COUNTY COOPERATIVE SHEEP TREATMENT

Concluded from first page. flock owners may dip their sheep for scab, ticks, or lice at a cost for dip only at a few cents per head.

Sheep going into the tank must be neither thirsty nor tired and must be sheared at least two weeks before hand that the new wool growth may better retain the dip to kill internal parasites.

On Thursday, May 23, A. J. Bell of the agricultural engineering department of Michigan State College will supervise the construction of a concrete sheep dipping tank on the farm of Otto Monte, Fairgrove, at which time it is desired that sheep raisers interested in construction of such a convenience attend for instruction and information.

Testing Seed Corn Is Crop Insurance

Temperatures in Michigan last October were so low that corn stored in cribs and containing a high percentage of moisture is apt to be injured for seed purposes, according to the farm crops department, which recommends that all corn be tested for germination before planting.

The corn varieties best suited for Michigan conditions are: Duncan, Clement's White Cap, and M. A. C. Yellow Dent for the southern section; Pickett, Golden Glow, Fern, and M. A. C. Yellow Dent for central Michigan; and Golden Glow, Northwestern Dent, and early strains of Pickett for the northern counties.

750 ATTEND FUNERAL OF C. W. PRICE MONDAY

Concluded from first page. with a Bachelor of Arts degree. He later received his Master of Arts degree at the University of Michigan. He served as state and county surveyor in Hillsdale county.

In the teaching profession, Mr. Price was principal at Grass Lake and Tecumseh and served as superintendent of schools at Grass Lake for three years and Jonesville for four years. Following this, he accepted a position as superintendent of schools at Ewart. After four months in that place, he resigned to accept a position with the State Department of Public Instruction as high school inspector.

Three months after coming here, Mr. Price was elected president of the Cass City Community club which office he filled most acceptably for two years. He became a member of the Rotary club, serving that body as a member of the program committee. Other duties which are required of a man in his position for the betterment of community life, he performed well and willingly.

Mr. Price was a member of the Phi Delta Kappa, a national honorary society; the Alpha Tau Omega of Hillsdale college; Hillsdale Lodge, No. 32, F. & A. M.; and the Jonesville Knights of Pythias. He was affiliated with the Presbyterian church as a member.

Mr. Price was united in marriage with Miss Ella Holmberg on August 1, 1922. Besides his widow, he leaves twin children, Kathryn and Kenneth, age 8; his father, J. B. Price, of Hillsdale; and one brother, Clay Price, of Toledo, O. Mr. Price's mother passed away in September, 1933, shortly after he established a residence here.

Funeral Service at School. At the funeral service here Monday afternoon, Rev. G. A. Spidler read as a Scripture lesson Matt. 25: 31-40 and the 23rd Psalm, and Rev. W. R. Curtis offered prayer. Rev. Chas. Bayless, president of the Cass City Community club, gave the following tribute on behalf of fellow citizens of that organization:

"Those of us who came to know C. Wayne Price as a fellow-worker in community undertakings, found him to be a very gallant gentleman. He was conscientious to a marked degree; keen to do his duty as he saw it; willing to perform his share—and more—of tasks that would serve the welfare of children and youth."

"He was tender-hearted and sympathetic in the presence of suffering and need; enthusiastic about possibilities for growth and development which he saw in young people needing encouragement toward self-discovery and self-expression."

"He was quick to appreciate the humorous aspect of any situation, even when the joke was on him. His speech, whether in public or in private, was often surcharged with mingled laughter and tears, scarcely kept at times below the surface of his manner. This very capacity for emotion made him as irrepensible as a boy, on occasion, and as gay. Yet when necessary, he could be self-contained and as deliberate as one might wish."

"All in all, he was tremendously adaptable to the manifold demands of public life; relating himself helpfully to the whole range of life, from tender impressionable childhood on one end to harsh, political-minded adulthood on the other. To keep one's own spiritual compass set on a chosen course in the midst of the conflicting claims and critical attitudes of a public which does not often trouble itself to understand and to make allowances, is no mean accomplishment. It would be untrue to say that he came through it all without scars. No one does. But it needs to be said that the scars which his sensitive spirit earned were received in a good cause, for he was ever the champion of little children, and of the weak, and of the handicapped."

Life Measured by How We Live. Rev. Paul J. Allured, in his address, said in part as follows: "A great soul has completed the first stage of his immortal career. He has finished it with honor. The highest success in any man's life is measured not by how long he lived, but by how he lived. Wayne Price packed more of worth-while living into his 39 years than many just as cultured and privileged have done in twice that span of life. He has lived in Cass City only one and two-thirds years but endeared himself to more individuals—parents and children—than many who have lived here all their lives. The secret of his attaining such a degree of efficiency and accomplishment lies in a combination of two characteristics. 1. His natural sensitiveness to human feeling and need. 2. His conscientiousness in performing his tasks. Each of these virtues may have been to some degree inherited—and all honor to his parents who, through God's marvelous laws of inheritance gave him this running start."

But we know that he himself cultivated these qualities of Christian character as fruits of his faith in the Son of Man. 'Whoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only, in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you he shall in no wise lose his reward.' 'Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even the these least, ye did it unto me.' No superintendent of schools could have fathered and mothered his own school children more conscientiously than Mr. Price.

"A week ago he returned to school for what proved to be his last attempt to perform his duties as superintendent and instructor. Today, one week later, his still youthful body lies here in the midst of these beautiful flower tributes which express so much affection from hundreds indebted to him for services rendered and example he set. But his spirit is no longer confined to his body. Physical death has in no way limited the active life of the soul. It has rather released it for a larger service which shall never more be interrupted by illness, or even by necessity for rest and sleep. Those whom he loved in the flesh, he will still love in a more divine and effective way in the spirit. The work of this school will still be on his heart and every child and youth here will remain in his heart."

"But such translated souls seem to need us in their continued service for building God's earthly kingdom. 'Apart from us they should not be made perfect.' His spirit demands of us no lip-service, though few could be more appreciative than he, but his soul does demand deed-service. There are so many things he would have done and wanted to do, and if we take up the banner and carry on in imitation of his spirit, his early death shall not have been in vain."

Faculty Member's Tribute. During Mr. Allured's address, he read the following tribute to Mr. Price by a member of the school faculty:

"Our captain has departed. Yes, physically he has left us but no man with a heart like our Charles's, with a soul as big as it could be, with a good deed every day in his program, could depart without leaving every one with whom he came in contact bigger and better able to fight life's battles."

"His greatest moment, I believe, came in June, 1934, when he stood before his first graduation class at Cass City and with tears in his eyes pleaded from the bottom of his big heart for his boys and girls as he called them to catch the spark of Christian usefulness. Wasn't that typical of the captain? It was easy for him to say because he lived just that kind of a life. He builded on a firm foundation of Christian service."

"Faithful service is always rewarded and we feel secure that our captain and your trusted public servant will hear the words, 'Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.'"

California's King's Highway. There are thousands of miles of paved highway in California, says a writer in the Detroit News, but perhaps the most traveled is El Camino Real—the King's Highway. Motorists speed down this historic road inconsequently, little heeding that its length from San Diego to San Francisco was first painfully explored by the slow pilgrimages of Spanish padres who centuries ago were accustomed to make the journey on foot.

Island of Fishermen. The French colony in the north Atlantic ocean, off the coast of Newfoundland, comprising two small groups of islands, known as St. Pierre and Miquelon, are the only possessions left to France of her once powerful possessions in North America.

The Southern Cross. A pearl oyster found by pearl fishers in western Australia in 1874 was discovered to have formed nine pearls instead of one, and these were fastened together in the shape of a cross. The occurrence was taken to be a miraculous sign by the fishermen, and the pearl cross under the name of "The Southern Cross" became famous in the annals of industry.
