Fair and Home-Coming at Cass City August 17 to 19.

When the fair opens next Wednesticket.

Next week is home-coming week for many former Cass City residents who make it a point to come to the "old home town" during fair week to renew old friendships and make again the annual visit among old acquaintances.

In the way of attractions, the fair officials have secured the Geyer & Abbott Trio, Paul's United Free Attractions and the Harrisons, who will present 10 platform acts on the stage facing the grand stand. Exhibition flying is on the program for the three days. Secretary Bigelow booked two ball games at a late date for the entertainment of fair visitors. On Thurs-Friday game is between Bad Axe American Legion, of Detroit, on Wilmot. Harry Burnett's Sunday, August 7. rides have been secured for midway features. Manager Frank Reid of the Farm Produce Co. has written dividend checks for the 290 stockholders of that company, the board of directors having recently voted to pay a 4% dividend for the year just closed.

At the annual meeting of the stockholders held at the town hall Tuesday afternoon, the following directors were chosen: Wm. J. Schwegler, Smith Hutchinson, N. A. Perry, John A. Benkelman, I. W. Hall, C. J. Striffler and Elijah Fisher. All were elected to succeed themselves.

While the quantity of grain and beans handled during the year exceeded that of the previous year, the amount of sales in dollars and cents was considerably less owing to the low prices for farm products. Total sales of elevator and lumber yard reached $130,472.02 for the year, Manager Frank Reid told the stockholders in making his annual report. Gross profits were $16,-378.98 and expenses totalled $14,showed a loss of a few hundred all profits came from the company's elevator business.

Ballots Shortened

Primary election ballots must be shortened by leaving off entirely offices for which there is no nomination contest, Emerson R. Boyles, deputy attorney general, says. The new election law provides that when on any party ticket there is no opposition to a candidate who has filed the necessary petitions and is properly qualified he shall be certified as the party's candidate for that office without further formality. The law states: "As to such office there shall be no primary, and such office shall be omitted from the primary election ballot." Boyles declared the intent of the law is clear and its provisions mandatory. It applies to all candidacies. When no contest exists for party nominations, the single qualified candidate must be certified and the office must be left off the ballots, he said. For offices calling for more than one nomination the same rule applies if there are the exact number of candidates as

DYNAMITE! IN EIGHT PLACES.

Clinton County Republican-News. If people were warned that there were eight charges of dynamite in as many spots scattered about their home or about their farm, they would be mighty careful and considerably apprehensive. At least they would determine where the stuff was and how great the danger. That would be just commonsense and self-preservation.

This autumn, at the general election in November, the people of Michigan are going to be handed a ballot with seven amendments to a proposition to repeal the oleomargarine law. Some are more important than others. All of them need careful handling. Before a person votes, it is important that he knows what he is voting for or against. This has been demonstrated so many times in both state and federal constitutions that it needs little emphasis. Briefly, here is a list of the amendments which will be presented to the voters and an explanatory word.

Amendment No. 1-Authorizes the Michigan legislature to establish a "liquor control commission" to handle liquor traffic in this state machinery for liquor control "when tending summer school there. and if" the Eighteenth Amendment is repealed, but the amendment Mrs. Price (Agnes Ferguson) and at Lexington on Friday. does not say so. Some good lawyers believe it is unconstitutional in its present form.

Amendment No. 2-Limits the amount of tax that can be assessed against property to $15 for each assessed $1,000; PROVIDING, the people can by a two-thirds vote every five years increase this there. amount; also, providing that it does not apply to obligations (bond issues or debts) already existing.

Amendment No. 3—Provides that the Michigan State Senate shall remain as it is and the House of Representatives shall be chosen according to population. This would give the balance of power to the cities. Clinton county would be joined with some other adja- Gemarice, of Rochester spent district—likely Ionia, Shiawassee DeLong. or Gratiot.

Besides the fact that it brought no Rightist majority, the election's next biggest surprise was the strength developed by the Communists, who will have 89 instead of their former 77 seats.

That the "middle of the road" course no longer appeals to the German voter was believed indicated by the crushing of the moderate parties of the right, even including Hugenberg's Nationalists.

MGR. IGNATZ SEIPEL, the great priest-politician who formerly was helping direct the destinies of his country, died at his home near Vienna of diabetes and complications of the lung due to the presence of a bullet fired at him by an assassin eight years age. Strangely enough his death saved the government of his party, the Christian Socialists, from defeat in the parliament and consequent downfall.

The government needed Seipel's vote in parliament to defeat a no confidence resolution introduced by the Pan-Germans and backed by the Socialists. Under Austrian law, deputies cannot vote by proxy. pel's severe illness prevented him from attending parliament. Less ton; that the bonus seekers would than an hour after Seipel's death, Unancellor Dolliuss appointed a lo cal banker, John Wancura, to take his seat. Wancura hurried to parliament, arriving just in time to vote for the government. That vote saved the cabinet's life, the count being deadlocked 81 to 81.

PARAGUAY and Bolivia are in with an address over the radio in fare for possession of the disputed Gran Chaco region, where already their frontier forces have been fighting and the Bolivians have attacked several Paraguayan forts. Mobilization was ordered in Paraguay, and was expected any day in Bolivia. In both countries there were great demonstrations of patriotism and the war fever was high.

The United States appealed to the two nations to cease warlike activities and submit their dispute to arbitration, being joined in this effort by Mexico, Colombia, Cuba and Uruguay. Argentine, Brazil, Chile and other Latin American countries added their pleas for a peaceful settlement, and collective cables were sent to Paraguay and Bolivia informing them they were violating the arbitration treaty adopted at the Pan-American conference in Bolivia already had notified the neutrals she would settle the Gran Chaco dispute "even by the force of arms." They went softly across the hall. In the chair where they had left him sat Professor Wentzel, his head sunk on his chest, snoring.

"Leave him there—he's been work ing standing up, not to yield to it," Schaffner whispered. "I'd better explain to you, anyhow."

They sat down in a dim room full of electrical appliances, great disks in glass frames, a chain with a metal headpiece, long, pronglike wands on standards.

"I've been with the doctor seven Schaffner began, "ever since he came over here. He told me all about it, so that if anything ever happened to him. I could go on with it, you see. He knew her first in Paris, twelve years ago. Her hair was a dark auburn then, and beginning to go gray. She wasn't even pretty, then, he said, except that she had regular features and strange greenish eyes. But no color, and not attractive at all. He was only an operator and artificial hair worker in a little shop in Paris. and he happened to be the one to wait on her when she came in to consult about her hair-she couldn't afford to let it go gray, you know. She said they all did in her family. She was a kind of pupil teacher in

"Well, he hit on something, one day, and he wanted to try it on somebody, so he offered this Miss Lee to make a regular red blond of her if she'd take the risk. She agreed, and he brought it up a few shades, to begin, and after that they got it where he wanted it-pretty imagine.'

Motherwell nodded.

"It's been used, of course, enormously since. But it never has had.

in all these years, the wonderful results it had on her. He can't understand it. Nobody can. It's something in her constitution. She isn't like other people. She seemed to take it right into her system, he says, and it affected, gradually, the whole pigmentation. He says her eyebrows and lashes changed. I know her complexion has. He injected it, finally, hypodermically." He nodded for a moment, but went on with an effort.

"You see, Mr. Wells, ordinary dye takes evenly, without lights and shades. There's a uniformity—it can't be helped. But in her case this wasn't so. Each hair varies in its own length. He's never understood it. He thinks there's a great deal of free sulphur-"

He yawned and his eyelids drooped. Sulphur?" Motherwell prompted.

"Oh! You wouldn't understand. It doesn't matter, that part. The point is, she turned into a tremendous beauty.'

Yawns stopped him. "So then White met her, and she finished him at first sight. He came to the school to see some friend's child, I believe. She came straight to the professor and offered him five thousand a year to work in New York and take care of her. Of course he accepted. What does he care where he works? He took me on as assistant, and he's made a great name for himself among the chemists and inventors, the professor has."

He paused, and turning to a little electrical grill, lifted a coffee pot from it and poured himself a cup, handing another to his guest. "It seems to keep me going," he "Now-where was I? Oh, yes.

Something's been happening to her. We think now it was taking the cure at White Sulphur, maybe. She wanted to lose some weight. Anyway, there's no doubt that the hair lost luster and her skin got a queer color. He changed her diet and strengthened the formula a little (he's always had a special one for her—the trade never had it) and she looked a little better, but the hair got streaked and yellow looking. He could cover that up, of course, but naturally she was get-

"Last Wednesday there was a grayish tinge to it, she thought, more a sort of shadow than a color, she expressed it, and she lost her nerve and dashed over to our place and read him the riot act. Well, I wasn't there, but I feel assured that she got him pretty rattled. Anyway. he told her he would give it a light bleach, if she wished, and refresh the whole thing all over again. He explained that it couldn't be absolutely guaranteed, but that he was reasonably sure of it. She was very anxious to try it, and he did it in the little inside laboratory we have there. It's a nervous job, you know -a seventeen volume bleach, and the tint and the rinse just so many minutes apart. You can't take any chances."

He took another cup of coffee. "The water was pulled off," he nearly as when you saw it last, I where in the building they began to use it, you see, and there's never enough pressure in those old places. The whole thing hung fire. He was nearly crazy—the color setting every second. It was almost auburn, he says, and he couldn't rinse fast enough, and he didn't dare show it to her. So he did something he's often and often done on test hairartificial—and sprayed on a light bleach of his own that nobody has. Do you know anything about permanganates?"

> "Nothing," said Motherwell. "I suppose not. It doesn't matter. He sprayed it and put her under the rinse-and it turned light emerald green in eight seconds! God knows how. She fainted and he had a hard time with her. Must have. He was all alone. Of course he had to get her out here-and there is where he lost his head. If only I had been there -surely, as I told him, there were ways . .

> she could have called her husband by telephone, and said somethinganything! He ought to have realized-but he was nearly crazy. He came right out with the truth, you see, and blurted out that it was unlikely he could do anything. That was fatal. But he said it was creepig down her forehead-as if her blood, he said, was green-my

"I was out here, and he telephoned and sent her out alone. It seems risky, but she said she would do better alone, and he believed she was right. She had a thick brown veil she always wore to come here, and she tied it around her head and ran out. She wrote a note before, and he got it over there. He tried to make her explain something, but she got screaming and he couldn't do very much. I believe he was as scared as she. And of course, there was a hopeyou never know."

He drank again, thirstily.

"I tell you, that d-d color will not change!" he cried, his voice on edge. "There's nothing to do." "But, heavens and earth," Motherwell burst in, "aren't there such things as wigs? You could-"

"Excuse me, but I can't argue with you," Schaffner began irritably. "I must ask you to believe that every possibility, every shade of pos-

He stopped, swallowed hard, and controlled himself.

"We had a dozen wigs and transformations out here in six hours," he said. "Think a moment-such hair against her skin! It was ghastly. She looked sixty. Her skin is like vellum; grain, firmness, contour-all gone! She has lost ten pounds. The pigmentation has completely altered. . . There are

"Why, certainly, Doctor Schaffner. Anybody would agree with you," Motherwell assured him. "But why give everything up? Can't all this wear off, grow off? She is young, she has superb health, nature is on her side. Why a white wig?"

"She is forty-six years old," said Schaffner quietly. "It is no use. The game is played.' "A-a-ah!" Motherwell whistled slowly. "The deuce, you say!" He sipped his coffee. "That-that makes a difference, doesn't it?" he said. "It makes such a difference, Mr. Wells," Schaeffner returned slowly, marking each word on the palm of his left hand with the fingers of well over his shoulder, and the his right, "that Mr. Crandall White strange, tired procession crept down will never lay eyes on his wife the hall and disappeared. again, if you wish my opinion!"

"Oh, come now, Schaffner, you mustn't talk like that!" Schaffner shrugged his square

"I only say what I think," he said. "In her place, with things as they are, I believe I should do the same!"

Motherwell regarded him thought-

"You mean-" "I mean that she looks at all this from a businesslike point of view, Mr. Wells. She knows her husband very well, of course. You can't deny that! Well, she knows what he married her for. That's

her. Lots of people don't, you know!"

"As she put it to him: would Mr. White, that could have married anybody, practically, in Europe or America, have picked out a woman of thirty-nine, with gray hair? That was what she was, you know. It's hard to know how any man would take such a blow-but a man like that! She couldn't face it. How many women could?" "I don't know," said Motherwell, "I don't know, Schaffner, honestly!" "Exactly. You don't know."

The doctor's voice grew thick and drowsy.

"Well, she does know. And she'd rather he remembered her. She's all through. She says we can't do anything, and she's right, we can't. It teacher in a school near Caro. grows so deep over the foreheadyou take her away—nothing can affect her skin, now-you can't live on coffee-" He was drunk with fatigue.

As Motherwell studied his worn face in silence, half scornful, half pitiful of his closed eyes, a clumping step rose on the wooden stairs. Schaffner, asleep now, heard nothing, but Motherwell listened through the open door and looked with interest at the hairy, foreign man who had peered out at them from the ground floor. He stood over in the doorway, one arm in a black oilcloth wristlet, extended.

"Enfin!" he cried in a rough excited growl. "Regardez-moi ca! I and lightened as if by magic. "White!" he cried incredulously. 'Good G-d he's got white! Do you see that? Do you see it?"

snatched the tress and ran down the hall to where the professor sprawled in his uncomfortable chair, Real Estate and Fire and Autosunk in sleep.

"Wentzel! Wake up! See what we've got!" he called in his ear. "Look at this! He's got white!" In a flash of recollection, while the drowsy man struggled in his chair, Motherwell saw himself at a restaurant table and heard that voice: "Man, if we could get White, it would be worth a million to us!" He chewed his lip.

The German stared at the tress, blinking. A slow smile spread over his face. "Ah!" he said slowly. "Dot's goot! Ferry goot, indeedt! He is goot boy, 'Dolph! Come now, und go down. Bring her down."

AMENDMENT TO THE MICHIGAN CONSTITUTION TO ESTABLISH A LIQUOR CONTROL COMMISSION

(to be voted on at General Election in November)

Section 11-The legislature may by law establish a liquor control commission, who, subject to statutory limitations, shall exercise complete control of the alcoholic beverage traffic within this state, including the retail sales thereof; and the legislature may also provide for an excise tax on such sales; Providing, however, that neither the legislature nor such commission may authorize the manufacture or sale of alcoholic beverages in any county in which the electors thereof, by a majority vote, shall prohibit the same.

The language of the above amendment is easily understood. It provides for a commission to handle the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages in Michigan. It is a proposed amendmend to the constitution of this state. In other words it sets up the machinery to handle the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages.

It does not take into consideration, in itself, a very significant fact, viz., that the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States has not been repealed. It provides for something that does not exist-unless the above mentioned liquor commission takes over supervision of the bootleggers and speak-easies.

The legality of the amendment is now being attacked by an organization of commercial salesmen known as "Gideons." Likely there will be a court ruling on this amendment before the time to put it on the ballot. It would seem that it should have provided "when and if" the 18th Amendment is repealed. Otherwise there can be no legalized liquor traffic-no manufacture and no sale.

It is believed that it was the intention of its sponsors to determine by vote in November the real sentiment regarding the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment; also to set up a plan for handling liquor in Michigan, roughly after the Ontario plan, when and if the Eighteenth Amendment is repealed.

If this amendment stays on the ballot, a "YES" vote will indicate that the voter favors the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment and the adoption of the so-called Ontario plan.

A "NO" vote will mean that the voter does not approve of the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, or does not favor the Ontario plan, or both.
