cried the same words the morning after her wedding day. His hand closed to a fist upon which knuckles stood out white. She saw his eyes go sullen and his lips shut to a line. Then he drew a breath; dropped his hand to his side, turned and strode into his room without a further word and shut the door sharply behind him.

Lucy sank down rather shakily into her chair. If only his nearness didn't stir her so! If he knew how much more afraid she was sometimes of herself, than ever or Things went quickly after this. for the very next morning, as she was crossing the hall, she heard voices from the study: St. Abb's and Jim's mingled for a moment, then St. Abb's alone. "After this, you can hardly expect me to stay . . . I'm going, sir, going at once. . A pause, then her husband's deep Aware, suddenly, that she was eavesdropping. Lucy went quickly to her sitting room. St. Abb was going. Leaving Jim. Why? -Be cause he had just discovered that awful business of three years ago? From what she had heard, that seemed likely. . . . In the middle of these thoughts she heard a step across the hall, and a moment later saw St. Abb pass the door of her room on the way, apparently, to his own. . . On an impulse she called to him and he stopped. "Come here a moment, will you?"

He came in reluctantly, and trying, rather hovishy, to hide the fact that he was reluctant.

"You wanted to see me?" he said with rather elaborate ease. She looked at him a moment. His young, attractive face was white, and he looked upset; badly shaken "Perry," she said quickly, as if she had something to say that she wanted to get over, "I was passing the study just now. . . . The door was open, I heard you and Jim talking. . . . And I heard what you You told him you were said. going to leave him."

"Yes." The short word, so shortly said, sounded odd from Perry St. Abb.

"You really mean it, I suppose?" "Absolutely." "When are you going?" she went I'm . . . just a bit. . . ."

"I can see you are," she said gently. "You have thought a great deal of Jim, haven't you?" "There was no one I thought more of," he said, boyishly impul-

"Then what has happened to make you change?"

"I have changed, anyway. .

And I'm going, in consequence," he equivocated. "That doesn't answer me," she insisted.

"I can't answer you any more clearly. Please don't ask me to." He turned back towards the door. as if he were going to leave her. But she stopped him.

"Don't go. This is . . . most tremendously important to me. . . Perhaps you scarcely guess just how tremendously important it is." "You can't know anything of this," he said. "It isn't possible. . . If you want to know, please, Lucy, ask him; not me." "It's something you have discovered about him, isn't it?" she said, the words coming more as an assertion than a question. He nodded. 'Something that seems utterly ...

He nodded again. "Well, perhaps you'll be surprised to hear that not only do I know about it, but that very probably I know more than you do she said slowly. "And yet I haven't . gone."

"You . . . you really know and can take it so quietly!" he half stammered.

"It isn't always safe to judge a man by what you hear he . . . has been . . . or has done . . . " she answered slowly.

"But this is what he is . . . what he is doing!" cried the young man. She looked at him sharply, opened her mouth to speak; closed it again with nothing said, and stood quite still and silent. After a moment she asked, in a changed voice: "Then you aren't going because of something you have heard of him; something that happened ... some years ago?" "No. I haven't heard anything

. It's nothing to do with anything that is past. . . . And you know I wouldn't judge him on hearsay of any sort. . . He broke off, and for a moment she left the silence unbroken. Then: "Very well. Thanks for letting me speak to you about this. You must, of course, do exactly as you think. I'll not ask you anything more. Perhaps I'll take your advice and—ask him." She spoke steadily, her voice in perfect control, but a new note in it made St. Abb realize then, a thing he hadn't realized before that quite apart from the sudden knowledge that had come to him of Lee, some thing was seriously wrong with this marriage about which he had been

He turned away; turned back . stammered out with boyish earnestness:

"I say, I'm deadly sorry . . . and left her hurriedly. She heard him go along the corridor to his room. Then she went straight to the study. She found Lee standing by the window, his back toward her, head bent and hands thrust deep into his coat pockets. The sound of the closing of the door made him turn quickly and as his eyes met hers, it seemed as if he braced his big shoulders, slightly. She came a few paces into the room and stopped.

"Jim, why is Perry leaving you?" "Perhaps it is because he has a better job in view?" he suggested "You know it isn't."

"So, evidently, do you." She paused a moment, her eyes still steadily meeting his. "You have done something to utterly lose his respect. What is it Jim?" she asked again "Why should you think I'll tell

"I don't know. But, somehow, I think you will, if. . . ." She broke "If you nag at me long enough?"

he asked, with a disagreeable laugh. She laughed, too, rather cheer-"Well, yes, if you like," she said. "I wasn't really thinking that, though." She was silent a moment, so was he. Then she said: "Perry has found out something about you. . . . Something of the present; not the past. He said

so. . . ."
"Then he did tell you something?" "What right have you to ask further?"

"Haven't I the right, Jim?" she asked quietly. "I certainly think that you owe me something. "Am I to pay for that one thing all my life!" he cried. "I shall probably pay for it, all mine," she replied.

He turned away: stood for a while, staring moodily out through the window, then turned back and flung himself into the revolving chair before his desk.

"What is it you want to know?" he asked bluntly. "Just what I have already asked you," she said. "May I sit down,

He rose quickly, coloring, and pushed up a chair for her. She thanked him and sat down. "Just exactly why," she went on as if the little interruption hadn't happened. "A man who has always thought a tremendous lot of you should suddenly change his opinion to the extent of feeling impelled to leave you. . . "All right; you shall know. You know Linforths?" She nodded. Then straightened suddenly in her chair as if she knew what was coming before he "I am Linforths." The words seemed to ring through the silence that followed. Then she drew a breath, steadied her voice deter-timber deal?" "Under my orders, and with my money," he assured her. "And it will be under my orders and with my money that Linforths will wreck every deal that Gresham's attempt to make. It will be under my orders and with my money that Linforths will bring Gresham's to ruin. Linforths is, now, a hundredfold the enemy of Gresham's. . . . She understood now. She had wondered whether, should she ask point-blank what his scheme of revenge was, he would tell her. Well. he had told her. And it certainly was ugly hearing. But she would not let herself betray how deeply she was troubled; she made herself speak steadily and coolly as she asked: "And Perry has just found that out?"

"And thinks . ." she broke off. "That I'm playing a dirty game," he finished for her, with no mincing of words "That is why you were interest ed in how I found father yester day," Lucy said, thinking back. "I knew that Ames would just have got the news that the deal had fallen through," he replied. "Linforths," she said, after a moment, "has always been out to smash Gresham's." Their eyes met, very straight and challenging.

"And Linforths," he said slowly letting each word fall clear and cold, "will now have the means to make the smashing thorough and effective."

She drew a breath. So this was his plan. Well, anyway, she knew. And better a thousand times, to know it all, than to be groping in the dark.

"Yes," she said, quietly, "I think whatever you set out to do, you would do . . . very thoroughly. I as quite prepared for that, Jim."

There was a considerable silence, then Lee said abruptly: "Now that you have found out the dirty game I am playing, you'll do as Perry is doing, I suppose."

"Leave you?" she asked. " Jim, I shall not do that." "Then what will you do? Tell your father who I am and what I to his pockets.

She looked at him, amazed at the feeling he had shown, and stood, uncertain whether to stay or to go. Since he did not move she decided to go, and went toward the door. Halfway, though, she stopped and turned back.

"Jim," she said slowly, "suppose you should ever love anyone. . . .

She paused. "Well?" he said without turning. "Aren't you going to find your schemes for revenge are hitting back at you?

"Well, they made you marry me . and you do not love me. . . . Is it going to be worth it?"

"I shall never love." "You cannot be sure of that," she argued. "I am sure of it. I have proved it!" he cried, facing her suddenly. She looked at him, startled.

"Proved it?" she cried. "Then you have . . . loved?" His face went curiously set. "And conquered," he said, as if he defied her to contradict this. "I . . . I didn't know," she said, stammering a little. "I'm awfully sorry . . . Jim." She added that impulsively. There was something so tragic to her in this splendid man, being so burnt up with the desire for revenge; it was such an appalling waste of fine possibilities; appalling waste of the possible such a frittering of strength. . . . he sorry." he "You needn't be sorry," he flashed back quickly. "I'm safe; because hate is set more deeply in my heart than love could ever Safe! For such a reason! How was she ever to win him back to a real safety! Hope came through what he had told her: that he had loved. There was hope for any man who could love. She left him then, because there seemed nothing further to say. Later on, St. Abb came to her to say good-by. She gave him her hand, said she was sorry that he was going, and seemed as if she meant to let it go at that. But after a moment's hesitation she said: "I've seen him, and I can understand your indignation against him. I was going to ask you to stay, at first, but I won't, because I don't believe the situation would be bearable if you did." "Thank you," he said quietly. "I'm glad you aren't going to ask that of me. I couldn't, Lucy. It's amazing that he can do it! From sheer business greed . . .!"

sheer business greed . . . "That's where you are mistaken," she told him gently. "Business greed has nothing whatever to do with this. Jim isn't greedy. He is a splendid man. . . . Only" her voice faltered slightly, "he has been terribly-hurt. I told you that probably I knew more about this than you do. I do. Only I couldn't. make you understand without going into a lot that I'm not ready to go into yet. But, Perry, don't condemn him too sweepingly. Think of him as gently as you can. . . . Her voice shook slightly. He found himself swallowing hard. Beneath his merry exterior was a very feeling and sincere heart, and he saw tragedy here. "I was so glad about you and the boss," he said impulsively. thought it was going to bring him all the . . . well, all the decent, normal things. Make him happy, don't you know, and all that sort of thing." "You'd seen, then, that he wasn't happy?" "Of course. I thought it was some woman had played him up. Unrequited live and so on. But I ee now it's something worse. You've got the pluck of a dozen," he stammered. "Any time I can doanything just tell me. I'm yours to the death. You can absolutely count on that." She held out her hand, and he caught it quickly and raised it to his lips with a little action of bovish devotion.

"Perry," she said quickly. "Do this for me then: come back to him, when I ask you to. Will you?"

"You can bet on it. Lucy," he said, and left her. She looked after him through tears. He went straight to Lee: told him that he was ready to go; said good-by, got only the briefest of answers, and went; feeling bluer than he'd ever felt in his life.

Carl Fisher once displayed on his boat some seven or eight bone fish to weary guests of his who had been off hours and miles in a small boat and had returned practically empty handed. Mr. Fisher was willing that his guests should believe he had caught the fish while seated comfortably in a deck chair smoking a cigar. It later was discovered, however, that Mr. Fisher had offered the natives of Bimini five dollars per fish and that practically that entire island had gone fishing.

* * * Mr. Bacon also seriously told me a story of trolling with a Japanese feather for bait and of the feather being swallowed by a yellow tail, the yellow tail by a larger fish, and the larger fish by a shark all within a few moments. That is what I call fishing with a party line. I am told that Mr. Bacon once took a course in romantic literature at Wesleyan.

It seemed a great pity to me that those ardent fishermen, Irvin Cobb, Bob Davis and Maximilian Foster were not present to tell some of their fish stories; although Mr. Foster never was quite the same as an angler after taking William O. Mc-Geehan on a fishing trip. Mr. Mc-Geehan insisted upon referring to a split bamboo rod of great price as a "pole."
