A thorough dry-cleaning or exposure to sunlight and air before storing in a compactly wrapped or closed container is the most effective way to prevent moths from damaging clothing or blankets, according to home management specialists of Michigan State College. Clothing in closets can be freed from moths if fumigated with caroon tetrachloride. Since the gas formed by evaporation of the liquid is heavier than air, it should be placed in a shallow dish on the hardly carry a pail of water. I knew that I was in a very serious condition and I never want to pass through another winter like this. I read about RE-JU-VA and tried it. I am so much improved that I say, it is wonderful. Swelling has gone, pain and soreness so reduced, that I am now able to work. I sleep well nights without being disturbed with pain. My strength has returned, until I feel like a different person. I take particular pains to recommend it to other sufferers because of what it has done for me."

Mr. Grover has been a great sufferer as many people in St. Johns know. He is happy over the results obtained by this medicine and is anxious that other people afflicted in like manner. may know about it.

RE-JU-VA is not an opiate and therefore is not a pain-killer. It is not advertised to kill pain in a few minutes. But its aim is to assist Nature in removing the cause of the pain. This takes days, weeks, sometimes months as this medicine is not violent in its action, being absolutely harmless. The secret of its success is in its singular action upon glands of secretion and where the glands and internal organs function properly, usually there is health.

RE-JU-VA is also a most effective builder and tonic.

ties. Briefly, he Bainbridge proposes that the Colby

Constitution be changed to take from the states and give to the federal government power over the chief social and economic questions so that the New Deal may be saved from the doom pronounced upon it by the Supreme court.

In the course of a two-hour talk with the Washington correspondents the President sent up a trial balloon on the plan he had conceived for remodeling the government to fit his program, declaring that he favored curtailing the sovereignty of the states and giving the central government full control over agriculture, industry, commerce and all other occupations and enterprises. He said this question of amending or re-writing the Constitution must be settled by a vote of the people. In some ways, he said, the Supreme court decision was the best thing that could have happened to the country because it clarified the issue as he presented it. The issue must be met by moving one way or the other, he said, back to the 13 states or forward to the modern interpretation.

We are the only country in the world which has not solved this problem, Mr. Roosevelt said. We thought we were solving it, but now it is thrown right back in our faces. We are relegated to the "horse and buggy" interpretation of the interstate commerce clause.

That many prominent Democrats will be alienated from their support of Mr. Roosevelt by this pronouncement is certain. Already there has been launched a movement for those of the party who seek "a return to constitutional government" to unite with the Republicans who are of like mind. Its leaders are Bainbridge Colby, who was secretary of state in President Wilson's cabinet, and Chief Justice William R. Pattangall of the Massachusetts Supreme court.

Mr. Colby has written to a number of Democratic leaders of na $T_{\rm program\ was\ halted\ when\ the}^{\rm EMPORARILY\ the\ work-relief}\ when\ the\ officials\ found\ that\ the\ projects$ were too costly, and they set about hunting up projects that would provide maximum work at minimum cost, so that the promise to employ 3,500,000 persons can be carried out. Meanwhile approval of all applications was held up.

They have an average of $1,100 per man to spend. Yet the $1,000,000,000 in projects already planned will cost approximately $2,000 for every person taken off relief rolls and kept on government pay rolls until July 1, 1936. To reduce the average, Mr.

I. Warning Against Forgetting God (Deut. 8:11-18).

God is forgotten. 1. Through plenty (vv. 12, 13). It is always true that in time of prosperity the people forget God. 2. Through pride (vv. 13, 14). The natural tendency of the human heart when visited with abundance is to be lifted up with pride.

3. Through self-confidence (vv. 15-18). The inevitable result of pride is self-confidence. The children of Israel arrogated to themselves the power to get wealth. It is ever so that material prosperity turns the natural heart away from God as the source of blessing. II. The Sin of Robbing God (Mal. 3:7-12).

One of the sins of Israel which brought upon them the chastening hand of the Lord was that of withholding the tithe. The prophet assures the people that their bringing into the storehouse their tithes and offerings would be responded to by God in sending them abundance. III. Talents Are to Be Used for God (Matt. 25:14-30). 1. The distribution of talents (vv. 14, 15). This distribution was a sovereign act, giving to each one of his own servants his own money.

2. The employment of the talents (vv. 16-18). Two put to use the talents given them, resulting in doubling their value. One hid his talent.

3. The accounting for the talintendents. ents (vv. 19-30). The Lord later demanded an accounting from each one of the servants. In a letter to a friend in Washington it was revealed that Chief Justice Pattangall had decided to resign in order to join with other Jeffersonian Democrats to bring about a coalition with Republicans and the restoration of "constitutional government" to replace the New Deal.

Neither of these gentlemen hopes to prevent the renomination of Mr. Roosevelt, but they believe he might be defeated at the polls by a coalition movement.

Of Democratic senators a number, like Smith of South Carolina, Connolly of Texas, Clark of Missouri and King of Utah, frankly expressed their opposition to the President's views. Others expressed rather mild approval All were surprised. The conservative Republicans of course were outspoken in their disapproval of the abrogation of states' rights, and the more radical men of that party were divided. Senator Borah of Idaho voiced the opinion of many others when he said:

"There is plenty of power, absolute power, to deal with all national problems. We don't need a constitutional amendment nearly so much as we need some one to draw bills in accordance with the Constitution. You can't draw a bill on great subjects of this nature as you would draw a resolution for a town meeting. Let it be understood that the construction which the Supreme court has placed on the interstate commerce clause gives ample and complete and plenary power to deal with all matters of national concern."

 $\mathbf{H}^{\mathrm{AVING}}$  startled the country by his proposition for changing the basic law, Mr. Roosevelt turned his attention to speedy legislation that might salvage part of the NRA, considering, it was authoritatively said, that amendment of the Constitution was not a matter of the immediate future. He asked congress to pass the Clark resolution in modified form extending the NRA until April 1, 1936, with the understanding that it would be a skeleton organization to collect and classify data but without power to enforce wages, hours or fair tvade practices secretary.

disturbance of peace and order gether with the millions upon millions of dollars invested in them by private citizens.

This measure was naturally the chief topic of discussion at the annual convention of the Edison Electric Institute at Atlantic City. President Thomas N. McCarter told the assemblage that the privately owned power industry must fight for its life against the administration's "most devastating and destructive attack." He told of presenting "in person" to the President "a dignified memorial" setting forth "facts that seemed to the trustees to threaten the existence of this industry and appealed to the government for a get-together policy for the elimination of whatever abuses and wrongs might be found to exist," but said he got nowhere.

S OLELY on account of ill health, Ramsay MacDonald has retired as prime minister of Great Britain and gone to Lossiemouth, his home in Scotland, for a good rest. His successor as head of the national cabinet is Stanley Baldwin, the veteran leader of Conservatives who has been serving as lord president of the council and in reality has been the deputy Stanley prime minister Baldwin since the national government was formed seven years ago. Mr. MacDonald exchanges places with him, thus remaining in the cabinet, but without departmental duties. The date of his last cabinet meeting as prime minister large. was the sixth anniversary of his assumption of the office for the second time. With the exception of H. H. Asquith he has held the office continuously for the longest period in modern times.

Of the other changes in the cabinet the most important was the transfer of Sir John Simon from the foreign office to the home office. He is succeeded in the former by Sir Samuel Hoare, who has been chief secretary for India. Mr. Mac-Donald's son, Malcolm, only thirtyfour years old, was made colonial

ONE of the most prominent figures in the World war passed from the scene with the death in Essex, England, of Viscount Byng of Vimy. As a young officer of cavalry Byng distinguished himself in campaigns in the Sudan, in South Africa and in India. In the great war he won undying fame by his desperate defense of Ypres when it was attacked by overwhelmingly superior German forces which for the first time used poison gas and flame throwers. He was given a baronetcy for this and other gallant work, and after serving as governor-general of Canada from 1921 to 1926 he was made a viscount and later a field marshal. He was called from retirement in 1928 to become commissioner of London's police force, but ill health forced him to

It was thought as many as 250 lives were lost, and great numbers of families were rendered homeless. Slowly, the sharply contrasting pair moved off, the younger still half supporting the elder and moderating his gait to a stroll so Stuart's quick and audible breathing should grow no more pronounced. A slender young man was climbing a jammer in the mill yard. He lifted himself above the heads of the crowd and held up a hand for silence. This, however, was not readily obtained. A drenched and dripping citizen was only just pulling himself from the chill waters of the pond, a self-conscious grin glued to his lips as the black hair was plastered to his brow by the soaking it had received. On a peeled cedar log in the pond a giant of a man in a gaily checkered shirt, peavey in his hands, balanced and surveyed the throng, a picture of frank and boastful self-satisfaction.

The slender man on the jammer continued to wave his hands and finally these jibes and compliments were smothered by other cries for silence.

ward shore. Tossed it high and far, sending with it his chance for a quick and certain victory.

The silence was that of amazement. This was like letting a man you had knocked down get to his feet and have another chance; this was opportunity handed to truculent Bull Duval on a silver platter. This was the sportsmanship one read about . . . And then came an excited clatter of tongues, rising to an even greater roar. The outsider was through fooling, through with trickery and through with strategy. He was going to run the Bull off his feet!

Fast and faster spun the log. Spray from it drenched the men to their knees, rained behind them into the pond.

The log was hissing in the water. Rigidity ran from the Bull's shoulders down his back. He was upright, now, where Elliott was poised forward. And his scowl was gone. His brows no longer gathered but were upraised; his eyes were wide open in the distress of fatigue and he breathed through his mouth. Thought of the rules swept the crowd, because Duval was edging to the right. He moved slowly, awkwardly, at the cost of great effort, on toward the center of the log. Was he trying one more trick? Not likely. A man under such a strain does not attempt strategy . . not fair strategy. As he progressed an inch at a time Elliott countered by also creeping toward the center so his end might not dip beneath the surface.

Both men had their arms extended and Ellictt's grin had faded to a sort of curious smile, a speculative alertness . . . Close and closer they came together and then, as their extended hands were all but touching, Duval suddenly flecked his right wrist in a pass at Elliott's left hand.

"Ah, th' dirty-" But Bird-Eye's high scream was cut short by an ominous roar. The Bull, facing defeat, had overstepped all rules. The slightest touch on the other's body would upset his balance, now, and after Elliott had proven himself above taking what was even recognized as a fair advantage, the last vestige of loyalty to town or whatever it was which had put men on Duval's side was whisked away.

On Duval's face was ruthlessness along with the flush of fatigue and humiliation. He would be the last man on that log, though disqualified for any prize. At any cost he would stay on that log. But would he? Elliott, a steely quality coming into his grin, retreated until he was out of the other's reach. He loosed the last reservoir of his energy and by the way his feet flickered and clawed and spurned that log one might well have believed that until now he had enly played with this crowned king of the river that flowed past Tincup.

Watchers felt their middles aching as they followed those straining contestants. Again the Bull sought to strike Elliott's extended hand and missed by inches. His left hand raised jerkily, up and up. His body tilted. His great torso was twisting, wrenching at the hips, and, seeing this. Elliott leaped high. came down running, sent water sloshing back and forth the length of the stick until with a threaty cry of rage and humiliation, of hatred and jealousy, the great Bull, missing a stride, went sideways and backward, disappeared beneath the surface of the pond with a mighty splash and came up blowing and shaking his black thatched head. Hats went into the air, then, along with yips and yells and enthusiastic oaths as Ben Elliott. panting heavily, brought the log to a stop and, hands on his knees, stood blowing and grinning and watched the man whose title he had taken swim for the broom sticks. The Bull slunk quickly toward the boiler room of the mill, water streaming from his pants and him here while th' birlin' was goin' on. He's likely made other arrangements." "Th' dirty stinker!" Bird-Eye said beneath his breath. "So he's drivin' him out already, is he? Well, th' low down-"

"Who's driving who out?" Elliott asked.

"Misther Brandon, Americky moight be a free country but Tincup ain't in it, thin. Owld Donny ain't welcome here 'nd 't's likely he's got his orders to move on." Elliott hitched his pack-sack a bit higher.

"What's this? Orders? What's wrong with him? Seemed like a harmless old gaffer to me. Bent on coming to Tincup, too; wanted it like a little kid wants candy. Got through the town, to his mill my goat. . . . Who's going to run him eff?"

Bird-Eye had hopped nimbly to a log from which point he could see across bobbing heads. "Ah-ha!" he exclaimed. "Sure, it's Misther Brandon hisself who's a-runnin' owld Donny off !" Elliott craned his neck and could see, half-way to the depot, two men on the sidewalk. One was his companion in travel earlier that day: the other a man he had not seen before. The latter had Don Stuart by one arm but that contact was not the friendly assistance which Ben had offered the old fellow. As Elliott locked, the feeble old man tried to draw away, but the other was insistent, scarcely hesitated in his progress toward the station.

"Train west's due now," Bird-Eye said. "Sure, 'nd pore owld Donny, he'll be a passenger. It's a cryin' shame, kapin' him away from Tincup so!'

Elliott started forward, Bird-Eye at his heels, crossing the street, leaping to the high board sidewalk and swinging on.

He overtook the two he followed just in time to hear Stuart gasp: "-ain't long to . . . live, Nick. I'd like . . . stay here. . . Ain't pleasant to . . . be sick and not . . among friends." "Never mind," the other said as one might to a protesting child. "I've told you any number of times to stay away." On this reply Elliott moved abreast of the man.

"Hello, old timer!' he said, addressing Stuart. "Going some place?"

He did not look at the man said to be Nicholas Brandon. His manner en the question was almost casual.

"Oh . . hello," Dan panted. "I . . . Mister Brandon, here . . won't let me . . . stay."

Then Elliott looked at Brandon. A man of undetermined age; not old, neither young. Powerfully built, with a peculiarly white face and eyes as black as night. These eyes bored into Elliott's now, keenly, intelligently, with the lock of a man who is accustomed to gauging others without delay or hesitation. "Oh this man doesn't want you to stay !" Ben said softly. And then with a smile, to Brandon: "I sort of took the old timer under my wing today. He wants to stay here quite badly. I'll look after him."

"There's no place for him here," Brandon said positively. "Come, Stuart, it's almost train time."

don about the middle, drove his head into the man's chest, raised a knee to his groin, lifted him from his feet. swung, shoved and flung him free.

With a sharp oath Brandon went down in the half-thawed mire of the street, sprawling ignominiously on his back. Well, now! That was something else again. Men had been coming, edging cautiously near during the brief argument between Elliott and Nicholas Brandon. But when Brandon, the man who ruled Tincup and its county, was seen lifted from his *feet and tossed ignominiously into the mud, trampled by his horses, stirred by the wheels of his wagons and tractors, the street which led . . . Well, then they came a-running! Bird-Eve cackled an impudent laugh and turned to watch the faces of the vanguard who came to see their liege lord, sprawled in the mud there, scramble to his feet. Their voices were raised in incredulity. In two decades and more no man save Bird-Eye Blaine had dared lift even his voice in Tincup in other than respect for Nicholas Brandon, And now this stranger had picked him up and thrown him away!

But Brandon was up, lurching for the sidewalk where Ben Elliott stood, legs spread, fists clenched but with good humor repossessed and grinning as he had grinned at Bull Duval; grinning as a man will who loves combat for its own sake. Phone No. 182 and not at all as one who fights

Brandon halted abruptly. His fists relaxed into hands and with one of them he brushed rather aimlessly at mud on his sleeve. A dozen men were close, then, holding back, watching, waiting, listening. Others were coming. And as Brandon halted, looking up into Elliott's face and evidently fighting for self-control, one of these new arrivals pushed to the front and came up importantly. "What's the matter, Mr. Brandon?" he asked sharply, with the manner of one ready to render service.

Brandon did not reply at once. He settled his coat on his shoulders.

"Sheriff, arrest this young man immediately," he said then. "I'll swear to a complaint of assault and battery myself." A sigh of relief, of disappointment, of laxing tension, or of all these combined, went up from the growing group. The sheriff turned to Elliott and touched his arm significantly.

Where's your guts?" he pleaded. "Ain't there anybody here that needs twenty-five dollars?" Another laugh went up and when it had subsided a voice said: "Here's one. What'll I do to get it?"

This was a full, even, good-natured voice, and a quick silence fell upon the crowd, followed by an expectant buzz as the stranger moved forward, his bronzed face uplifted to the man on the jammer. "Atta boy!" Birney cried. "All you got to do, friend is to put Mr. Bull Duval off that log and stick by rules!"

as the handle swung upward in a The cedar came against the boom swift arc the man drove his weight stick and Elliott took his place on on it. His body twisted, he grunted it with a light leap. It was a good and his face wrenched into a lightleg, nearly two feet through at the ning expression of great strain as small end, twenty feet long, with the cedar, in a quarter turn, stopped a small taper, dry and peeled; a dead. . . . And Ben Elliott, sprightly log, indeed, for such a back bowed acutely, peavey high contest, a log to try the mettle of above his head, teetered back to any man matched with any sort of balance on one fcot, laughed aloud! "Quick work, big boy!" he cried. "Almost got me!"

But Duval had nowhere near gotten him; he knew it, and Elliott's manner was infuriating to him. He cursed sharply and spat and jerked 50 at the brim of his slouch hat as he shook locse the peavey and commenced again to birl.

They ran a moment easily, each waiting for the other to try some fresh trick. The Bull leaped and came down running; he leaped four times in the space of as many quick breaths. And then, as though ready to leap again, dropped the hook of his peavey into the cedar. He wavered when the handle, swept upward by the rush and weight of the spinning log, bore against his great palm. His body swung sharply to the left. He cursed as the smooth handle slipped from his clutch and Bird-Eye Blaine danced in a frenzy of delight as the peavey, handle smacking the water, disappeared in the pond and the Bull, waving his arms for balance, ran the log desperately to hold his place.

The odds, then, were no longer equal. Like a fencer with a broken foil, like a boxer with one eye closed, like a runner with a strained tendon, so Duval was now.

"Polish him off, now!" Bird-Eye screamed, like an audacious, saucy bey. "Polish him good, Misther Elliott! He's yawpin' for help 'nd the' ain't none fer him!" That was what Tincup believed.

A quick finish seemed certain, with the Bull so handicapped, without his peavey for offensive moves or to hold for balance. But what happened stilled the clamor quickly. Ben Elliott shifted an arm's length from one another. they poised. And then Duval's right his peavey. He had held it across his bedy, arms wide spread. Now toe lifted, the heel pressing downward; the buoyant log moved he swung the point upward and quickly. His left foot raised free, outward and as he ran the spinning sharp calks in its sole clawed say. Jog drew it back and tossed it to-sleeves. The pond man threw out his pike pole and brought the cedar log to shore and there Birney, the anneuncer and master of ceremonies, greeted Elliott with a clap on the back and, with the other hand, thrust a roll of currency at him.

"Here's your money and you sure deserve it !' he cried, close in Ben's ear to make himself heard. "You'd got it on a foul, anyhow. Better this way!"

Others surged around the victor and Ellictt accepted this homage modestly. "Luck !" he said to one enthusiastic well-wisher, "I got the breaks in luck."

"Luck be domned !" shrilled Bird-Eye. "I'll lick any mon ave me own old or me heavy who says 'twas luck! You got stuff, me b'y; you got guts!"

"Thanks, chum !" Elliott laughed. "I hope you don't find me out!" He shouldered his way slowly to his pack-sack and, surrounded by his admirers, with Bird-Eye in the fore, changed to his shoes again. He looked about for Don Stuart, craning his neck to see over the crowd which was new moving up toward Tincup's main thoroughfare. "Who ye mean?" Bird-Eye asked. "Owld Donny?"

"Yeah. Stuart. The old duffer's broke, on top of being sick, and I want to look out for him."

A man at his elbow said cautieusly:

"I'm afeerd old Don won't do much visitin' in Tincup." Bird-Eye turned to him inquiringly and the man nodded. "Brandon. He found

He twitched at the old man's arm but Ben broke in, brow wrinkled as if he wanted to handle a perplexing matter fairly.

"Well, now, say! No place? Suppose a place was made for him a few days? I'd sort of planned on that. There's a hotel here, and I'd be willing to-'

"I don't know you," Brandon interrupted and irritability crept into his voice. "I've never even seen you. I've known this man for years. He's an old employee of mine. This is my affair. I never have others, especially strangers, meddling." A low whisper came from Stuart and Ben rubbed his chin with one knuckle.

"Yeah. I am butting in, I guess. But . . You see, the old timer told me a little about himself. He's been lonesome a long time. I take it. He's not what you'd call in robust health. I figure that if I was in his shape I'd like to be with a few old friends myself and if-"

In the distance a train whistled and on the sound Brandon's eyes snapped.

"I've no time to argue my affairs," he said sharply. "Come, Stuart." "But, Nick! See . . . here, . . I'll never get back Nick . . again. It's lonesome, bein' . . alone, where you can't sick Nick! You're . . . hurt-. .

ing my wrist!" He winced from the grasp and on that the last shadow of a smile went out of Ben Elliott's face. He put himself squarely before Brandon.

"Let him go," he said quietly, but his look drove hard into those black eyes.

The man hesitated and flushed. "If you aren't looking for trouble," he said, voice edged with wrath, 'you'll keep out of this!"

"Fair enough. But unless you've got a better reason than I know about, let the old timer alone! Let go of his wrist!" he added sharply, as Stuart winced again.

"I'll thank you to keep out of-" "Let-go-his-wrist, you d-d bully !"

He had grasped Brandon's forearm with both hands, letting his pack slip to the sidewalk. The clutch on Don Stuart's arm loosened. With a snarl Brandon drew back and swung for Ben's jaw. Elliott ducked, swayed forward and bending his supple body caught Bran-

"You'd better come along. Elliott," he said. "You tock in too much territory."

Ben looked about almost foolishly. He was embarrassed and surprised. He had expected a roughand-tumble fight in what he considered a righteous cause and surely he was the sort who would have been on familiar ground in such an encounter. But here he was, with a sheriff plucking at his sleeve! He laughed a bit sheepishly. "All right, Sheriff. If it's arresting you run to here in Tincup, likely I'm it!"

He turned for his pack-sack and as he did so observed old Don Stuart sitting weakly on the step of the vacant store building before which the scene had been enacted. He was obviously a sick man and trouble clouded Elliott's eves. "Minute, Sheriff," he said and crossed to Don, thrusting one hand into a pants pocket.

"Here, old timer," he said gently. The hand came out and into Stuart's palm he pressed a thin packet of bills and some change. "Get one of your old buddies . . Here you !"-straightening and beckoning Bird-Eye, who approached with alacrity. "Get the old timer to a hotel. Better get a doctor, too. He's heeled enough to take care of himself a few days. After that . . . we'll see." He turned then and fastened a se vere gaze on Brandon. "And you, chum, let him alone!"

he warned. "Until a doctor says he can travel, you watch your step with him!" But Brandon ignored this. He was buttoning his coat, pushing his way through the group, which fell aside respectfully.

"All right, Sheriff," said Ben to that worthy. "Let's go!"

VUUKEI Y One lady writes: Is Electric Cookery Fast?

One lady answers: "I have used other stoves, but I have found this one more economical and faster in cooking."

Another lady writes: Is Electric Cookery Costly? Another lady answers:

"So many people think that cooking with electricity is so expensive that only a few can afford it. Well, economy can be practiced more with electricity than with other fuels, I believe."

The above quotations were taken from the May issue of Electric Cooking and are from letters received from all parts of the U.S.A.

Thus you have answers to two common questions which we have attempted to answer before by saying that electricity is the only controlled heat, that being such there is more opportunity to practice economy. That speed cooking is more or less physiological since the law of cooking does not countenance speed cooking. In consequence, one makes his own cooking speed in the greater majority of cases.

Yes, true economy may be practiced when using electric cookery.
