Clarence Merchant Selected by Holstein Association as Best in Nation.

Clarence Merchant, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Merchant of Cass City, has been chosen as the national champion 4-H Holstein boy for 1931 by the extension service of the Holstein-Friesian Association of America. A careful study of the records of the state champions was made in order to determine who would receive the national honors. Competition between several of the state champions was quite keen, but Clarence won out by his superior leadership although a few of the contestants had more years of service to their credit. Willis Campbell, advisor in boys' club work activities in this community, says this recognition by the Holstein-Friesian Association is the outstanding feature of club work here in many

His show ring winnings are too numerous to list, but a summary of his State Fair winnings shows that he has won five firsts, eight seconds, one fourth, one ninth, and three championships including the Junior Champion Bull in open classes in 1931 on a yearling of his own breeding. Eight Schools Will Compete for Classes C and D Honors in Basketball.

Michigan's high school basketball players, several thousand of them, are marshalling their best court form and manners in anticipation of the firing of the opening gun of the annual tournament campaign. On March 3 the teams in Classes C and D of the high school rating will gather in 49 centers to open play in the first round of the district tournaments. At the end of the third day, after every team caring to enter has been given an opportunity to pit its skill against rivals, a champion will be returned in each class and presented with a permanent award.

Cass City has been designated as a tournament site. J. I. Niergarth, principal of the Cass City high school, will have charge of the event. He will act in the role of manager. For several days, Mr. Niergarth has been busy making final plans. He expects to have some keen competition on the boards during the three days of play.

1. Lazarus Sick (vv. 1, 2). Even those who are in close fellowship with the Lord are not immune from sickness. Sorrow comes even to the homes where Jesus is loved.

II. Martha and Mary Send for Jesus (v. 3).

Because they had come to know Jesus as more than a mere man, they instinctively turned to him when the shadow of death fell across their home. Those who receive Jesus into their home when all are well and happy can be sure of his love and sympathy when sickness and death overtake them. III. Jesus' Strange Delay (vv.

4-6). Martha and Mary sent for Jesus because he loved Lazarus. They said, "He whom thou lovest is sick," Observe that when Jesus heard that Lazarus was sick he "abode in the same place" because he loved Lazarus and his sisters (v. 5). This mystery is to be explained by the fact that Jesus was divine and knew all things. IV. Jesus Goes to the Bethany Home (vv. 7-17).

Jesus knew, and apparently the disciples knew, that going into Judea at that time meant his own death. He told his disciples that B. Wilson. his purpose in going was to awaken Lazarus out of his sleep to the intent that they might believe (vv. 11been threatened.

As he was nearing the village, Martha met him with a complaint because of his delay. He ignored her complaint and taught her concerning the resurrection and life.

1. "Thy brother shall rise again" (v. 23). Most blessed words are these to fall upon the ears of a sister sorrowing for a dead brother.

2. "I am the resurrection and the life" (vv. 25, 26). He is the source of life and all who are joined to him by a living faith experience such drowsy and falls asleep. a vital fellowship as to be unaffected by any bodily change. The believer cannot die. 1. Lazarus was dead (v. 39). This is a type of the sinner dead in trespasses and sins, even morally corrupt (Eph. 2:1).

3. Martha's protest of unbelief (v 39). She insisted that Lazarus had already undergone putrifaction. Christ is able to save the sinner regardless of the degree of his sins. 4. Christ's intimacy and fellow isn't surprising that we are ready for red frocks and wraps. Red is a carry-over from the autumn to the winter season and there seems to be ample indications that red, in such soft shades as coral and dark will bloom in the spring.

RED IS POPULAR

More Cheerful Since we have to supply much of our own brightness these days, it at their parental home here.

For the present we wear vermillion and lipstick red without any qualms, for aren't we helping to make things look more cheerful. Seriously, though, the little frock of bright red beneath a brown or black coat is infinitely good looking and smart. Just now, such frocks are seen very often at luncheon at the smart places, and the medium is generally a woolen.

Wool jersey is much liked, especially by the younger woman, who feels that a simple little frock of bright jersey is just about the most youthful thing she can wear during the day.

SUMPTUOUS SUITS By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Fashion points to the velvet street suit as a midwinter mode supreme. It must be the personification of elegance-of Lyons velvet de luxe, as is the model illustrated. It must be furred distinctively. Gray Persian lamb trims the suit in the picture. It must have "lines" which are unusual. Note the unique circular treatment given to this graceful medium length jacket. There must be an exquisite feminine air about the blouse. In this instance the blouse is tailored of crepe and satin. Milady, who would be well dressed at all times, will have in reserve a lovely lace, also a handsome sheer metal cloth blouse to wear on more formal occasions. (©, 1932, Western Newspaper Union.)

Beading Motifs Used on Bodice or Tunic

Trimming of beading on evening dresses is only smart now when used in bands or motifs rather than all over the bodice or tunic of a dress. Beaded bands over the shoulders are one of the best ways to use this trimming.

> Every winter we get complaints from farmers who have lost their bred ewes. When we inquire into they have been wintered on timothy hay or stover. > Little Corn Smut Danger Corn smut is not injurious to farm animals when fed in considerably greater amounts than they would ordinarily receive from corn fodder or corn silage, according to Prof. F. W. Christensen of the North Dakota Agricultural college.

> "A number of years ago four dairy cows were fed corn smut along with their other feeds," states Mr. Christensen. "The test was continued for 49 days, and no harmful effects were observed. The cows continued to give their normal milk flow and no tendency to abortion appeared. In experiments at the Wisconsin station, as much as four was fed to cows without any injurious results."

Farm Forestry Pays

One-third of all farms in the United States yield as much as $220 worth of timber per year, the Department of Agriculture says. An exhibit from the forest service shows that the annual farm forest crop is worth $395,000,000. Timber not only pays in dollars and cents, but it is like a bank account upon which the owner can draw in times of stress. Its uses range from farm buildings, telephone poles, repairs, and fuel on the farm, to saw logs, coss-ties, pulpwood, posts and poles.

Paper Mulch

Mulch paper loses much of its value if not put down properly. Those who have had trouble keeping the paper in place may like to know what an Ohio gardener writes: "This is the fourth year I have used mulch paper. Up to this year I used stones to hold the paper. This year I got some ordinary lath, drilled a hole in each end and through the holes drove spikes about six inches long. This method has kept the paper in place during severe storms.

This and That & &

Congratulations, Clarence-

The Chronicle joins with the many friends of Clarence Merchant of Cass City in extending congratulations on his having won the honors which go with being chosen as the national champion 4-H Holstein boy for 1931 by the extension service of the Holstein-Friesian association of America. An article similar to the one about Clarence's activity in 4-H club work appearing on the first page of this number of the Chronicle is being printed in many newspapers in the nation. Cass City is being placed on the national map with greater conspicuousness than has been noticeable for some time through this national news story released by the Holstein-Friesian association extension service.

Tots' Smart Togs Made of Kidskin is that the elite juvenile set in these modern times is developing an amazing fashion-awareness-a fact most amusing but which nevertheless flings a challenge to designers of clothes for the very young which must be reckoned with seriously. This call of the hour for "style" is meeting with an especially happy response in the realm of leather and kidskin apparel for tiny tots. Just now the kiddies who know what's what in the mode, are all excitement over the new kidskin and leather togs which are just too cunning for words. You will agree, after glimpsing the costumes pictured herewith, that they are all of that—as clever and winsome as leather artistry can make them.

During a recent fashion show, when the little girl pictured to the left stepped out clad in this striking outfit made all of bronze kidskin, her appearance created nothing less than a sensation. From her smart square-toed shoes to her perky little chapeau she wears the ultra-fashionable bronze kid. The bronze kid coat has a modishly flared skirt and a voguish cape collar. Beige lapin cuffs the sleeves and lines the collar and a bow of a bit of the fur poses jauntily at the very top-notch of the crown of her hat. Of course the touch of fur is a note of supreme delight to this wee lady of fashion.

It is difficult to imagine anything more lovely and more modern than the adorable all-white kidskin ensemble shown to the right in the picture. This motor costume, as the designer chooses to call it, is the very newest of the new in little folk's fashions. It includes slippers, hat, coat and pocketbook of soft-as-silk white kidskin. When springtime comes or in sunny climes where nightengales are singing their roundelays and the air is laden with the perfume of gay flowers, what more ideal than for her diminutive ladyship to wear this exquisitely dainty outfit styled all of fine snowwhite kidskin?

However, there are kidskin fashions and kidskin fashions and some of them are decidedly practical as fashions must be for children who live in the north where tardy spring takes its own good time in arriving. The latest rage in wee folk's winter togs is leggings of kidskin. The "dear little dimpled darling," seated above in the illustration, is wearing brown kid leggings with a blue chinchilla coat collared in brown beaver. The leggings fit snugly with zipper fastening and three straps above the knee.

As to older little girls, the lure of a smart leather jacket is something they simply cannot resist, especially if they go in for active sports. This year there is a greater variety in styles, and the colors are beautiful. Some models have round collarless necklines, fastening up the front with metal clips. Others have soft round collars.

There are also classic single or double-breasted types with wide collars that can be turned up around the ears. The latter are more practical for the girl who goes skating or snow-shoeing.

adepts at using color, there is but Friday evening. Miss Hollenbeck, scant fear of any one of us using the evangelist, expects to go back the wrong shade of green, something that can easily happen unless one is very wary, and fully conscious of any defects of the complexion or coloring. A good bet is always dark green trimmed with black or brown; it is the bright greens that hold so much peril.

By all means go in for a diet of greens, but exercise caution. Brown, too, is a favorite color, and both green and brown are so much used together this season on both sides of the Atlantic.

SUPPOSE for a moment that advertising didn't exist—that there were no trade-marked goods that everything you bought had to be judged solely by its feel or taste?

Imagine yourself setting out to do the morning's shopping under such conditions. You'd drive down the street, looking in windows for the articles you needed—the blouses for Johnny, the half-dozen towels, the toilet soap, the washing machine, the radio, etc. You'd stop, ask questions, examine the towels, smell the soap, wonder if here was your money's worth or if you might find something better farther on. And though you followed this procedure mile after weary mile, you could never be SURE.

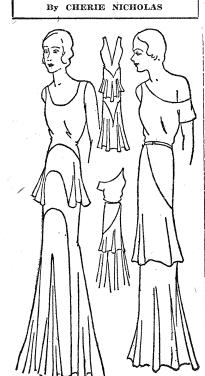

Computed simply in terms of gasoline and tires and shoe leather, advertising saves you a startling sum every year. And if you add the value of your time, the amount is vastly increased.

When you buy a product that is advertised you know in advance what you will get, how much it costs you and where you can obtain it. That is why, in millions of modern homes, the newspaper advertising columns are a daily guide to purchases.

Read the advertisements, decide what you need, then buy with assurance.

CHAPTER XI

Lee's Moment of Triumph. A FTER Lucy had gone, Lee stood for a time quite still, his hands deep into his pockets, his eyes dark and stormy. A call to the telephone aroused him and when he answered it, he found that it was from the inquiry agents he had set onto the mystery of Brady's cottage. He was asked to go round to the office at once as the man who had been watching the place, had come back with an interesting story. He went immediately, and the story proved interesting indeed.

As a result of it, and when he had mastered all the details of it. Lee went out to Gresham's, and without waiting for anyone's leave, went straight up to Ames' office. There he found Ames, seated at his desk, and Macklin sitting by him, both evidently talking earnestly.

Lee shut the door and planted himself with his back to it, and the two men at the desk looked up sharply. Macklin half arose, uttering an exclamation, but sank back into his chair again, as Ames motioned him to keep still.

"What do you want, Warrington?" asked Ames quietly.
"I'll tell you," answered Jim, just as quietly, but with that tur-

CHILD need REGULATING?

CASTORIA WILL DO ITI

When your child needs regulating, remember this: the organs of babies and children are delicate. Little bowels must be gently urged-never forced. That's why Castoria is used by so many doctors and mothers. It is specially made for children's ailments; contains no harsh, harmful drugs, no narcotics. You can safely give it to young infants for colic pains. Yet it is an equally effective regulator for older children. The next time your child has a little cold or fever, or a digestive upset, give him the help of Castoria, the children's own remedy. Genuine Castoria always has the name:

Chart Fletcher. CASTORIA CHILDREN CRY FOR IT moil Lucy had sensed beneath the quietness.
"Yesterday, Macklin came to you with a story. Today, I have brought you one."

"I do not wish to hear anything from you, Warrington," said Ames
"But you are going to hear it none the less," retorted Jim. he spoke, his hand found the key and turned it in the lock. Mack-Ames remained still and perfectly cool. Lee found himself admiring his enemy for that coolness. Ames knew exactly how much Lee hated him. But he did not turn a hair "Does it strike you that Mr. Macklin is not altogether easy at seeing me here?" went on Lee, coming nearer as he spoke. Ames shot a quick look at Macklin; was silent a moment, then said:

"Well, what have you to tell me, Warrington?" "Has something in Mr. Macklin's face made you think that perhaps you had better hear it?" countered Jim with a sneer. Ames made no answer. But he waited. Jim launched his story.

"At precisely twenty-six minutes went to the big elm that has been struck by lightning, down by Brady's cottage, and looked for something in a big, rotten hole down by its roots. He found what he was looking for; a note. The damage the tree had suffered had not touched it. He spread it out and by the very small glimmer of a pocket torch, he read what was written in it. What he read, made him go into the copse and sit, hidden by the darkness, on the fallen trunk of a tree. At precisely twelve o'clock-and he looked at his watch to be sure that it was twelve o'clock-he returned to the cottage and went into it, letting himself in with the key, which he found hanging in the ivy over the door. He waited five minutes, and then he was joined by another man." Macklin suddenly started to his feet, cry-

"Don't listen to him! Don't listen to him! He's lying! You can't believe the word of a thief. . . . Don't listen to him!"

"Sit down. Macklin," said Ames, in a sudden tone of command. "If these are lies that he is telling, you need fear nothing. His story will not be accepted without test. . . Go on, Warrington."

Jim broke his story to say: "My name is Lee, please, Ames." For a moment their eyes met. Then Ames said:
"Very well, Lee. Will you continue?"

"This other man," said Jim. "was very tall, very big altogether. In fact, just the build to make it easy for anyone to mistake him, for any other very big man. Myself. for instance. A clerk, attacked by this man, might very easily think that I had attacked him. Doesn't that describe the friend you met at Brady's cottage last night, Macklin?" The question came on a sharp, merciless note that made Macklin suddenly clench his hands in an effort to keep his taut nerves from betraying him. "But perhaps this big man is no real friend of Macklin's," Lee went "Perhaps Macklin only used for some purpose, and has found since that this man is not so easy as he seemed. Has that been it, Macklin? And having done your dirty work for you, does he now hold his knowledge over you. and make you pay for his silence? And has be been in the habit of leaving notes of appointment for you in the hollow of that tree? And have you been in the habit of interviewing him in the cottage? And leaving your hush-money under the loose board in the floor, on the lefthand side of the fireplace in the kitchen? Has that been the practice between you and this big man, who might so easily be mistaken for me? For only some of the stolen notes were found in my wallet, quite a lot unaccounted for. . .

you know. There have always been And has this man been getting more and more unreasonable in his demands? And were you very angry with him last night, and did you threaten him? And did he laugh at the puny size of you, and remind you to be careful? Did he, Macklin? Did all this happen?" Jim was close before the wretched little man now, his face thrust threat eningly toward him

"Did all this happen, Macklin" Did it?" There was that nerveracking repetition again that had racking repetition again maddened Macklin yesterday. . . . enddenly. He His face worked suddenly. raised a shaking hand to still equally shaking lips; he raised wild eyes, and in a sudden frenzy struck out with his closed fist and caught Lee on the point of the chin. .

The answer to that was a derisive laugh, and then a huge hand came toward him, grabbed him by the coat and lifted him out of his chair and held him dangling. And Lee's eyes, hot and blazing, looked into his, and he saw in them the unmistakable sign that his hour of reckoning was at hand. . . .

The scene that followed was one that Ames never afterwards for got. Jim's mighty, towering figure his blazing, eyes; that great fist of his that held Macklin, small, weak, terrified, helpless; dangling sillily an inch or two from the floor, al made Ames feel that he had suddenly been jarred sheer out of life as he knew it, into a scene that was incredible, utterly unreal. Certainly Macklin had a look of having suddenly shrunk to a thing of sawdust. Hs small ratty eyes were rolling wildly; his thin lips were trembling and he was blubbering out inarticulate sounds. His normally sleek hair was plastered in damp strands over his forehead and his hands were clawing feebly in the air and managing to grasp nothing. It was the wrath of a giant against a pigmy, and Ames knew suddenly that the wrath of

realized at last that a ghastly injustice had been done and that Lee had paid the terrible price of it. Macklin was making the truth more and more obvious with every passing minute. His fear; his cringing; the fiendish malevolence of his terror-stricken eyes, were signs that were easy enough to read. Shocked to the soul, by the sudden realization of the truth, Ames sat at his desk trying moment to take things in and finding it difficult. . . . Macklin guilty.

... Lee innocent... Then Lucy had been right, after all, in her distrust of the manager. . . . And he had been so sure that no evidence had been overlooked. . . . He had done everything to ensure a fair trial for Lee. . . . But here was the truth. . . . This was evidence beyond dispute. . . . His mind cleared after a moment and he realized that this that was going on before him, was not only the truth, but might easily be dangerous, and lead to things worse than anything that had yet happened. Lee was a man in whom the spirit of revenge had been storing up energy through three terrible years.
... His wrath now was like the breaking forth of a volcano. . . past eleven last night, Macklin He was in no mood to care what he might do; in no mood to put any rein upon his overwhelming temper... He was shaking Mack-lin as if the wretched little man weighed no more than a kitten, and Macklin was crying out:

You're choking me! You dirty murderer! You're killing me. . . ."

"Killing's too good for scum like you, you treacherous little beast. answered Jim, a tone in his voice that suggested that the volcano had not really begun to show its full strength. A tone, too, that awoke Ames thoroughly out of his stunned surprise. His mind cleared, and he sat forward, alert for the next move whatever it might be. He made no effort to interfere in any active way. That, he realized would be fatal. It would simply lead to a general scrap all round. He saw that his part now must be to keep a clear head, and see that Lee did Macklin no real, serious damage. Beyond that he must leave the settling of the score to Lee. And he saw just what a mighty big score it was. . . .

What would come afterwards he couldn't tell. Perhaps it would be his turn to feel the strength of that mighty fist, and to look into the revengeful fire of those blazing eyes. . . . But that, if it should happen, was for hereafter. Now, his job plainly was to keep a cool head and a steady nerve and be ready for anything. So he sat still; outwardly calm; in reality, all keyed up and tensely watchful.

"Killing's too good for you, you little beast," Lee was saying again, and his free fist drew back menacingly. Macklin shrieked to Ames.
"Are you going to sit still and see me killed? He's lying. I don't know anything about the theft! Aren't you going to help me?" said Ames, and his voice fell with a curious, telling coldness into the fury of the scene. not going to help you, Macklin, I can see that he is not lying. Your guilt is as clear to me now as if it were written in words on your forehead. Lee owes you a good deal. I'm going to let him pay

Lee's fist drew back further, and the menace of it became more and more acute... Macklin saw that fist coming toward his face... Before it fanded, he almost felt the smash of it on his flesh. . . . He suddenly gave out a piercing shriek, and again Ames' voice fell, cool and clear, through the fear and horror and fury.

"Don't hit him, Lee; he's too small." It was quietly said, but with a tone of authority that made Jim hesitate. hesitation probably saved Macklin, if not his life, at least whatever claim he had to good looks. And it saved Jim from a good deal more. It gave him time to realize the difference in size between him and his enemy. It gave him time to realize what that difference might mean. It gave him time to remember that, no matter what his enemy had done to him, he might hit a fellow his own size, but not a little, cringing worm of a thing like Macklin. There could be no fighting this question out. To fight would be simply to kill. It would be as Mack-lin had called it-murder. . . . His fist, trembling with the desire to do its work, nevertheless fell to his side and his hold of Macklin relaxed.

"You needn't kick up such a row, Macklin. I'm not going to smash you. Not yet, at any rate. There's quite a lot for you to do first. Do you understand?" His voice was harsh and menacing. Ames nodded his agreement.

"I'm ready to take down anything that Macklin says, Lee," he said quietly. Jim turned towards him quickly, furiously.

"You realize at last that he may have something to say, then?" he said roughly. "You realize that you were not so almighty infallible when you had me jailed?'

"Lee," said Ames, looking him full in the face, "I realize it." He drew a breath. "What can I say?" he added after a moment.

"I don't want you to say anything," returned Lee in the same rough way. "Your turn is coming next. I'm only waiting to clear my account with Macklin. Your turn's coming, all right. Ames. "I am quite ready," answered Ames. Jim turned back to Macklin. "Now then, you little beasttalk. . . . D'you understand? Talk. He let go altogether of Mack lin's coat, now, and the miserable man sank to the floor with a groan. Jim dragged him up again, threatening him with that terrible fist.

"I will. . . I will. . . ." cried Macklin, sobbing now in his abject terror. "You didn't mind letting me take your punishment for you. You In the guilt of Lee was shattered by the behavior of Macklin, and he watched that happen; made it happen, and remained spry enough.... Now stand up, d-n you, and take it yourself. . . . It's been a long time coming to you. . . . But that doesn't mean that it's going to overlook you forever. . . . Stand up and take it!"

Jim was thundering out the words, and Macklin shrank down again, crying over and over again: "I will. . . . Warrington, I will. . . I will!"

"I'm ready," said Ames, placing a writing-pad before him and taking the top off a fountain pen. . . . "Talk, Macklin."

Shaking, crying, tears running down his face, Macklin made his confession. He had found the wallet Jim had lost, and the idea to disgrace him had arisen out of that. He had paid half-witted Billy Brady to do the actual robbery for him. He had thought that this foolish creature would not have the wit to know what he had done. nor to place the blame where it was really due. But he had proved to be not nearly so lacking in intelligence, of a sort, as people had always thought. And he had been ruthlessly blackmailing Macklin ever since. Macklin had succeeded in hiding the stolen notes from him, but by means of a letter left in the roots of the now stricken elm the half-wit had always been able to make Macklin keep any appointment he chose to make. And although he could never find out where the money was hidden, he could always get what he wanted. Macklin was too much afraid of him to refuse him anything he asked. In a pause in the wretched story, Ames asked:
"What spite had you against Warrington that you should have done this to him?"

Macklin hesitated. The thought that he might make up some convincing lie even now and so make it seem that he really had a serious grievance against Lee passed through his mind. But Ames said sternly:

"The truth, please, Macklin." And the truth came.

"He was getting on too fast. . Threatening to get in my way. I meant to be manager and I saw that he meant to do me out of the job . . ." the whining voice said, and Ames faithfully wrote it all down. When the last word of the confession had been spoken. Ames handed the pen to Macklin.

"Your name, please, Macklin," he said, and with a hand that trembled so that the signature only just got written, Macklin signed the infamous story and collapsed into a heap on the floor.

His overwrought nerves had taken their revenge, and gone suddenly to pieces. That effectively put him out of reach of Jim's violence, for it was obvious that he was a case for a doctor now. He was lying on the floor, to all intents and purposes, dead. But Ames, going to him quickly, found that his heart was beating and that his breathing was tolerably even. He picked the little man up and sat him in his chair again. "Ring the bell, and unlock the he said to Jim, and Jim door," obeyed. Less than twenty minutes later, a doctor had seen Macklin, brought him to life again, and had him taken to a hospital. Ames had given brief but sufficient explanations, and having seen the doctor off in charge of Macklin, came back to his office and faced

"Well?" he said, standing by the or and looking him. "It will be your turn next," said

Jim, slowly.
"I'm prepared for that," answered Ames. "But, Lee may I say. ... May I apologize ... Apologize! Good G—d, words are so inadequate! But listen, man, I wouldn't have let this happen for anything in the world. . . .! If I had not honestly believed that you were the man who did that rotten thing. . . I wouldn't have let it happen. . . ." His coolness was deserting him now, and the words were falling unevenly from his lips. Lee stood straight and still. His face was unmoved save for the quiver of his lips as he said:

"For all that, it did happen. For all that, I lived three years in-"I know there is nothing that one can say. . . . I'm bowled over by it. . . . I am, indeed. . . . That I should have allowed such a thing .! That I should have helped it to happen. . . . There's nothing can say for myself, except that I acted in all good faith. . . ."

"That doesn't do much to undo those three years, does it, Ames?" said Jim, with a bitter sneer in the words.

"No. My G-d, it's terrible! What can I do to make amends?" "You can't do anything except the obvious things that are to be done to clear me in the eyes of the world. That is all you can do, and all that I'll ever ask of you. For the rest. . . . Well, I'm doing the rest, Ames. I'm doing the rest. Such amends as are to be made, will be made. You may rest assured of that. 'You are still bent on revenge?" "Still? It is a greater thing than ever it was. . . . Why, a whole three years of planning are only just beginning to bear fruit. . . There was the cruelest sort of exultation in that. Ames was suddenly afraid as he had not been during all Jim's fury. He was silent for a long moment, then:

"If it would be the smallest sat isfaction to you, Lee. . . would work this thing off a bit....
You may take me out into the yard and smash me. . . . " The offer was made very quietly and quite seriously.

"I'll smash you all right," answered Jim. "But not that way. That way's too easy for one of my strength. As you said of Macklin just now. . . . You're too small. . . But I'll smash you all right. I'm Linforths. Understand?" He twisted away and slammed out of the room.

He remained in Newchester long enough to be sure that Macklin was out of danger, and that Ames had put things in train to have him exonerated in the eyes of the law and of the world in general. Then, with the memory of that last night with Lucy, of his hideous surrender to his passion for her, and the torment of her baffling resistance of him, lashing brain and heart and soul of him to a tempest of driving emotion, he returned to town and to Lucy.

She, he found, was at her fahad been there since she had left Newchester. Tempestdriven, he went to find her there. He was shown into the library, the room where they had met on her party night. When she came into the room and looked up at him, speaking a quiet greeting, half diffident, as if she were not sure what had brought him, he found his heart knocking hard, and his eyes were alight again at sight of her.

He returned her greeting without making any move nearer to her. His eyes, devouring her face, saw that she looked white and fagged. "Macklin has confessed," he said abruptly.

"I'm glad, Jim. Awfully glad," she answered warmly. "This is real

"Even your cousin, Oliver Ames, has been good enough to express convinced of my innohimself cence," he said, his tone grim and sneering.

"I always knew the truth must come out. . . . It's wonderful, Jim." She looked up at him a little wistfully, as if she were mutely asking him to take the blessings of justice, even though it had come late, and to let the old injustice be a thing of the past. But the expression of those smoldering eyes held out no hope.

"It was Billy Brady who knocked the clerk out—under orders from Macklin. Billy's chief madness is a passion for silver money. Every time he blackmailed money out of Macklin, he got it changed into silver and then buried it in the wood. He never seems to have gone back for it. They've found more than thirty little lots, and they're still looking. He's under restraint, of course. and will be for the rest of his life." He told her this story quite expressionless-

"I knew he wasn't safe," she said. "I'm glad they've got him; he really was a menace, wasn't he?" If she hoped to draw him into a discussion of the affair, and thus to a more friendly footing, she was disappointed. For he only nodded and then asked abruptly:

"Is your father in?"
"Yes," she said. "He's..."
"I've come to tell him just exactly who I am. Just exactly who it is his daughter has married. . . . he broke in.

"You can't," she answered quietly but with firmness. "My father is ill. I found him down with 'flu' when I got back. He has been rather bad. . . . You can't tell him now.

"Why should I consider him?" he retorted. "Did he think of me when he left me to be jailed for some thing I had not done?"

"You cannot tell him now," was all she said. "He is too ill." "I intend to tell him now, or at any time I think fit," he answered brutally.

She did not speak, but she moved over to the door and stood before it, her arms outstretched. "Very well, move me, then; there is only myself between you and him." He stood looking at her, his eyes aflame. "Stand aside," he ordered in a low voice. "I shall not move unless you forcibly move me," she replied.

"Stand aside," he said, again, and this time he took a step toward her. "No."

His hands clenched to fists, his face was working oddly. "Do you want me to . . to . . lift you out of my way?" he asked in a shaken "Do you

"You will have to, if you mean to get to my father," she told him steadily.

Tempest-driven, he started toward her again. And again stopped. She stood unmoving. His hands clenched and unclenched. . . . He strove with words that, somehow, he could not speak. Something like a cry broke from "All right, then, stand aside and just let me go," he said at last. She obeyed and he flung past her out into the hall, and out into the street. She heard the slam of the front door and the sound of his running steps. . . .

house, giving to the world the ex-avoid himself, for she resolutely refused to see him. Only he, she had said, could make her leave him; well, he had done it. She had left him, and there seemed to be no chance of her coming back to him. Then, she robbed him of the triumph of telling Sir John who he really was, by telling him herself, as soon as he was well enough to hear such news. Still was a small part of it; the smashing of Gresham's was his chief aim, and nothing on earth should make him forego that. During the next few weeks he found himself exonerated formally in the eyes of all the world, of any guilt in connection with the crime for which he had suffered. Macklin was being dealt with by the law, and things were not looking too rosy for him. Sir John, terribly upset, and not fully understanding quite all there was in the situation between Lucy and her husband, made very sincere offers of reconciliation, but Jim's madness for revenge swept him on, and he would only fight Gresham's tooth and Things began to look bad for the old firm. Ames doggedly stuck to his post and did his best but he was up against a competition that was wholly uncaring of consequences. So that he ruined Gresham's, Jim did not mind if he ruined himself in the process.

"And hang it all," Ames said more than once, getting nervy, and feeling utterly at a loss as to how to counter the attack. "He must be losing hand over fist. If I were to engage to build a boat for nothing he'd engage to build two on the same terms. . . . He can't go on forever. . .

Sir John would answer him, "and neither can we, Oliver." Which was only too true. "The biggest business in the world couldn't stand against competition of this sort," Ames declared. Sir John was game enough, but his illness had pulled him down badly, and weeks of anxiety were visibly beginning to tell on him. He was beginning to look old, harassed, and there was a new touch of feebleness about him, that tore at Lucy's heart. She was pretty nearly distracted as one business disaster after another was reported She did not know what to do and the only thing she could think of, shamed her through and through. . . . But, driven to desperation, she finally did it. She went one evening after dinner, to the flat, and as she had expected, found Jim at home. She still had her key, and let herself in, and was standing in the drawing room doorway, looking at him, before he had had time to realize that she was there. He rose rather quickly at sight of her and stood challenging her with his dark, burning eyes. She closed the door, and without coming further into the room, said

"Jim, if I give you the love you once asked for, will you stop your fight against Gresham's?" It cost a world of pluck and resolution to say that, and the color came richly into her face as she spoke.

But he looked at her steadily, and all he said was: "So Gresham's are beginning to go under?"

"No firm could stand the attack you are making against it, Jim," she answered.

"Why do you come to me about to . . . persuade you. . . ." She broke off and paused a moment. Then: "It's my father, Jim. He has been ill. This is . . . breaking him up. . . ." Her voice shook.

"What is that to me?" he asked harshly. She hesitated slightly, then said: "You once offered to . . . to give your revenge for . . . for . . ." short laugh. "But you flung the bargain back into my face, if you remember. . . . Why should you think that I would be willing to and silent. Then, the words coming very slowly: "If it were not for your father. . . ? The color flashed up into her cheeks again. "I'd die sooner than say what I have said this evening. . . . He colored at that, too, and his eyes seemed to go yet darker.

... " She interrupted him:

"You are too late," he said, some emotion shaking his voice in spite of his efforts to control it. "I bargain no longer has any attractions for me. . . . I warned you of fire. "I told you when you turned me down as if I were something that was loathsome to you . . . that whatever came after, you would be responsible for it. . . . Well, it's come, and you are shrinking. . . . But you can't turn me down and pick me up again, just whenever it suits you. I asked for your love once and you refused me. . . . Now I don't want it. . . . You have come to me too late. . . ." He stopped, drawing a breath, and she saw that he was shaking slightly.

She turned away. "I understand, Jim," she said, and left him. It seemed to her that humiliation could go very little deeper than the humiliation she felt now. . .

OFF THE FIRST HATCH The Thumb Hatchery of Sandus ky which is under the management of J. Jay Black of Sandusky will be taking off its first hatch of the season this week. This organization was started in 1927 and has specialized in doing local business. This has meant that the farmers come to the hatchery for the chickens and during the past six years of its operation not more than 500 chicks have been shipped by mail. For the year 1930 in which the census was taken, the Thumb Hatchery produced over half of all the baby chicks in Sanilac county. Mr. Black states that M. C.
