BUYER AND SELLER BROUGHT TOGETHER

BY LINER ADV.

After his experience on Friday with a Chronicle liner, George Hartsell of Grant township is convinced that that method of advertising is an efficient and rapid way of selling farm animals.

He advertised a Hereford and Durham bull for sale in Friday's paper. At 2:00 p. m., five hours after Mail Carrier Hall started out delivering mail on Route 2 from the Cass City post office, Mr. Hartsell had sold the animal to Albert Gallagher of Elkland township, a patron on Route 2.

Without this means of communication, how long do you figure it would have taken for Mr. Hartsell to ascertain that Mr. Gallagher wanted to buy, or Mr. G. to learn that Mr. H. wanted to sell?

Pioneer Business in New Location

Hitchcock Hdwe., Established Here 65 Yrs. Ago, Moves to East Main St. Bldg.

If moving days have joys, they are few and far between when one handles stoves and washing machines and the multitude of different bolts, nuts, screws, pipes, nails and what-have-you connected with a hardware business. These trials are being experienced this week by the George Hitchcock family, who are transferring their hardware stock to the building on East Main street recently fitted up as a store building by M. E. Kenney. Mr. Hitchcock was obliged to find new quarters because the building he has occupied on West Main street for about 17 years was sold a few months ago to the Baker Electric shop.

The new quarters for the hardware have been extensively repaired and redecorated and Mr. Hitchcock is gradually getting his merchandise placed in its new location. His son, Lyle, came from Detroit to assist his father in moving the stock.

The Hitchcock Hardware has been in business here for 65 years and is one of the oldest trade centers in Cass City. It was established here by James L. Hitchcock. Traded with Indians.

James L. Hitchcock was born and educated at Oriskany Falls, Cramton in the Tuscola county Oneida county, New York, and when he became of age, he learned the tinsmith's trade. September 10, 1858, he purchased from the government 120 acres of land in what is now known as the townships of Koylton and Dayton, Tuscola county. February 2, 1859, he purchased his first bill of goods in the state of Buhl & Ducharme of Detroit and moved on his land. He built a log cabin which he temporarily covered with sheet iron and which he afterwards made into camp kettles and sold to the Indians and first white settlers. He built the first frame house in the township and manufacured tinware which he traded with the Indians. He was married September 14, 1862, to Miss Carrie M. Turnbull of North Jackson, Ohio. She attended Hiram college when James A. Garfield was its president. Mrs. March 21. cock moved to Wahjamega and built a store and dwelling, and while he worked at his trade, his wife acted as clerk. They resided

Cass City Wins Over Vassar, 27-12

Caro Comes Here Wednesday with Team, Experts Say, Will Be Champions.

Weight and speed in favor of the Maroon and Grey, were enough to give them a 27-12 victory over a ighting Vassar team Friday.

The locals used straight football to push over their four touchdowns. The open field running of Reagh and the hard driving of Mc-Intyre were the outstanding of ensive features of the game.

Poor tackling on the defense alowed Vassar at least one of their touchdowns, when they intercepted one of the two passes attempted by Reagh, and ran it back for a touchdown through the entire Cass City team.

With improved blocking and tackling, Cass City should give Sandusky a good battle at Sandusky Friday, and barring injury will be ready to face Caro's unusually heavy team here Wednesday, October 13. School closing for institute caused this change in

The locals will depend on a running game as the lack of pass receivers makes the more open type of game very dangerous.

Two young men had lunch at he Brick hotel in Mayville on Wednesday noon, and when they had finished their meal, they walked across the street to the Mayville State Bank and robbed the town's only financial institution, making away with approximately $2,591.00 which they picked up in bills and silver from the bank counter.

In the bank at the time were Evans Kitchen, the cashier; Arthur Wood, the bookkeeper; and C. J. Riley, proprietor of a village creamery and a customer of the bank. All three were forced to lie down on the floor behind the bank counter while the two robbers scooped up the cash and made their

"One-Armed Bandits"

Taking a cue from Michigan, the Illinois liquor commission has cleaned up several cities where the slot machine racket had infested drinking places to a point where merchants were complaining of unnaid hills.

One town of several thousand inhabitants had 80 of these "onearmed bandits."

Michigan's control commission wavered temporarily after promulgating its prohibition of the coin devices from state licensed establishments. The showdown came when the Michigan State Elks association petitioned for exemption on the ground that proceeds were used exclusively for charity.

The commission, led by Chairman Edward W. McFarland, rejected the plea, suggesting diplomatically that the matter be taken up with the state legislature. The house gambling committee tried to create sentiment for licensed gambling until Attorney General Raymond Starr divested it of legal authority. ACCIDENT.

If there were a school for drivers in every community, one fundamental precept would doubtless be taught first to every student driver: "All motor car accidents are avoidable!

Do you question that precept? Suppose, then, you name over the various accidents with which you are familiar and which you believe were unavoidable. But stop a moment. After naming each one, ask yourself this further question:

"Was it not humanly possible for someone, by doing something either before or at the time of emergency, to have prevented that disaster?"

The fact is that the vast majority of motor vehicle fatalities and injuries are caused, directly or inand farm should take immediate directly, by the mistake, the incompetence, the failure of someonesometimes more than one. Address Invitations to Wedding Tactfully

DEAR Mrs. Post: Our families are both large and I really can not include all the children at my wedding, so must end the lists with aunts and uncles. Would you suggest that it might be a good idea to enclose a card with the invitations saying "no children." Or how should I break the news to the parents without hurting them?

Answer: To emphasize the fact that they are not invited would be needlessly cruel, especially if some of them have been looking forward to a wedding in the family. Merely address invitations to Mr. and Mrs. and say nothing about the Marys and Johnnies. Should you be asked whether the children may come, then explain that unhappily you can not include so many more.

Answer: (1) Moire is particularly suitable for autumn and winter. (2) Her dress need not be of velvet. It would be quite all right to have the bridesmaid wear crepe.

White Gold Ring. DEAR Mrs. Post: I've always liked the plain yellow gold wedding band and would like to have one of this description when I am married. But one never sees yellow gold wedding bands today, that is, not on the new brides. Also, I am wondering whether yellow gold will look well with my other rings, which happen to be set in platinum. What would you suggest?

Answer: Although I myself have a strong prejudice in favor of the yellow gold wedding ring, I think that the bride of today would better have a ring of white gold, for the reason that you yourself give. WNU Service.

Here's good news headline news—welcome news for every woman who owns a washer.

Year after year, women have asked us for a better way to get rain-soft water. To this vital problem, Maytag research workers devoted tireless effort. They studied the experience of Maytag men in supervising millions of home washings. They worked out a method of softening any type of water, no matter how hard. Then more tests —hundreds of them—tests in actual homes—until now Maytag Water Softener is ready to help with your washing.

Developed especially for use in any washer, Maytag Water

Days, now, of desperate watching beside that pallet about which hovered the shadow of death.

A tent was up, sheltering Rodney, its flaps wide to the fire. Another tent was pitched for the men and the stores but Annette, when she slept, slept on robes beside the trader.

From the moment she stumbled on Rodney there in the darkness, she had assumed command.

She arranged the camp, she announced the routine. Never before had those engages taken orders from a woman; but never, also, had they encountered a woman such as

She did not direct them to do this or that without reason. She demonstrated that for such a task she was far better equipped than they, and they obeyed without dissenting look or word.

Old Basile, when not thinking about his unconscious master, pondered deeply in his simple way on this girl. She had come to them from the company fort. From no other place could she have come.

She had run along the lake shore and insisted on being brought here to serve Shaw when, the last time he had seen her, she was lavishing her arms and lips on Burke Rickman! It was too much for the old fellow to fathom and he did not have in him the impulse to ask of her the questions which would relieve his perplexity. So long as she was of aid to Shaw, he was satis-

She sent men into the forest searching for the herbs her midwife aunt had used. Leaves and stalks to be cooked to pulp and bandaged over the gaping wounds in Shaw's flesh.

Quietly, he lay there. Now and again, at first, he moaned. Occasionally his eyes would open and his brows gather as though he struggled with some complicated problem. He licked water, dropped from a cup to his lips, with growing greediness, and that was his first said and shrugged slowly, in something of a shudder. "It's upon Rickman one would wish fever!" "Rickman!" The name, repeated in that strained echo of Shaw's voice, was startling.

His eyes were open, he frowned upward blankly and his fingers worked, worked . . "Rickman!" he said in a high pitched monotone. "They're my have any of them, any of it, Rickman! You're a braggart, Rickman, but you've parts. You're no fool, you've eyes and ears and wit! But . . But . . —trying to rise as Annette on her knees, arms about him, strove to prevent the struggle which set him panting. "But it was that vixen behind you!" he screamed. "I told my secrets to her and she told . . . I tell you . . . Let go . . Let me go, Rickman, or I'll send your heart, smoked and cured, back to Astor himself!" "Water from the spring!" An-

"Crooks gave me . . ." His voice was only a murmur. "Crooks . . . black feather . . . Crooks said ... said . Crooks gave it to me, Rickman . . . As a jest I've held it!"-pawing weakly at the blankets. "I've held the black feather against your damned company! They can't . take it from me . know . . . his jest stood for . . . surrender . . . Where'd it . . . go?

Where'd I . . put . . ." He struggled to sit up, searching his bed, and Annette, slipping a hand into her bosom, brought out, folded in thin cloth, what remained of the black feather she had picked from the sand of Mackinac after Shaw's arrest. "Here, Rodney!" - breathlessly. "You have the black feather. Burke Rickman hasn't taken it! We'll keep it safe . . . safe for you, Rodney! See? It is here!"

Something in the nature of a smile twitched at his cracking lips as she thrust the feather into his hands. Fingers closed on it; he relaxed and lay mumbling in whispers, no longer striving to rise.

The water came. Cloths were soaked in it and placed across his brow, about his wrists and ankles, changed and rechanged to cool the fevered bleed.

Wordlessly, the girl worked after the routine was established. Now and then she gave an order by gesture, unspeaking. When he tried to rolled in torment she kept him on his pallet. Now he slept heavily, unmoving, his breath alarmingly loud; again he mumbled incoherently; on occasion he cried out sharply and fought them.

Dawn, and they did not notice; and dusk again and still the girl sat there, changing her compresses, dribbling herb teas into his mouth, holding him quiet. Toward morning she slept, fallen to her side, curled close to his blankets like a bride, half repulsed. But before sunrise he was raving again, and she was up, refusing food which Basile tried to force upon her until he said that, perhaps, the master's life depended on her strength. Then she ate, though they could see that the sustenance was repulsive to her

Day and night, night and day, with his eyes giving birth to an orange flare, skin of his face stretching tight over the bones, dyed with the stain of fever, with his wrists shrinking and his body trembling. Chills came, and the hot stones were snuggled close to him again; and once more the fever and then one afternoon a queer, sudden tran-

a hand to his brow and opened his eyes. The fevered flare was gone. "Rasilel" he whisnered and smiled. He closed his eyes and sighed deeply in relief. "After all these . . . these dreams!" he said ly groped for the man's "Fever follows wounds," the man | hand. "Good Basile . . My friend, Basile!"

Annette had not moved, except to work the fingers in their tight clasp against her breast. Hope rode with the achievement in her eyes and her breath was quick. She had brought him back from death, this man she had loved and wronged and lived to save.

"I must've been here . long," he whspered, looking again hunters, it's my trade. You can't into Basile's face. "I . . . I remember Little Duck and . . . and being cold . . . and hot. I . face clouding-"I've had dreams, my friend . . . Terrible dreams

"Those dreams. Must . . . 've been fever. I . . . I dreamed that damned vixen was here, Basile,"making a wry face. "I dreamed I saw her, felt her . . . touch me, even! . Ugh! . . . such a dream . . ."

The old man holding his hand stirred uneasily. His quick glance went to the girl and Rodney, seeing, moved his head slightly. Then stared, eyes upon her, as if trans-

"Is this another dream?" he cried brokenly. "Is this more torture, still? Are you real? Do you . . live?"

"Rodney!" the girl broke in. "Rodney! It is I! It is no dream! And I came this way to beg you to forget the terrible thing I-

"Forget?" he cried, struggling to sit up. 'You ask me to forget? . Ho! . . . Things come back, now. The pain in my back . . . A bullet, that must have been Rickman's. Whose else? Your sweetheart's bullet, eh? Dear God, to awake to find you here . . Basile, alarm stamping his face, gestured her to leave them and Annette slipped from the tent, standing alone in the dappled sunlight, eyes closed against tears, pulse faint

Tears had blinded her and she brushed them away to see that she had come near to Jacques, sitting cross legged mending a moccasin.

"The trader lives!" she said tremulously and in patois. Jacques exposed his white teeth in a magnificent grin. "We will want, now, partridge. You go, Jacques." He went at her command, as they all had obeyed her orders. And Mongazid, living in a spruce thicket across the stream where he could there see and could hear, wriggled softly backward into a shallow ravine where he had come . . . the way he had been coming these many days, now, to see what he could see and hear what he could hear.

A caged man, Burke Rickman, after that first night that Shaw was known to be lying with life in the balance. Did he leave his fort by cance and head up the lake another canoe from Shaw's establishment appeared, menacingly. When he went down the lake. away from Fort Shaw, in a direction opposite that where the little trader lay, none followed. The westward courses, only, were watched and forbidden him.

Mongazid had come, demanding his three packs of beaver, but this was after Basile's messengers had returned for what was needed from Fort Shaw, bringing word that their master lived.

"Skins for you?" Rickman scoffed. "When your hand trembles, when your eye goes blind? No, Mongazid, Flat Mouth's vengeance is still a shadow across your path. But there may be a way . . . may

And so Mongazid, unsuspected by Shaw's men, went about rousing no suspicion, keeping safe for long hours in his concealment across the river from where Annette made her fight for Rodney's life, and reporting nightly to Rickman what transpired.

He came this evening. "The little trader will live," he said and shifted his gaze from Rickman's face. "The white woman speaks it. I heard her words.'

Heavy drinking, then, in the trader's quarters; mutterings and mumblings, and Rickman paced the room like a wolf dragging an iron trap, back and forth, up and down. And once, stopping, he snatched the girl's cloak from the peg where it had hung this fortnight, and ripped the fabric to shreds, silently, more terrible in his silence than he would have been shouting threats.

Annette did not again enter Shaw's tent. Another, which she could occupy, now that delirium was gone, was at a little distance. She lay there sleepless that night and, at dawn, was up.

Partridge were dressed and from the breasts she made a broth, cooked slowly, thick with the nutriment of succulent flesh. When Shaw roused she heard and gave Basile a jot of the broth in a cup to carry to him.

Shaw slept quietly most of the day, rousing thrice for more doles of nourishment and the morning found him with renewed vigor, but before he drank broth again he asked the question that had been on his mind.

"Basile, is she . . . is the . . is the ma'm'selle still in camp?"

"Yes. She stays." Rodney's face clouded.

"I felt it"-with an uneasy movement, like an abortive shudder.

'She came from . . . where?" "The company fort. As we had the word of you she came. Running. She . . One did not want a woman here but she commanded that she come and . . . "-shrugging—"one does not d like that who demands." "From the company fort, eh? . . She'd been there, before me. I saw her cloak . . ." Shaw swallowed slowly. "She'd come to him, who refused to stay with her, eh?"

"The gift of God, her coming," the old man said earnestly. "She has healing powers from her aunt. Without her we would have been helpless. She . . . she cheated death of you, master."

"Errand of mercy, eh?" Shaw asked bitterly. "She'd do that for a . . dog. A dog - - - or her sweetheart's rival." He drew a great and weary breath. "Get her away, Basile. Get her away I say!" and he closed his eyes wearily.

So Basile went to Annette. Words at first stuck in his throat; and then emerged in volleys of unfinished sentences. "One humors the sick," he protested, as if she had hurled argument at him, when she had only stood silent. "When the body is weak thoughts have no health . . . But he is not a man for woman. He is a trader, married to trade . . . Truly the mademoiselle has cheated death of him but he will not grow strong again with her about.'

"I will go, Basile," she said quite simply when he, having heard much and known little about women, had expected an outburst.

This overwhelmed the old man. made him jubilant and engendered a feeling of great friendliness for her. He would@return her to the company fort in an hour, he declared.

"But I do not go to the company fort," she said. "Eh Dieu! Where, then, mademoishe thought of self in these days!

"But you came from there?" "But I cannot return there, Basile." His fingers fumbled at his lips, wondering at her manner, so low spirited and hopeless. "May I . . Would it not . . . Could one stop at Fort Shaw and prepare for the homeward journey?' Yes, she could. Indeed, she could! Shaw would not need to know and she would be out of this encampment, with the trader threatening to fall into heavy sickness again at thought of her presence. Within the hour he would take her

Within the hour, then . . . She gave Basile minute directions for the preparation of other foods, naming the days when Rodney might taste the flesh of fowl and have fish. She told him what to expect by way of good sign and bad in his condition.

"I will be near for a few days." she said, "if he should not grow steadily strong . . ." She did not finish that. Her lips trembled and she turned away.

She embarked, with Jacques and another in the canoe but as they prepared to shove off Basile ran back and whispered a delaying word.

"But wait!" . . . Here, mademoiselle! This was found in his blankets. It was yours. I saw you give it to him to quiet his fever . . Strange creatures, women. She'd taken the remnant of a black ostrich plume from her bosom and pressed it into Rodney's hand. It must be something of value, to be carried so. It had served its purpose. It should be returned .

Annette took it with an odd smile and turned her face away. The canoe slid out into the current . . Shaw roused and drank a more generous portion of broth and smiled at Basile.

"What happened?" he asked "Just what . The other told, piecing the tale together as well as he could from the time the fabricated story of Rickman's flight to Black Beaver

He stopped as Shaw turned his face away. "Has she gone?" he asked. While you slept. "Yes.

"Then she is wholly gone. We will not even speak again of her."

And so at Fort Shaw a woman slept in the trader's bed, slept long and heavily and awoke still weary. Her boatmen were summoned from their island and brought within the enclosure. Jacques took command and tended her solicitously. Had she not saved the life of his idol? His trader who had humbled even his mighty back on the portage? Basile came on the second day, staying but briefly to secure needed articles. Yes, he reported, Shaw was stronger. He had a great hunger, now. His smile flashed through a set perplexity. He was uneasy, anticipating the time when Rodnev would demand that they bring him here. He did not want him to find take when he has had rum. the woman here, but said no word of leaving . . . nette. She had no hope; she was hurt and bruised beyond hoping. Neither did she have resentment because, she reasoned, nothing that she ever could do would offset the injury she had brought to Rodney. So she stayed on, not because hope lived in her heart, she told herself, but because she was inexpressibly weary and the thought to trade he may open his hands of embarking for the long homeward journey—with nothing for her when she reached her destinationwas too much to face Almost daily canoes linked the trading post with the camp where Rodney Shaw recuperated. He had been sitting up, came the word; he had stood on his feet, later. He had walked a few steps. He was eating as a man should eat . Basile came, an uneasy light in his

"The trader may return any day," he said, watching her face. "What delays him, Basile?" she asked pointedly. "My firmness. I plead and argue. I invent delays. For a week he has been going about from lodge to lodge, gaining strength rapidly but, as well, gaining impatience to return here. I must prevent that return until . . . until the place is . . But, mademoias he left it selle!"-quickly when she swayed as from a blow. "He has forbidden mention of you! Such a man! One does not know . . . One knows he is in your debt . . . One feels he should not think such thoughts

. But what does one do?" Yes, what did one do? Too long in the forest, this Basile, to determine the strategy which would have brought him and these others peace. He was in distress. He knew the hotness of young blood should not frustrate the longings of young hearts. But how to arrange such matters, how to temper prejudice and arrange better understandings, he did not know.

A word to her would have sufficed; the repetition of Shaw's declaration that he had seen her cloak in Burke Rickman's quarters, and way to the goal would have been achieved. But he had not the fineness of perception, the insight into the complexities of youth to realize that. He was accustomed to obey Shaw's orders. Shaw had banned talk of the girl. He could not reason behind that command. On such disabilities, at times, do destinies

Slowly, as one in physical pain, Annette made her final preparations for departure. She prolonged each small operation as one will when loath to leave a place behind and it was near dusk when she finished and closed the small chest and with a deep sigh tossed her

She turned, then, to Rodney's table and, taking ink and quill and paper, sat for long, writing slowly, painstakingly, weighing each word she inscribed. Finished, she folded the paper and left it there and, dusk having fallen, she told her boatmen to be ready an hour before dawn and until the appointed time she lay staring at the glowing logs in the fireplace, numb and resigned . .

During her weeks at Fort Shaw she had thought now and again of Rickman's menace. She was not particularly concerned, not afraid. Still, she had chosen such an hour for departure because none would know and she could be well on her way before the news had even a slight chance of spreading up and down the lake.

Still, as they breasted the point where Rickman sulked she felt a tensity creep through her body and when they were beyond a sense of relief made tiself known.

They stopped but shortly for food after daylight and then kept on going down the slow flowing tributary to the great Mississippi. Later they met a canoe paddled by two women who had been gathering rice. They were not Pillagers, not people of Shaw's domain, though living and hunting on its edge. Around the bend, the woman in

The Love of Living

There is no translation for gemutlichkeit. Perhaps it is because the English - speaking nations have never known such a thing. As closely as one can get to it in English, according to a writer in the Detroit News, gemutlichkeit means the love of living. It means enjoyment of the simple pleasures of life. It means well-being. It means taking the time in mid-morning or mid-afternoon to sit in a coffee house and chat with one's friends or read the papers or watch the world go by. It means singing and laughter and music and wine under the open sky in the cool of evening. Gemutlichkeit means all of those things, and a lot of others.

FEATURE VEILS IN MODELS FOR AUTUMN

Veils which not only cover an entire hat but the face and the shoulders are the most striking feature of many advance fall models. The large mesh veil which is dotted with chenille is the favored type for wear during the daytime, but there are some handsome lace veils to wear for more formal occasions. Most of these veils are circular in shape and are thrown over the high peaked crowns of the new hats so that their draped edges extend well over the shoulders. Sometimes they are placed over the head before the hat is put on so that the part which covers the crown of the head serves as a crown for the hat. Another type of veil, also circular in shape, has the center cut out so that the veil fits around a crown or edges the brim of a hat. It usually is worn to give a downward sweep at the back, frequently extending halfway to the waistline.

Style in Evening Gowns A Paris fashion house shows a practical evening gown with a short skirt in front and a definite backward dip to a greater length. These full skirts resemble the tarleton skirts worn by ballet dancers. The material is gathered into so many folds that the skirts swing out gracefully in wide sweeps with every movement of the body. These short skirts are far more practical than floor-length ones. which are likely to get trampled underfoot when dancing, and their width and fullness make them graceful as well as practical.

175 HEAD OF CATTLE

75—Dairy Cattle—75 This herd represents various breeds. The herd as a whole has been very profitable investment; however, am quite confident that any part of the herd will do likewise. The construction of this herd represents 4 years of careful consideration.

They are young, gentle and easy milkers.

100—Stock Cattle—100 30 long yearling thoroughbred Hereford | 30 yearling steers and heifers Sired by Hereford bull

38 long yearling mixed steers and heifers | 2 Hereford bulls, one registered In as much as prospects are very favorable for cheap feed, I consider these cattle to be a good buy for a finished market. They are all carrying good flesh.

18—Head of Hogs—18 15 registered Hampshire tried sows—open | 3-year-old registered Hampshire boar Registered Hampshire sow, 11 pigs by side | Spring boar—eligible to register

These sows represent popular blood lines from Indiana, Illinois and Michigan. Am feeding 135 head of Spring Shoats for market that were farrowed by the above 15 sows, and sired by the above 3-year-old boar. We suggest for your consideration, that indications are most favorable for feeding hogs and cattle for the next several months.

Lighting

As the days grow shorter there will be need for artificial lighting. There are available a variety of table, floor and other conveniently designed lamps that are scientifically designed for lighting.

Children who study of an evening should have adequate light so that they can do their home work in comfort and without squinting. Their eyes are strong and with inadequate light they can get along, but with good lighting they do much better work and it protects their eyes from the strain incident to poor lighting. There are especially designed lamps available which do not cost much but should be considered by all parents. These lamps are on display in most all dealers' stores. Why not look for one of these table lamps? They are well designed, good appearing and will justify their costs.
