ANNOUNCE MARRIAGE OF MISS NEWBERRY

Miss Ellen Newberry of Union, Michigan, announced the marriage of her sister, Catherine Newberry, to Arthur Yohn, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Yohn of Union, Michigan, at a party given Friday night at their home.

Early in the evening each guest received a scrambled word telegram revealing the announcement. The wedding date was later found hidden in an egg, during an egg hunt. Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Yohn were married October 7, 1932, at Stanton, Michigan.

The Newberry family formerly resided in Cass City.

WALLACE OUTLINES FARM RELIEF PLAN

Limited Production and Process Tax Key to Fair Exchange.

By Frank Parker Stockbridge. Wasington, May 11-The Senate passed the Farm Relief bill on Friday. I telephoned at once to the Department of Agriculture, to see if I could get Secretary Wallace to tell me just how the new law will be administered and how it will affect the average farmer. "I'm sorry, but I won't have a minute of time until Sunday morning," said the Secretary. "Can you come in then?" "At your house?"

"No, I'll be at the office." They are working long hours in Washington, at least the members of the President's Cabinet are. Working fast, too. Sunday morning carpenters were already at work in the Agriculture Administration building, converting a long, wide corridor into a series of offices for the use of the men and women, still unappointed, who will administer the Farm Aid law! NO HIGH SCHOOL SESSIONS HELD THIS AFTERNOON

Twenty-five rural schools have entered pupils to take the seventh and eighth grade reviews at Cass City this (Friday) afternoon to prepare them for the county examinations. On Tuesday, there were 97 seventh graders and 80 eighth grade pupils enrolled and it is thought that late enrollments will add to these numbers. There will be no high school sessions this afternoon, but the grades will meet as usual.

The county seventh and eighth grade examinations will be held on Thursday and Friday, May 17 and 18. Many rural students in this territory will send pupils to Cass City for these examinations. All classes in the local grade and high schools will meet at the usual hours on these examination days.

Plan to Rehabilitate Industry Under Government Control-President Asks Congress to Pass Railway Co-ordinator Measure—Farmers Vote to Strike.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

been held responsible for many of industry's woes in recent times, would be relaxed and ruinous competition and reck-

the provisions of a new bill that was laid before President Roosevelt for his approval. This measure, entitled the "National Recovery Act," was drawn up by a committee of congressional and industrial leaders headed by Senator Wagner of New York. Some members of the so-called "brain trust" also had a part in its formulation. The bill provides for full government control of industries through a federal board that would closely resemble the war industries board of 1918. As summarized by one Washington correspondent, it proposes to set aside the anti-trust laws, the federal trade commission act, and the Clayton act; empowers the national board to designate any industry as one affected with a public interest; permits price fixing directly and wage regulation indirectly under government supervision, and provides for the self-organization of industry through trade associations.

The major features of this bill have been approved by the National Association of Manufacturers and by President H. I. Harriman and other officers of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. It was said that if Mr. Roosevelt liked it, the measure might be offered to congress as a substitute for Secretary of Labor Perkins' bill establishing the 30-hour week and bureaucratic control over production and wage scales of industry. Or it might be combined with the Perkins bill, which was meeting with such decided opposition in the house of representatives that the administration leaders seemed ready to abandon hope of its passage during this session.

This industry bill sets up a board consisting of seven members headed by the secretaries of commerce and labor. The others are to be snokesman for commerce, finance, labor, agriculture, and the public.

The plan sanctions the formation of industrial and trade associations which shall work with the national board to correlate production with demand, establish prices of commodities at fair levels, and stabilize markets. Each trade association will have on its governing board a representative of the supreme body of seven.

Loans but not subsidies are provided for private industry; higher price levels would be sanctioned; and cut-throat competition and unregulated price cutting would be eliminated. Instead of fixing wages and hours of labor, the national board will permit them to be provided by collective action of each industry. Since the veto power on any wage and hour arrangement will rest with the board, it is not proposed that any industry will be permitted to get out of line in these respects.

Secretary Perkins was understood to be opposed to this proposed

WHILE the National Recovery act was still under consideration in the White House, the President in a brief message to congress asked immediate passage of a bill which cult situation. While he was talkhe hopes will rescue the railroads from their desperate situation. It with Mr. Roosevelt, the British provides for a federal dictatorship under a "co-ordinator of transportation" whose function it would be to eliminate duplication of services and wasteful methods of operation and to bring about financial reorganizations. This authority is asked for one year, though provision is made for extension of the period by the President. The President also recommended placing railway holding companies under the jurisdiction of the interstate commerce commission, repeal of the recapture clause of the transportation act whereby half of excess earnings go to the government, liberalizing the basis of rate making and modifying valuation requirements. During the period of emergency control the railroads would be immune from prosecution for violation of the anti-trust laws.

Plans were laid to hurry the measure through congress, and there seems to be little opposition among either Republicans or Democrats.

This action was taken by some states. Observers said they represented only about 1 per cent of the farmer strength in their respective states and predicted the strike would be ineffective.

The convention adopted resolutions of sympathy with the farmers of two counties in Iowa which are under martial law because of the disgraceful mobbing of Judge C. C. Bradley at Le Mars. Putting this on the agenda was left up to Prime Minister MacDonald, who returned home to confront a diffiing international trade agreements board of trade under President Walter Runciman was promoting bilateral trade understandings with many governments.

MR. ROOSEVELT had a round of conversations with Latin-American diplomats, starting with Thomas Le Breton of Argentina who was accompanied to the White House by Ambassador Espil. Doctor Le Breton and his corps of experts also met with Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and other government officials to discuss monetary and trade problems and especially methods of controlling world surpluses of wheat.

Guido Jung, Italy's finance minister, arrived in Washington and at once began talks with President Roosevelt and his advisers concerning the purely economic and monetary phases of the current questions; and Augusto Rosso, Italian ambassador, handled for his government the discussion of disarmament and political matters.

Lost Spud Find May Bring Growers Gold

Development of the Peachblow Colorado's Hope.

By C. H. Metzger, Associate Horticul-turist, Colorado Agricultural College. Colorado potato growers may increase their incomes at least $100,and development of an almost extinct strain of potatoes known as dark red Peachblow or Red Mc-Clure. The lost strain that is believed to have originated 30 years ago was located on the McClure farm at Carbondale, from which it took its name. It was a sport or seedling

Although this potato was produced in 1908 at a farm near Carbondale, all trace of it disappeared until 1927 when the college in connection with its potato improvement program, collected 250 varieties of this collection was the dark red Peachblow. It had been obtained from a Teller county rancher.

Later the same strain of potatoes, which commands a premium of 10 to 15 cents a 100 pounds on the market because of its attractive color, was found on a farm in El Paso county and a ranch in Teller county.

ur Covernment —How It Operates

By William Bruckart TREATY NEGOTIATIONS

THE United States and Canada have just lately concluded a treaty that represents an agreement James McIntyre of Detroit, who between our government and that of our neighbor on the north where by a deep waterway will be constructed connecting the Great Lakes and the Atlantic ocean. It is a gigantic engineering project that is contemplated: it has vast potentialities for our people and their commerce, and it will stand through the years as a monument to the genius of two peoples who desire to see opportunities utilized for the good

But behind the formal signing of that treaty which took place in the Capital city lies many ramifications ding, dishes and several pieces of and maneuvers. They are called "negotiations" at the end, and they represent as well as any in history the processes through which nations must go in reaching agreehad suffered a broken back, John | ment on the terms of a contract, for Reagh took a trip half way down a treaty, after all, is only a conthe lane on his Elkland township tract. Treaty negotiations, however, farm in a wheel chair. This af- are not unlike swapping of horses forded him the most extensive view in the old days. It is a matter of of his acres since the accident. give and take, and each fellow looks

It seldom takes as much time to accomplish an understanding respecting treaty terms as has elapsed since the deep waterway proposal first was advanced more than fifty years ago. Commercial interests saw the need of it long before our government could be interested in the project. The same was true among the Canadians, except that they did not regard development of the waterway as important until recent years because their commerce began expanding later than ours.

Yet through all of those years, two peoples were slowly but surely moving to the point where their governments could agree as to what was necessary in a treaty under which the channel could be constructed. There had to be a treaty, of course, because the rights of each nation were involved and each nation had to give up some of those rights when the contract was made.

Active movements by our govern ment, looking to the treaty and the waterway project to be built under its terms, were instituted almost ten years ago. At that time, however, some of the statesmen at the head of the Dominion government were not friendly to the idea. There was opposition as well among certain interests in this country. For example, many of the railroads serving the northern half of the United States and drawing traffic from the regions around and west of the Great Lakes are opposed to the waterway for the very obvious reason that they fear it will take away some of their traffic. And so it goes. Opposition and support for the plan may be found everywhere in areas affected by it. From this it is easily deduced that a considerable amount of preiminary acquaint the peoples of the merit of the project. It has now been formally signed because the ruling political group in Canada believe it is practicable and valuable, and the administration of our government has fostered the idea throughout.

But the treaty is not yet operative. It has another stage to pass here and another at Ottawa. While its acceptance by the Dominion government is little more than a formality, ratification of the agreement by the senate of the United States is another matter. The Constitution provides for negotiation of the treaty by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the senate. So it has to take a hurdle of some consequence before it becomes a binding agreement and one that is fully operative.

When the President transmits the St. Lawrence waterway treaty to the senate for its consideration, he will send with it a letter from the secretary of state explaining the benefits hoped to be derived. But the senate will not be content with that. It will turn the treaty over to its committee on foreign relations, and that group will hold hearings to which it will invite spokesmen for the various groups interested in its ratification or rejection.

In addition, it will invite the secretary of state and the American minister to Ottawa and experts who participated in the actual writing of the document to come before it and tell what the treaty does. These men probably will testify in private, however, for it must be remembered 27 that all international negotiations 47 are carried on largely in secrecy. If a majority of the committee favor ratification, they will vote to submit it to the senate with that afternoon sessions. Miss Ione Catton of Lansing, state superintendent of the Children's Division, and Rev. Donald T. Gray of the Michigan Ave. Baptist church of Saginaw, were the principal speakers.

'Religious training does not begin with giving one's heart to God," said Miss Catton. "That is an essential step in right living but not the first. It begins at birth with the kind of care and nurture which only a God-guided parent can give. The child should learn as a baby that the mother has faith After confession of Christian faith, and becoming a of character and service." Mr. Gray exhibited 100 pictures, prints of great artists' paintings, of various sizes and prices suitable for use in the teaching of religion.

The following is a summary of his address: Pictures help us to see, to think, to feel. The conception of God to many is only an oblong blurr; pictures of the right kind help us to get the proper conception of divine and human personalities who enter into sacred literature. The newspaper cartoon is a great aid in understanding current events and propagating poof the seventh district Legion or litical ideas; great pictures likewise preach great sermons more effectively than mere words or speech.

Concluded from first page Mr. McComb stressed the importance of work, health, friendship, patriotism and the church. The following salient points are taken

Health is never appreciated until it is gone. The average school child loses a week in sickness during the a year for all of them in this coun-

Happiness is measured in friends. A friend can praise you without embarrassment and censure you without making you angry.

If there ever was a time to be patriotic, now is the time. One may well be proud to be a citizen orphan at nine years, or a crippled boy may rise to the highest office in the land.

The real thing in life is the spiritual. Scores of country churches have been torn down or discontinued. We must be conscious that we have lost something that has created a wonderful influence. The country church is one of the props under the constitution.

The Comforts of Home

It is a well-known fact that, home for home, the American household has more comforts and conveniences than that of any other nation.

In foreign lands the modernized dwelling is found only in the better sections of the larger cities.

In America, even in remote rural districts, you find the radio, the vacuum cleaner, washing machines, up-to-date heating systems, telephones, and numberless labor-saving appliances.

There is a well-kept look about residence, store or outbuildings with an atmosphere of prosperity and content.

Did you ever stop to realize why this is so; how this condition was brought about?

It is largely due to advertising. And a big share of the credit belongs to newspaper advertising.

Stop and think how many of the foods you eat, the things you wear and other articles entering into your every-day life, you first heard of through newspaper advertisements.

You will then realize what a part they do play, or should pay, in your daily life.

Read the advertisements in the newspapers regularly and thoroughly, if you are not already doing so. They mean more to you than you can tell.

CHAPTER V

HE town of Marland spread The town of marians are fanlike from the foot of the hill on which stand the buildings of the university. Oak street, some three miles from the University, is the chief shopping center of Marland. Archer street carries the traffic load. It runs east and west. At the four corners which mark the intersection of Oak and Archer there are two gas filling stations and two drug stores. The latter, however, open on Oak street, and next to one of them, one door from the corner, facing Archer street and west of Oak, is the snug little gray stone home of the Marland National bank.

The Marland National bears an enviable reputation. It is small but staunch, and on its roster of directors one will find names which carry great weight even in the city of a quarter million which exists twenty miles away. It is spoken of boastfully by natives of Marland, and Randolph Fiske, its president, is a real power in the community. This morning-the morning of May third-Randolph Fiske sat at his desk in the office which was marked "President-Private." He was a tall, well-proportioned man, fifty-eight years of age, whose hair matched the gray of his bank building. He had a fine, broad forehead and iron-gray brows from beneath which a pair of keen eyes peered in a manner which gave an impression of unimpeachable efficiency.

He was gazing attentively at a tiny bit of pasteboard. There was printing on its surface--printing, not embossing. It said simply:

James H. Hanvey Bankers' Protective Ass'n.

Mr. Fiske's eye roved to a yellow telegram which had arrived two days previously from New York. It was from headquarters of the Bankers' Protective association and was very explicit.

"Our best operative arrives Marland morning May Third."

Mr. Fiske heaved a sign of relief as he prepared to shift a very great burden to the shoulders of another man-one professionally equipped to bear such burdens. He looked up at Miss Seward.

"Show Mr. Hanvey in, please." Miss Seward put out a bony hand which trembled in protest.

"Surely, Mr., Fiske-not that man! The-the terrible person who gave me that card."

Fiske frowned. "I don't understand, Miss Seward. This man is a great detective."

"There's a mistake, Mr. Fiske This person couldn't detect anything. I'm very sure of that. Just wait until you see him." She vanished in triumph, and Randolph Fiske stared after her. "What in the world. . . ?" Then he smiled. At least she had prepared him for a somewhat uncouth person. Probably a squat gentleman with a brown derby, squaretoed shoes, a checkered vest and a dime's worth of chewing tobacco. Queer how these detective chaps always dressed so that there was no mistaking their profession. Randolph Fiske saw the door swing open. Then it closed and Mr. Fiske was rendered inarticulate. Jim Hanvey was everything in the world which one is quite sure a detective should not be. His two hundred and sixty pounds of avoirdupois was distributed with heavily inartistic effect; it wabbled when he moved . . . and he seemed to move with vast reluctance. But it was the head which rose above triple chins that filled Randolph Fiske with awe. The face was huge and round and utterly expressionless. Randoph Fiske was quite sure that never before in his easy." life had he seen a human countenance so utterly devoid of intelligence. It was-yes, by George!it was the eyes! Round little eyes which were as vacant and colorless as the orbs of a fish.

The mass of flesh stood in the doorway. Fiske knew he was breathing; he could tell that by the fact that a rather remarkable conneighborhood of Jim Hanvey's prodigious tummy kept moving rhythmically. Randolph Fiske kept his eyes fascinatedly on that particular apparatus. It hung from a hawserlike watch chain and was similar to nothing which the banker MAKE the most of your reading had ever before set eyes upon. It

Then, without warning, the si-

"It's a toothpick, Mr. Fiske." "Huh?" The banker jerked himself together. "Wh-what's a tooth-pick?" "This," Hanvey touched the trinket affectionately and detached it from his chain. "Swellest piece of joolry I've got. A crook friend gave it to me. It's solid gold—eighteen karat. Great invention; feller don't always have to be running around hunting toothpicks when he's got one of these. Look!" He touched a spring and a wicked little blade leaped out at Randolph Fiske. That gentleman gave a perceptible jump.

"It-it's very-very remarkable." he murmured.

Hanvey reattached the toothpick to the chain. The banker was staring and wondering . . . and then the opaque eyes of Jim Hanvey were raised slowly until they met the gaze of the banker. Hanvey spoke.

"I am kind of funny-looking, ain't I, Mr. Fiske?" Mr. Randolph Fiske was completely stripped of the poise upon which he prided himself. He did not answer, but picked up the slightly soiled card which lay on his desk. "You are James H. Hanvey?"

"Uh-huh. In person. Largely, I might sav.' "You're the man the B. P. A. robbery?" "Yes." Mr. Fiske was getting himself under control. He sought refuge in sent down here to investigate the frankness. "I imagine my actions have been exceedingly discourteous, Mr. Hanvey. I apologize and only wish to explain that you somewhat startled me. You see, you are not-not exactly the sort of detective about which I've read."

"I wish I was," breathed Hanvey ecstatically. "Gosh! I love mystery stories. Them fellers sure are slick. I never could figure out how they do their tricks." Another shock for the banker. He blinked.

"I Am Kind of Funny-Looking, Ain't I. Mr. Fiske?

"And you don't work like the detectives in books?"

"Golly, no. I ain't slick, Mr. Fiske. I don't hardly know any dicks who are. Lemme tell you something." Hanvey leaned confidentially across the desk and his sleepy eyes held the attention of the banker. "My kind of work ain't so hard. And why? Suppose I go on a case. I start off wrong. All right, nobody's the wiser, and when I find out I'm on the wrong track-I start again. Same thing always. A detective can make all the mistakes in the world, Mr. Fiske-but if he happens to do one thing right -he lands the man he's after: see?"

"Yes-I see." "But the crook, gosh! the poor feller hasn't got a chance. If he slips just one time, he's caught. He has to do everything right. The detective only has to do one thing right. And there you are."

Fiske had been studying his visitor. He was amazed now to find himself warming to the ungainly person. There was an almost childish simplicity about Hanvey which gave Fiske confidence-although he told hmself that the man was a caricature.

"The B. P. A. wired me," he said slowly, "that you are their best operative."

"Hooey!" grinned Hanvey. "I've just been lucky-that's all. You see, it's this way: Most all the crooks are my friends, and they don't lie to me-so that makes things pretty

The banker gasped. "Crooks are your friends? I never heard of such a thing.'

"I guess not. But can't you see how much easier it makes things?" "You say they don't lie to you?" "Well, the high class crooks don't.

Only the bums." "Good Lord!" Fiske leaned back in his chair and regarded Hanvey traption which appeared in the with wide-eyed wonder. "You are quite the most remarkable man I've

"And the fattest?" For the first time Fiske smiled.

"And the fattest." Hanvey's eyes twinkled for a moment. He fumbled in the breast pocket of his coat and produced two thin and vicious-looking projectiles. He extended these toward his companion. "Have a cigar?"

Fiske thanked him and accepted one. Hanvey bit the end from the other, held a match to it and inhaled with vast relish. He blew a cloud of smoke across the room and Fiske turned startled eyes in his direction. "They are kind of strong," said the detective genially. "Some folks like 'em.' Fiske struggled heroically against I turned around and saw the man the asphyxiating effect of the violent fumes. Then they got the better of him. "May I open another window?" he inquired weakly.

"Sure. That'll be fine." Hanvey eyed the second cigar which lay unlighted on the desk. "Ain't you going to smoke yours?"

"I'll try one of my own, if you don't mind."

As the banker moved toward the window, Jim sighed relievedly. He rescued the unused cigar and tucked real affection. Jim's cigars were a source of perpetual worry: he was always afraid that some day some one would smoke one of them.

Fiske seated himself again. "You'd tended locking Miss Seward and like to hear about the robbery?" he myself in. asked.

"Yeah-if you want."

"Isn't that what you came tor?" "Reckon so." "Then why don't you ask me some questions?" "Gosh! Mr. Fiske-how do I know what to ask? I'm waiting for you to tell me, and you're waiting until you're sure I didn't escape from some zoo." Randolph Fiske threw back his head and laughed. "You win, Hanvey. Now-shoot!"

Jim's face did not change. "When?" "Day before yesterday-May first at ten minutes after two o'clock." "How much?" "The robber got away with approximately one hundred thousand dollars in currency." Hanvey blinked. "Lot of cash for a little bank like this."

"Plenty. We were making up the pay roll for the Marland mills. They pay on the third."

"Stick-up?" queried the detective. "Yes."

"Tell me all about it." Fiske rose and invited Hanvey to follow him. They passed from his private office into the bank proper. Under the amazed eyes of Miss Helen Seward, Fiske conducted Hanvey to the front door and gestured to the broad thoroughfare passing east and west.

"That is Archer street," said Fiske. "The north and south street is Oak. Oak is a shopping street, but Archer is the main traffic artery. Lots of cars going by here all the time. You will notice that this bank is the only commercial establishment on Archer street. Do you follow me?"

"Easy," grunted Jim. "You sure do talk explicit."

Fiske stepped back into the bank. "Our banking business starts at nine in the morning and stops at two. At two o'clock daily-and on Saturday at twelve—we get rid of our last customer. Then we conceal the interior of the bank by pulling the shades-so."

He stepped behind the open door and pulled a shade which rose up from the bottom of the door. The heavy green shade rose along the glass surface until it was higher than a man's head. "There are similar curtains on both windows," he went on. "As soon as we get the last customer out, we pull the curtains up, and then all of the employees except two or three go out for a bite of lunch. They invariably go out the back door. That door, which is behind my office, opens onto a little alley through which you can pass into Oak street. Day before vesterday the bank was free of customers at two o'clock. We drew the curtains and shut the front doors."

"Were they locked" "No. They never are. We have safety vaults in the basement and they are open until five o'clock. There has to be some way for clients to get into the building. We merely shut the doors and draw the satchel. He was holding a revolver curtains to keep our banking clients

Fiske turned away, but Hanvey examined the door. He saw that it was equipped on the inside with a heavy spring lock. He turned and followed the banker.

Back in Fiske's office, the banker resumed his story. Hanvey lolled in a chair, apparently asleep. But occasionally his eyes uncurtained for a moment and he regarded the banker gravely before closing them again.

"May first was a perfect day," said Fiske: "Warm and sunshiny and almost like summer. As I said, we shut the door and drew the curtains at two o'clock sharp, so that the interior of the bank was effectually concealed from anyone on the street. At the same time everybody went out to lunch except Miss Seward and myself. Miss Seward is my secretary. She was the one who brought you in here."

"Oh!" said Hanvey. And then-"Nice young lady." There was no hint of humor in his heavy face, but Fiske chuckled delightedly. "Efficient-and sour," he explained. "But mighty loyal."

"I knew she must be something." "She was behind her desk and I had just gone out to speak with her. At about ten minutes after two o'clock the front door opened. I didn't think anything of it —a box holder, most likely. The man-"

"Remember what he looked like?" curb. "Only vaguely. He was slim and quietly dressed. He didn't look like a crook." "Crooks never do."

vulnerable spot.' "He walked straight up to the cage where I was talking to Miss Seward. First thing I knew about anything being wrong was when Miss Seward uttered a little shriek, harrassment was pointing a gun at us. "The robber was polite, but very positive. He told us to back into the vault which we have on this floor. Then he saw me looking toward the electric buttons which we have all over the place—they are police signals-and he warned me that if I made a move to touch one, he'd kill me. I believed him."

"Wise man," murmured Jim. "He herded us into the safe and followed us. I noticed then for the first time that he carried a little it back in his breast pocket with black satchel. He stuffed it with all the currency we had in the safe -about one hundred thousand dollars-and then started back into the bank. Of course, I knew he in-

> "This happened quickly-but it didn't seem quick to us. Miss Seward was crying, but he had warned her not to scream, and she didn't. The robber moved into the main part of the bank. And then—" He paused and Hanvey prompt-

"Then-what?" "Harmon Burke came back from lunch. He's the cashier and teller. He came in the back way."

"Plenty," said Fiske grimly. 'First thing I knew of Burke's return was when he and the robber started shooting at each other." Hanvey made a chuckling noise with his lips. "This Burke must be a real fightin' niece of furniture.' "He is. Though I never suspected it before." "Is he here?" "Yes. They had him at the hospital until yesterday evening. He was hit in the fleshy part of the leg.

He came back this morning." Fiske touched the buzzer on his desk and Miss Seward answered the summons.

"Ask Mr. Burke if he'd mind stepping in here."

A few seconds later the door opened and a figure entered. Harmon Burke, having seen Hanvey enter the bank, exhibited no surprise at the grotesque appearance of the Gargantuan detective.

But Hanvey blinked several times. So this was the man who leaped into battle, with a bank robber! He inspected the cashier with keen interest.

Harmon Burke was a little bit of man, scarcely more than five feet in height and of a weight which could not have been greater than a hundred pounds. He had roving eyes which seemed rather bright; wrists of amazing thinness and hands which seemed too large for his body. "Harmon," said the bank president, "this is Mr. Hanvey. He's down here for the B. P. A. to look into our little robbery." Burke hobbled forward and extended his hand. The detective regarded him in amazement "You and the robber fought it out?" he questioned. "Yes, sir." "You don't look like a gun-fighter." The little man looked up in surprise. "I'm not."

"Hmph! Tell me what happened, if you please." "Well-" Burke was speaking meticulously. "I went out to lunch immediately after two o'clock. I went out the back way and used the same route back: I suppose Mr. Fiske has explained that we always do that. I returned exactly at twothirty because we were to be very busy that afternoon putting up the pay roll for the Marland mills. "I came in the back door and saw a man putting currency into a in his right hand. I couldn't see Mr. Fiske or Miss Seward. I immediately suspected that something was wrong.' "A rather natural supposition," agreed Hanvey. "And" what hap-pend then?" "He velled something at me."

"What?" "I don't know. I didn't pay any attention to him. I jumped behind the counter and grabbed my revolver. He fired at me but the bullet struck the marble counter. He didn't hit me until I came out into the open again." The wizened cashier spoke as though gun battles were matters of everyday occurrence.

"You came out?" "Oh, yes, sir! I couldn't shoot at him from where I was. I ran around the corner of the counter just as he started for the front door. I fired at him and he shot at me. That was when he hit me. I was very sorry about that because I fell down and that kept me from following." "And after you fell down?"

prompted Jim. "I fired again." "Good Lord! After he had hit

"Not that I can remember." "No suspicion, eh?" "No. sir."

"How?" "I was still in the safe. The front door was open. I saw him jump into the car."

"There was another man wheel?" Hanvey's bulbous head moved slowly. "Same old routine. It's a wonder more of these little banks don't get stuck up." He rose and waddled to the door, which he opened. He stood for several seconds staring into the bank, then he moved down the passageway and inspected the rear door route to Oak street. He returned to Fiske's office, lighted another of ly eyes on the banker. "This ain't exactly going to be easy. Mr. Fiske. Except for the stick-up man gettin' hit, there wouldn't hardly be a chance for us. 'cause their program went off elegant. Now what I want to ask you is this: Leavin' the robbery itself out of the conversation for a minute-has there been anything funny goin' on around here recently? Anything that was unusual-like

he said, "I am sure I recognized strange folks snooping around, or the car in which the robber drove away." "So-o! That sounds awful good. Whose was it?" Fiske toyed with a blotter for a moment. "I hate to say, Hanvey. My suspicions are probably grossly unjust. "We ain't goin' to bother no innocent folks, Mr. Fiske." "I hope not. Especially this one. You see, in all the excitement, I couldn't be sure it was his car."

"Exactly." "Who was it?"

"A young friend of mine who is a student at the college here. Marland university. I could almost swear that it was his car which waited at the curb for the robber." Hanvey spoke softly, and kindly,

CHICKENS POINT TO VITAMIN DISCOVERY

Beri-Beri Cure Believed to Have Led to Idea.

Some chickens in Java contracted beri-beri in 1897 and their cure possibly led to the idea expressed in the new common word, vitamin, which is heard and read on every hand, says H. H. Williams of the New York State College of Agriculture. Beri-beri, he says, is a disease of the nerves which leads Lloyd Warner is numbered to paralysis and heart failure. A Dutch physician, named Eijkman, was medical officer to prisoners in that were fed only the left-over pol-

Doctor Eijkman then added the rice polishings, which is similar to the bran of wheat, to the chickens' diet and they recovered. Then the prisoners were fed the unpolished and from that time the disease beriberi ceased to worry medical officers of the Orient.

From that time the chemists begah to experiment and to theorize on the substances known today as cussed at the meetings. vitamins. The word was first coined twenty years ago by a Polish chemist as a symbol for an unknown substance vital to health and life. Later, the chemists turned to the alphabet as a temporary means to designate each vitamin, since they are of unknown composition. Six different vitamins are now definitely known, although a recent book lists a possible seventeen. No one knows what vitamins are except that they occur in small quantities, that they are easily destroyed by 67 H. S. PUPILS ARE heat and oxidation.

Fight on Tuberculosis

in Illinois Successful The state department of agriculture of Illinois, through its extensive program of testing poultry for tuberculosis, has succeeded in suppressing to a large extent the disease in the counties where this work has been done. But of much greater importance is the fact that the information secured can be used by any flock owner in other North Central states where tuberculosis in poultry is equally prevalent, to rid his flock of this menace without applying the tuberculin test. Out of a total of 2,302 poultry flocks in LaSalle, Livingston, Bureau and McLean counties, Illinois, tuberculin tested during the period September 1, 1931, to December 1, 1932, 1,323 or 57 per cent disclosed one or more reacting tuberculosis birds. This is a lower percentage of flock infection than was found in several other counties in the North Central states. Out of a total of 96,088 old birds tested (over eighteen months of age), 12,571 or 13.08 per cent reacted. Out of a total of 250,802 young | Flora McLeod hirds tested (under eighteen month) of age), 3,080 or 1.23 per cent reacted. This strongly confirms previous data secured which shows that | Wilma Wentworth old birds are more seriously affected with tuberculosis than pullets. The lower percentage of the pullets reacted in the counties where the testing was done at an earlier age.

Run Full Capacity

If opinion of state poultry workers and investigators is a safe guide there should be no hesitation about raising as many chicks as your equipment permits in 1933.

The outlook is favorable for reasonable profits at present and probable prices. As a general proposition, year after year, poultry raising is a profitable business under careful management. When market prices are comparatively low one must practice greater economy in management and be satisfied with smaller profits than in the years of high prices. Those who really make money on poultry are those who stick to it year after year with an eye always on all the factors that contribute to loss and gain.-Nebraska Farmer.

Time to Do Culling

With the laying flock in winter quarters it is a good time to go over the birds carefully to detect any that are out of condition and likely to be diseased. These, if found, should be removed immediately to avoid any general outbreak. Strict ! attention at feeding time, noting the birds that are slow to come off the roosts, and careful handling will usually bring out the birds that should be removed, making room for pullets to be added later in the season.

Select Attractive Feeds

In preparing a laying ration it is well to consider only such feeds as are digestible, wholesome and palatable. Palatability is and important factor in a laying mash. A ration in which the mash is extremely heavy and compact is not so easily digested as is one that is lighter. since egg production is dependent upon feed consumption, it is important that the ration be made as attractive as possible to gain and hold the attention of the birds that should be laying eggs.

Farm Women Plan for Week at College

Practically every home demonstration group will be represented at Farm Women's Week at Michigan State College, July 23-28, Miss Edna V. Smith, state leader of home demonstration agents believes, according to reports which she has received from the various divisions.

Plays, socials, and entertainments have been sponsored by the women during the past several months in order to raise funds to send at least one delegate as representative of each group. number of the women are also planning to attend all or at least part of the meetings to be held during the week.

Four new members of the state advisory committee were elected at Java. He discovered that the hens district meetings during the past week, including Mrs. G. D. Campished rice from the prisoners' table bell, Allegan county; Mrs. Henry Hendrickson, Oceana county; Mrs. Arthur Nelson, Cadillac county; Mrs. Percy Reed, Emmett county. The committee works with Miss Smith in planning and organizing home economics instruction in the rice instead of the well-milled sort, state, and is comprised of one representative from each district where home demonstration work is offered.

Possibilities and needs for canning demonstrations were also dis-
