JENNER OPPOSES GAS TAX AMENDMENT

Told C. C. C. that Matter Should Be of Legislative Determination.

At the first meeting of the autumn season of the Cass City Community Club held on Tuesday evening at the high school auditorium, President C. W. Price appointed the following committee to submit nominations for the board of directors of the club: L. I. Wood, Frederick Pinney, Bruce Brown, Dougald Krug and Frank Reid. C. W. Price gave the Community Club some information about the freshman college recently established here and said this community would never be able to measure the benefits of this institution. Michigan has taken the lead in this movement for the education of its young people and the location of a college at Cass City was one of the finest things that could happen to a community.

Two Fire Alarms

The fire department received more exercise Tuesday afternoon than the members have had in many a day in that service. Two alarms were sounded but in neither case was the damage extensive.

Circuit Judge Sets Aside Mortgage

An aftermath of coal mining stock selling came to light in the Tuscola county circuit court Saturday when Judge Clarence B. The mortgage originally was for $6,600. Several payments had been made on the mortgage and when court action was taken the principal and interest amounted to $6,100. CASS CITY CRUSHES SANDUSKY, 33 TO 13 Win.

The Maroon and Grey, fighting with a fire and zip heretofore unseen, clearly outplayed their Sanilac county foes at Sandusky to bring home a 33-13 victory. Only for a time at the opening of the second quarter could the Sandusky lads show anything like the determination of the Cass City aggregation, and Cass City was playing without the services of Ward, who has been favoring an injured leg.

From end to end, the local line never looked better. During the first half they were spilling each play at the scrimmage line or on the Sandusky side of it. It took a 15 yard holding penalty to give the Blue team its only first down in this frame. At the start of the second half, the Sandusky offense found the visitors' line open for the only time of the game and they took full advantage of the let down. However, in the fourth canto, Cass City's forward wall again tightened down upon the Sanilac backs. in State.

Marked improvement in yield prospects for potatoes, and gains in the condition of nearly all other late crops were general over much of Michigan during September according to the report just released by the Michigan Co-operative Crop Reporting Service. Rainfall during the past month was timely and fairly well distributed and the absence of killing frosts in all except some northeern areas, helped bring late crops to maturity. The reported improvement in the condition of the state's potato crop was the greatest for September in more than 37 years of records, the condition on October 1, 1934 being 74 than for September 1, 1934 and four points above the 10-year average for October 1. Lesson for October 21 THE CHRISTIAN AT PRAYER

LESSON TEXT-Matthew 6:5-15: Ephesians 3:14-21.
GOLDEN TEXT—Rejoicing in hope; patient in tribulation; continuing instant in prayer. Romans

PRIMARY TOPIC—How to Pray. JUNIOR TOPIC—The Prayer Jesus TUNIOR TOPIC—The Prayer Jesus Taught His Disciples.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Learning How to Pray.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Prayer as Fellowship With

i. False Prayer (vv. 5, 7, 8).

1. Praying to be seen and heard of men (v. 5). To go through the act of praying with such an object is to play the hypocrite. In praying. the soul is dealing with God; therefore, to engage in it to attract men's attention is blasphemy. Many of the prayers uttered in the public sanctuary are false, for there is more consideration given to what the people think than to what God thinks. Men who thus pray get a reward, but not from God.

2. Using vain repetitions (vv. 7 8). This does not mean that we should ask but once for the things desired, for we have examples of Christ and Paul praying three times for the same thing (Matt. 26. 39-46; 2 Cor. 12:7, 8). it means the use of meaningless repetitions, their repetitions becoming empty sounds. To thus pray is heathenish. The heathen nations in their worship engage in senseless babble, an example of which is seen in the priests of Baal on Mount Carmel (1 Kings 18:26). The reason is plain, "Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of" (v. 8).

II. True Prayer (v 6). Since true prayer is a definite transaction of the soul with God, the communion of the human per sonality with the divine personality, we should have a real desire for fellowship with God and then go to meet him in secret.

Life for its fullest development needs both solitude and companionship. Solitude alone makes one morose, while constant companionship makes one shallow. God who made us knew what our natures require, therefore he commands both public and private prayer (Heb. 10:25; Matt. 6:6). We should have our closest prayers, when all the world, its cares and pleasures, is shut out, and we are shut in with God. We should also meet with God's children and pray together.

III. A Model Prayer (vv. 9-15).

This was given in response to the disciples' request that the Lord would teach them to pray (Luke 11: Saint William will be installed in 1). It is not, therefore, strictly the the cathedral here. Lord's prayer for the disciples. It involves:

1. A right relationship (v. 9). One also will be held, and all the Bremust be in such relationship as to ton cities famous for their pardons, be able to say "Our Father." Only such as Le Folgoet, Rumengol, St. those who have become children of John of the Finger, Saint Anne la God by faith in Jesus Christ (Gal. 3:26) can pray aright.

2. A right attitude (vv. 9, 10). 'Hallowed be thy name." When one realizes that he has been delivered from the power of darkness and translated into the kingdom of his dear Son (Col. 1:13) by being made a child of God, he cannot help pouring out his soul in gratitude and praise, intensely longing for the kingdom-that is, the righteous rule of Christ on the earth. 3. A right spirit (vv. 11-13).

a. That of trust which looks to God for the supply of daily bread. We are dependent upon him for our daily food. With all man's boasted progress, he cannot make a harvest. b. That of love which results in forgiveness of others. God will not listen to the prayers of the one who has an unforgiving spirit. c. That of holiness which moves one to pray not to be led into temptation. Such a one longs to be delivered from the Evil One.

IV. Paul's Prayer for the Ephe sians (Eph. 3:14-21).

1. To whom made (vv. 14, 15). It was to the Father of the Lord Jesus Christ.

2. For what he prayed (vv. 16-19) a. For the strengthening of the inner man by the Holy Spirit (v. 16). b. For Christ's indwelling (v. 17). The human personality needs the quickening of the Spirit in order that it might be a fit place for Christ to dwell. c. That they might be rooted and grounded in love (v. 17). The only way that real love can flow from the human heart is through Christ's indwelling. d. The apprehension of Christ's love (vv. 18, 19). This love, in its depth, breadth, width, and height, transcends human understanding. 3. The triumphant assurance that this will be realized (vv. 20, 21). This realization, which is beyond human ability to even think, is to be accomplished by the indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

SNAKES' VENOM AN AID FOR EPILEPSY

Reptile Curator Arrives From Africa With Treatment.

New York .- Dr. Frederick William FitzSimons, curator of the Museum and Snake park at Port Elizabeth, South Africa, arrived on the American South African liner City of New York, for a visit of several months. He will discuss with American scientists a nontoxic serum, made from snake venoms, which he has found of great advantage in treating epilensy and kindred diseases of the nervous system.

Doctor FitzSimons developed the serum after 24 years of intensive research with snakes in South Africa, and has many well authenticated reports of how injections have benefited epileptics and sufferers from chorea (St. Vitus Dance), hysteria and shell shock.

The principle of using snake venom to combat disease did not originate with Doctor FitzSimons, who explained that he did his early research at the Pasteur institute in Paris under the direction of the late Prof. Albert Calmette. In recent years Dr. Adolph Monaelesser, former surgeon general of the American Red Cross, has devoted much time to the study of cobra venom and its effect on cancer and epilepsy.

Doctor FitzSimons, however, believes he has perfected a way to change the violent toxins of snake venom into harmless toxoids, permitting more frequent injections of larger quantities. The change of toxins to toxoids also speeds the time of immunization of horses, from whose blood the serum is obtained.

Doctor FitzSimons was born in Garvaghay, Ireland, in 1871, and was educated in Natal and later in Ireland. For a time he was curator of the Pietermaritzburg museum, and later became head of the Natal government museum. In 1906 he developed the now famous Snake park, a public zoo with hundreds of snakes on view, as an aid in his experiments.

World's Williams Asked to Honor Saint William

Saint Brieuc, Brittany.-All the Williams, Guillaumes, Bills, Wilhelms, Guglielmos, and Willems in the world are invited to attend the seven hundredth anniversary of Saint William in this Breton town next October.

Seven hundred years ago, Guillaume Pinchon (one of the few authentic saints of Brittany, duly accepted by Holy church) was canonized in Rome, and it is the anniversary of this event which is to be observed from September 30 to October 7.

Twenty bishops will take part in the religious part of the ceremonies being planned, and the relics of

In connection with the William celebrations a "congress of pardons" Palud, and Auray will send delegations, members of which will be attired in distinctive costumes of Breton origin. A medieval mystery play will be presented. A tournament, recalling "days of old when knights were will be staged, all particibold," pants being named William and attired in trappings of St. William. There also will be a historical parade, dramatizing the important events of Breton history. For a week a medieval fair, exactly as it was 700 years ago, will be held here.

Lincoln in Junk Shop Hoopeston, Ill.-C. M. Bruff has acquired an unusual photograph of Abraham Lincoln, made when the Great Emancipator was a young man. The picture is classed as an ambrotype and is produced on glass, with the lights represented in silver and the shades by a dark back ground.

That method of making photographs was used between the time of the daguerreotype, which was produced on silver, and the time of the ferrotype, or tintype, which was a photograph taken on a thin iron plate. The ambrotype is much rarer than the other early kinds of photographs. Bruff accidentally came across the ambrotype while calling on a junk dealer in the vicinity of Vincennes, Ind.

Doctors Ponder on Odd Accident Case

Albany, N. Y .-- A case described as one of the most unusual in medical history continues to puzzle surgeons here.

Frederick McCredie, a machinist, accidentally was struck on the head with a hammer by a fellow worker in 1925. He appeared to be unhurt. One month later, however, he was found wandering along the streets, unable to remember his identity, or recognize his wife and children. Gradually his memory returned but he discovered he had forgotten his trade completely.

COAL

Oscar Coalbuyer was unmarried, timid and bashful. He lived with his Mama and Papa. His life was filled with embarrassing moments. He'd be dancing with a girl and his garter would come unclasped and she was sure to step on it. If he spoke of Love, the color left her cheeks — and stayed on Oscar's coat for weeks.

Once he joined the navy to "see the world" and then spent four years in a submarine. He was graduated from Grammar school with an injunction. The family parrot told him he should get into the cigar business and learn the ropes.

One day Oscar was caught in a revolving door, and that was the turning point of his career. He decided to do today all the things he'd been in the habit of doing tomorrow.

He bought his coal early and from the Farm Produce Company and felt so good that he got to the office on time and met the Boss's daughter, who'd been out to a dance. It was Love at first sight, and now Oscar is what you might call "SIT-TING PRETTY."

The public, too, is fast returning to the use of liquid laxatives. People have learned that a properly prepared liquid laxative brings a more natural movement without any discomfort at the time, or after.

The dose of a liquid laxating be varied to suit the needs of the individual. The action can thus be regulated. It forms no habit; you need not take a "double dose" a day or two later. Nor will a mild liquid laxative irritate the kidneys.

S. S. Van Dine has established a unique place for himself in contemporary fiction as a writer of murder mystery stories.

In 1926 came the first—The Benson Murder Case. This was followed by The Canary Murder Case, The Greene Murder Case, The Bishop Murder Case, The Scarab Murder Case and then The Kennel Murder Case, acclaimed the greatest and most baffling mystery story of the whole series.

Through each of these stories moves Philo Vance, super-detective, who gathers the strands of evidence together and out of the maze of bewildering clews produces a reasonable solution of the mystery.

Read The Kennel Murder Case as it is published serially in this paper and join in the manhunt for the shrewdest killer Philo Vance ever sought. See if you can work out the solution before the great detective points to the guilty person.

CHAPTER 1

The Bolted Bedroom,

TT WAS exactly three months after the startling termination of the Scarab murder case that Philo Vance was drawn into the subtlest and the most perplexing of all the criminal problems that came his way during the four years of John F.-X. Markham's incumbency as district attorney of New York county. Rarely in the annals of modern crime has there been a case that seemed to reverse so completely the rational laws by which humanity lives and reasons. In the words of the doughty and practical Sergt. Ernest Heath of the homicide bureau, the case "didn't make sense." On the surface it smacked of strange and terrifying magic, of witch-doctors and miracle-workers: and every line of investigation ran into a blank wall.

In fact, the case had every out ward appearance of being what armchair criminologists delight in calling the perfect crime. And, to make the plotting of the murderer even more mystifying, a diabolical concatenation of circumstances was superimposed upon the events by some whimsical and perverse god, which tended to strengthen every weak link in the culprit's chain of ratiocination, and to turn the entire bloody affair into a maze of incomprehensibility.

Curiously enough, however, it was the very excess of arder on the part of the murderer when attempting to divert suspicion, that created a minute hole in the wall of mystery. through which Vance was able to see a glimmer of light. In the process of following that light to the truth. Vance did what I believe was the shrewdest and profoundest detective work of his career.

For years he had been a breeder of Scottish terriers. Sometimes I think he manifested a greater enthusiasm in his dogs than in any other recreative phase of his life I mention that fact-or idiosyncra sy, if you prefer-because it so hap pened that Vance's ability to look at a certain stray Scottish terrier and recognize its blood lines and show qualities, was what led him to one phase of the truth in the remarkable case which I am now recording.

That which led Vance to another important phase of the truth was his knowledge of Chinese ceramics He possessed a small but remark. able collection of Chinese antiquities-museum pieces he had acquired in his extensive travelsand had written various articles for Oriental and art journals on the subject of Sung and Ming monochrome porcelains.

yet, without a knowledge of these two antipodal interests, the mysterious murder of Archer Coe, in his old brown-stone house in West Seventy-first street, would have remained a closed book for all time.

It was shortly after half-past eight on the morning of October 11. that Vance's doorbell rang; and Currie, his old English valet and majordomo, ushered Markham into the library. I was temporarily installed in Vance's duplex roof-garden apartment at the time. For years, almost since our Harvard days, I had been Vance's legal adviser and monetary steward (a post which included as much of friendship as of business and his affairs kept me fairly busy.

rose and started toward the bedroom. "I'll hop into appropriate integuments." As he reached the door he stopped. "And I'll tell you why your invitation enthralls me. I had an appointment with Archer Coe for three this afternoon to look at a pair of peach-bloom vases fourteen inches high he had recently acquired. And, Markham, a collector who has just acquired a pair of peach-bloom vases of that size doesn't commit suicide the next

With this remark Vance disappeared, and Markham stood, his hands behind him, looking at the bedroom door with a deep frown.

A few minutes later Vance emerged. dressed for the street. "Awfully thoughtful of you, and all that, to pick me up," he said, smiling jauntily at Markham. "There's something positively fascinatin' about the possibilities, it might be convenient to have Sergeant Heath on hand."

"So it might," agreed Markham drily, putting on his hat. "Thanks for the suggestion. But I've already notified him. He's on his way uptown now."

Vance's eyebrows went up whim sically. "Oh, pardon! . . . Well, let's grope out way hence."

The Coe house was an old brown stone mansion of double frontage occupying two city lots, built in a day when dignity and comfort were among the ideals of New York arch itects. As we ascended the steps the door was opened for us before we had time to pull the old-fashioned brass bell-knob; and the flushed face of Gamble looked out at us cringingly. "Thank you for coming, Mr.

Markham." His voice reeked of oily subservience. "It's very terrible. sir. And I really didn't know just what I should do-"

Two men came forward to greet us. The one in advance I recogn nized immediately as Raymond Wrede. He, I knew, was a close friend of the Coe family, and particularly of Hilda Lake, Archer Coe's niece. He was a studious man in his late thirties, slightly gray, with an ascetic, calm face of the chevaline type. He was mildly interested in Oriental ceramics-probably as a result of his long association with Coe-though his particular fancy was ancient oil lamps; and he owned a collection of rare specimens.

He bowed formally to Markham, whom he knew slightly: nodded perfunctorily to me; and extended his hand to Vance. Then, as if suddenly remembering something, he turned toward the man behind him, and made a brief presentation. which in reality was an explanation. "Signor Grassi. . . . Mr. Grassi has been a house guest of Mr. Coe's for several days. He represents an Italian museum of Oriental antiquities at Milan."

Grassi bowed very low, but said nothing. He was considerably shorter than Wrede, slim, immaculately dressed, with shiny black hair brushed straight back from his forehead, and a complexion whose unusual pallor was accentuated by large luminous eyes. His features were regular, and his lips full and shapely. His manicured hands moved with an almost feline grace.

Markham wasted no time on ceremony. He turned abruptly to "Just what is the situation? A Mr. Wrede was good enough to come. and after looking at the master he suggested that I call you, sir, before doing anything else-"

"It was obvious"-Wrede took up the story-"that poor Coe was dead, and I thought it best to leave everything intact for the authorities. I didn't want to insist on having the door broken in."

Vance was watching the man closely. "But what harm could that have done?" he asked mildly. "Since the door was bolted on the inside. suicide was rather plainly indicated-eh. what?"

"Perhaps you are right, Mr. Vance." Wrede appeared ill at ease. "But-somehow-my instinct told me that it might be best-"

"Quite-quite." Vance took out his cigarette case. "You, too, were sceptical—despite the appearances.' Wrede gave a start, and stared fixedly at Vance. "Coe," Vance continued, "wasn't exactly the suicidal type-was he?" "No-o." Wrede's eyes did not

"It looks as if our suspicions were unfounded," he said in a low voice. "Coe is sitting in his chair, a black hole in his right temple, and his hand is still clutching a revolver. The electric lights are on. . . Look, Vance,"

Vance was gazing at an etching on the wall at the head of the stairs. "I'll take your word for it, Markham," he drawled. "Really, y know, it doesn't sound like a pretty sight. And I'll see it infinitely better when we've forced an entry.' At this moment the front door bell rang violently, and Gamble hastened down the stairs. As he drew the door back, Sergeant Ernest Heath and Detective Hennessey burst into the lower hallway. "This way, Sergeant," Markham

"Good morning. geant waved a friendly hand to Markham. Then he cocked an eye at Vance. "I mighta known you'd be here. The world's champeen trouble-shooter!" He grinned goodnaturedly, and there was genuine affection in his tone.

"Come, Sergeant," Markham ordered. "There's a dead man in this room, and the door's bolted on the Inside. Break it open."

Heath, without a word, hurled himself against the crosspiece of the door just above the knob, but without result. A second time his shoulder crashed against the crosspiece.

"Give me a hand, Hennessey," he said. "That's a bolt-no foolin'. Hard wood."

The two men threw their combined weight against the door, and now there was a sound of tearing wood as the bolt's screws were loosened.

During the process of battering in the door, Wrede and Grassi mounted the stairs, followed by Gamble, and stood directly behind Markham and Vance.

Two more terrific thrusts by Heatl and Hennessey, and the heavy door swung inward, revealing the death chamber.

The room, which was at the extreme rear of the house, was long and narrow, with windows on two sides. There was a bay window opposite the door, and a wide double window at the left, facing east. The dark green shades were all drawn, excluding the daylight. But the room was brilliantly lighted by an enormous crystal chandelier in the center of the ceiling.

At the rear of the room stood an enormous canopied bed, which, I noticed, had not been slept in. On the right was a large embayed book-case filled with octavo and quarto volumes, and, facing the door was a mahogany kidneyshaped desk covered with books, pamphlets and papers-the desk of a man who spends many hours at literary labor. To the left of this desk, in the east wall, was a large fireplace. Gas logs were in the grate. About the walls hung at least a dozen Chinese scroll paintings. Had there not been a bed and a dressing table in the room, one would have taken it for a collector's sanctum.

These details of the room, hower, protruded themselves upon us later. What first focused our at tention was the inert body of Archer Coe, with its quiet pallid face and the black grisly spot on the right temple. The body was slumped down in a velour upholstered armchair beside the desk.

There was an expression of peace on the thin aquiline features of the dead man; and his eyes were closed as though in sleep. His right hand -the one nearest the fireplacelay on the end of the desk clutching a carved ivory-inlaid revolver of fairly large caliber. His left hand hung at his side over the tufted arm of the chair.

There was a straight windsor chair behind the desk, and I could not help wondering why Coe had selected the armchair at the side of the desk, facing the door. Was it because he had considered it more comfortable for his last resting place in life? The answer to this passing speculation of mine did not come for many hours; and when it did come, as a result of Vance's deductions, it constituted one of the vital links in the evidential chain of this strange and perplexing case. Coe's body was clothed in a green silk-wool dressing gown which came near to his ankles; but on his feet, which were extended straight in front of him, was a pair of high, heavy street shoes, laced and tied Again a question flashed through my mind: Why did Coe not wear bedroom slippers with his dressing gown? The answer to this question also was to prove a vital point in the solution of the tragedy.

Vance went immediately to the body, touched the dead man's hand, and bent forward over the wound in the forehead. Then he walked back to the door with its hanging bolt, scrutinized it for a moment. ran his eye around the heavy oak framework and lintel, and turned slowly back to the room. A frown wrinkled his brow. Very deliberately he reached in his pocket and took out another cigarette. When he had lighted it. he strolled to the west wall of the room and stood gazing at a faded Ninth century Chinese painting.

In the meantime the rest of us had pressed around the body of Coe, and stood inspecting it in silence. Wrede and Grassi seemed appalled in the actual presence of death. Wrede spoke to Markham.

"I trust I did right in advising Gamble to call you before breaking in the door. I realize now that if there had remained a spark of

"Oh, he was quite dead hours ago," Vance interrupted, without turning from the painting. "Your decision has worked out perfectly." Markham swung about.

"What do you mean by that Vance?"

"Merely that, if the door had been broken in, and the room overrun with solicitous friends, and the body handled for signs of life, and all the locked-in evidence probably destroyed, we would have had a deuced difficult time arrivin at any sensible solution of what really

"The corpse," answered Vance theory." Before Heath could reply, Markham, who had been watching Vance closely, turned quickly to Wrede and Grassi, "I will ask you gentlemen to wait downstairs. . . Hennessey, please go to the drawing room and see that these gentlemen do not leave it until I give them permission. . . You understand," he added to Wrede and Grassi, "that it will be necessary to question you about this affair after we have had the verdict of the medical examiner."

The two, followed by Hennessey, passed out of the room and down the stairs.

"And you," said Markham to Gamble, "wait at the front door and bring Doctor Doremus here the moment he arrives."

Gamble shot a haunted look at the body, and went out.

Markham closed the door, and then wheeled about, facing Vance, who now stood behind Coe's desk gazing down moodily at the dead man's hand clutching the revolver. "What's the meaning of all these mysterious inuendos?" he demand-

"Not inuendos, Markham," Vance returned quietly, keeping his eyes "Merely speculaon Coe's hand. tions. I'm rather interested in certain aspects of this fascinatin'

"Crime?" Markham gave a mirthless smile. "It was all very well for us to theorize before we got hereand I was inclined to agree with you that suicide seemed incompatible with Coe's temperament—but facts, after all, form the only reasonable basis for a decision. And the facts here seem pretty cleancut. The door was bolted on the inside; there's no other means of entrance or exit to this room; Coe is sitting here with a revolver in his hand, and a hole in his right temthe windows and shades are down. and the lights burning. in Heaven's name, could it have been anything but suicide?" "I'm sure I don't know." Vance shrugged wearily "But it wasn't suicide-really, don't y' know." He frowned again. "And that's the weird part of it. Y' see, Markham, it should have been suicide-and it wasn't. There's something diabolical-and humorous - about this case. Humorous in a grim, satirical sense. Some one miscalculated somewhere—the murderer was sitting in a game with the cards stacked against him. . . . Positively amazin'!"

"But the facts," protested Markham.

"Oh, your facts are quite correct As you lawyers say, they're irresistible. But you have overlooked additional facts." "For instance?"

Vance pointed to the foot of the bed where a pair of red slippers were neatly arranged. "And then regard these heavy boots which the corpse is wearing. And yet he has on his dressing gown, and is sitting in his easy chair. A bit incongruous, what? Why did the hedonistic and luxury-loving Coe not change his footwear to something more relaxing for this great moment in his life? And note that haste was not a factor. His robe is neatly buttoned: and the girdle is tied in an admirable bow-knot. We can hard ly assume that he suddenly decid ed on suicide half-way through his changing from street clothes to negligee. And yet, Markham, some thing must have stopped himsomething must have compelled him to sit down, stretch his legs out, and close his eyes before he had finished the operation of making himself sartorially comfortable." "Your reasoning is not altogeth er convincing,' Markham countered, "A man might conceivably wear heavy shoes with a dressing gown.

"Perhaps." Vance nodded. "I shan't be narrow-minded in these matters. But, assuming Coe is a suicide, why should he have chosen this chair facing the door? A man bent on doing a workmanlike job of shooting himself would instinctive ly sit up straight, where he could perhaps brace his arms and steady his hand. If he were going to sit by the desk at all he would, I think, have chosen the straight chair where he could rest both elbows on the top and thus insure a steady. accurate aim."

"His arm is on the end of the desk," put in Heath.

"Oh, quite—and in a rather awk ward position-eh, what? Considering how low the easy chair is, Coe could not possibly have had his el bow on the desk when he pulled the trigger. If so, the shot would have gone over his head. His arm was necessarily lower than the desk when the gun was fired-if he fired it. Therefore, we must assume that after the bullet had entered his brain, he lifted his right arm to the desk and arranged it neatly in its present position."

"Maybe yes and maybe no," muttered Heath, after a pause during which he studied the body and raised his own right hand to his forehead. Then he added aggressively: "But you can't get away from that bolted door."

Vance sighed

"I wish I could get away from it. It bothers me horribly. If it wasn't for the fact that the door was bolted on the inside. I'd be more in clined to agree that it was suicide. A man of Ooe's intelligence wouldn't plan suicide and then deliberately make it difficult for anyone to reach his body. What could he have gained by securely bolting the door on the inside so that it would have to be broken in? The act of shooting would have been over in a sec ond; and there was no danger of his being disturbed in his own bedroom. Had he killed himself he would have wanted Gamble-or some one else-to find him at the earliest possible moment. He would certainly not have placed deliberate difficulties in their way."

"But," argued Markham, "your very theory contradicts itself. Who but Coe could have bolted the door on the inside?"

"No one apparently," answered Vance with a dispirited sigh. "And that's what makes the affair so dashed appealin'. The situation reads thus: A man is murdered: then he rises and bolts the door after the slayer has departed; and later he arranges himself in an easy chair so as to make it appear like suicide."

"That's a swell theory!" grunted Heath disgustedly. "Anyway, we'll know more about it when Doc Dore mus gets here. And my bet is he's going to wash the whole case up by calling it suicide."

"And my bet is, Sergeant," Vance replied mildly, "that he's going to do nothing of the sort. I have an irresistible feelin' that Doctor Doremus will inform us that it is not suicide."

Heath screwed his face into a questioning frown and studied Vance. Then he snorted. "Well, we'll see," he mumbled.

Vance paid scant attention. His eyes were moving over the desk. At one side of the blotter lay a quarto volume of "Li Tai Ming Ts'u T'ou P'u," by Hsiang Yuan-p'ien.

"You see, Markham," he said, "Coe was apparently dreaming of his latest acquisition in peach-bloom shortly before he departed this life. And it is rather safe to assume that a man contemplating suicide does ple. There is no sign of a struggle; not indulge his acquisitiveness and investigate the history of his ceramic wares just before sending a bullet into his brain.'

Markham waited without answer-

"And here's something else rather significant." Vance pointed to a small pile of blank note paper in the middle of the blotter. "This paper is lying a little on the bias, in the position that a right-handed man would place it if he contemplated writing on it. And, also, note that at the head of the first page is yesterday's date - Wednesday. October 10--"

"Ain't that natural?" put in Heath. "All these birds who com mit suicide write letters first."

"But, Sergeant," smiled Vance, "the letter isn't written. Coe got no farther than the date." "Can't a guy change his mind?"

Heath persisted. Vance nodded. "Oh, quite. But in that case, the pen would, in all probability, be in the holder set. And you will observe that the pen container is empty, and that there is no pen visible on the desk." "Maybe it's in his pocket." "Maybe," Vance stepped back and bending over, ran his gaze over the floor round the desk. Then he knelt down and looked under the desk Presently he reached out his arm and, from beneath the right-hand tier of drawers, drew forth a fountain-pen. Rising, he held the "Coe dropped the pen, and it rolled under the desk." He placed it beside the note paper. "Men don't ordinarily drop fountain pens in the middle of writing something and then fail to pick them up."

Heath glowered in silence, and Markham asked:

"You think Coe was interrupted in the midst of writing something?" "Interrupted? . . . In a way perhaps." Vance himself seemed puzzled. "Still there are no signs of a struggle, and he is reclining on an easy chair at the end of the desk. Furthermore, his features are quite serene; his eyes are closed peacefully-and the door was holted on the inside. . . Very strange, Markham."

He walked to the shaded window and back, smoking leisurely. Suddenly he stopped and lifted his head, looking Markham straight in the eyes.

"Interrupted-yes! That's it! But not by any outside agency-not by an intruder. He was interrupted by something more subtle-more deadly. He was interrupted while he was alone. Something happened -something sinister intruded-and he stopped writing, dropped the pen, forgot it, rose, and seated himself in that easy chair. Then came the end, swift and unexpected-before he could change his shoes. Don't you see? Those shoes are another indication of that terrible interruption." "And the gun?" asked Heath contemptuously. "I doubt if Coe saw the gun.

CHARLES ISLE HOME OF STRANGE EXILES

Story of Their Lives Is Almost Unbelievable.

Kansas City.-On a burned and blackened volcanic island that rises precipitously from the sea nearly 600 miles west of the South American republic of Ecuador is gathered an astonishing assortment of queer human beings, says the Kansas City Times. An account of the lives of these persons on lonely Charles island furnishes an incredible, almost unbelievable story.

Weird stories of strange happenings on the bleak, lava-strewn bit of land that once was a convict settlement have been filtering into civilized haunts of man. Captains and crews of small trading vessels which put in at the island have told outlandish yarns of the inhabitants and their modes of living. So disturbing were the accounts that the government of Ecuador sent officials to the isolated point of land to investigate. The inhabitants of the island were questioned and their methods of living were inquired into. Then an official report of the investigation was filed with the Ecuadorean government and authentic information about the island was made available. And, surprising thing, the report substantiates the fantastic accounts that have been coming from the island!

Wheat, corn, rye, barley, grain sorghums, or sugar beets can not be planted in Michigan for harvest on the contract acres. These crops are included in the basic commodities. Special crops such as vegetables or small fruits also are prohibited. Small grains can be sown on the contract acres as nurse crops for seedings if the grain is cut before it reaches maturity.

The government's plan for the 1935 wheat production is expected to produce a crop totalling 775, 000,000 bushels for harvest. This will supply domestic requirements and furnish an adequate supply for carryover and export.

Next time you sew, remember that though you can see all the finest threads, it's much harder on your eyes than reading — and so requires more light.
