TEACHERS OFFER

School Employes' Tender Will Effect a Saving of Over $1,600 to Cass City Dist.

At a meeting of teachers and other employes of the school building at Cass City, a resolution was introduced and passed unanimously to offer to accept a 10% reduction in salaries for the remaining half of the school year. This was presented to members of the board of education at the meeting of that body Monday night and was gratefully received by the board, who passed a resolution expressing their appreciation for this voluntary offering on the part of school

It is estimated that the offer of teachers, janitors and office secretary to accept a 10% reduction in salaries for the last semester will effect a saving of over $1,600 to the Cass City school district.

Cass City and Vassar in Opening Tilt; Locals Won Two Games in Week.

The big Maroon and Gray squad added two more scalps to its list during the past week when they defeated Sebewaing 36-9, and Fairgrove 32-17. The locals will endeavor to continue their string with a win over Vassar this Friday on the latter's floor. The Fairgrove game was not as one-sided as the score would indicate, the first quarter ending 4-1 favor of Fairgrove. The entire battle was mixed with frequent flashes of speed and roughness. The locals did most of their scoring in the second and third quarters when they held Fairgrove to one point, while they themselves gathered in a total of 29 points.

Ruhl and Vyse were the chief scorers in the Fairgrove contest, while Warner was the outstanding point-getter in the Sebewaing game. In both games, however, all five men broke into the scoring column. The guarding of Kelly and Pinney, in fact the defense of the entire team, has been an outstanding feature in all of their contests this year, no opponent scoring more than twenty points, and many of them not breaking into the two-Mrs. D. ### Wrong Time to Water Unscrupulous poultry dealers have en known to feed chickens sand and gravel to increase their weight, but here's a new one. An agent of the federal food and drug administration visited a wholesale poultry house and found that dressed chickens were being given hypodermic injections-of water. A hose terinating in a follow needle was used. Eocr bird received several ounces of water, which was gradually absorbed. This increased the weight and made the scrawny bird look plumper. Though federal agents could not interfere, since the chickens were not shipped interstate, state officials later seized the profitmaking hose and fined the dealer.

Cull Out the "Boarders"

It has been observed that hen boarders" do not come down from the roost until late in the morning, and are usually the first to go to the roost at night. The heavy producer works from early in the morning until late at night to obtain the raw material required to form the egg and maintain her body condition. Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)—WNU Service. With the price of corn and wheat lower than it has been for several years and the price of eggs on the increase, the outlook for the poultry industry appears brighter, in the opinion of Dr. M. A. Jull, poultry specialist of the United States De partment of Agriculture.

Another point in favor of the poultry man is that heavy culling of farm flocks reduced the number of laying hens by about 20,000,000. Ordinarily these hens would not be culled out until the fall, but last spring farmers were interested more than usual in saving feed bills. Still another factor which makes the future look brighter for the poul try industry is the fact that there were fewer chicks hatched last spring than usual. This is particularly true of early hatched chicks. so that the early fall production of eggs fell short of last year's supply, with increases in prices. Doctor Juli believes the immediate future of the poultry industry to be fairly good, particularly for those who produce eggs and high-quality poultry for market, for hatcherymen who produce high-quality chicks, and for farmers and commercial poultrymen who give their flocks the best management and who practice efficient culling.

Sorting the Flock

(1) A broiler is a young chicken of either sex weighing two pounds or under. (2) A spring is a young, soft-boned bird of either sex that weighs over two pounds.

(3) A fowl is a hen (female over one year old), or a pullet that shows too much harness in the breastbone (keel) to be classed as a spring. (4) Stags are cockerels that exhibit too much hardness of bone, development of spurs or comb to be classed as springs, but not enough to be classed as roosters.

(5) Capons are cleanly castrated male birds. (6) Slips are birds upon which the operation of castration has not been entirely successful. (7) Roosters are cocks (male birds over one year old).

Tuberculosis is rarely found in fowls less than six months old. Most farm flocks are infected with this disease. An effective preventive step is to get rid of all birds before they are two years old.

Hoover had the satisfaction of signing the act embodying his most ambitious plan for the financial rehabilitation of the country.

Debate of the measure in the senmost important amendment adopted Smith of South Carolina. It added a new section to the bill authorizing an appropriation of $50,000,000 for use by the secretary of agriculture to extend loans to small farmers. It stipulated further that the $45,000,000 now remaining in the drought relief fund should be ap-

During the discussion there were frequent and fierce attacks on the banking interests, especially those of the "international" variety which are being accused of questionable methods and ethics in the flotation of foreign securities in the United

The eight men who refused to vote for the bill were all from the western states. They were Norris of Nebraska, Brookhart of Iowa, and Blaine of Wisconsin, all "progressive" Republicans, and Bratten of New Mexico, Bulow of South Dakota, Connally of Texas, McGill of Kansas, and Thomas of Oklahoma, all Democrats.

PROCEEDING with the economic ic program, the senate put through the hill increasing the resources of the federal land banks by $125,000,000. Meanwhile subcommittees began hearings on the $150,000,000 home loan discount bill and the $750,000,000 depositors' re-

The senate finance committee continued the taking of testimony relating to the deals of our international bankers in foreign securities. and it was often most interesting. For instance, it was brought out that Secretary of State Stimson and Francis White, assistant secretary, took an active part in ironing out an alleged misunderstanding between the Colombian government and a syndicate headed by the National City company, which early in 1931 temporarily withheld a payment of $4,000.000 on a $20,-000,000 credit arrangement. Also, Oliver C. Townsend, formerly commercial attache in Peru, said he was severely reprimanded for making a pessimistic report on the financial status of Peru when that country was trying to float a large loan in the United States. The State department defends its actions in the instances in question.

N EARLY ninety-one years old and growing feeble physically, Oliver Wendell Holmes voluntarily brought to an end his service of 30 years as associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. The venerable and beloved jurist sent his resignation to President Hoover. who reluctantly ac cepted it, writing: "I know of no American retiring from public service with such a sense of affection and devotion of the whole people." Only the day before Mr Justice Holmes had rendered a de cision with characteristic pithy phrasing, but his voice wavered and he had to be helped from the bench and into his automobile. So he penned his letter of resignation. closing: "The time has come, and

I bow to the inevitable." There were many suggestion for a successor to Justice Holmes among them being: Newton D. Baker, Wilson's secretary of war; Curtis D. Wilbur, Coolidge secre tary of the navy; William Dewitt Mitchell, Hoover's attorney general; John W. Davis, 1924 Democratic Presidential candidate; William S Kenyon, judge Eighth district Unit ed States Circuit court; Robert Von Moschzisker, former chief jus tice of the Supreme court of Penn sylvania; Benjamin Nathan Car dozo, chief judge Court of Appeals

WHEN Gen. Charles G. Dawes informed the press that he would retire from the ambassadorship to Great Britain after the disarmament conference gets under way, he created a great flurry among the minor politicians, some of whom assumed that he was putweek President ting himself in line for the Republican Presidential nomination if the opponents of Mr. Hoover could prevail. But the general put an end to such speculation in just such a statement as might be expected from him. In it he said: "I cherish ate was chiefly over proposed for President Hoover the highest adamendments, many of which were miration and deepest affection. Any offered and few were chosen. The intimation to the effect that in any possible way or under any possible was proposed by Senator Ellison D. contingency he will not have my loyal and entire support is an insult to me. "I find both parties and all the people standing behind a legislative program of reconstruction, which is a common-sense program. It is based upon an old-fashioned idea that our government should always raise the money to pay its expenditures and not borrow it.

"As for President Hoover, whatever may be temporary political reactions-and they are unimportant in such times-he has made a record in Presidential initiative and constructive accomplishment unparalleled in the economic history of this nation or of any other. He has done this without faltering and without discouragement.'

R ETIREMENT of Dwight F. Davis from the position of governor general of the Philippine islands had been long expected, for Mrs. Davis is in ill health and cannot live in the tropics. President Hoover promptly sent to the senate the name of Theòdore Rooseveit, governor of Porto Rico, as the successor to Mr. Davis, and the selection, also no surprise, was generally commended. Colonel Roosevelt, son of the former

Mr. Farrell will remain on the board of directors.

THOSE Democrats who oppose I the nomination of Franklin D. Roosevelt for the Presidency felt they had gained a point when the national committee sold the onatoinal convention to Chicago, "Sold" is the right word, for the prize was frankly awarded to the city that would guarantee the most money for the convention's expenses. The Chicagoans offered $200,000 outright. The opening date is June 27.

Most prominent among the speakers and planners in the convention were F. Scott McBride, general superintendent of the league; Bishop W. N. Ainsworth of Birmingham, Ala.; Gov. William H. Murray of Oklahoma, Senator Morris Sheppard of Texas, Patrick Callahan of Louisville and Ernest H. Cherrington, general secretary of the World League Against Alcoholism.

DOLITICAL scheming resulted in the upset of the French cabinet and conditions in Paris were described as chaotic. Premier Laval handed to President Doumer the resignations of all the ministers except himself, and tried hard to get the support of the radicals, offering the post of foreign minister to Edouard Herriot. That gentleman declined, stating that his party could not participate in the government until after the spring elections, and so Laval was left no course but resignation. Laval then formed another cabinet from which Briand was omitted. It was assumed that there would be no change in France's foreign policy at the reparations and disarmament conferences (©, 1932, Western Newspaper Union.)

GENTLE REGULATION

The best way to prevent colic, doctors say, is to avoid gas in stomach and bowels by keeping the entire intestinal tract open, free from waste But remember this: a tiny baby's tender little organs cannot stand harsh treatment. They must be gently urged. This is just the time Castoria can help most. Castoria, you know, is made specially for babie and children. It is a pure vegetable preparation, perfectly harmless. It contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics. For years it has helped mothers through trying times with colicky babies and children suffering with digestive upsets colds and fever. digestive upsets, colds and fever. ### John Gresham's Girl by Concordia Merrel (Copyright.)-WNU Service.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—A chance meeting with Lucy Gresham, young daughter of Sir John Gresham, wealthy ship builder, brings to a climax James Lee's obsession for revenge for a wrong done him years before, when, unjustly accused of robbing the Gresham firm, and sent to prison for three years, he was denied a hearing by Gresham and condemned hearing by Gresham and condemned by Gresham's business manager, Oliver Ames, Lucy's cousin. Lee is wealthy, through inheritance from a cousin, at whose behest he has changed his name from Warrington, which was his at the time of his disgrace. A diabolical scheme for revenge on Gresham and Ames, through Lucy, is evolved in his mind. He secures an invitation to the girl's birthday party.

CHAPTER II.—Lucy, through a family understanding, is in a manner engaged to marry Ames, but the pact is not formal, and the girl, overwhelmed by Lee's ardent court-ship at her birthday festivities, breaks the engagement, convinced that Lee is the man she loves. On his part, his only desire is the for-warding of his plans to hurt Gresh-am and Ames.

CHAPTER III.—A girl friend, Jocelyn Upton, reproaches Lucy for her "conquest" of Lee, but in her happiness she makes light of the incident. Lucy, with her father's approval, is formally engaged to Lee, whom the older man does not recognize as Warrington, and three weeks later they are married. On the wedding night, after a struggle with his better nature, Lee stuns the girl by telling her he not only does not love her, but, in fact, "hates" her whole breed."

CHAPTER IV .- Bewildered, Lucy charten iv.—Bewindered. Buty hears Lee's story of his wrongs, and his determination to secure revenge on her father and Ames, through the marriage of the girl they love to an ex-convict. After the interview, he leaves her, and next morning she tells him she has determined to hide bor tracedy from the world and tells him she has determined to hide her tragedy from the world and make a pretense of happiness. He is astonished, but agrees to the arrangement. Lucy believes Lee is innocent of the crime of which he was convicted, seeing a fineness of character in him which his obsession has not obliterated, and hopes to win him back to his better self.

CHAPTER V.—The firm of "Linforths," long a competitor of Gresham's, has lately shown a determination, backed by seemingly abundant capital, to crush its rival. Lucy learns from Lee that he is "Linforths," and is using his money to wreck Gresham's. Torn between loyalty to her father and the love she still feels for Lee, Lucy's unhappiness is about completed by Jocelyn Upton's assertion that Jim loved her before he met Lucy, and has acknowledged to her that he would be glad to "get rid of" his wife. Remembering Jocelyn's peculiar conduct at her birthday party, Lucy is torn with doubt concerning Jim's loyalty. Ames visits her, but does not meet Lee.

CHAPTER VI

Lucy Goes Away. REACHING the flat, she found a fresh and unexpected perplexity awaiting her: Oliver

He u door, and turned as he saw her approaching. Her heart quickened, and she forced back the tears that had been fighting to master her. But the necessity for quick thinking steadied her.

Oliver, if anyone, would be likely to recognize Jim, and the time for such a recognition was not yet. . She did not know whether Jim was in, but there was nothing for it but to greet Oliver with the friendliness he would be expecting. . . . She went up to him: "Oliver, you utterly surprising person," she cried, "I didn't know you were in town." And her voice was a real triumph of conventional

He turned to her quickly. "Lucy, how are you? Yes, I came up to see your father about this nasty smack we've just had from Linforths." She offered her hand and he took it in silence. Then: "I am making my ceremonial call at a most unceremonial hour," he "but. . . ." She broke in with a rather forced little laugh. What would happen when he came face to face with Jim? Still, she must ask him in. There was no way of getting out of it. She opened the door with her key; went in, and invited him to follow, with all the cordiality she could muster.

She took him into the drawing -room and breathed a sigh of relief at finding that Jim was not there. At first they talked chiefly of the Linforths affair, and Oliver was very outspoken in his indignation. "It's simply a dirty trick. Linforths have always been our rivals, but so far they have fought clean. I can't understand it, quite."

Lucy found it awfully difficult to endure. This was Jim he was hard before she could say again:

speaking of. She had to swallow "I understand perfectly what you feel. Oliver.'

She felt that the truth about Linforths must be blazing forth from her burning face. She ought to warn Oliver that she knew that Linforths would stop at nothing. But how could she, without explaining how she knew?

"I think Gresham's ought to be prepared," she said at last, hoping that the words sounded less shaky to him than they did to her. "Pre-

"Oh, I'm prepared, Lucy. I wish I weren't quite so much in the dark. I seem to be able to find out absolutely nothing about the enemy. But if he thinks Gresham's will surrender easily, he's mistaken. We've a big contract hanging in the balance now. We've estimated as low as the thing can be know what I'm talking about. If Linforths estimate one penny lower, they'll be doing it simply to undercut us."

"And then?"
"Then? Why, if they can hold out, afford to lose hand over fist, why, they can beat us. . . . But of course, they can't afford that. I'm not really fearing it. And any way," he broke off, smiling, "what right have I to bring such troubles to you? Is life as . . . rosestrewn as ever, dear?" The question, asked with that plucky smile of his, somehow brought all her troubles and perplexities, all her unhappiness, to

"Yes; thank you, Oliver; I'll tell him." She went with him to the door biting her lip to keep back the tears, but no sooner had he gone, than they welled up into her eyes, overflowed, and ran shiningly down her face. She was going toward her sitting room, when the sound of the front door being opened with a key made her stop and turn back. It was Jim. He shut the door with a slam and demanded abruptly:

"Was that Ames? "Yes," she replied, trying to steady her voice. "I saw him leave. I didn't think I could be mistaken. I know the look of him pretty well. What did he come here for?" "To see us. He's been in town for a day or two discussing business with father."

"Business? The Linforths affair?" "Yes; chiefly."

He laughed shortly.

"What did he want to see . . us . . . for?"

She looked up at him, her forehead puckering to a perplexed frown; drawing a breath to get the sound of tears out of her voice: "What's the matter, Jim?" she asked.

"I only asked what he came to see us for," he retorted.

"Just because he hadn't been since we were . . . married," she answered, hesitating slightly over the last word.

He opened his lips as if he would speak again, but closed them, with nothing said, and to her dismay, caught her arm, pulled her into the drawing room and only stopped close beside the window. His hand under her chin, he said abruptly: "You've been crying."

She made no answer; couldn't her lips were trembling so. "You're crying now," he added.

She tried to free herself, but he wouldn't let her go. "What are you crying for?" he went on.

"Because. . . . Oh, I don't know Oh, what does one cry for? Not because one is ... gloriously happy, anyway. . . . "Did he make you cry? Ames?"

"No . . . Yes . . . Perhaps it was he. . . . Oh, do let me go!" She was crying out-and-out, now; beyond the power to disguise or control the fact. He released her suddenly, his face darkening:

"All right—go," he said, sullenly, and she turned and fied to her bedroom; flung herself face downward into her pillows, and let the tears have sway. After the tears, came a blessed few minutes of sleep, from which she was awakened by Anne coming in to put out her evening things.

"Oh, Anne . . . it's you . . . ." she said, only just waking fully. "Is it late?"

"About a quarter past seven, madam. Will you wear the gray crepe? "Oh, anything, Anne," broke in Lucy, lying back again. "I've . . I've a splitting head. . . . Just put my things out and I'll look after myself. . . ." She hoped that excuse would serve for the heavy eyes. When Anne had left her. she rose, tiredly, and dressed. She had just slipped on the shimmery sleeveless frock of palest gray that Anne had laid out for her, and was struggling with a rather awkward shoulder fastening, when Jim knocked at her door and came in from his room.

She forgot the refractory hook dropped her hands to her side, and her gown fell apart, revealing the flawless white of her shoulder and the sweet, curving line of her girlish neck. He stood for a moment quite still, looking at her, and beneath that look she found herself olushing botty and made a quick effort to gather the shoulder of her frock together again.

He put out a hand and pulled her nearer to him suddenly, and then gathered up the shimmery stuff.

'This is a devoted husband's traditional job, isn't it?" he said, and gravely studied the mystery hooks and eyes that presented itself.

"Don't, Jim," she said, unsteadily, and tried to move away from him, but he held on to that flimsy shimmery stuff and wouldn't let go. "It was one of the conditions you laid down, that I should play the part of devoted husband," he said. "Jim . . . don't make fun of it.

. It isn't fun . . . to me."
"Nor for me," he said quickly. "No, I know that. And I know why. . . . And. . . . Oh, Jim, I'm so terribly sorry about it all!"

"You know why? What do you mean, Lucy?" he asked sharply. She raised her blue eyes to his. "You told me that you had known . . . love . . . I know what you meant by that, now," she said, gravely. "I've . . . found out. And it's awful, Jim." "Awful . . . ?" he echoed. "That you should have lost that happiness . . . for the sake of . . revenge. . . . She . . . loves you,

"I know she does!" he broke out, and suddenly pushed her away, and covered his face with his hands. "I know she does . . God help me!" he muttered.

So it was true, then, she thought. Jocelyn hadn't been talking for effect this time. . . . "Is hate after all, so strong Jim?" she asked, her quivering lips only just able to whisper the question. "Is hate strong enough to conquer love?"

"It is. . . . It is! It shall be!" he cried. "Those three years of hell . . . have got to be paid for. . . . That isn't revenge, that is simply ... justice... And justice is a law of God..." They stood for a long moment facing each other.

"Jim," she broke out, suddenly. "Give way to this love you feel. Give way to it, Jim. Let it possess and soften your heart: let it drive out the devil of revenge. . . Perhaps it's awful of me to suggest it. seeing how things are, but better that, than this hate that is poisoning you. . . .'

The effect of her words upon Lee was astonishing.

"What are you saying! What are you saying!" he cried, on a low, tortured note. "You are telling me to give way to love? To let love rule me? To take what my soul in its moments of abject weakness. craves? You are telling me this? Lucy. . . . Lucy! . . .

"I am telling you, because it is the only way I can see," she went on, breathing rather quickly. "The only hope I can see. It's the only thing I can think of, Jim. I see now that it is true that you do love her; I haven't been absolutely sure until now. . . And I see, too, that you have not conquered your love quite so completely as you try to think. . . . You love her still, if you would only let yourself. . . .

I'm telling you, Jim, to forget everything else, and give yourself to this love. Don't consider me. Don't consider anything. Just let it lead you. . . ." Her words faltered and died away, and she stood looking up at him, her big eyes wide and "Lucy! Do you know what you are saying? Do you know what this means? I've fought it all I can. . I'll take you at your word! I'll take the love I'm mad for . . . Lucy . . . .!" He took a stumbling step towards her and was close before her now, the tortured note turned quietly to sheer agony in his voice. A moment of deepest silence passed; then he broke into a laugh, and your being recognized. Oliver his hands dropped to his sides. He would be bound to know you. And turned from her. "Skies above! You nearly took me off my guard!" he cried in a low voice. . . . "But you shall not. You can't! Offer me all the love in the world and it shall not weaken me! You are asking me to be-"tray the vows I made, in the blackest moments of my humiliation. . . . Vows made in a prison cell, from a soul in purgatory, are not to be lightly betrayed. My weakness shall not conquer my strength! in that. Shall not! Do you hear, Lucy?" He protested it strongly.

"Yes, I hear, Jim," she answered. He caught her by both shoulders. and drew her toward him. Held her quite close and looked down into her eyes.

"The power of woman is very great. It can do almost anything it likes, with a man. Make of him almost any kind of fool and traitor. But great as it is, it can't tempt me away from my task. Do you understand that, Lucy?" Without looking up, she answered: "Yes. Very well, Jim. I . . . have go there?" tried; that's all." She pulled away, but he held her close.

"What can you think that I have to fear from love?" he said, the words coming through clenched "What can love do to me, when I can hold you near, touch you, look down into your eyes and remain . . . unmoved?"

She wrenched herself free, and stepped back from him, flushed and angry-eyed.

"Jim, that's hateful! Hateful! I was speaking of love. . . . Real love. . . . Not a passing momentary emotion, such as the worst sort of man might feel, and the basest sort of woman might evoke.

I was speaking of love. He stood for a moment hesitating, then pushed past her, and went out of the room quickly.

"I must get away from it all.
.." she said again, as she went, after Lee, to dinner.

Dinner was a very silent meal that evening. During the whole course of it, he said only one thing. Which was: "Gresham's are busy with the question of building two boats for the Pavanari line. Linforths have got to beat them on the deal. You may as well know that Linforths intend to."

She looked at him with tired eves and said, in a subdued voice: "Very well, Jim. Go your own way."

During the following week she scarcely saw him, and when she did he was particularly morose and unsmiling. She felt that she was awaiting some sort of crisis. She found herself trying to guess what it would be, and from what quarter it would arise. Would it come from Jocelyn? From herself? Or ... from Jim?

When it came, it came from a quarter she hadn't reckoned on. From Oliver Ames. A letter, telling her that Linforths had once again beaten them. Their deal with the Pavanari line had fallen through, and he heard that Linforths had got the job of building the boats.

"And it's no particular consola tion to reflect that they are bound to lose on the job," the letter went "I think things are going to he serious. But we'll fight, of course. . . .

"I'm going up to see Oliver about this," she said abruptly. Edgestone? Where Gresham shipyards are?" he asked, rather as if he were thinking of something else.

"I shall go to a hotel in New chester. Edgestone is only. . . ."
"Four miles out of the city." He sup ied the information in the same mechanical way.

"So I can easily go there and see Oliver. Or he. ... " She broke off, because he rose suddenly, pushing back his chair, rather violently and said in an odd voice: "Or he can come and see you at "No," she said at once. "I didn't think I was under any obligation o consult you about it." "Perhaps you're not. . . What are you going for?" he broke out after a moment's silence. "To see him about this." She pointed to the letter on the table. "To tell him about me, you mean, don't you?" he countered. "No. I shall not tell him about you, Jim. But I shall talk it over with him exactly as if I do not know who Linforths are, and try to devise some means of defeating Linforths exactly as if I were . . . a stranger to them."

"Then you are setting yourself against me?" "Against you? I'm doing my utmost to keep you from making a success of a—'dirty trick.'"

"Won't it seem odd to him if . . I don't come with you?" he said, slowly. She looked up at him quickly.

"No. He knows you are . . . very busy.' "Suppose I want to come?" His eyes looked down into hers, smouldering and dark. She met his look "Well, I don't want you to come. There would be too much risk of would be bound to know you. And "The Royal is the best. Will you "I don't mind where it is, so long as it's comfortable. All right, I'll ask Oliver to get rooms for me at for the night. "Made all your arrangements?" he asked from the doorway of his

"What time are you leaving?" he added.

"By the ten fifty-five from King's "All right. Good night, Lucy." Her voice was not quite steady as she bade him good night, too.

A good deal to her surprise, she found, when she was ready to start next day, that Jim was waiting to take her to the station. She thanked him for that.

He bought her ticket, found her a place in a first-class pullman, heaped the table before her with papers and magazines, and as he left her, he took off his hat, bent down and kissed her cheek. "A devoted husband does sort of thing," he murmured, and he left her quickly, without looking back. She watched him go, with the quick stinging of tears in her eyes, so that his mighty figure was blurred in her sight.

Lee went straight out of the station, without once looking back, flung himself into his car and started it immediately. What he was thinking or feeling, the wisest man on earth could not have guessed from his set, sullen face. And yet a turmoil of emotions was raging through him.

As he was rounding a corner slowly, he was hailed from the pavement by Jocelyn Upton, and drew up beside the curb to greet you lately." "Oh, didn't she even tell you that?" she cried, in affected surprise. He looked at her, steadily for a moment. Then:

"Jocelyn, what are you driving at?" he demanded bluntly. "Come and sit down again, dear, and I'll tell you," she said. But he didn't move. He just stood where he was and said:

"Tell me." "It's difficult to shout these things out across such a distance," she objected. These things . What things? He was silently questioning. He finally compromised by striding over to her and standing close before her. "Well?" he asked.

When he did recover from his astonishment to think anything at all, his first thought was that Jocelyn must suddenly have gone completely mad. He tried unceremoniously to loosen her clinging hands, but she only elung the tighter. "You do love me, don't you, Jim? And, Jim, I've always loved you . . always! Why were you so mad as to go and marry Lucy? What made you do it? Didn't you guess that I cared? Didn't you know? Jim, I thought I'd made it clear. . . . He wrenched her hands apart he put in, trying to stem the torrent of her words.

"I know your marriage with Lucy is a fiasco. She told me so, her-self . . ." she went on. "She confided the whole thing to me. She told me that she was tired of your coldness toward her: that she was going to get free of you for a bit ' She was inventing wildly now. "A woman can't live on coldness, you know. Jim. No matter how much she loves you-and she made it clear enough that she was frantic about you—indifference will kill it all. . . . Well, you've killed her love for you. . . D'you understand?" He had turned from her, but at that he swung back toward her, and the flash of temper he had just shown went suddenly to a blaze in his somber eyes. "What are you saying?" he demanded through shut teeth. She was beside herself with baffled emotion and wounded vanity and past caring what she said or whom she injured. She thrust her distorted little face up close to his.

"I'm saying that she's tired of you. . . . Tired of giving all and being given nothing. And she's gone back to a strong, faithful love. . . . D'you understand? She's discovered that she was a fool ever to leave She's learned her own heart and is going back to the man she has always belonged to-Oliver Ames. . . Does that move you. Whether you love her or not, that hasn't quite a nice flavor, has it?" der words dinned on his nerves till his control broke and his temper rose, now, to sudden fury.

caught her arms. "Take it back! Take it all back! She didn't say any of it. . . . She didn't tell you any of this. . . She doesn't love Oliver. . . You're ly-

He was shaking her now, and the words were jerking from his lips, harshly, brokenly. didn't realize how rough he was being; some intense feeling had him by the throat and he was past the point of realizing what he was doing. His impulse was simple: just to nunish her for speaking the words that could move him so. . . . Her poor little thin body was as helpless in the strength of his hands as a sapling in a raging storm. When he pushed her away, she stumbled, without any acting this time, back onto the couch, breathless, confused and fright-ened. But he waited for nothing further; he jammed on his hat and left her, his heart beating out an agony suddenly more poignant than any he had ever known.
