NEED NEW FARM ACT TO HELP HOG PRICES

More Pork in Sight Now Than When Export Trade Was a Good Outlet.

A change of 10 per cent in the supply of hogs causes a 20 per cent change in the market price and Michigan farmers are now confronted with the problem of disposing of their pork in a year when there are more than 2,500,000 more hogs than usual, according to Charles Brand, Washington, D. C., who now is trying to increase farm incomes through provisions of the new Farm Act.

Mr. Brand points out that the American pork producer can not hope to dispose of a normal export supply of pork. Germany placed a duty of $9.40 per hundredweight on lard last month. This duty was $2.40 a hundredweight more than the price of lard in Chicago. There are only eight foreign customers for American pork now for every 20 that were buying in 1926-29.

The consumption of pork and its products by Americans has increased during these years but the increase in consumption has been obtained by a drastic cut in price. Pork can not be stored for long periods but must be moved on the market and sold at whatever price it will bring.

This driving down of price often results in the farmers receiving a much smaller sum of dollars for the greater number of hogs than they would have obtained for a much smaller number. In addition, the farmer loses the extra feed, the extra labor, and the added capital investment.

The provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act will be invoked in order to obtain a higher price for hogs. The plan used may be that of trade agreements or the increase may be obtained by allotment of production. Proper hearings at which consumers, processors, and producers are represented will be held before any plan is selected.

LARGER SCOUT PROGRAM.

About twenty business men from sixteen counties met in Caro last week Wednesday evening, in the interest of Boy Scout work in these counties. A new plan has been sent out from the national headquarters, not only to take care of the overhead finances, but to enlarge the whole scope of Scout interest.

Up to the present time business men of Bay City have taken care of all overhead for Cass City, and have not asked a cent for that service. It has meant a good deal of attention from their office, and many visits by the executive to our village and also to the boys' camp. It has meant special training and passing of life saving tests, also a lot of material in Scout work.

The national scheme is to get as many men to become honorary members of the organization as possible to the tune of one, two, or three dollars per member, as the man might choose, knowing that every cent is used in the promotion of a larger program for boys. It is hoped that the patronage of interested men will enable another all-time-man to be put on in executive work, spending his whole time in the Thumb. Instead of six troops there might be five times that number.

Mr. and Mrs. Tibbals have another son, Robert, who will be three years old July 1. They reside at 709 North University Ave., Ann Arbor. Veterans of 329th Field Artillery to Hold Annual Meet

The bugle is blowing again, calling the members of the 329th Field Artillery to their second annual reunion, at the Fort Shelby hotel in Detroit, June 17 and 18.

All members of the 329th and their wives are invited to attend. The 329th is one of Michigan's leading military organizations. The outfit saw active service in France. Training was received in Camp Custer.

When the Armistice was signed, the 329th was on the front lines. On Nov. 12, 1918, after an all night's march, this regiment was the first troops to enter and occupy Pont-a-Mousson. Normally a city of 50,000, it was deserted of every human soul. It was between the lines when the Armistice was signed and had been in possession of Germany and the Allies, alternately. It is a historic city, divided by the Moselle river. This regiment had first choice of the best homes in the city in which to make its headquarters.

Ministers of Two Counties Met Here

The Tuscola County Ministerial Association had as their guests on Monday the ministers of the Huron county association. The meeting was held in the Cass City Baptist church. A potluck dinner, in charge of the ladies of the church, was served at noon.

Cass City High School Is Accredited by North Central Association

L. D. Randall, superintendent of the Cass City high school, has just been notified that this school has been accredited by the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools for the period ending April 19, 1934. In explanation of the term accrediting the local school authorities have been advised that it is the established policy of the association to prepare each year a new list of approved secondary schools accorded this honor and that no school is accredited by the North Central Association for a period longer than one year.

Before any school can be considered for accrediting by the North Central Association it must be on the highest list of schools approved and accredited by the school authorities of this state. In addition it must meet the high standards which the association maintains with respect to the school building and its equipment, the school library, laboratories and instructional equipment and apparatus, school records, the requirements for graduation, instruction and spirit, salaries of teachers, the training and preparation of teachers, the teaching load, pupil load, and the school's program with reference to physical education and to its athletic

STATE'S NEW FISCAL YEAR NEAR AT HAND

Michigan Finances in a Muddle That Threatens Calamity.

By Elton R. Eaton. Lansing, Mich.—In just a little over two brief weeks the state of Michigan will start on a new fiscal year. It will begin new accounts, settle old ones—do all the things that the average store keeper and other business men do at the first of the year.

But unlike the store keeper and the butcher who knows about how much he may expect to take in during the coming year under his average run of business and how much he is going to spend for his rent and clerks and other expenses, Michigan officialdom hasn't the slightest idea of how much it is going to take in next year, where the money is coming from or how it is going to get the money. Not only does the state have no knowledge of how much money it is going to collect or from what sources it is supposed to get the cash, it doesn't even know how much it is going to spend.

The legislature has been in session for nearly six months, one of the longest, if not the longest legislative session in the history of the state. It will probably be some two weeks longer before it will adjourn.

A vast majority of the members of the house and senate have been anxious to do something for the good of Michigan. They have been anxious not only to cut expenses but to save the institutions of the state and at the same time reduce their operation costs to a point where they can be borne by the taxpayers.

But like a great, powerful ship without a captain or rudder, the legislature has foundered about almost helpless in the plight it confronted. Buffeted from shore to shore with every change of the wind, it has been kept afloat only by the fact that it couldn't sink because of its tremendous strength.

The state is supposed to have a budget director to provide the legislature with the precise information.

EARLE MEMORIAL MEETING HERE

Will Be Held on August 31, Sec. Rathburg Announces.

Unless there be conflicting dates, the annual meeting of the Earle Memorial Super-Highway Association will hold its 1933 session at Cass City, Thursday, August 31, so announces Frank Rathburg, Sec. Rathburg, secretary of the association.

Largely through the efforts of the members, the paving of this important trunk line, extending from Detroit north through the center of the Thumb district to Port Austin, has been accomplished as far as Marlette. State highway authorities had promised at previous meetings that the paving of the whole of M-53 would be an accomplished fact by 1934, but what the new Democratic administration will do with the project is still conjectural.

It is anticipated that Murray D. VanWagoner, who assumes the office of state highway commissioner, July 1st, will be the guest of honor at the meeting.

Perfect Score in Beef Judging

The Cass City Livestock Club was represented by a judging team at the Michigan State College several weeks ago, and Willis Campbell, the club advisor, has just been informed that the local boys' group stood forth in a competition that involved 64 teams in stock judging.

Lynn Spencer of Cass City was the only contestant in the state who made a perfect score in judging beef cattle. He had 24 chances to err in placing the various scorings on four animals and he steered clear of these to get a 100 per cent mark.

Ralph Rawson stood third high man in the group of 50 young men who participated in the livestock judging. Ralph was the first in the preliminaries of a vocational speaking contest at East Lansing on May 5. Twenty-five contestants represented as many high schools in Michigan. Young Rawson will compete in the semi-finals at Waterloo, Iowa, this fall and the winners there will go to the Royal Show at Kansas City where the national champion will be chosen.

Robert A. Hess, Max Lawrence, I. O. Ogden, Frank Sella, Robt. Emery, John Washburn and Neil VanBuren were selected under the supervision of Godfrey Schultz, welfare director of Tuscola county, for emergency conservation work.

These seven men were chosen to take the places of seven others from Tuscola county who were disqualified because of physical defects discovered when they took their second examination which was held after they reached Camp Custer. The principal shortcoming of the seven was poor teeth. They had successfully passed the first examination held at Caro which was not as rigid as that at the camp. The seven who were disqualified are Marvin Greenwood, Unionville; J. N. Crittendon, Caro; Richard Wright, Deford; Carl B. Black, Fairgrove; Lee A. Clark, Mayville; Carl W. Smith, Kingston; Walter L. American Delegation on Way to London Economic Conference—Brookhart Becomes "Agricultural Ambassador" to Russia—Morgan Inquiry Proceeds.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

SIX delegates and nineteen experts are on their way to London to represent the United States in the international economic conference from which so much is expected in the way of finding a path out of the world depression.

Secretary of State Cordell Hull heads the delegation and his associates as announced by the White House are: James M. Cox, vice chairman, former governor and Democratic Presidential candidate in 1920; Senator Key Pittman of Nevada, Democrat; Senator James Couzens of Michigan, Republican; Representative Samuel D. McReynolds of Tennessee, Democrat, and Ralph W. Morrison of Texas, retired banker. Chief of the experts are William C. Bullitt, executive officer; James P. Warburg, financial adviser; Fred K. Neilson, legal adviser, and Herbert Feis, chief technical adviser, under whom will serve several members of the "brain trust."

Of all the delegates the one consistent conservative is Congressman McReynolds. He is chairman of the house committee on foreign relations and his influence is expected to be potent in the deliberations of the delegation. Senator Couzens, the one Republican member, has frequently lined up with the more radical Republicans and Democrats in congress.

The administration, according to Assistant Secretary of State Raymond Moley, has considerably modified its expectations of what the conference will accomplish, and now realizes that the prospects are definitely limited and do not include a lowering of tariffs or an immediate permanent stabilization of currencies. Secretary Hull is said to be the only one of the administration leaders who still advocates the urgent necessity of a drastic international agreement to lower tariffs and trade barriers.

Mr. Moley included only the following among the solutions which probably would be obtained at the conference:

An agreement on monetary policy through action of certain banks supplemented by an agreement among governments to synchronize policies of internal public expenditure.

An agreement on progressive removal of restrictions on exchange. The international wheat conference moved from Geneva to London and there the representatives of the United States, Argentina, Australia and Canada continued their discussions. If they agree upon any plan for curtailing wheat acreage it will be submitted to the conference for approval.

GREAT BRITAIN, France, Italy and the other nations that owe war debts to the United States failed in their efforts to have the debts included in the agenda for the economic conference, but their delegates enter the conference with the cancellation or drastic reduction of the debts their chief aim. The Roosevelt administration insists that the war debts, however important they may be, were not a major cause of the depression and are not a major remedy. Consequently the parleys in London are almost certain to develop into a great battle of diplomacy.

President Roosevelt has flatly denied that he intends to negotiate new settlements of the war debts without recourse to congress. This was made necessary by dispatches from Washington published in London, saying Mr. Roosevelt had offered to accept from Britain $10,000,000 as part payment of the $75,900,000 due June 15. It seemed fairly certain that the British government would make this payment in full. This will be easier than before because of the devaluation of the dollar. Britain can either pay in paper dollars, which cost about 2 per cent less to buy than gold dollars, or in American securities, which can be bought with paper dollars at a discount and turned in at par.

CHAMPIONS of the gold standard in both the house and the senate had little chance as the administration forces pushed through the Fletcher-Stegall resolution for the abrogation of the gold clause in all governmental and private contracts, both present and future. The measure, asked by the President to legalize action already taken, was first passed by the house by a vote of 283 to 57. Twenty-eight Republicans and all five of the Farmer-Laborites joined with the Democrats in favor of the resolution. Representative Luce of Massachusetts, who led the small minority, denounced the measure as a breach of faith on the part of the government; but Chairman Stegall of the banking committee said it was essential for the recovery of national prosperity.

INVESTIGATION of the banking house of J. P. Morgan & Co., was resumed by the senate banking committee, and a new list of important persons who had received bargains in stocks was produced. Ferdinand Pecora, the committee's counsel, was persistent in his probing, but was compelled to tell the senators, in executive session, what evidence he proposed to introduce and what he expected to prove by it, and to convince them of the propriety of his purpose. Senator Glass was still determined that Pecora should not bring out matters outside the committee's jurisdiction or irrelevant to the inquiry. Mr. Glass said he had received a number of anonymous threats by mail and what he termed "blackguard telegrams" because of his stand.

Though W. H. Woodin's name was on one of the Morgan lists of "preferred" customers before he became secretary of the treasury and hence demands for his resignation were made by various men in public life, Mr. Woodin declared he had not resigned. His statement left no doubt that he would be willing to quit his office if his presence there in any way hindered the return of prosperity, but it also was interpreted to mean that Mr. Roosevelt wished him to hold on, at least for the present. More serious, perhaps, is the case of Norman H. Davis, the very active "ambassador at large" in Europe, who also was on a Morgan list. Representative George H. Tinkham of Massachusetts has demanded a congressional investigation of the financial dealings Mr. Davis may have had with international banking and business interests.

Asserting that Mr. Davis has spoken at Geneva in "repudiation of the traditional American foreign policy," Mr. Tinkham said that a congressional committee should also investigate Mr. Davis' connection with "disloyal and seditious American organizations and foundations in the United States."

SMITH WILDMAN BROOKHART, former senator from Iowa, has a new job. Secretary of Agriculture Wallace has appointed him "agricultural ambassador" to Soviet Russia, and has instructed him to explore the opportunities for disposing of American surpluses of cotton and live stock in that country. In effect, this means the opening of trade negotiations with a government that is not recognized by Washington, but Brookhart says his work has no connection with the question of diplomatic relations, though he hopes recognition will result from his efforts to effect a thriving trade between the two countries.

The Iowan has been given the title of "special adviser to the agricultural administration" and serves under Administrator George N. Peek.

"I've done a lot of work already," he said. "I have gone into the matter with people here, including the Soviet representative, Boris Skvirsky. He's a pretty fine fellow and I've had several talks with him."

Mr. Skvirsky is not a trade representative of the Soviet, nor has he connection with the Amtorg corporation, organized by the Soviets to transact business in America.

WHEN President Roosevelt the other day selected Arthur E. Morgan, president of Antioch college at Yellow Springs, Ohio, as director of the vast Tennessee valley conservation project, there were many derogatory remarks about the appointing of just another professor for a big job. But the skeptical ones did not know about Morgan. Since 1902, when he was just out of high school, he has been active in engineering work and has planned and supervised construction of about seventy-five water control projects. These include the important reclamation work in St. Francis valley in Arkansas and the Miami conservation project at Dayton, Ohio. He was chief engineer

He is entirely familiar with conditions in the Tennessee valley.

GERMANY has refused to accept an unfavorable report of the League of Nations on her treatment of the Jews and virtually told the league that the affair is none of its business. The league council, however, referred jurisdictional aspects of the issue to a committee of jurists with the understanding that the matter will have a complete airing.

MILITARY representatives of Japan and China signed a formal armistice in the warfare in north China at Tangku, where the negotiations took place under the guns of Japanese naval craft. The truce provided for demilitarization of the area bounded by the great wall on the north, the Peiping - Mukden railway on the east and the Peiping-Suiyuan railway on the west; for dissolution of the Chinese volunteer corps in this area and for resumption of rail traffic between Peiping and Shanghai.

Just before the signing of the truce the banner of revolt against the Chinese Nationalist government was raised by Gen. Feng Yu-hsiang, usually alluded to as the "Christian general." Feng denounced Gen. Chiang Kai-shek, the dictator, as a traitor and announced himself as commander-in-chief of the "people's anti-Japanese army." He had been recruiting a large force at Kalgan and it is believed he was acting in close co-operation with the army of Canton, which was reported to be moving to the northward. In Tientsin it was thought that Feng must have been receiving large supplies of arms and ammunition from the Russians of Mongolia by the old caravan route from Urga.

The Nationalist government issued a declaration that the Tangku truce is entirely local and of a temporary nature.

"It is not incompatible with the declared policy of continuing a sustained resistance and efforts for the recovery of lost territories," the statement said.

"It is absolutely impossible for the National government to agree to an ignominious surrender since the Manchurian issue is entirely outside the sphere of the local military truce with Peiping."

REVERTING to the matter of the gold standard, dispatches from Vienna tell of how, in the seventieth congress of the International Chamber of Commerce, the United States was bitterly denounced by Charles Boissevain of Holland for what he called its "immoral" monetary course. He condemned the behavior of those nations which abandoned the gold standard "although unquestionably in a position to maintain it." He condemned also what he described as the "repudiation" of the gold clause in contracts by the United States.

In the transportation section, Ira Campbell of New York defended United States shipping against what he termed an international attempt to rule it off the seas. American merchant marine cannot exist without subsidy, he said, and an international agreement to abolish subsidies would mean the abolition of American ships.

W. L. Runciman of Great Britain objected to his argument that the American marine is needed for national defense, asserting such argument is out of place in a commercial congress.

War debts also came up for discussion. W. H. Coates, British delegate, asserting that they must be settled before it would be possible to improve world economic conditions.

LANSING state penitentiary near Leavenworth, Kan., was the scene of a sensational escape of 11 convicts who were led by Wilbur Underhill, a lifer and one of the most desperate outlaws of the Southwest. During a baseball game Warden Prather and two guards were seized, used as shields and forced to accompany the fleeing convicts over the wall. Other guards were disarmed and the men got away in the car of the prison farm superintendent, keeping their prisoners with them as hostages until hours later, when they were released in Oklahoma. In their flight they commandeered two other cars and captured three women who were set free near Pleasanton, Kan.

SIX bandits held up the State Exchange bank of Culver, Ind., and fled in an automobile with $16,000. But the men of the town had been trained as vigilantes and, receiving word of the crime, they mobilized immediately under command of Captain Obenauf of the Culver Military academy and went into action. Result: All six bandits were captured, one of them being fatally wounded, and the loot was recovered.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Jesus on the Cross.

Lesson for June 11—Mark 15:1-47. Golden Text, Romans 5:8.

We have arrived at a supreme moment in the dramatic story of Jesus. He is now on the Cross, soon to die after unspeakable anguish. It is the blackest day in history, the day of mankind's most atrocious crime. But such is the paradox of the crucifixion that we call the day of the Master's death not Bad Friday but Good Friday, and think of Him, in His agony, not as a miserable failure, but as a King on His throne.

We are aware of the magnetism of the Cross, so well expressed in that great text in the fourth gospel, "And I—if I am lifted up from the earth—I will draw all men to me." The novelist Thackeray felt its attraction, for we are told that one day, as he was walking in Edinburgh, he saw the wooden crane of a quarry sharply etched against the sky. He stooped, gazed earnestly, and quietly said, "Calvary!"

Note, too, the spiritual power centered in the Cross, the power of a victorious Redeemer whom, as Paul says, "God hath highly exalted." The shame of the Cross is a badge of glory! For wrong does not win! No, indeed! Right wins, for God's Spirit is there, and that Spirit is indomitable!

Again, the Cross is the Way of Life. The early Christians eagerly kept the Cross in sight, and were known as the companions of the way. We Christians of today are also comrades of the Way.

Now what do we mean by the Way of the Cross—two things. First, we mean the abandonment of those forces of evil responsible for the execution of Jesus, and all similar crimes. Second, we mean a dedicated life of complete sacrifice and devotion. And both of these are bound up with the crucifixion. How are we to get rid of sin? By the saving power of the Cross. "Christ died for our sins," as Paul assures us. And how are we to launch ourselves into the selfless ministry of the Christian adventure? We are to do so by following the path of the Via Dolorosa even unto Calvary.

Golden-Calf-Sweepstakes Are Over Says Van Loon.

A plea to "be honest with ourselves" is voiced by Hendrik Willem VanLoon, author and historian, in the June issue of the Rotarian Magazine. Discussing conditions in other lands where "the firing squad has taken the place of argument" and "imprisonment without trial disposes of all those who fail to share the prejudices of the majority," he points out that this is no time for Americans to sit on the scornful seat.

"It is better," he suggests, "to bow our heads in humility and say, 'There but for the grace of God, we go ourselves.'" The depression, he continues, has brought to light a failure of Americans to realize what James Truslow Adams has called the Great American Dream—"to make the United States a country where people should not only make a better living than anywhere else, but should also be able to devote themselves to a higher mode of living with a greater freedom." But that has not been realized.

"A few of our neighbors have grown immensely wealthy. But many millions have joined the disinherited. The Middle Class is now fighting for its existence with its back against a fast-crumbling wall, and its case seems well-nigh hopeless.

"How did this come about? The reason is apparent to anyone with sufficient courage to face the facts. We sold our birthright for a couple of tickets in the Golden-Calf-Sweepstakes. We turned our back deliberately upon the old place of worship where we were taught the uncomfortable doctrine that the Gods will give us everything in return for a certain amount of honest sweat. In a perfunctory fashion we still told our children that the virtue had its own reward. But

"we lived but once" and "you know how it is" and even if we ourselves rushed after the grab-bag—well, we could always placate our conscience with the thought that we did it "for the sake of the wife and the kiddies."

To all of which Van Loon sounds an about-face. Paraphrasing a toast in the movie "Cavalcade," he offers this as a new war cry, suited to the times: Greatness, Peace, Nobility. "We will have to find the way out among the simpler realities of life."

WOMEN'S CONTRIBUTION TO THE MOTOR CAR

There is some doubt that people care to hear very much about what goes on under the hoods of their cars.

The driver knows that "driving qualities" are not accidental; they are put there. How the manufacturer creates or evolves those results may not interest him. He judges entirely by the results he gets in driving.

Well, it is not essential to talk "shop"; let us talk Results. Smoothness. Drive the Ford V-8 and you will find that the engine runs with surpassing smoothness, due to its design and the extra precise methods of its manufacture.

Power. There it is, 75 horsepower (we could say 80) at the drive-shaft for the driver's use. With less weight to pull around, the mettle of this car—its life-like response—is rather remarkable.

Economy. Our V-8 develops more power on a gallon of gasoline than any car we have made. Mileage is partly a matter of individual driving, but under average conditions the Ford V-8 does 17 to 20 miles a gallon. Of course, car economy is not only a matter of fuel. Ford V-8 has that too, but it is also economical in the complete sense—initial cost, operation, maintenance.

Appearance. This is woman's contribution. The motor car must not only be useful, but also good-looking. View the Ford V-8 and you will not need our comment on its fine appearance.

Comfort. This also is woman's concern. In 30 years she changed the motor car from a wagon to a coach. Comfort is a quality made up of numerous ingredients. There is no comfort without a quiet, smooth-running engine. We have all the other ingredients too,—color, good taste, quality, ease, safety, roominess and convenience.

STATE'S NEW FISCAL YEAR NEAR AT HAND

Concluded from first page. tion it desires on any subject at any time. It pays the budget director a big salary. All his assistants get salaries that in these days of hard times seem like ransom money. But from the beginning of the session there has apparently been a conflict somewhere between the budget director and those in the legislature that have been trying to do something for the state. At one time the conflict became so severe that the senate used its power to force the budget director to give it certain information.

Not only has the legislature apparently been without much information it should have, but there has been a violent difference of opinion between the executive department and the legislature.

Democratic senate leaders have openly refused to follow the governor on some phases of his legislative program, if it can be said he has one.

So on July 1, when the state starts out on its new fiscal year, no one will know just how much the state is going to spend. No one will know just how much money the state plans to take from the taxpayers from July 1, 1933, to July 1, 1934.

This is due to the fact that legislative efforts to cut expenses have been met with rebuff from interested sources. Many of the economy bills that Representative Vernon J. Brown and Representative Hartman introduced that passed the house, were amended in the senate so that the appropriation amounts specified will be in many cases much larger than recommended by these two representatives.

The income of the state for the next fiscal year is the big problem. When the taxpayers voted for a tax limitation last fall they thought they were voting for tax limitation. But if the sales tax bill goes through as it now stands they are going to pay, and probably pay more than ever before.

The governor says he hopes the sales tax will raise $45,000,000. That's a lot of money, even in figures that Wall street tax cheaters deal in mostly.

The senate is changing the governor's sales tax bill. It is going to be severely changed, but some of the exemptions that the governor desired, will not appear in the law if passed as the senate proposes. So the total revenue that will come to the state under the senate bill may be even more than that proposed by the governor.

But it is all "estimates." No one really knows a thing about how much a sales tax will bring into the state treasury. Estimates on retail sales in Michigan are based upon figures collected by the federal government during the 1930 census. But retail sales in Michigan in 1930 and in 1933 are two different things. The governor did not use the total of the 1930 sales tax to provide his estimated income, just a portion of it. Estimated retail sales given the census taker for one purpose, the state will find, are an entirely different lot of retail sales that can be chalked up for tax paying purposes.

The governor and the legislature propose to give the sales tax bill, when passed, immediate effect. It is going to create a new department to collect this tax, and in doing so abolish the old tax commission. Of course this will provide many worthy and needy democrats with jobs, oodles of them.

But so violent is the difference of opinion between the governor and the legislature over the sales tax bill that there may be an extra session necessary during July to provide some source of income for the state. The governor does not like the senate sales tax bill and the senate does not like the governor's plan. Threats of veto and an extra session are common talk just now.

All of this muddle comes to the state at the beginning of its new fiscal year—a chaotic mess seldom known in previous Michigan affairs. Maybe Lansing officials can work itself out of it, but legislative observers predict that the job is one that will require the efforts of every man holding a public job in Lansing 24 hours per day and seven days per week—and official Lansing is keeping no such hours these days.

There have been a lot of nasty stories around Lansing recently about votes being bought and paid for just like so many potatoes. One group of legislators is accusing another group. There is an investigation under way into these reports. Booze parties for certain members of the legislature seem to enter the picture with more or less truth painted in the background. Looking at some of these legislative problems, presents a rather sorry picture at times.

A grand rush is being made to complete the work of the legislature by June 15. Maybe it can be done, but with more bills introduced than at any previous session there is plenty left for the legislature to do, unless it is planned to bury the vast majority of these measures in committee, where they belong.

Origin of 'Bunk.'

When a man says, "that's the bunk," you know he has no great respect for what has been said. The slang word, "bunk," comes from the proper name, Buncombe, a town in North Carolina. A member of the House of Representatives from that town once made a fiery speech in the lower house of Congress and when he finished comment was made that the address was not directed at the House but instead to Buncombe for effect. From this incident has come the word "buncombe" meaning claptrap speeches for the purpose of cajoling constituents.

Lights of NEW YORK By WALTER TRUMBULL

Capt. Ashley McKinley has been telling me of the downward voyage made by the Eleanor Bolling, one of the ships of the Byrd expedition, from New York to Little America. It seems that the entire crew, with the exception of Captain Brown, the first mate and the chief engineer, were strictly volunteers, all being members of the exploring party. One or two of them may have had active experience in a rowboat, but none had really done anything to impair his standing as an amateur. Dr. Laurence M. Gould was second mate, because of his position as second in command to Admiral Byrd and because he was able to use a sextant. When he was not seasick, he was a very valuable second mate.

The ship got out of New York harbor all right, with the captain on the bridge, the first mate at the wheel, and the chief engineer dashing back and forth between the engine room and the stokehold. One of the volunteer stokers had once had some experience with an oil furnace in a suburban cottage, but the other had never done more than turn a radiator on and off. The Eleanor Bolling burned coal. By frenzied effort the two were able, while they lasted, to get up at least two pounds of steam.

This had a bearing on something which happened off Atlantic City. There a revenue cutter took the ship for a run runner, in spite of the "Byrd Expedition," painted plainly in various places, and signaled her to stop. Captain Brown was highly indignant and whether he would have stopped or not is somewhat of a question, but some one pulled the whistle cord, the whistle jammed and blew for about a minute and a half, and the ship came to rest of her own accord. All the steam was exhausted. When the revenue men came aboard they were welcomed by the officers with strong language and by the crew with loaded cameras. They were a sheepish looking lot.

Naturally, the mate couldn't spend all his time at the wheel and when he was relieved by the first volunteer, strange things happened. The ship began to do a sort of combination tango and barrel roll. Uttering loud supplications to all the gods of mariners, the captain reeled his way on deck. When he spoke feelingly to the helmsman, the latter was both astonished and hurt. "Why, captain," he protested, "she never was more than 6 inches off her course," meaning 6 inches on the compass card.

Owing to a few such trifling incidents, the ship, which had been due to reach Norfolk early on Tuesday, did not arrive until Wednesday afternoon. This was a bit alarming to relatives of the crew who had gone there to meet her, especially as some of the papers carried headlines saying that the ship was overdue and probably had sunk. But with the mate again at the wheel, she came into harbor nobly.

Meanwhile, the first volunteer stokers had given their best and their all. They were tenderly laid in bunks and Captain McKinley and the doctor took over the stoking job. They stoked a large part of the way to New Zealand. They did well and would have done better, if the furnace doors had not formed the habit of swinging shut just when they wanted to throw coal in. Pair by pair, the huskiest of the volunteers took their turn in the stokehold, but the steam gage remained at about the same point. At New Zealand a couple of Scandinavian professionals were signed. From the time they took over, it was possible at all times to blow the whistle without stopping the ship. They weighed about 130 pounds each.

Entering the New Zealand harbor, Captain McKinley had been promoted to the wheel. If the ship had been an airplane or a dirigible, he would have been an expert pilot. As it was, a small misunderstanding arose between him and the captain.

"Port," ordered the latter, meaning apparently that he wanted the wheel turned to port. But Ashley McKinley naturally thought he was referring to the ship. The captain was so surprised at the result of his command that the ship, like a cat chasing its tail, made practically a complete circle to port before he recovered his power of speech. But by the time the Eleanor Bolling reached Little America every one, including the captain, first mate and chief engineer, had obtained a lot of experience and all were able seamen.

When Courage Wanes. By Fred D. Keister, Sr., in "The Village Lamplighter."

I have been traveling about the country quite a bit of late and my journeys have brought me into contact with many men and many conditions. It is only natural that the leading subject of conversation these days should be that concerning our economic condition. Many are discouraged, others are optimistic, never are two viewpoints exactly alike, especially when they are apt to be more or less colored with the personal experience of those with whom you are talking. I realize that it takes courage to keep going forward in the face of so many discouraging things barring the way, but I think the best lesson any man could learn would be to call on Herb Knapp at Clarksville for a little visit. Herb runs a little confectionery and ice cream parlor in the village; business is never rushing, yet Herb never complains. He always speaks optimistically, never complains, and always asks you to come again in a spirit that makes you feel you have been a welcome visitor.

Herb Knapp is much like the ordinary small business man, except for one thing—he has been totally blind for 13 years. It rather makes you feel ashamed that when ever complained about life when you see him touching his way about his store to wait upon the occasional customer. To see the deaf manner in which he can dish out an ice cream cone for one of the school kids, the unerring manner in which he can go to a show case and select a cigar or a package of candy—you cannot help but feel of the wonderful concentration of mind necessary to do these little things.

From him there is never a word of complaint. He lost his sight in an accident while in the humble line of duty as he worked on the local railroad section, but you do not hear him saying embittered things on that account. Just going along doing the day's work in the best manner his incapacity will allow. Well, the next time that you, an able-bodied, normal person feel like sitting down to mourn your fate, just take a trip over to Clarksville and visit for a few minutes with Herb Knapp. You'll come away with an entirely new conception of life—a determination to quit whining and to make the old world the kind of place in which you want to continue to live.

Teachers' Salaries.

As the Arenac Independent points out the school teaching profession seems to be the hardest hit of any of the public pay roll attaches. In some cases teaching salaries have been cut 50%, which is far above the percentage given other public workers. The northern paper says:

"Teachers' salaries can (and should be) cut from what they were during peak times but when school districts cut wages down to 50% and then sometimes not pay even that, it is making the teacher—and through her—the children take too much of this depression right on the chin. Teachers today must have much more education to teach than they did a generation ago. As a whole they are much better fitted for their work than their predecessors. They are entitled to fair pay. A cut in salary, yes, but remember the teacher must live, dress attractively, take a part in the community's social activities and keep abreast of the times in educational matters and do a certain amount of research work. Because they are not organized so well as many political groups it is no reason to take advantage of the situation. Teachers' salaries should be maintained at a decent figure."

Watch Poison Spray on Unwashed Fruit

Stricter regulations made by federal authorities will make it necessary for Michigan orchard owners to modify poison spray schedules or run the risk of having fruit condemned for showing too heavy residues of poisonous substances, according to warnings issued by the entomology department at Michigan State College.

Growers who do not own power washes for fruit will have to change the spraying schedule for the control of codling moth or the market for their fruit will be endangered. Fruit which will not be washed should not receive more than two sprays of lead arsenate. Calcium arsenate may be used in the second cover spray, but any additional sprays should be made with summer oil emulsion.

Three applications of lead arsenate can be used on fruit which will be washed, and calcium arsenate can be used for additional applications. Timeliness of the spray applications and the use of supplementary measures, such as scraping the trees and banding, will materially aid the control of codling moth and will reduce the need for late arsenical sprays. The destruction of fruit "thinning" by deep burying or immersion in water is another measure which reduces the moth population.

No spray containing any form of fluorine should be used at any time on Michigan fruit or vegetables. Traces of this substance on a food product will result in its being condemned by inspectors of the federal government. The entomology department will send detailed spraying instructions to those who write for them.

To lose fat and at the same time gain in physical attractiveness and feel spirited and youthful take one half teaspoon of Kruschen in a glass of hot water before breakfast every morning.
A jar that last 4 weeks costs but a trifle at any drugstore in the world but be sure and get Kruschen Salts the SAFE way to reduce wide hips, prominent front and double chin and again feel the joy of living—money back if dissatisfied after the first jar.—Advertisement W-3.

THE MAY DAY MYSTERY

By OCTAVUS ROY COHEN

Copyright by Octavus Roy Cohen, WNU Service.

Reagan marched off and Hanvey re-entered the dean's office, closing the door behind him. He liked the trim little figure—although she somewhat frightened him. She was sitting now in a straight chair, and her legs were crossed—disclosing a frank expanse of pink flesh between the knee and the hem of the dress. Hanvey felt himself blushing, but Ivy seemed totally unconscious of her display.

He settled comfortably in the dean's swivel chair, mopped his forehead and the back of his neck, and then grinned disarmingly at the girl.

"Answer me one question, Miss Welch: Ain't I the terriblest looking detective you ever saw?"

The girl's blue eyes opened wide and a truant dimple appeared. "Well, I wouldn't say you were a sheik."

"I ain't this bad in cold weather. Heat just knocks me, for a row of tin cans. Now Reagan yonder. . . . He loved her voice. 'You mustn't get sore at regular dicks, Miss Welch,' he advised confidentially. 'If they slough everybody, they're bound to have the right one. Me—I don't hardly ever make an arrest, and my job now is to turn loose at least two of the three Reagan has got in stir.' Jim was using police vernacular in a deliberate effort to impress the girl, and he knew that he was succeeding. She was sitting forward tensely; completely awed by his authoritative manner. 'One thing, Miss Welch; I want you to know I'm on the level. I wouldn't try to put nothing over on you—cross my heart and hope to die if I would. If you don't believe that, why, there ain't hardly no use for us to talk.' 'I think you're all right,' said Ivy firmly.

"Thanks. It's real nice of you to say that. And now that we've started off so good, lemme tell you one thing more: I ain't a regular bull. I ain't got the slightest desire to make a record, and I'd rather never slough anybody than do any harm to the wrong feller. You're sure your brother didn't do this thing. I sort of agree with you. But there's a whole lot of lying going on . . . and while I don't want to make you sore, Miss Welch—it ain't any secret that your brother is doing more than his share—which ain't helping him a bit. I want to locate somebody who knows something and is willing to talk straight. Will you or won't you?" Ivy didn't hesitate. "I will!" "Good girl. Now I want you to tell me about Mr. Thayer—and yourself . . . just whatever you feel I should know."

The girl bit her lip. "I feel funny about that, Mr. Hanvey. I've tried to tell one or two people—even my brother—and they all laugh—or sneer—when I say I was in love with him."

"I wouldn't laugh, Miss Welch. I'm a sentimental old bird . . . and I believe in young love. Oh, gosh! how I do."

"I'm seventeen," she said. "I guess I'm not so awful dumb. I know about as much as the next girl. And I was in love with Pat Thayer. He was wonderful to me. Not always wise-cracking and showing off smart like most boys. He was awful different, and I guess a girl knows whether she's in love or not, no matter how much people laugh. And when he—when he— Her eyes filled with fierce hot tears which she dashed away. 'I'm an awful silly little fool, Mr. Hanvey—but I can't help it.' 'You go right ahead and cry, Ivy,' Hanvey's voice was infinitely gentle. 'I guess I know how you feel. Once when I was a heap younger—and a heap thinner—I had a girl. And I lost her. . . . She married another feller, and it sort of seemed as though she had died.' Ivy sensed the very genuine sympathy and the deep human understanding. The campus tragedy had hurt more than anyone suspected. There had been the shock, the horror . . . then the fear that Larry might have done it. Only her roommate knew of the long hours of crying . . . only the roommate could tell of the heroism which sent Ivy Welch bravely out on the campus. But Ivy had not talked to that roommate, Hanvey, now—he was different. She felt that he understood, and would help. It was a relief to talk. . . . 'Pat Thayer and I were engaged,' she said simply. 'Gee.' 'Of course, we weren't thinking about getting married just yet. We both felt I was too young. But I was wearing his fraternity pin and he was wearing a diamond ring which used to belong to my mother.' Again her eyes filled with tears. 'He had it on when—when he died, Mr. Hanvey.' Jim shook his head. 'Where is it now, Miss Welch?' 'I don't know. I suppose it's still on—on his finger. I put it there myself.' She suddenly buried her face in her hands. Hanvey, filled with a deep pity, watched her in silence. Then the blond head jerked upward and she forced a smile. 'I won't talk about it any more, Mr. Hanvey. I'll try to be a good scout. You're going to help get Larry free?'"

"Yes—if he is innocent." "Surely you don't think . . . ?" "No, Ivy—I don't. But I do think that Larry has talked himself into a lot of trouble. And if he won't tell the truth it's up to me to find it out from someone else."

"I'll tell you everything I know." "Good. Now first: Weren't you with Mr. Thayer day before yesterday just about noon?"

"Yes, sir." "Did Max Vernon meet you?" "Yes, sir." "What happened then?"

She hesitated, and her cheeks grew white; but she answered with brave honesty: "They had a pretty nasty quarrel, Mr. Hanvey."

Hanvey leaned forward. "Would you mind telling me, Miss Welch—what Vernon and Thayer quarreled about?"

She flushed slightly. "About me."

"Why?"

"Well," she answered with a flash of straightforwardness which he liked—"I guess I acted pretty rotten. I had a date with Max and I stood him up."

"I see. . . . You preferred being with Thayer?"

"Of course."

"Why?"

"Because Max is just a kid. He's a good sort and all that, but he's a baby."

"Haven't he and Thayer always been good friends?"

"Yes."

"When did you notice any change?"

"Oh, I can't just remember, Mr. Hanvey; but Max has been impossible lately. Mooning around with a face like last week's wash, and always talking serious instead of kidding along like he used to. I got awful bored. Then I started going with Pat—that's Mr. Thayer—and Max got sorer than ever. Then he asked me for a May day date. We were to go to the class track meet. I met Pat and just naturally forgot the date—that's all. Then when Max met us he got nasty about it, and, of course, Pat wouldn't stand that."

"Of course not. What did Mr. Thayer do?"

"Oh, he sort of treated Max like a kid. Max got awful sore. I mean, he was downright ugly about it."

"And then?"

"He stalked off, trying to look like a man."

"And you and Mr. Thayer?"

"We talked for awhile and then he said he had to get ready for an afternoon class. He said if Max was sore and wouldn't take me to the track meet, he'd take me."

"That was nice. . . . Now, about your brother . . ."

Her eyes flashed. "You know he wouldn't kill anybody, Mr. Hanvey. You've met him; he's a fine man . . . and he just wouldn't do anything like that."

"Did you see Larry between the time Thayer left you and the time Larry went to see him at the fraternity house?"

She looked away, and he could see her fingers clasp and unclasping nervously.

"Yes, I saw him."

"Where?"

"Over at the women's dormitory. He came to see me."

"What about?"

Her answer came in a whisper. "Mr. Thayer."

"I see. . . . What did he say about Mr. Thayer?"

"He said—he said I wasn't to see Pat any more."

"Why?"

"He wouldn't tell me. There's always been a lot of mean talk around the campus about Pat. He was better than the rest of them, and they all hated him for being more of a man. And Larry knew of it. I never made any secret about it."

"Then why did he suddenly come and speak to you day before yesterday?"

Again her cheek turned white. "Somebody had told him something."

"Yes. . . . ?" Jim was infinitely patient. "Who?"

"Antoinette Peyton."

"I see. . . . And how did Miss Peyton happen to pick that particular day to tell him?"

"Because—well, it happened this way, Mr. Hanvey." She walked to the window and motioned him to join her. "You see, all the college buildings are on a hill here. Way over yonder on that big hill is the women's dormitory. When you walk over there you go down the hill beyond the Bowl and pass through a pretty little patch of woods. There's a place down there all kind of closed in—everybody knows it. It's called the Bower and couples go there lots of times. It's a sort of college rule never to go in there when someone else is there. I mean not to go in when you hear somebody."

"Tony Peyton was coming from the dormitory and Pat and I were in there. Tony Peyton eavesdropped and then busted right in on us. She—she gave Pat the devil."

"I see. . . . But what business was it of hers?"

The face which Ivy lifted to Hanvey was a study in bewilderment. "I don't know!"

"Didn't she say?"

"No. Of course I could tell that there was something between Tony and Pat; or, anyway, there had been. Tony was awful sore, and Pat was mad. He told Tony to mind her own business and that if she butted in on him she'd be starting something she couldn't stop. Tony said he ought to be ashamed of himself because I was such a kid, and he said he'd do what—what he d—n pleased."

"And you?"

"I just stood there. It seemed like I was an outsider. I hadn't ever seen Pat mad, and I never thought Tony could get so sore."

"It was a real fuss?"

"Yes, sir. I think Tony must be crazy about him, and she was jealous. Anyway, I mean she acted just like that."

"You didn't get any hint—from either Pat or Miss Peyton—what there was or had been, between them?"

"No, sir."

"And you think Miss Peyton told your brother that he ought to do something about it?"

"Yes. . . . Larry is crazy about her. He didn't act nice. He said I'd have to quit going with Pat. I said I wouldn't, and he said he'd see that I did."

Jim's eyes were half closed. His voice came in a slow, disinterested drawl.

"And then he told you he was going over to see Thayer, didn't he?"

"Yes, sir."

"That was about half past one?"

"I think so."

"He was real sore when he left you, wasn't he?"

She seemed startled. "Not sore enough to kill anybody, Mr. Hanvey. Don't you understand: Larry isn't that kind at all. Maybe he could have quarreled with Pat and had a fight . . . although I never have known Larry ever to do that. But, anyway, he could have beat Pat up. He never would have used a knife."

"Do you know if he and Miss Peyton are engaged?"

"I don't think so. I mean, I think Larry would like to be, but I'm sure Tony was crazy about Pat Thayer."

"Mmm! Did you tell your brother that you and Pat were engaged?"

"Sure I did."

"Did you mention that Thayer was wearing your diamond ring?"

"No. I just didn't remember. I wasn't scared to tell him, though."

"I don't believe you were. . . . Tell me: Would Larry have been likely to recognize that ring? Did he know it pretty well?"

"Yes, sir. It was my mother's."

"Larry went to see him to make him stay away from you. He was mad when he went. Yet you think he didn't kill Thayer?"

"I'm sure of it, Mr. Hanvey. Larry couldn't stab a man. Anyone would tell you that."

"They have," admitted Jim. "And they've told me the same thing about Miss Peyton and Max Vernon."

He rose ponderously. "I'm much obliged, Miss Welch. You've been a darn good sport and you've helped a heap."

"Will you tell me the truth about one thing, Mr. Hanvey? Have I helped my brother, or hurt him?"

Jim smiled a broad, lazy smile. "You've helped him, Ivy. I give you my word on that. You see, for the first time I got a little of the truth."

He watched her as she opened the door. He saw her give a start, and her slim figure stiffened.

"You!" she cried sharply.

"Yes, it's me," answered Reagan from the hallway.

"You've been listening?"

"No'm, I haven't. Honest. I've just been waiting for Jim Hanvey."

Ivy withered him with a glance and stalked off down the hall. Reagan entered the room grinning.

"Any luck, Jim?"

"Plenty."

"Got any hunches?"

"Yeh."

"Against who?"

Hanvey chuckled. "Everybody," he answered. Then: "Did you see Vernon?"

"I did."

"Show him the knife?"

"Yep."

"What did he say?"

"He said," answered Reagan, "that the knife is his!"

Supplying a week-to-week inspiration for the heavy-burdened who will find every human trial paralleled in the experiences of "The Man Nobody Knows."

SIMPLICITY AND STRENGTH

Jesus hated prosy dullness. He praised the Centurian who was anxious not to waste his time; the only prayer which He publicly commended was uttered by a poor publican who merely cried out, "God, be merciful to me a sinner." A seven word prayer, Jesus called it a good one. A sixty-eight word prayer, He said, contained all that men needed to say or God to hear. What would be His verdict on most of our prayers and our speeches and our advertisements? Jesus' language was marvelously simple—a second great essential. There is hardly a sentence in His teaching which a child can not understand. His illustrations were all drawn from the commonest experiences of life; "a sower went forth to sow"; "a certain man had two sons"; "a man built his house on the sands"; "the kingdom of heaven is like a grain of mustard seed." The absence of adjectives is striking. Henry Ward Beecher said once that "to a large extent adjectives are like leaves on a switch; they may make it look pretty, as a branch, but they prevent it striking tinglingly when you use it."

"I recollect a case in which my father at a public meeting was appointed to draw up an article," Beecher continued. "He had written one sentence: 'It is wrong.' Some one in the meeting got up and moved in his enthusiasm that the sentence read: 'It is exceedingly wrong.' My father got up and said in his mild way, 'When I was writing this resolution in its original shape that was the way I wrote it, but to make it stronger, I took out the "exceedingly."

Jesus used few qualifying words and no long ones. We refer to those three literary masterpieces, The Lord's Prayer, The Twenty-third Psalm, The Gettysburg Address. Recall their phraseology: Our Father which art in Heaven, hallowed by thy name. The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. Four score and seven years ago. Not a single three-syllable word; hardly any two-syllable words. All the greatest things in human life are one-syllable things—love, joy, hope, home, child, wife, trust, faith, God—and the greatest advertisements generally speaking, are those in which the most small words are found. Moderate Feeding Profitable Even hogs shouldn't make "hogs" of themselves, it appears from experiments showing that moderate feeding is more profitable in terms of pork sales.

"Sure, I'm a careful driver...but I want a racing oil!"

"I'M NO SPEEDER. It's once in an age that I drive more than 40 miles an hour . . . "But at 40 miles an hour—or at 20, or at 10—I want that 100-mile-an-hour motor oil—Gulf Supreme! "That seems like just common sense to me. For an oil that's good at 100-miles-an-hour is certainly a better oil to use at ANY speed!" Right! It's better able to do everything an oil should do! To conquer heat! To cut lubrication bills! To forestall repairs! Gulf Supreme has earned the right to be called the 100-mile-an-hour oil because of its amazing ability to lubricate at terrific high speeds and to take super-punishment! Listen to this . . . On the famous Indianapolis Speedway, Supreme out-performed special "racing oils" in a one-hour, non-stop run! Under Official AAA supervision, it lubricated a thundering Duesenberg racer at an average speed greater than 100-miles-an-hour! . . . Switch to Gulf Supreme. There is a proper grade for every climate. Its ability to take super-punishment will put money in your pocket. And give you better lubrication at any speed. Drive into a Gulf station now! © 1932, GULF REFINING CO., PITTSBURGH, PA.

New Fertilizer to Use Ammonia, Peat

U. S. Chemists Say Manufacturing Process Simple and Inexpensive.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)—WNU Service.

Ammoniated peat, a new fertilizer material, has been developed in the laboratories of the Department of Agriculture. It seems to combine many of the good features of the two familiar types of nitrogen-carrying fertilizers. It has not been developed commercially yet, but chemists of the department say that the manufacturing process is simple and relatively inexpensive and that the commercial production of ammoniated peat offers opportunity for material saving in freight on fertilizers. Small scale experiments with plants have given promising results.

By heating ammonia and peat under pressure, about two-thirds of the reacting ammonia is changed to chemical combinations that are not soluble in water. These forms are generally similar to the nitrogenous fertilizer materials in cottonseed meal and animal tankage. Roughly a third of the ammonia remains in water-soluble forms. Depending on temperature, the peat may be ammoniated to contain up to 20 percent of nitrogen. A 20 percent product would thus contain in each hundred pounds nearly half as much quick-acting nitrogen as 100 pounds of sodium nitrate and would at the same time contain about twice as much slower-acting nitrogen as 100 pounds of cottonseed meal. In other words, 100 pounds of 20 percent ammoniated peat would be roughly equivalent to 200 pounds of cottonseed meal plus 50 pounds of sodium nitrate. The product could be shipped with notable savings in freight and with notable advantage in combining the good features of both the slow-acting and the quick-acting nitrogen carriers. The raw peat is of relatively little value as a nutritive ingredient in fertilizer, but is recognized as a highly desirable element in mixed fertilizers because of its value as a conditioner and because it supplies to the soil a desirable form of organic matter.

May Find Corn That Will Withstand Heat and Cold

Some strains of yellow dent corn that are resistant to cold will also withstand more heat than corn that is not cold-resistant, the United States Department of Agriculture announces. The resistance to both heat and cold is due to the higher proportion of bound water in the corn plant, the department says. The experiments indicating the heat-resisting quality of corn were made in co-operation with the Illinois agricultural experiment station.

The corn specialists give the water in the white of an egg as an example of bound water, while that in a sponge is free water. Bound water forms a part of the plant. Plants high in bound water resist heat damage because the heat cannot draw so much of the moisture from the plant and it can thus endure more heat. In cold weather the cold cannot so easily freeze the water in the plant into ice crystals, thus breaking up the cell structures. Bound water thus accounts for both heat and cold resistance.

The experiments showed that heat-resistant plants increased their bound water capacity with successive heat and drought spells. They also found that if the heat came on gradually the corn was hardened to it and held more bound water and withstood more heat.

Although the heat-resistance and cold-resistance studies are several steps ahead of the general farmer, the department points out that the discovery means that eventually improved strains of corn will be produced that will tend to resist heat as well as cold.

Use for Dairy By-Products

The new method of manufacturing casein that originated in the bureau of dairy industry has been adopted by seven New England factories, according to the report by Chief Reed to the secretary of agriculture. Two of the factories using the new grain-curd method of making casein received 1½ cents more per pound than factories using the older and more common method of making sulphuric casein. Through co-operation with other agencies the bureau of dairy industry has found two new possible outlets for lactose, or milk sugar. One is in the manufacture of certain types of confectionery; the other in the manufacture of explosives.

500 Tons Produce

Final figures on the industrial co-operative garden of the B. F. Goodrich company, near Akron, Ohio, disclose that approximately 1,010,000 pounds, or more than 500 tons of produce were grown on the 275-acre tract by part-time and former employees and distributed to them. Believed to be the largest project of its kind in the country, the garden engaged nearly 1,000 men in planting, cultivating and harvesting the crops in 1932.—Indiana Farmer.
