"Enchanted Mill" Delights Audience

Had Ponce de Leon heard of the wonders of "The Enchanted Mill" he surely would have been encouraged to give up his efforts back in 1513 to locate a fabled "fountain of perpetual youth" and endeavored to find the mill where the gratification of every whim was promised and fulfilled—where old age was turned into youth, lingers were provided with dancing feet, curious boys were made into cowboys, dolls became tap dancers, and other transformations accomplished similar to the wonders of Cinderella and other fairy tales.

Just two nights of practice on Monday and Tuesday put local talent in position to present on Wednesday evening one of the most delightful entertainments a Cass audience has had the pleasure to attend in many years. "The Enchanted Mill," a production which Turn to page 5, please

Persons not listed in the following groups who desire to play will be added to the teams already formed.

The personnel of the six groups to play in the present series follows:

The $1.00 a ton payment on March 1 will represent a total of $478,816.80 to farmers affiliated by contracts with the factories at Caro, Sebawaing, Saginaw, Alma and Lansing.

OPTIMISTS ADDRESS FARM WEEK AUDIENCE

Leaders in Agriculture Point to Definite Evidence of National Recovery.

A definite note of optimism pervaded the meetings at Farmers' Week at Lansing, where great agricultural leaders talked to the largest group of rural people which assemble in America each year.

Chester C. Davis, administrator, AAA, proved to the audience that better days in agriculture are immediately followed by a speeding up of factory wheels and by an increase in the contents of pay envelopes.

Mr. Davis said, "I base this statement on definite statistical information. Figures taken from waybills on four of the most important railroad systems in the southeast show that the actual shipment of industrial and manufactured commodities from Michigan to 10 agricultural states of the southeast have increased by a fraction over 45 per cent since the nation's recovery program got under way. These pertain only to carlot shipments, which are more than 95 per cent of the total shipments by weight.

"I believe you will be interested to know what effect these improved conditions in the southeast have on some of the cities of Michigan. Shipments of automobiles from Lansing, in the period from July 1, 1933, to June 30, 1934, increased 301 per cent over the shipments for the preceding year. Furniture shipments from Grand Rapids increased 25 per cent. Detroit shipments of automobiles increased 138 per cent in the same period."

Administrator Davis also pointed out the direct benefits of the AAA program to Michigan farmers. Payments on wheat contracts brought $720,485 to Michigan contract signers for 1933. Benefit payments on the 1934 corn-hog contracts in Michigan will be $3,500,000. Mr. Davis explained the benefits which the Michigan beet producers will obtain from the adjustment program, and told of the efforts of the AAA to aid Michigan milk producers and the growers of sour cherries.

Dean Chris L. Christensen, University of Wisconsin, stressed the importance of the dairy industry in Michigan agriculture. He believes that an increase in employment in cities will be immediately followed by a great increase in the consumption of fluid milk and of products manufactured from milk. The dean believes that the decrease in the purchasing power of city residents is the cause for present prices of dairy products.

The Week at Lansing

(By FRANK D. BROWN,
Special Correspondent.)

Governor Fitzgerald sustained the first major reversal of his tenure last week Wednesday when the senate turned thumbs down on his proposal that the Western State Teachers' College at Kalamazoo be closed in the interest of economy.

Headed by Senator Frank E. Mosier (R) of Fennville, the special committee appointed to investigate the feasibility of closing the school, submitted its report recommending the continued operation of the institution as well as that of the three other normal schools. The report was unanimously adopted by the senate, thus definitely sidetracking this particular phase of the administration's program.

Western State Teachers' college was declared by the committee to be one of the six leading teachers' colleges in the United States and that Michigan's four teacher training schools rank among the first 20 in the nation.

The need of an extensive study of the whole educational problem in this state was cited by the committee. It was suggested that this be done "to the end that the efficiency of the entire system may be increased and bettered and that every economy possible be accomplished in order to make as great a saving as possible to the taxpayers of the state."

The legislature took an early adjournment this week, both houses recessing Wednesday until Turn to page 2, please.

LOCALS FALL BEFORE STATE CHAMPIONS

Invade Caro with Hopes of Retaining Thumb Supremacy.

Holland Christian continued their streak of 24 straight victories when they defeated the Maroon and Grey cagers Friday, February 21. The Cass City boys must rest, at least for a time, with the doubtful honor of being the only team to hold a lead over the champions at the half.

The Hilltoppers opened the evening hostilities with a determined assault that established them ahead of the visiting giants. The visitors awoke in the second period and demonstrated their power. However, this frame was fairly even. The Maroon men had an 18-15 lead at the midway mark. Both teams returned to the fracas with renewed enthusiasm. When Cass City lost Ward, her high point scorer, they could not meet the offensive genius of the Holland Christian center, Zwier. Shortly after the resumption of play, the visitors took a lead and for the rest of the game they continued to increase Turn to page 8, please.

CARO MAN RECEIVED LIFE SENTENCE

Youths Implicated in Bean
Theft Sentenced Five Days After Crime Act.

Ephraim Westfall of Caro, who several weeks ago pleaded guilty to the charge of being a "fourth offender," was brought before Judge L. C. Cramton in Tuscola county circuit court on Tuesday for sentence. Michigan statutes make it mandatory for persons convicted of four crimes to receive a life sentence, and this was the penalty for Westfall. He was sentenced to life imprisonment in the state prison at Jackson. The court recommended, however, that after two years the authorities may consider a pardon for the prisoner.

Westfall's first offense was the theft of a horse and his sentence was 90 days in the reformatory at Ionia. The second offense was grand larceny and for that the penalty was one to five years in the state prison at Jackson. The next two misdemeanors were forgery with sentences of 2½ to 5 years and 5 to 14 years in Jackson prison. All of these convictions were in the Tuscola court.

Pete Urban, 18; John Timko, 17; and Cyril Timko, 19, were arrested Sunday morning by Sheriff George Jeffrey on the charge of stealing 12 bags of beans from the Nelson Arnold farm in Fairgrove township on Feb. 1 and selling them at the Fairgrove elevator for $34.75. They pleaded guilty in Justice St. Mary's court on Monday morning Turn to page 8, please.

Train service has been "off schedule" for several days on the P. O. & N. R. R. during the past week and several passenger trains were cancelled, while the first freight for many days arrived yesterday. Snow and disabled engines, principally the latter, have been the seat of the trouble.

Charles Rocheleau will move his family from Gagetown to Cass City where he has been engaged to work for E. A. McGeorge.

Thirty-five Years Ago.

The rain of Wednesday night combined with the melting snow of the day before flooded the property on the north side of Main street between Seeger and Oak streets. In opening the store on Thursday, H. ### OPTIMISTS ADDRESS FARM WEEK AUDIENCE

Concluded from first page.

State College, in concluding a talk on the outlook for Michigan dairymen, said, "Michigan dairymen, because of their closeness to markets and of their ability to produce milk with home grown feeds at low cost, will be in an enviable position as compared with producers in most other sections of the nation."

L. J. Taber, Master, The National Grange, said, "We can, in this land of plenty, preserve the political and the religious liberty for which our forefathers died, and we can develop an economic liberty that completes the privileges of America and makes possible the assurance of a recovery that touches not only the pocketbooks but also the minds, the patriotism, and the spirits of men."

Hon. John C. Ketcham, state insurance commissioner, told his audience, "Wise men make use of every opportunity offered and think things through to the end. We must march steadfastly onward, preserve those things which are worthwhile, and add to the store of worthwhile things. Agricultural leadership should be sane, progressive, sensible, and practical."

C. H. Bramble, Master, Michigan Grange, advocated a legislative program to lower state and national taxes, to stop the exemption of securities from taxation, to obtain a workable old age pension, and to prevent radio advertising of liquor.

J. W. Lentz, president, Michigan Farmers Union, made a plea for the cooperation of all agricultural groups because they all have the same primary object, the betterment of the farmer and of his family.

R. V. Gunn, economist, Michigan State College, said, "Statistics prove definitely that the farmer is in a much improved economic position. The income of Michigan farmers has increased from $119,000,000 in 1932 to $160,000,000 in 1934."

B. F. Beach, secretary-manager, Michigan Milk Producers, said everyone should help to obtain increased consumption of milk and told his audience that, if all people were drinking the amount of milk needed to provide their bodies with a correct diet, there would be no surplus of milk and prices for milk and its products would be high enough to permit the dairyman to make a profit."

E. A. Beamer, president, Michigan Livestock Producers, believes that a fuller utilization by farmers of cooperative marketing organizations would help them materially in keeping agriculture on a permanently profitable basis. He said, "Industry jumped at the chance to form a closely knit organization during the past two years. It is up to the farmers to do likewise."

THE WEEK AT LANSING.

Concluded from first page.

next Monday night. The briefness of the work-week was occasioned by the Democratic state convention in Detroit last Thursday to which place the senators and representatives of that party hid themselves. The lull in the proceedings also furnishes the opportunity for some of the institutional committees to make their junkets to the north country.

In these days of distressed taxpayers and limited state revenues, the junket as it was once conducted by committees of both houses has come to be regarded as of doubtful value and great expense to the state. The prolonged and costly trips to visit fish hatcheries, to inspect some prison or other state institution are now frowned upon by both the public and the conscientious legislator. The usual practice in the past was to make these junkets occasions for bacchanalian indulgence, the expense of which came out of the pocket of the taxpayer. Although a few committeemen still insist that these tours of inspection are necessary to their work, the number of forays has been greatly reduced and much of the exuberance of old is now missing.

The anticipated report of the senate committee investigating Senator Wilkowski's recount in Detroit failed to make its appearance this week. Senator A. L. Moore (R) of Pontiac, chairman of the committee, informs your correspondent that the report will be finished and ready for presentation this coming week, likely Tuesday.

Senator Don VanAntwerp (R) of Fremont, chairman of the senate elections committee, states that his group will also submit a report this week on the two contested senate seats. While the report has not yet been written, it is known that the committee is unanimous in the recommendation that Senator Dale D. Doyle (D) of Saginaw and Senator Harold Saur (R) of Kent City be permitted to retain their seats. No fraud is charged in the conduct of the vote by which these men were elected.

The election contests in the house are believed definitely shelved and probably will remain so. It is understood that one of the four contestants has withdrawn his bill of exceptions and gone home.

Senator Moore, who is chairman of the senate's taxation committee and one of the foremost students of tax problems in Michigan, created a stir in several circles this week by his introduction of the first of a series of bills designed to revise the present gasoline and weight tax laws.

The senator's first measure proposes to increase the gas tax from three to four cents and earmark the resulting increased revenue for distribution among the public schools under the terms of the present Thatcher-Sias act. The second bill, which is yet to be introduced would reduce the weight tax on automobiles from 35 cents per hundred to 25 cents.

Some of the serious problems confronting the legislature have been listed in a series of questions prepared by Senator Moore. Bills have been or will be introduced covering each of the several questions propounded. It is the desire of the taxation committee to secure an expression from the citizens of the state as to what course should be followed in each instance.

Among the questions prepared are the following: "Which is more important, the payment of current and future taxes, or the collection of delinquent taxes?"

"Should the state delinquent tax sale be held May 1, 1936? If not, what should be done?"

"Should the state continue to acquire title to tax delinquent lands that are sold at tax sales?"

"Should the taxpayer who pays his taxes promptly receive a discount for prompt payment?"

"How can real property best be relieved from the sales resistance now caused by the presence of delinquent taxes?"

"Can the real property owner receive any real relief until his land has a market value as well as an asset value?"

"Should real property be taxed having regard to its ability to pay?"

"Should new taxes be developed in order to remove a portion or all of school support from real estate?"

"If the tax is one within the ability of real property to pay, should the penalties for non-payment be made more severe?"

"Should the balance of the state property tax be repealed?"

"Should the sale of liquor by the state liquor stores be subject to the sales tax? It is not now."

"Should the sales tax on food stuff be repealed?"

"How shall old age pensions be financed?"

"Should unemployment insurance have any tax support?"

"Should all descriptions of property for tax purposes be prepared in the county treasurer's office?"

"Would the collection of all taxes by the county treasurer make for efficiency and economy?"

"Is it wise to set up as a tax adjustment board the various local assessing boards or any other local agency?"

"Should there be a homestead exemption from all taxation for aged people? If so, in what amount and what age?"

"What relation do the mortgage and contract moratorium laws have to the delinquent tax problem?"

"Is it more profitable to rent than it is to own your own home or farm?"

"Can there be any substantial recovery in this state until home ownership has become an asset?"

In the house, Rep. Earl McNitt's bill to pay county road commissioners from the highway funds of the county rather than from the general fund is ready for final passage. On general orders this week an amendment was attached to it providing for the election of commissioners by a vote of the people rather than by appointment by the boards of supervisors as is the case in most counties.

Rep. Fred Holbeck (R) of Arenac has introduced a measure which, if enacted into law, would entitle homesteads of all persons over 65 years of age to a $2,000 tax exemption. In order to secure the exemption, however, the taxpayer would have to reside on the homestead for at least five years.

House approval has been given to a bill which would loosen banking credit to permit the modernization of Michigan homes under the National Housing Administration. The measure provides that banks, trust companies, and building and loan associations may accept mortgages running for as much as 20 years thus permitting the purchase of the Federal Housing bonds. At present these institutions are limited to paper maturing within five years.

Visions of a 90-day session are fast fading. With one month of the 58th legislature already a matter of history, few important pieces of legislation have been enacted to date. Observers foresee a repetition of past sessions that have dragged along four or five months without a great deal of accomplishment until the last two or three weeks when both houses go at their work with a vengeance. The speed with which bills are passed during the closing days of the average session is terrific. It is not at all uncommon to witness as many as 100 bills being approved in a day. So rapid is the pace that only the committees that release them know what they actually contain.

Clipped Comment

Unemployment insurance would not add one cent to the purchasing power of the United States, declares Virgil Jordan, distinguished economist and president of the National Industrial Conference Board, Inc., in a debate in the current Rotarian Magazine. To this, Secretary Frances Perkins of the Department of Labor replies that if unemployment insurance had been in effect several years prior to 1929, the benefit payments would have gone a long way toward stabilizing industry and reducing the severity of the depression.

In normal times, Mr. Jordan points out, the unemployed fall mainly into four groups: vagrants, the incompetent, the chronically unemployed, and the indigent. If these are taken out of the pool of unemployment, the unemployment problem becomes of little social importance. The situation is different in a depression. "But," he says, "all students of this subject are in agreement that unemployment insurance cannot take care of depression unemployment."

Insurance, therefore, is primarily a relief measure, according to Mr. Jordan, and should be so judged. If continued into normal times it will tend to make unemployment permanent, and will impose a severe tax on workers. "Workers in insured occupations would be given a preferred status in society. The rest of the country, including farmers, would be paying a tribute in order to give unemployment relief as a legal right to a specially selected group."

Secretary Perkins, while admitting that insurance alone is no cure-all, and will not put men back to work, defends it as a necessary instrument for social security.

"Under modern conditions, it is practically impossible for the individual worker, however thrifty, to lay by, through his own efforts, sufficient to tide him over the rainy day of prolonged unemployment or loss of earnings due to sickness or advancing age."

The cost of unemployment insurance, she believes, should be considered a necessary part of the overhead cost of production, and it would be a charge relatively so small as to be almost negligible.

"In Great Britain," says Miss Perkins, "a considerable sum of money was kept in circulation through the payment of these insurance benefits. It was spent on the daily necessities of life, and saved thousands of small merchants from disaster."

Lesson for February 10

PETER PREACHES AT PENTECOST

LESSON TEXT—Acts 2:22-23, 36-42.

GOLDEN TEXT—Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. Acts 2:38.

PRIMARY TOPIC—When Peter Preached a Great Sermon.

JUNIOR TOPIC—What Peter Preached at Pentecost.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Story of a Wonderful Day.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Source of Spiritual Power.

In teaching this lesson it is essential that the full meaning of Pentecost be apprehended. It is desirable, therefore, that the entire second chapter of Acts be brought into view.

1. The Day of Pentecost Fully Come (vv. 1-13).

1. The significance of the day (v. 1). Pentecost is from a Greek word meaning fifty. It was the feast held fifty days after the wave sheaf offering (Lev. 23:16). The wave sheaf typifies the resurrection of Christ (1 Cor. 15:20-23).

2. The gift of the Holy Spirit (vv. 2-4). On this day the Holy Spirit descended upon the disciples. This does not mean that the Spirit was not in the world before this, for throughout all the ages he has been in the world, giving light and life to it.

3. Upon whom the Spirit came (v. 1; cf. 1:13-15). The twelve and others, both men and women, to the number of one hundred twenty, which shows that the gift of the Holy Spirit was for all believers, not merely the apostles.

4. The marks of the Spirit (vv. 2-4). These marks were external and internal.

a. External.
(1) The sound of a mighty wind (v. 2). This is suggestive of the mysterious, pervasive and powerful energy of the Spirit.

(2) Tongues of flame (v. 3). Each of the one hundred twenty was crowned with such a tongue for witnessing.

(3) Speaking in foreign tongues (v. 4). This miraculous gift characterized the apostolic age, but no authentic case has been reported in modern times.

b. Internal. This is seen in the transformation wrought in the disciples. Peter, who shortly before this covered before a Jewish maid, now with boldness stands before the chief rulers and declares that they have murdered their King and are guilty before God.

5. The effects (vv. 5-13).

a. The multitudes were filled with amazement and wonder.

b. Some mocked and accused the disciples of being intoxicated.

11. Peter's Sermon (vv. 14-17). Peter's sermon is as wonderful as the gift of tongues. It demonstrates the presence and power of the Spirit because he was a Galilean fisherman, without literary training. His homiletical analysis is perfect.

1. The introduction (vv. 14-21).

a. Defense of the disciples against the charge of being drunk (v. 15). He cited Jewish custom, showing that they would not be drunk at such an early hour of the day.

b. A scriptural explanation (vv. 16-21). He showed that this was a partial fulfillment of Joel's prophecy (Joel 2:28-32).

2. The proposition, or theme (v. 36). This was the messiahship of Jesus. The argument which followed proved that Jesus was the Lord upon whom they were to call in order to be saved.

3. The argument (vv. 22-36). It was threefold.

a. From Christ's works (v. 22). He was approved of God among the Jews by his miracles, wonders, and signs, with which they were familiar.

b. From his resurrection (vv. 23-32). The Old Testament Scriptures had foretold the death and resurrection of Christ (Ps. 16:8-10). The disciples themselves were living witnesses of Christ's resurrection (v. 32).

c. From his ascension to the right hand of God (v. 33). The proof that he had ascended on high was the wonderful miracle of the Spirit's operation in their midst (John 16:7).

4. The effect of the sermon (vv. 37-42). Many people were convicted of their sins; some three thousand repented and were baptized. The evidence that the coming of the Spirit was real was:

a. That they continued steadfastly in the apostolic teaching (v. 42).

b. They continued in fellowship with the apostles (v. 42).

c. They continued in prayer (v. 42).

d. They gave their possessions to sustain those who had need (v. 45).

e. They lived gracious lives (vv. 46, 47).

Question Box By ED WYNN The Perfect Fool

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I went into a very fine cafe and ordered a cup of coffee, but I refused to drink it. It looked just like "mud." Can you tell me how or why a reputable cafe could serve coffee that looked like "mud"?

Truly yours,

VIC TORRY.

Answer: In all good eating places you will find the coffee looks like "mud" for the simple reason that the coffee is always GROUND right before it is cooked.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I have been in ten drug stores but have been unable to get any union plasters. The druggists all say they wouldn't have them in the place. Can you tell me why?

Sincerely,

I. M. A. HEEL.

Answer: The reason the drug stores haven't any union plasters in their places is because the druggists are afraid of the law. There is a law against harboring FOOT-PADS.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

Can you tell me the worst penalty imposed on a bigamist? In other words, what would be the severe penalty for a man marrying three women?

Truly yours,

UNO AWL.

Answer: His penalty is having three mothers-in-law.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

Where does the goods go when you get a hole in your stocking?

Yours truly,

ANA POLOGY.

Answer: The same place your fist goes to when you open your hand.

MY BOY COMES HOME

By ANNE CAMPBELL

I THINK I know what heaven is like now—

A little yard where grass is growing green;
A robin chirping on an apple bough,
As from the fence the crimson roses lean.

It is late afternoon, and suddenly I hear the gate click . . . the familiar sound Of youthful footsteps coming close to me.

A shadow throws its length across the ground.

I think I know what heaven is—the strong

Young arms that I have waited for in vain;

An eager voice that I have missed too long,

And heaven breaks! My boy is home again!

THROUGH A Woman's Eyes By JEAN NEWTON

HER LIFE'S SAVINGS

"EXTREMELY cheerful, isn't she, for one who has seen the savings of a lifetime swept away?"

That remark about a woman I had just met reminded me of something a well known author said at the depth of the depression, when so many people complained of losing everything. She said that if all they could show for "the savings of a lifetime" was the money that had been lost, she felt sorry for them. Otherwise, it wasn't so bad!

This might seem to be optimism like that of the doctor who wasn't "at all worried about the patient's excruciating pain!" But here now was a woman who justified it. She had lost all her money, she was "well on in years," and yet she was, apparently, still happy. True, the loss of her fortune did not mean the almshouse. She had left a very small annuity, sufficient to supply the necessities of life. But for one who had for years worked for a competence to keep her in the way to which she was accustomed, this might well have been a great tragedy. It is not easy at sixty to alter habits. And to many people, to leave little to enjoy.

But this woman had already "saved" much besides her money. She had saved a good working philosophy and a sense of humor. She had saved simple tastes, and a knowledge of pleasures that are free. She had stored up provisions for her mind, where she had riches, and a capacity for always coming more such riches, that no depression or financial loss could take away.

Among life's savings, too, this woman had love, the devotion of those to whom she had given of herself or of her substance. And she had friends, whose affection she had saved and guarded through the years with no less thrift than she had saved her money. But I should say it is to the qualities within herself, "saved up," that she owes her ability to rise above financial loss, to be undowned when her money was swept away.

LET'S GET MICHIGAN'S SHARE OF FOUR BILLION.

How much will Michigan get of the new $4,880,000,000 asked by President Roosevelt to speed recovery?

It is the most vital question of the moment to this state, long distressed and long deprived of its just dues in the disbursement of previous Federal relief funds.

The answer rests with city and village councils, township and county boards and other units of government to whom the Michigan State Planning Commission the past week delivered questionnaires. It is the beginning of an inventory of public works possibilities in this state—and this community.

The commission, appointed by Governor Fitzgerald, is headed by A. R. Glancy, nationally known engineer and industrialist. Its task is to obtain before Feb. 11, or as near that date as possible, a complete picture of potential public works in Michigan on which the state can base its demands for a fair share of the giant sum soon to be released.

When the information is in hand, the commission's staff of engineers, architects, road builders and other specialists will grade the projects in the order of their importance, legitimacy, the immediacy of employment offered by them or their long-term value, etc. The commission, in turn, has been asked to make its recommendations to Governor Fitzgerald in time for their submission to the National Resources Board at Washington by March 1.

It is important to note that the signing of the questionnaire does not commit any community to go ahead with the projects it may list. The plan is a census of possible work. It gives every community a chance to be heard. Thirdly, it will enable Michigan to speak with the vigor and audibility of a united state and to place before the Administration a comprehensive list of feasible projects within its boundaries which might be carried out if Federal money, by outright grant or otherwise, is made available.

If Michigan has fared badly in the past the loss must be borne. It is a dead issue, however. What concerns all of us now is that the state shall not be slighted or stinted in the disbursement of the enormous new fund.

Because of the urgency of the situation, this newspaper asks local officials to give the State Planning Commission its full and immediate co-operation.

THE LOWDOWN ON TAXES.

It is quite generally agreed that everyone pays taxes in some form or another. The owner of visible property is the hardest hit because he not only pays direct taxes but indirect as well. He is not to be blamed because in recent years he has demanded a replacement plan whereby everyone who shares in the great advantages of living in this country assists in supporting the government, local, state and nation.

Speaking of indirect taxes, the National Investment Transcript gives a summary of some of the methods by which this revenue is derived.

The purchaser of a loaf of bread pays 17 kinds of taxes when he lays down his coin in exchange for "the staff of life," says this periodical.

If he walks home on leaving the store, he is wearing out shoes which are taxed 23 times.

If he rides in an automobile, he is paying 42 different kinds of taxes.

If he takes a subway or an electric car, the total number of visible taxes which are part of the cost of his fare runs to about 58.

There is not a thing in the world that isn't taxed. The house we live in represents a legion of taxes—running all the way from taxes on standing timber to taxes paid by the store which sold the finishing paint and the manufacturers which produced it. Food, clothing, transportation, entertainment, periodicals, books—the tax bill is a substantial item in their cost to the consumer.

It is obvious that these indirect taxes—which provide the bulk of governmental revenues—fall more heavily on persons of moderate means than on those with higher incomes. A loaf of bread will last a millionaire as long it will a laborer—and the tax is the same on the loaf each buys. Tax reduction would be the greatest boon the average American could have—a boon that would at once be reflected in more jobs, more purchasing power, more spending for the necessities and luxuries which keep the industrial machine turning.—Register, Storm Lake, Iowa.

He has been employed as camp meeting evangelist in many of the largest camp meetings. He comes to us well-recommended, a man of talent and spiritual power.

This will be an unusual treat. Plan to take in all of these meetings.

Sanilac County Ministers' Tribute to Late Rev. W. B. Weaver.

The Sanilac County Methodist Episcopal Ministerial Association met at the home of the Rev. and Mrs. G. H. Glidden in Marlette, on Monday, Feb. 4. During the business meeting, a resolution was passed relative to the passing of the beloved president, Rev. W. B. Weaver, late pastor of the Crosswell M. E. church.

The resolution was to the effect that the association wished to express their deep appreciation of the Christian life and character of Mr. Weaver; his wisdom in counsel; his brotherliness at all times; his strength and sweetness in adversity; his unparalleled zeal in preaching the Gospel and in winning others to Jesus Christ and His way of life. Also, they extended their sincere sympathy to Mrs. Weaver and the family in the loss of a dear husband and father.

The ministers who attended the meeting were the Rev. Frank Purdy of Brown City, who read a paper on "Early Methodism," which was well received. Rev. H. N. Hichens, of Peck, who was elected president of the association in place of the late W. B. Weaver; Rev. R. J. Chase of Lexington, who was elected vice president; Rev. W. L. Jones of Kingston; Rev. J. H. James of Decker; Rev. J. Blackmore of Carsonville; Rev. R. C. Parshall of Port Sanilac; Rev. and Mrs. J. K. Diben of Sandusky; Rev. M. T. Seelye of Marlette. Rev. and Mrs. J. H. Glidden provided a bountiful dinner, and Mrs. Atkinson, choir director of the Methodist church, sang two beautiful numbers.

Clipped Comment

IF EVERYBODY WERE JUST LIKE HIM, WHO COULD PRINT A PAPER?

He was a prominent citizen of the community. He controlled quite a bit of property, and had financial power in the community, but he did not take his home paper. He either could not spare the small sum per year to pay for the paper, or he was too big a man to fool with taking a paper like that. At any rate he did not take the home paper. If everyone in the community had been like him there could have been no home paper.

His wife gave a swell reception. The local paper gave a good account of the affair. He would have thought if awful if it had not been in the home paper. But if everybody had been like him there could have been no home paper.

His daughter got married. It too, was a swell affair, and the local paper gave a proper account of it. He felt that a man of his importance was deserving of such notice by the home paper. But if everybody had been like him there could have been no home paper.

He got seriously sick, and the home paper told all about it. His friends looked to the paper to know how he was getting along, and when his condition got worse, they all knew about it through the paper. But if everybody had been like him there could have been no home paper.

He died and was given an appropriate funeral. Care was taken to see that the home paper got full information regarding the important events of his life, so as to give him the final "write up" that a man of his standing deserved. But if everybody had been like him there could have been no home paper.

The family requested several copies of that issue of the paper, and sent in a card of thanks. But they acted seriously aggrieved when asked to pay for the card of thanks and the extra papers. Thought all this ought to be free too. And the minister who had charge of the funeral, a former resident of the place but now living elsewhere, wanted the paper to send him a copy containing an account of the funeral — free, of course.

Sometimes the newspaper wonders how "prominent" a man can be when year after year he will fail to have his name on the list of the home paper, but expects that the home paper shall show him the same consideration as it does a patron.—Normangee Star.

TENDERFOOT SCOUT MEETING

A special meeting was held in the church parlor to help a number of new boys to become Tenderfoot. A good interest was shown, with promising results with many boys. Some of the older Scouts came along and helped the boys in their knotty problems. Looks like a good camp again this coming summer.

THE DAYS THAT USED TO BE

By ANNE CAMPBELL

THE happy days that used to be
Trail green paths of allure.
The little home that sheltered me—
A nest warm and secure—
Sends up its smoke against the sky
Of memory. . . . Once more
I see the golden sun climb high
Above my cottage door.

There never were such dawns as those—
So fragrant and so clean;
The dew that sparkled on the rose,
The morning silver sheen,
Shed over all of us the grace
Of the beginning day . . .
It was the early morning face
Of God that turned our way.

So simple were the hours we spent,
So tranquil were our days,
It is small wonder that content
Adorned our humble ways.
And something of that beauty clings
To bless us still, and bind
The present to the happy Springs
That we have left behind.

father owned five sailing vessels, including this very Abby Baldwin in which they had made their wonderful honeymoon trip.

But the sailors, and indeed the officials of the Abby Baldwin, had felt differently. They were not above acquiring fortunes, and they had instantly deserted the ship and made for the gold region. The rumor of gold, spreading like prairie fire between breakfast and the noon dinner, had found the ship emptied by sunset. Philip and Abigail had signaled a Chinese crab catcher, and in his little shallop with stained brown sails he had rowed them and their carpet bags ashore.

They had gone to "the Frenchwoman's," a quaint-looking adobe house on a hill, with an upper balcony and shutters. There were no windows, but there were tents of mosquito netting over the bed, and the bare floors were clean. Downstairs was merely a level of dim arcades, earthen-floored and smelling of spilled wine, where men lounged on benches, and where the Frenchwoman herself tended the bar. But the upstairs room had been comfortable enough and Abigail had eaten a shore meal of fish stew, dumplings, fresh soft black figs, sour bread, and thin wine, with some appetite.

This would do for the present, she had said. But one could not live quite like a savage, after all, and immediately after breakfast tomorrow Philip must find a really nice place, and a nurse. If not, then they would have to go back to the ship.

Philip had returned flushed, distressed, and annoyed from his search the next morning; he had returned flushed, distressed, and increasingly annoyed from the searches of the following days. The Frenchwoman's was not only the best, it appeared to be the only possible place for Abigail to stay, and to contemplate a confinement there, with the noise and drinking and the smell of wine below stairs, and with nobody but whiskered old Madame Bouvier to attend her, was madness. Desperate, Philip had rented a spanking team and a loose-wheeled buggy and had begun to drive about the adjoining country looking for shelter.

Abigail had covered passionate pages with the story of their adventures, and had put the letters into the canvas flap of her trunk, under the pasted picture of the little girl with the rope of roses. Some day they would get home again, Philip, she, and the baby, and what a story they would have to tell!

Meanwhile, fifty miles southeast of foggy Yerba Buena, they had found refuge on a rancho. It was managed by a widow, one Senora Castellazo, who lived farther south in another hacienda, and was willing to rent this one to the strangers. It had contained no furnishings whatsoever when the Lawrences had moved in.

But many trips to the Abby Baldwin had pretty well transformed the dismal place. Philip, breathlessly grateful that somehow, with the aid of a Mormon doctor from Benicia and the care of two stolid, wall-eyed Mexican women, Abigail had actually brought forth a first-born daughter, had made no complaints. He had had carted down wagon loads of chairs, carpets, china, bed linen, books—all the personal possessions of himself and his bride.

A bride! Poor Abigail had laughed forlornly on the first anniversary of her wedding day. It had found her weak and weary, stretched on a mattress on the floor of one of the cool rooms, with a burning August day hammering away at the spread level acres of the rancho outside. Beside her had been Annie Sarah.

They had brought her in hot dusty grapes, and hot dusty figs, and warm wine, and finally goat's milk, to solace her in her ordeal. Except for that, neither Mexican woman had volunteered anything. They had watched the frightened, doubtful, breathless struggle apathetically, until their oily brown hands had actually grasped Annie Sarah. After that they had seemed capable enough.

Anyway, it had been gotten over, somehow, and Abigail had been free to cry a little, thinking of her room at home in an orderly, shaded Massachusetts village, with Ma's lavender-scented linen on the smooth bed, roses in a green glass vase on the bureau, and the lace curtains blowing softly in and out of the opened upstairs windows. Lilies, trembling grass, and Grandpa's grave in the graveyard, and doughnuts and currant jelly—oh, dear!

As soon as the baby and the mother were well upon the road to normal living, Philip and Abigail had seriously discussed going home.

Then old Senora Castellazo had died, and her sons had wished to dispose of the Santa Clara hacienda. Four hundred acres for nine hundred dollars. Philip had considered it a wise investment. There was fruit—some fruit—there already, there were sheep and cattle included in the sale price. If figs and grapes would grow there, why not other fruits—peaches and pears?

He would take his wife and daughter back to New England, he promised, on the first suitable ship; it would be a long hard trip for a woman with a baby, but the journey across the plains would be worse, and there was no further hope of the Abby Baldwin.

No, upon consideration it had seemed to Philip that this sunshiny, sheltered flat region, well inland, was the coming district, and that by holding onto this property ten years, fifteen years, he and Abigail could not fail to be among the prosperous pioneers of the new world. Philip was one of the men who had shot dead the gold craze with an epigram: "a flash in the pan."

Meanwhile Fanny Lucy had been born.

"Look here, young lady, aren't there any boys where you came from?" Philip had said, half serious, half teasing, as he held his second daughter in his arms. Abigail had looked at him anxiously. But he had not been really angry.

Only it had been rather trying that a fine ship had left for South America and eastern ports on the very next day. She had delayed so long in San Francisco harbor that Philip and Abigail had really hoped to be able to sail on her. But Fanny Lucy had delayed, too, and had unconsciously affected her parents' destinies thereby.

For letters had gone to Boston on that ship, and letters, four months later, somehow had struggled overland in answer. The respective families of Abigail and Philip had been perfectly delighted at their venture, and wrote that they were certainly envious of the dwellers in a country where there was no snow, no thunderstorms, and no poverty.

Abigail wrote glowing accounts of her new life to the family at home. She and Philip were going to build a really nice frame house, with bay windows, a bathroom, and a cupola. Everything they touched prospered; people called them "the Lucky Lawrences."

And Abigail had eight daughters and one son, and the girls all married, during the last Sixties and early Seventies, in a land in which women were still rare and prized. San Francisco grew like a mushroom, and Philip might have opened a thousand doors to great wealth, had he been a man to see. But he closed one after the other with his own hand, and went blindly on in an infatuation of satisfaction with his rolling acres, his miles of fruit trees, the growing family over which he ruled supreme.

Some of the girls went east when they married, some lived in San Francisco or Stockton, some died. It was not a salubrious day for pioneer women, with one out of every seven dying in childbirth. Some were poor, opening boarding houses, scrimping in lonely cross-road villages.

But no one of them ever forgot that she was a Lucky Lawrence, and belonged to a distinguished New England family. They talked incessantly of the significant fact that the Lawrences had not come to California as pioneers—oh, dear no! Mother Lawrence had come to San Francisco harbor on her wedding trip, on one of Grandfather Baldwin's own trading ships.

The one son, Patterson Lawrence, duly married, too, and lived in the house with which his parents had replaced the old adobe hacienda.

Abigail, and after her her daughter-in-law, in their fervor to encourage shade in that hot, dry country, planted everything upon which they could put their hands, close to the house. They did not foresee that the pampas grass and the verberna trees, the peppers and roses and evergreens, would grow closer, thicker, darker every year. Eventually the pretentious old frame building, with its scallops of millwork and its bay windows, its cupola and balustraded roof, was caught tightly in dusty heavy leafage, and the garden filled with mossy, slippery patches where even in summer no light crept in on the sickly grass.

For thirty years the House of Lawrence had been in eclipse, and the garden showed it. Acre by acre old Philip Lawrence and his son Patterson had watched their fortunes decline; the old pioneer of the Yerba Buena days lived to see the end of the century, and the end of his own prosperity, and died, leaving what remained in hands even less capable than his own.

For Patterson Lawrence was a poet, who lived merely to gather worthless old books about him, to dream over the painstaking penning of insignificant essays, which were rarely printed and for which he was never paid.

At forty he married a poet's daughter, who had been precariously existing for all her sixteen years upon bread, water, and the "Sonnets from the Portuguese," in a shanty on Rincon hill. Editha, before her early death, brought to the House of Lawrence two sons and three daughters. Sixteen when she married, ten years later, when Ariel was born, she quietly, happily expired, to music, as it were.

For Patterson had been reading poetry to her, the four older children, by some miracle, quiet and occupied down by the creek, and Ariel in her mother's arms taking a fourth-day view of life, when death came.

"She looks as if she were listening, Pat! She's going to be a great poet, and make all our fortunes!" Editha had said. And one minute later she had slipped away, leaving the prophecy to gild little Ariel's childhood.

The widowed elderly father did the best he could for them all until his oldest son was nearly eighteen and Gail a capable, bustling house manager two years younger. Then the big guns began to boom across the water, the service flags flashed in answer upon many a quiet pole in Clipperville, and Patterson Lawrence, fifty-eight years old, put a copy of Keats in one pocket and a copy of Shelley in the other and hurried off to die of flu in overcrowded Washington, just as sure as his loyal children were sure that he was helping his country and doing the patriotic thing.

Then Phil and Gail had to shoulder the burden. Gail Lawrence was supremely the girl for the job. She was squarely built, womanly at sixteen, brimming with interests, activities, ambitions, and enthusiasms.

By this time the once lucky Lawrences had almost no money. Phil had all but finished high school, and all the friends, relatives, and neighbors said that certainly a bright, fine boy like that ought to complete his course. But as Phil and Gail quite simply agreed, meals were more important than education. So Phil stopped his schooling and went to work at the Iron Works, and Gail, upon being offered a job in the public library, accepted it gratefully.

They scrambled along in the respectable old house very happily; they were always laughing, singing, going on picnics; they were passionately devoted to each other, and everyone was sure that they would get along splendidly. Were they not the last of the Lucky Lawrences?

Surest of all was Gail, the resolute, undaunted, optimistic mother and sister, cook, nurse and lawmaker in one. Life had been a story to Gail, for a few years, and she had turned a fresh page eagerly every day. She and Edith were going to marry delightful men, and Phil should marry, too. And Sammy should live in Edith's house and Ariel in Gail's, and Ariel should write wonderful poetry. There would be plenty of money for everything, as there always had been . . . soon.

But somehow it had not worked out that way. Gail had grown a little more sober, a little thinner, as the years had slipped by; they had all grown shabbier. Even to her, poverty began to seem a serious matter.

Phil, to her concern, had never quite seen the joke of being poor and being orphaned. He had always been brief, worried, and unresponsive when Gail had tried to drag him into her dreams. And Edith hated poverty, too; it hurt her pride. She had grown quieter, bookish, intellectual, something of a recluse.

Sammy had done nothing except slide through his shoes and get "D minus" marks in his studies. And Ariel was completely spoiled. They had all hailed her as a poet before she could fairly write. She did write poetry, and that was enough for Clipperville. Clipperville was not critical. The Challenge published everything Ariel wrote. And Ariel was discontented, proud, and unmanageable.

Altogether, the outlook was discouraging, and promised to grow more so. There were moments when even Gail could not quite believe in the luck of the Lawrences.

Her twenty-third birthday found her a quick-witted, eager, capable girl, secretly a little bit scared and doubtful, but outwardly gay, irresponsible, and pleasant to look at—like all the Lawrences. Even the boys never seemed to go through lumpy or spotty phases, but were clean-skinned and bright-eyed through boyhood as through babyhood. The older four had tawny thick hair, which had tumbled all over their heads as children, but which on occasions could be made to take more fitting positions.

Ariel was different: frail, pink-cheeked, and cream-skinned, with frightened big hazel eyes and a small mouth. Ariel's hair was corn-silk gold.

Phil worked in the Iron Works for eighty dollars a month. Gail was paid half that monthly for a seven-day week in the public library. Edith made thirty dollars a month as assistant in the book department of Muller's big store. Sammy was supplementing his school career at nineteen with eager labors as errand boy and general office help on the Challenge and Ariel was supposed to be in high school. Ariel was now a fairytale seventeen.

And Gail was twenty-three today. She had presents at the breakfast table in the good old Lawrence fashion. Nobody knew where they came from, or who paid for them, but the Lawrences always managed to give each other presents on anniversaries.

Then Gail and Edith rushed the breakfast paraphernalia into the sink. Ariel was off to school, Phil had disappeared; Sammy had gone first of all. The two girls scrambled through the necessary kitchen work with a speed born of long practice.

Then Gail and Edith went upstairs, passing the open front door on their way. They hesitated a minute, looking into the jungle of garden. There was a hush of spring, green grass, contraband daisies, and a burst of untidy bridal wreath down by the old fence.

"Look at the pear tree, Gail!"

"Doesn't it just take your breath away?"

They shut the door and went upstairs, Gail saying of the unmade beds, "Let's flap 'em."

Edith's face clouded a little. She hated compromise and slovenliness; she hated the hard conditions of her life that made some truce with them necessary. The clock on the landing struck once, for the half hour after eight; she was due at the department store, and Gail at the library, at nine.

"We'll have to," she conceded briefly, sighing.

"I shouldn't have worn my office dress to breakfast," the older sister observed, glancing at her cuffs. She got a bottle of some cleaning extract, and began to dabble at spots.

"Egg!" she said disgustedly. Her glance approved of Edith. "That looks better on you than it ever did on Mary Tevis," she observed.

Edith studied herself in the mirror dispassionately.

"I never would have gotten it," she said. "I don't like dots. But it certainly has come in usefully."

"The worst of Mary Tevis is, she'll give you a bunch of things one time, and then forget you for seven years!" Gail, having made herself comparatively presentable, said briskly, "Now when I'm rich, I shall have a list of girls—D—n such a shoe lace!"

"Abigail, you ought not say that. You'll get Ariel saying it."

Gail mended her lace, looked up with a flushed face.

"Didn't you think Ariel was beautiful at breakfast, Edie?"

"Oh, yes, she really is."

"Do you think—this may all be my imagination—but do you think she's interested in boys, already?"

Their eyes flashed together consciously.

"Oh, yes, I know she is!" Edith answered unhesitatingly.

"She's only seventeen!"

"Well," said Edith, who combined a recluse's sensitiveness and temperament with an occasional flash of daring, "I was fond of the boys at sixteen."

Edith, pretty as she was, had never had a beau, and Gail knew it. But it was the unwritten law of sisterhood not to say so.

Gail merely said perfunctorily, "Oh, well, yes, so was I! But, Edith, there seems to be something different, in the way Ariel is."

The younger sister's quick keen gaze was lifted; Edith's serious look met Gail's consciously.

"Secretive," she offered.

"Well! Well, yes," Gail answered on a nervous laugh.

"Ariel will get married before either one of us, because we happen to be a little more particular!" Edith pronounced, with her little air of old-maidish snobbery. When Edith said things like that it vaguely irritated Gail.

She left Edith at Montalvo boulevard, and turned up the Calle to the Plaza, where the library stood.

The day had begun. Gail unhurried the street door, and the usual waiting group of stragglers came in. Miss Foster clamped the newspapers into their holders; little Rose Cahill wheeled wire crates full of books to the different cases, and Gail took them from the barrows and filed them away in their places. The dim big rooms saw various noiseless activities afoot.

Gail thought of her youngest sister, as the dreamy dim hours in the library began to slip by. Ariel was less fitted than any of the other Lawrences for the struggle of life. She was only an innocent, bewildered child.

She wanted—in fact all of them wanted—leisure and beauty and luxury in life. Ariel seemed to want it more than the others, somehow, or in some indefinitely different way. She seemed made for beautiful gardens, beautiful porches, spacious, luxurious rooms. She pined, she drooped, in the atmosphere of poverty, griminess, dullness.

Thinking of all this, Gail abstractedly stamped and scribbled, and tossed the books about. When the whistles droned noon, and a sudden responsive pang of hunger stabbed her, she put on her blue hat and walked up the street to Muller's, to meet Edith.

Edith, neat, cool, and clean, lifted an ecstatic look to Gail as she decorously finished the sale of seven novels to a passing motorist. The girls idolized and idealized each other, and were proud of their friendship. All the passion of the younger sister's rather cold nature was in the look; this was one of her awaited moments every day, when her flushed, adored, tousled Gail came in and they went to lunch together.

They went in at the side door to the home kitchen, and let up the shade, and began their preparations for lunch. The kettle was boiling over a head of gas, for Ariel always came in promptly at twelve, and had her lunch and was gone before the older girls arrived.

Edith sat wearily, luxuriously, over rolls, honey, and tea, her eyes absent, her hand idly stirring the cup.

"Gail, I was thinking that we ought to learn some more poetry, as we do the beds. Member how we used to rattle it off, when we were little girls?"

"We ought to do it again! It was lots of fun. I'd like to learn Noyes' 'Highwayman,' and some of Hodgson's poems 'Eve' and 'The Old Ball'."

"Ede, do you suppose things'll ever be any easier for us? Do you suppose we'll have clothes and a car, some day, and belong to a country club?"

Edith pondered it.

"I—don't really—know," she said at last hesitatingly.

"I mean," Gail fumbled along wistfully, "poor people—people who have a hard start—do."

"Yes, I know they do!"

"Edith, I could stand anything for myself. But it worries me—about Phil and Ariel."

"I don't think Phil minds being poor so much—not since he's been going with Lily Cass," Edith offered.

"Well, I think I want him to mind! I don't think Phil is ambitious," Gail countered, with an anxious little laugh.

"Maybe we're foolish ourselves," Edith said, suddenly gloomy. "Maybe our luck's changed."

"Fooling ourselves?"

"Yes. Do you think we are?"

"You mean," Gail said soberly, after a space, "that we aren't getting anywhere?"

"Well, are we? We are stuck in Clipperville," Edith summarized it. "Nobody knows we're alive. We're not in debt, because the doctors and dentists won't send us bills—" but we ought to be. We haven't any clothes, any social standing—"

"Oh, we have that, Ede!"

"Well, if we have, if we are the Lucky Lawrences, if we were one of the most important families in California, once, what are we now? Who's going to marry us? Who is there here for us to marry, anyway? What's to prevent our living on and on here, old maids, scraping along as best we can—Phil marrying that horrible Mrs. Cass, Sam getting a job somewhere and going away, Ariel—committing suicide, I suppose—"

"Oh, Edith, Edith!" Gail protested horrified. "Don't talk like that! You're blue. You're just tired today."

We Are Stuck in Clipperville—Nobody Knows We're Alive.

or it's spring, or something! Why, darling, nobody knows where changes are coming from, or when. We're having our hard times now instead of later, that's all! We'll have dresses and country clubs and trips and—and fun, theaters, I mean, and everything, one of these days!"

Edith's grave, intellectual face was doubtful.

"You're twenty-three," she suggested significantly.

"I don't think I mind for myself; I mind for you," Edith said as they walked back to work. "You ought to be having good times. You ought to be dancing, and going to little restaurants, and—and everything."

"And so ought you!" Gail answered cheerfully, although she felt a knife in her heart.

"Oh, I—!" Edith dismissed herself lightly, and immediately fell into that silly strain for which Gail could find no better expression than "old maidy." "I have a feeling," Edith went on complacently, "that I will meet my husband and be married to him all in a very short time. You know that fortune teller that was at Mabel's—"

"I wish she wouldn't talk that way!" Gail thought, suddenly hot, irritable, and discouraged.

She felt more weary and discouraged as she went on her way. The long afternoon in the library dragged. She felt bored. A sense of injustice oppressed her. Twenty-three—and she might just as well have been fifty-three.

WHEN YOU TAKE A LAXATIVE

... use a spoon

It isn't what brand of laxative you take that's so important—it's the form. A liquid laxative can be taken in any required amount. If only a little is needed, you need never take a bit too much.

Doctors favor the easily measured liquid laxatives. Instead of any form that does not encourage variation from the fixed dose. A fixed dose may be an overdose for you—or your child.

Always remember this one thing about constipation: the secret of any real relief is reduced dosage.

Even though the senate voted against the United States joining the World Court, the American history class, after a study of both sides of the question expressed its approval of our entrance by a vote of 50 to 10. Below are some of the reasons, as given by members of the class:

A nation of the size of ours cannot stand aloof and let the other countries go on without having something doing with which we shall be concerned. We take too much for granted. We think that, as we are a strong nation, we should be the strongest. We consider ourselves worthy of privileges which would never be granted to other nations.—Patty Pinney.

I believe we should join the World Court if we are honestly in favor of World Peace and try to cooperate with other nations who are in favor of world peace also. We have powerful influence which could be used to advantage in settling disputes among countries.—Frank Morris.

I think we should join because our great influence in international matters would be one strong link in that great chain called world peace. Joining the court would not mean joining the League of Nations. The court does not use force but common sense justice and persuasion, so why should we be against such an inoffensive organization?—Martin Moore.

The seventh and eighth grade shop classes are beginning a bird house contest. The bird houses are to be judged on the following points: Suitability—Does it provide an ideal home for which it was built? Prizes will be given at the close of the contest in March but as yet these prizes have not been decided upon. Judges will be decided upon in the near future also.

WINTRY SUGGESTIONS

NOW is the season, while citrus fruits are plentiful, to prepare marmalades. As tastes differ as to bitterness in the marmalades, one has to be guided as to the amount of the rind used in the mixture. For those who like a mild and still flavorful marmalade use one each of lemon, orange and grapefruit.

Apple Salad.
One of the most satisfactory salads for winter is the one of apples—small-sized Baldwins, or any good apple; peel carefully after coring and use apples of uniform size. Cook in sugar sirup with a small handful of the little cinnamon candies, which add flavor as well as color. When cool serve on lettuce stuffed with cream or cottage cheese and garnish the top with a sprig of parsley.

Grapefruit and Almond Salad.
Cut the pulp of two grapefruit into dice, add two ounces of blanched and chopped almonds to the drained pulp. Dissolve one package of lemon gelatin with boiling water and the juice from the fruit to make two cupsful, using one cupful of grapefruit juice and one of water. When the mixture begins to thicken add the almonds and a teaspoonful of sugar. Pour into a mold and set away to harden. Serve with mayonnaise as a salad or with whipped cream as a dessert.

Casserole of Cauliflower.
Soak a head of cauliflower in salt water for half an hour, head down, so if there are any insects lodged in it they will come out. Break into sprigs of flowerlets and cook in very little boiling water 20 minutes. Take one and one-half cupsful of cooked macaroni, one and one-half cupsful of strained tomatoes, one-half cupful of grated cheese, salt, pepper and buttered cracker crumbs. Add the cheese to the tomatoes and cook until the cheese is melted. Season with salt and pepper and pour over the layers of cauliflower and macaroni. Cover with buttered crumbs and bake about 20 minutes. Serve hot.

Paint for Battleship
A battleship requires for a complete painting of its exterior hull, 250 gallons of anti-corrosive paint and 175 gallons of light gray paint. The anti-corrosive and anti-fouling paints are used on the bottom and the gray paint on the ship's sides.

Trade Winds
Trade winds, in their naming, had little to do with commerce. They get their name from an old English definition of the word "trade" which once meant "straight path."

Shell-Fish Spins Silk
The quality of silk spun by the pinna, a small shell-fish inhabiting the Mediterranean sea, is so good that the fiber was formerly used in the manufacture of stockings.

Memorial to King Arthur
On the northwest coast of Cornwall, England, the people of Tintagel have erected a stone memorial to King Arthur, mythical warrior of the Sixth century.

When the Marlette FERA team failed to arrive, a local independent aggregation filled in to defeat the Cass City Freshman College boys 22-18.

Today (Friday), the Maroon and Grey quintette journeys to Caro where they will resume their perennial warfare, their amiable hostilities, with the Purple and Gold Caro boys. A real battle was waged when the county seat team invaded the local lair with the Cass City basketballers winning 13-11. Another good contest is expected Friday.

LIFE SENTENCE

and the same day made a similar plea in the circuit court. Wednesday afternoon, they were brought into circuit court for sentence.

Testimony revealed that Urban was the leader of the trio and persuaded John Timko to accompany him in the theft on Friday night. The beans were taken to the Timko farm and the next day, Pete Urban and Cyril Timko marketed the beans at Fairgrove under the name of John Koval and the check was endorsed and cashed under that name. Out of the proceeds, John Timko received $2.50 and Cyril Timko $1.50, Urban retaining the balance of the $34.75. The Timko brothers claimed that Urban had previously been indebted to them for the amounts they received.

Urban was sentenced to 6 months in the state reformatory at Ionia. The court placed the two Timko boys on probation for 6 months, told them they must learn to respect other people's property, and that they still had the opportunity to become useful citizens in their community if they would learn the lesson that crime does not pay.

Prompt work on the part of the sheriff's department and court officials brought conviction and sentences to the three offenders within five days after the crime had been committed.

CIRCUIT COURT.

The jury returned a verdict of "no cause for action" Wednesday in the case of the Michigan Savings Bank of Vassar vs. J. F. Gladly and D. C. Atkins, Jr. The suit was introduced by Lewis Walton, receiver of the bank, for the collection of notes given by Mr. Gladly to the bank. Gladly, in his testimony, claimed that the payments made on his obligations had not been credited on his notes held by the bank. The case consumed the greater part of three days in the Tuscola county circuit court.

A divorce was granted in the case of Arthur Eckfeld vs. Louise Eckfeld and the court granted the defendant the restoration of her maiden name of Bromm.

Winning of an award at one of the Farmers' Week shows is a major achievement, according to members of the college staff, who say that the exhibits compare favorably with those shown at any fair in the country. Upper Peninsula growers again were most prominent in the potato show. Saginaw Valley and Central Michigan farmers proved to be the best exhibitors of small grains and seeds. Corn growers from the south end of the state took most of the prizes for that grain.

Competition in the livestock shows becomes more intense each year as the list of competitors grows. The exhibitors grow more canny in their methods of fitting and showing animals as they gain experience from year to year.

Hundreds of visitors competed in the various contests during the week. Anyone who won a prize had to be good.

Many farm organizations hold their annual meetings and elect officers for the ensuing year. These officers are charged with helping to promote the interests of their group, and the men selected are chosen for their ability and leadership.

Married Persons Live Longer

Married persons live longer than single ones in Bulgaria, according to an investigation. But scientists attribute their longevity more to heredity and open-air occupations rather than to their connubial state.

Forced to Plant Mulberry Trees

The Virginia Colonists were forced to plant mulberry trees because King James had imported silk-worms and mulberry trees into England and felt that silk would be a profitable venture for Virginia. He also wished to discourage the planting of tobacco, since he did not approve of its use.

Michigan Presents Solid
Front for Relief Money

In a co-operative effort to obtain every possible dollar for local and county-wide public improvements, from the four billion eight hundred million dollar federal relief funds soon to be allocated by President Roosevelt, officials of our community, townships, and county, today are engaged in working with the Michigan State Planning Commission.

Questionnaires, requesting our officials to list projects of every type that may come under the federal limitations, are being filled out here, and must be in the hands of the Commission in Detroit in time for presentation in Washington March 1. The time limit for the return of questionnaires to the Detroit office is February 11.

Projects of two kinds are to be listed. First, those of a self-liquidating nature, a portion of which cost must be borne locally; second, projects of a conservational or recreational nature, funds for which will undoubtedly come under the head of "welfare relief," and are scheduled to be outright grants.

Many projects, some of them greatly needed in this area, seem closer to realization because of the great sum of money now available in Washington, and our officials are joining with Governor Frank D. Fitzgerald and his State Planning Commission in the urgent task of compiling project statistics for immediate consideration.

Only through close co-operation of every unit of government, Governor Fitzgerald believes, will Michigan obtain its proper share of this gigantic federal appropriation.

A. R. Glancy, Chairman of the Commission, has this to say:

"Michigan, in the past, has benefited meagerly, for one reason or other, in the distribution of Federal funds for public works.

"The reasons given are several. Whatever they may be, let us treat past criticism as water over the dam. Michigan merely asks now its just share.

"To this end, we have launched an inventory of potential projects in the state so that by March 1 we may present to Washington a well-rounded program.

"Questionnaires have been sent to 3,500 political units in the state. The signing of them does not commit your community to proceed with the projects cited, but merely furnishes the commission with a list of all possibilities in the public works field.

"The Commission is non-political. The movement in neither Republican nor Democrat. It represents only an intelligent effort, we believe, to get Michigan as a unit thinking on more constructive lines, burying group differences, and enabling us as a state to speak with the undivided strength of a state, instead of the weakness of small groups whose pleas are easily turned aside."
