Use of Local Library is Tripled

Average Number of Books Loaned Each Week Grows from 35 to 130.

When the Woman's Study Club in early summer turned over their library of over 1,200 volumes to the village, it was with the hope that the use of this library might be greatly increased. That this hope is being realized is evident. During the four months of July, August, September and October in 1937, the average number of books loaned each week was 35. For the same months in 1938 the average number of books loaned each week was 130.

There are now 217 persons who have library cards. On year ago there were 90. Formerly this was a subscription library. Now any resident of Cass City or Elkland Township may obtain a card without cost. A small rental fee is charged for the latest books only; all others may be drawn without cost. More than half of the persons using the library are children and youth of high school age.

Of the many new books recently added to the library, thirty-five are for this younger age group. For the lovers of mystery stories, there are 14 new volumes. Nine new western novels will interest other thrill lovers. Other new books are:

"As I Live and Breathe"—Willie Ethridge.
"White Ladies"—Francis B. Young.

"Hearts Unknown"—Frances Parkinson Keyes.
"Listen! The Wind"—Ann Lindbergh's new book destined to be as popular as her first, "North to the Orient."

"Wisdom's Gate" by Margaret Ayer Barnes deals with some of the problems of modern life.
"Here I Stay," by Elizabeth Coatsworth, presents a girl with courage to face great odds.

"She Was Carrie Eaton," by Elizabeth Corbett, is a portrayal of the youth of the unforgettable Mrs. Meigs.

"Free Land"—Rose Wilder Lane. A stirring story of pioneer life in Dakota.

"Handsome Road," by Gwen Bristow. Louisiana in the sixties. Turn to page 4, please.

Guess This One?

Taken When We Were Young

Last week guessers were 100% right and this week the record is 100% wrong. However, last week 23 ventured estimates and this week A. H. Henderson was the only one to register. He thought the picture was R. D. Keating. If he had guessed Herb Greenleaf, he would have been right.

Well, this week's picture looks easy to us. What's your opinion?

Two Fatalities in Auto Accidents in Tuscola County

Sebawaing Man and Caro Lad Are the Victims in Two Mishaps.

Lewis Harris, 45, of Sebawaing was fatally injured Sunday at 5:30 p. m. when his automobile ran into a cement abutment at the curve on M-83, a half mile south of Unionville. He died at seven-fifteen o'clock that evening in the Unionville Hospital.

Mr. Harris was traveling north alone in a new car which was badly smashed when it struck an abutment on the east side of the road.

Gilberto Riojas, 5, son of Mr. and Mrs. Elias Riojas, Mexican beet workers at Caro, died in the Caro Community Hospital Monday night of injuries received late that afternoon when crushed by a truck in front of a group of tenant houses owned by the Michigan Sugar Company and located directly behind the Caro sugar plant.

The truck, a semi-trailer type, was driven by V. Gonzalez Mallen, of Houston, Texas, who came to Caro to transport beet workers back to Texas after the sugar campaign. The truck going about four miles an hour ran over the child when the boy raced away from a group of children he was playing with and slipped under the front wheels of the machine.

Community Club Elects Directors

Seven Men Chosen to Act with Pastors and Superintendent of Schools.

The eight-piece high school dance orchestra played during the dinner hour of the Cass City Community Club's November meeting Tuesday evening and their rendition of musical numbers and the excellent meal served by women of the Catholic Church made a pleasing combination for club members.

President B. H. Starmann introduced Lester Ross, coach, and Arthur Hesburn, music instructor, as two new members of the school faculty.

Walter Mann presented the report of the nominating committee. The report was adopted and the following were declared elected members of the club board of directors: Dr. P. A. Schenk representing the Presbyterian Church; Dr. E. C. Fritz, M. E. Church; E. A. Warner, Baptist Church; Glen McCloy, Catholic Church; Ed Schwieger, Evangelical Church; William Profit, Bethel M. E. Church; and Ralph Ward, community representative. These men with pastors of local churches and the superintendent of schools constitute the governing body of the club. Officers of the society will be selected from among their number.

Wesley Dunn, chairman of the school group responsible for Tuesday evening's program, introduced Mr. Kimmern, a representative of the Goodyear Tire Co., as the evening speaker. He outlined the development of the rubber industry from the early manufacture of bicycle tires to the use of the mammoth tires for farm tractors. Moving pictures of tractor plowing on farms and the development of safety tires for automobiles made more interesting the evening's program.

On Tuesday, December 13, the next meeting of the Community Club, the program will be sponsored. Turn to page 4, please.

Lost Hand in Corn Shredder Accident

Samuel Helwig, Elkland Township farmer, had his left hand so badly mangled in a corn shredder accident Thursday afternoon, November 3, that it was found necessary to amputate the hand at the wrist at Pleasant Home Hospital. The accident occurred at the farm of the victim's brother, Edward Helwig. The corn, because it was so dry, did not enter the machine readily and in trying to force it into the shredder, his hand was caught in the rolls. Mr. Helwig left the hospital for his home two miles northeast of Cass City on Monday.

Mr. Helwig's nephew, Keith Klinkman, had his right hand amputated a few weeks ago because of injuries received in a hunting accident here.

OCTOGENARIANS CELEBRATE BIRTH ANNIVERSARIES

Mrs. John Karr celebrated her eighty-sixth birthday on Saturday, November 5, quietly in the home of her daughter-in-law, Mrs. R. D. Keating, on Garfield Avenue. Mrs. Karr was born in Hamilton, Ontario, and came to Cass City 68 years ago soon after her marriage to the late John Karr, who passed away twenty years ago. Mrs. Karr has three daughters, Mrs. Walter Mark, Mrs. R. J. Knight and Mrs. Frank Reid, all of Cass City.

In honor of the eighty-fifth birthday of Chris Schwaderer, which was Monday, November 7, a number of his family spent Sunday with him and enjoyed a chicken dinner. Guests were Mrs. E. B. Schwaderer and two children, Edward Schwaderer, Curtis Hunt, Mrs. Leola Smith and children. Mr. Schwaderer was born in Erie County, New York, November 7, 1853, and was married to Mary Jane Blaine on Christmas Day in 1876. They came to Cass City in October, 1880, and have lived here since.

Three Are Injured When Automobile Rolled Over

Two Marlette men, Dewey Armstrong, 26, and Louis Armstrong, 18, were seriously injured when a car driven by David Bader of Mayville tipped over and was badly wrecked Saturday night at ten o'clock. The accident occurred a half mile west of Silverwood on M-38. In attempting to make a left hand turn to go on a country road, the right brake locked and the car was badly wrecked when it rolled over. David Bader, the driver, suffered head and back injuries and was treated by a Mayville physician. The two Armstrong men were taken to a Lapeer hospital.

Vassar Youth Given Prison Sentence

Perjury Increased Prison Sentence Judge Told the Lad in Court on Monday.

Cramton, Burrows having several weeks ago pleaded guilty to the charge of breaking and entering a store at Vassar. The offense was committed last June and the fact that the youth had perjured himself on the witness stand in the trial of Vernon Mills, 22, Vassar, increased the sentence, Judge Cramton told Burrows.

A divorce decree was granted Monday in the case of Helen Furcsik vs. George Furcsik and a similar decree in the case of Gertrude Delong vs. Harold Delong.

Temporary alimony of $10 a week was granted by the court in the petition filed by Ruth Kelley vs. Art Kelley.

FITZGERALD ELECTED GOVERNOR OF MICHIGAN; REPUBLICANS WIN OTHER OFFICES ON STATE TICKET

Poor Season for Pheasant Hunters

Numerically speaking, it was the best pheasant season in several years. Yet, paradoxically, it was a poor season for many pheasant hunters.

Although there were more pheasants than in several years and although the birds were more fully plumed than for the 1937 season, making it easier to distinguish cocks from hens, weather conditions were against the hunter during most of the recent season.

The abnormal heat and dryness of ground conditions were a handicap on dogs as well as hunters. Game investigators of the department of conservation believe that because the weather which prevailed, especially during the first few days of the season, the birds received an early "education" on the meaning of the shooting, without as heavy a kill as would have been scored had hunting conditions been more favorable. The game men point out that hunters did not find the weather conducive to covering a great deal of territory, while the dogs were not only slowed down physically also, but the dry ground conditions made it more difficult for them to pick up the birds' scent than when there is moisture.

However, hunters who didn't have much luck and who didn't find hunting in mid-summer temperatures very comfortable, may take some consolation from the fact that a large crop of birds will be carried over. A severe winter, of course, might reduce the carry-over, but game investigators have discovered that pheasants ordinarily are not seriously affected, unless heavy and prolonged snow buries their customary feeding areas. It is known that they will travel considerable distances to find feed and will congregate in bunches on finding it. When the grain in farm fields is covered, the pheasants often will seek plant seeds to be found in the marshes.

A Non-Partisan State News Letter By GENE ALLEMAN Michigan Press Association

Lansing—While victors were still celebrating the outcome of Tuesday's ballot tussle, the capital city this week was reminded of the fact that less than 60 days remain until the state legislature convenes here.

Numerous are the serious problems. Because Michigan's economic life is due to a combination of industrial, agricultural and recreational incomes, the legislature will be called upon to consider a wide variety of measures.

Social legislation will probably include a labor relations mediation act and a minimum wage-maximum hour act. The first will be a baby Wagner act with an emphasis on mediation of labor disturbances, while the second will apply to intra-state commerce, what the Fair Standards Labor Act, otherwise known as the Wage-Hour Act, does to interstate commerce.

These two measures alone will mean days of serious deliberation in committees. Consequences will be far-reaching.

Milk Price-Fixing Marketing agricultural surpluses at a profit is the objective sought by influential groups of Michigan growers.

Milk producers are toying with the idea of a state milk price-fixing act which would guarantee a fair basic price to the dairy industry and at the same time not penalize the consumer. A legislative commission is studying the plan which comes from the East, and a bill will be ready for introduction in Lansing next January.

Michigan apple and potato growers are determined to do something in a cooperative way to combat the advertised virtues of Maine and Idaho potatoes and Washington apples. These two products mean Turn to page 2, please.

Harry D. Mead, Murphy's Campaign Manager, Conceded the Governor's Defeat Wednesday Morning.

Harry D. Mead, campaign manager for Governor Murphy, conceded the victory to Frank Fitzgerald, according to special editions of daily newspapers issued Wednesday morning.

Returns from 2,696 out of 3,553 precincts in Tuesday's election for governor gave Murphy (D) 524,369 and Fitzgerald (R) 611,229.

According to state dailies, Secretary of State Leon D. Case led Democratic incumbents of other state offices, but all of them trailed their Republican rivals by substantial margins.

With 2,001 precincts reported, Harry F. Kelly, Republican, led Case 414,132 to 339,969.

In 2,005 precincts, Luren D. Dickinson, veteran Republican campaigner, led Lieutenant Governor Leo Nowicki 435,371 to 323,494 for the office to which he has been elected six times.

In other state contests, Thomas Read, another veteran Republican, led Attorney General Raymond W. Starr 415,932 to 321,131 in 1,975 precincts; Miller Dunckel, Republican legislator, led State Treasurer Theodore I. Fry 404,973 to 321,206; and Vernon J. Brown, another Republican legislator, led Auditor General George T. Gundry 418,875 to 317,480.

WILL OF THE MAJORITY.

The American people have plenty of faults, and the philosophers grieve deeply over their various and many failings. One thing can be said in their favor, which is that they don't get over excited about elections. Even though they holler vociferously for their favorite candidates before election, and prophesy that the country is going to the dogs if their candidates are not chosen, they don't proceed to tip over the whole apparatus when they get defeated.

IDLE BILLIONS.

Bank deposits and currency in circulation are estimated to aggregate the vast total of $57,700,000,000. This is an unprecedented amount, and it indicates what an enormous expansion of business and employment can occur when conditions are favorable.

With not far from 10,000,000 people seeking employment, why do not the owners of these great sums get busy, and borrow money and use it to finance good projects?

The answer seems to be that people are failing to set this money to work because of their fears of the business future. It is well that they have some caution, because many who are not fearful go into unwise speculations and lose their money.

Some will say business people are too timid, and that if they ever expect to make money, they must expect to take some risks.

Others will say that they fear the taxes that will have to be paid to pay the great debts which the government, states, and cities are incurring, or that they think the government is interfering too much with private business.

Others will say that they fear the chances of getting some profit have to be fairly good, before people are inclined to take serious business risks.

GOOD CO-OPERATION.

A gentleman who recently got up a highly successful demonstration for a certain organization, was complimented for these good results. He replied by expressing appreciation for the splendid co-operation he had. Everyone who was asked to help, he said, took hold and did what was requested, so that the affair went over with a bang, and everyone was happy about it.

That is the secret of success in any organization or in town life. If people would only do what they were asked to do, and refused only when forced to do so by some urgent necessity or good reason, a great many good things could be done which are not now attempted.

Michigan's central location in the Mid-West where millions of people dwell has made the state a favorite with tourists.

It's Big Business, and no fooling! Figures compiled by the American Automobile Association, the U. S. department of agriculture, and the four tourists associations of the state indicate that Michigan had approximately 10,700,000 visitors during the past resorting season. This was a 10 per cent decrease from the 1937 volume, or a 1938 estimated gross income of $300,000,000.

Noticeable was the growing popularity of week-end trips. In the "tourist" classification of legislation will be fishing and hunting bills, state park bills, and conservation measures in general. Along with more good roads, northern Michigan wants improved facilities for accommodating and entertaining the out-of-state visitors.

24 Million Fish

Because Michigan is famed for good fishing, the state conservation department goes to elaborate preparations each year to restock our lakes and streams.

Workers began the perennial task this week of distributing 24,803,000 small fish—brook trout, brown trout, rainbow trout, bluegill and black bass. Perch planting will be done in December.

Increased pollution of streams due to industrial waste is a serious handicap to efforts of the conservation department to replenish the fish life for tourists. The state stream control commission, headed by Highway Commissioner Murray D. VanWagoner, received a report from Secretary-Engineer Milton P. Adams that several beet companies have been ordered to submit plans for adequate waste disposal by February, 1938, and to have plants in operation by October, 1939.

Goiter, Jitter-Bugs

Use of iodine for thyroid disturbance, as sponsored by the state board and health and county medical associations, has reduced goiter in Michigan from more than 30 per cent to 1 per cent.

Osteopathic physicians in Detroit heard Dr. Edward A. Ward, of Saginaw, past president of the American Osteopathic Association, warn that swing addicts will develop thick ankles and frayed nerves.

Gasoline—What Is It?

Pigs are pigs, and gasoline can be cheap and inferior and still be gasoline to many motorists.

Out of the recent price war has come a suggestion that producers, refiners and the state department of agriculture co-operate in grading gasoline so that the consumer is fully informed what he is getting.

This state regulation would be done without added taxes.

Finger-Printing

A state law requiring the finger-printing of a person applying for a permit to carry a concealed weapon is advocated by a committee representing the Prosecutors' Association, the Michigan Sheriffs' Association, and the Police Chiefs' Association in co-operation with the state police.

The same committee also seeks a law making it a crime to sell ammunition to persons under 18 years of age without the written authority of a parent or guardian.

Curiosity Buried

Bangor—Oil wells, like steam shovels, attract large numbers of spectators to watch operations. The crew drilling an oil well here was good natured enough when spectators told them how they thought the work should be done, but questions regarding the depth of the well irked the drillers. As a result, there is now a freshly dug grave on the project, with the headstone inscribed: "Here lies the last guy that asked us how deep we are now."

Lawn Raking Is Dangerous.

Dearborn—Raking a lawn, usually supposed to be a harmless occupation, proved to be quite hazardous for William Ruddiman. He was raking the lawn at his home, when his rake struck a bottle of grape juice. The bottle exploded, and the jagged neck of it struck William on the right temple. Forty stitches were necessary to close the wound.

ATLANTIC AIRLINES RACE NEAR GETAWAY

Planes of Five Powers Vie For Best Routes.

NEW YORK.—Five nations engaged in a race for commercial air supremacy of the North Atlantic are conducting experimental flights over routes which may soon be traversed regularly by planes carrying passengers, mail and cargo.

For years aviation companies of five nations have been jealously watching each other's designs on the North Atlantic. Each is hopeful of beating its rivals to establishment of air service over what, from the viewpoint of nationalistic prestige, is the most important route in the world.

Engaged in the race are Pan-American Airways of the United States and the following government-subsidized companies of foreign countries:

Imperial Airways, commissioned by the British government to establish an empire route connecting England, Ireland, Newfoundland, Canada and the United States; Air France Transatlantique, subsidized by the French government to the extent of $5,000,000; Deutsche Luft Hansa of Germany; Ala Littoria of Italy.

Theoretically, Pan-American and Imperial Airways are neck and neck at this stage of the race, and it is possible that each will be in the air by autumn, carrying mail and passengers between England and New York.

The Germans have made the most survey flights and have obtained permission to make more from Lisbon, Portugal, via the Azores to America.

The Germans, French and Italians already have established mail services across the South Atlantic, but Pan-American, with its South American and Pacific lines, has the most ocean-flying experience.

Both the American and British companies have obtained full commercial flying rights over both North Atlantic routes—via Southampton, Newfoundland and Canada to the United States, or via Portugal, the Azores and Bermuda. The others, have or are in the process of obtaining experimental rights only.

Pan-American flew the northern route twice and southern once last summer, but plans no further surveys because its personnel already has more than 4,000,000 miles of ocean-flying experience.

Imperial Airways made seven round-trip survey flights via Ireland and Newfoundland last year, and will make more this summer.

Imperial is experimenting with the Mayo composite craft, a small plane capable of carrying little beside mail which is catapulted from a larger plane.

Air France Transatlantique plans to make its first survey flights with the 80,000 pound Lt. De Vaisseau Paris. A fleet of flying boats, similar to the Boeing 314, will not be ready for another year.

Bachelor Is Host to 300 Weekly in Past Decade

TAMPA, FLA.—More than 200,000 guests have enjoyed the hospitality of Joseph F. Miyares, self-styled "old bachelor," at his home during the last 10 years. Most of his visitors have been children of high school age.

Miyares said "it's simply a hobby and the pleasure is all mine," as he explained that reputable organizations, high school fraternities and class parties were welcome to use his home at any time for "good, clean, wholesome fun."

An average of 300 guests a week during the past 10 years have taken advantage of Miyares' "hobby," danced at his home, used his 50-foot swimming pool and roamed the two acres of gardens which surround his home.

The parties given at his home always are well chaperoned, Miyares said, "but on some counts they must do as I say."

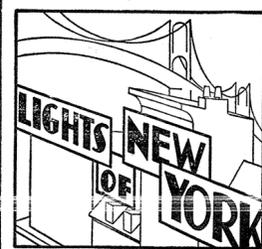

Solid Freezing of Earth Is Seen in 71,799 Years

MIAMI.—After two years of research, Prof. Hirsch Yankelwitz, formerly of the Institute of Technology of St. Petersburg university, declares that the earth will freeze into a solid ball in 71,799 years.

It's all a question of determining when the volcanic fires, which give life and vegetation, will burn out. He reaches his figure by comparing the dimensions of the earth, Mars and the moon, freezing three spheres of relative size, letting them form a coating of ice and then measuring the amount of moisture.

Town Without People Has Two Railroads

ORLANDO, FLA. — In 1886, when Toronto, near here, was first named by one of the engineers supervising construction of the Atlantic Coast Line railroad, its population was zero. Now, 52 years later, it is still uninhabited. The town is represented on official maps and is served by two railroads and a trunk-line highway.

By L. L. STEVENSON

When William Fellow Morgan Jr., commissioner of markets, announced that he would issue no more licenses to peddlers of hot corn and baked sweet potatoes, he struck a blow at tradition. His decision means that vendors, who have been a part of the sidewalk life of New York even in years before Fourteenth street was away up town, will be seen no more next year. Thus will be stilled the cry of "A-ah-t corn" and "Bay-kid switts" to which the ears of New Yorkers have become so accustomed. Vanished also will be the men with the tinpails over charcoal braziers and the sheetiron grids heated by charcoal fires. But Commissioner Morgan is more interested in public health than in tradition. Hence his stand that in the future the only food peddlers will be licensed to sell will be protected by wrappers or glass cases.

Hot corn vendors begin their work as early in the summer as roasting ears are available at prices which will allow them to make a profit on the customer's nickel. Fished from the tin pail, the roasting ear is drowned in melted butter, or the customer is given a dab of butter to apply to the corn himself. What happens after the customer accepts his purchase is of no concern to the vendor. Often I've suspected him of having an interest in a dry cleaning establishment or having relatives in that line. A roasting ear dripping melted butter is bound to leave souvenirs when eaten on the sidewalk. Still, thousands of New Yorkers, particularly Coney Island visitors and residents of the lower East Side, look on street sold roasting ears as a delicacy.

What baked sweet potato sellers do during the summer, I don't know. But they don't make their appearance until fall. Thus they come out with the roasted chestnut vendors who trundle their carts to corners and wait for customers, sometimes consuming part of their stock while waiting. The chestnut vendors are universal. But the baked sweet merchants do most of their business on the lower East Side. In fact, I have yet to see one—or a hot corn vender either—in midtown.

A long court fight followed another order issued by Commissioner Morgan, the one putting to death Paddy's Market, that line of pushcarts along Ninth avenue from Forty-second to Thirty-sixth street which had been in existence more than half a century. The pushcart men carried their battle clear to the Court of Appeals at Albany before they gave up. While the fight was going on and even after it had been lost, the peddlers continued business at their old stands, offering bargains to housewives and being content with pennies as profits.

When the death knell finally sounded, there was no mourning among the market men, though some of them had been at that same stand many years. In anticipation of final defeat, they had quietly leased a vacant lot on Thirty-ninth street just off Ninth avenue. Having wired it for electricity and spaced it off for stands, about 70 moved there. Now they are safe from eviction—so long as the $300 a month rent is paid.

Only citizens, prospective citizens or those living in the city for a year receive pushcart licenses in the future, Commissioner Morgan also announced. Persons engaged in other businesses, those on home relief or working on WPA projects will be denied licenses. And speaking of charity reminds me of a well-known comedian who maintains a private charity. He has a charge account at a small hotel where the down-and-outters he recommends are given dinner, bed and breakfast for which the comedian settles at the end of the month.

Music Used as Cure
People once believed that the only cure for the bite of the large hairy spider called the tarantula was lively music to which the victim would dance until he fell exhausted. From this belief came the name "tarantella" applied to a speedy Italian dance in which the tempo increases until the end.

The World War Slaughter

Vegetable Habit To Be Commended

Minerals and Vitamins Essential to Health

By EDITH M. BARBER

"VEGETABLES seem to be a fetish in the United States," said an English visitor to me the other day. "I went to dinner the other night with some friends and there were nine vegetables besides tomato juice."

Nine vegetables! That does sound like a lot. There were, however, I found, raw carrots, cauliflower and cucumbers served before dinner for dunking in a piquant sauce. Radishes, young onions and celery were passed with the soup. There were potatoes and peas with the main course and a romaine salad.

This vegetable habit, which is becoming more common each year in this country, is certainly to be commended as well as exclaimed over. The minerals and vitamins, as well as the roughage which the fibers give us, are invaluable, although they cannot be counted by calories. Perhaps that is one of the reasons why they are so popular. We can get the fuel which we measure by calories and the protein which we need for repairing the body tissues from the other components of the meal.

Perhaps you are commenting to yourself that I should not have included potatoes among vegetables when I was mentioning low calorie content. While potatoes are higher in this respect than are most other vegetables, they are not nearly so highly endowed as is generally thought. About 75 per cent of a potato is water. Just don't be too lavish with the butter if you are being careful about your calories.

O'Brien Potatoes.

4 cups potato cubes
Deep fat
Salt
1 small onion
1 tablespoon butter
2 potatoes
2 teaspoons minced parsley
Fry potato cubes in deep fat, drain on soft paper and sprinkle with salt. Mince the onion and cook in the butter one minute. Add the pimiento, cook one minute more, add parsley and pour over potato cubes in a hot dish.

Spinach With Sour Cream.

1/2 cup sour cream
1 tablespoon tarragon vinegar
1 tablespoon grated horseradish
Salt
Paprika
4 cups cooked spinach
Whip cream, add seasoning and pass with spinach which must be very hot when served.

Fried Cabbage.

1 head cabbage
1 tablespoon butter
1 teaspoon sugar
2 tablespoons vinegar
12 frankfurters
Shred the cabbage. Melt the butter in a frying pan, add the cabbage and cook uncovered for 20 minutes, or until cabbage is tender and slightly brown. Add the sugar and vinegar and serve with frankfurters which have been grilled in a hot frying pan.

Savory Sweet Potatoes.

6 sweet potatoes
3 apples
1/4 pound sliced bacon
Boil the potatoes until soft and place in a greased dripping pan. Pare, core and slice the apples and place between the potatoes. Place the strips of bacon across the potatoes and bake in a hot oven (450 degrees Fahrenheit) until the bacon is crisp and the apples soft.

Picnic Vegetable Salad.

4 tomatoes
2 cucumbers
1 onion
1 head lettuce
French dressing
Peel and divide tomatoes in eighths. Peel and slice cucumbers and onion. Wash and separate lettuce. Mix all ingredients with french dressing, put in glass jar and chill until ready to go.

Cucumber-Onion Sandwiches.

2 medium-sized cucumbers
1 onion
Mayonnaise
Lettuce
12 slices bread
Pare cucumbers, remove skin from onion and slice thin. Sprinkle lightly with salt. Put cucumber and onion on lettuce leaves between slices of bread spread with mayonnaise.

Walnut From Oak

If your room is paneled with oak and you prefer a walnut finish, such an effect may be obtained—if the wood is not quartered oak. First remove the varnish, then go over the wood with one or two coats of walnut stain. When dry, apply a coat of thin white shellac and later varnish it. Never use a varnish stain for this purpose.

Colorful Bedroom

Harmoniously colorful is the bedroom with decorating scheme based on a turquoise and gold combination. The dark turquoise floor is surrounded by walls painted a lighter turquoise.

Attic Room for Maid

A maid's small attic room with bath adjoining, has the walls painted shell pink and the woodwork powder blue.

Household Hints

By BETTY WELLS

WE'RE always crabbing about twin beds. For purely practical reasons, rest assured. Because most bedrooms aren't big enough to hold them and leave room enough to turn around in. Besides, it takes just twice as much bedding and laundry to run them.

And yet twin beds are a lot more comfortable for twisters and turners. Besides, they do look more stylish somehow. We asked a decorator friend of ours for her ideas on the subject.

"Oh, I don't have any trouble arranging a room with twin beds," said she. "I just put them where I please, instead of right in the middle of the floor in the usual way."

"For example," we encouraged her to go on.

"Well, as often as possible I place them so that they can each have a long side to the wall. That saves loads of space. It works best if there are two opposite walls of the room that the beds can go against, leaving the middle of the floor clear. But if there aren't two opposite walls with the corners free, I use one corner, building in a false square of compo board, like this."

One way to place twin beds.

"She got out a pencil. 'I have a lamp niche on each side with a shelf for books, radio, clock and so on at the head of each bed—that takes the place of bedside tables. Or if you just have studio cots instead of beds with heads and feet, then of course you can have your corner built-in just table height for lamps, books and the like with storage space within."

"Another thing you can do with simple low beds is to place them end to end along one long wall. Or place the two beds together alongside and clamp them tightly. Then use one spread for both—continental fashion; at least that saves the space between the beds yet gives the comfort of twin beds. Of course, you know about that new bed with a single headboard but two springs and mattresses that pull apart easily."

The Perfect Hostess

Eleanor lives alone and likes it. She's a widow who has found that the "lone" woman is not such a sorry creature after all. We like to visit her, and so do a lot of other people, because, somehow, she's achieved that generous attitude towards hospitality that makes every guest of hers want to come again, and then come again some more.

It isn't so difficult to be a charming hostess when you have a large home, a happy family to fill in the gaps, and the habit of automatically preparing comfort for others besides yourself.

First, she takes just as much pains for a twosome dinner as though she were giving a state dinner. Eleanor is by no means wealthy yet her sturdy but small folding dining table, drawn up before the fire in her living room on winter evenings or in front of a large window overlooking a park in summer, is as notably set as any in the land.

Eleanor bought priceless china piece-meal.

Her secret is, of course, that she has bought priceless china piece-meal (you don't need a full service for two) and what she lacks in quantity she makes up in quality and variety. The food she serves is always very special—squabs on toast or sweetbreads or inches-thick lamb chops topped with giant stuffed mushrooms. All, you see, the sort of food that you can buy inexpensively for two where it might cost you a small fortune for a big family.

She brings everything to the table on a tea-wagon so that she doesn't have to keep hopping up to get things which would cause a dull lag in conversation or necessitate shouting back and forth to the kitchen. Her coffee is superb because she knows how to make two cups at a time, in a small drip pot, instead of a large amount that tastes stale with the second cup after dinner.

She usually has a small nosegay of flowers at each plate and urges you to put yours in your button-hole on departure. She's learned to do varied things with waffles, like spreading them with fish pastes for a light supper (this served with fine tea) or covering them with creamed this and that for more hearty repasts.

CHAPTER XV

"We'll start with me. You'd best make up your mind to accept what I tell you. Is that understood?" said Kelsey.

A slight nod of the head was Farwell's reply.

"When you came to Middleton, I was a transit man with the old G. & C. Starting out, I was engaged to Elaine. There's no good going into that. She loved you more than she did me. But there is one thing you will have to believe. It didn't keep me from loving her. There never has been another woman in my life. From that day until this. If you can get that . . ."

Farwell sat motionless. Staring in mute pain at the other man.

"I don't want to be rough . . ." Kelsey seemed to find the going difficult. "I know now that Elaine never opened her lips to a soul. But I saw . . . Though I never talked with her after she sent me away. She was trying to fit herself to a job that was beyond her. It had to be that way. It was bound to end in a smash.

"I can guess what happened after you took her away. She found herself failing the job—and you. Fright and her nerves got the better of her. I could piece it all together. She clung to you and you gave her no help. Perhaps you couldn't. That's not for me to judge. All I know is that something snapped. It was bound to," he said again.

Farwell moistened his lips with the tip of his tongue. Sat watching. His face was expressionless.

"Elaine was in a panic when she left your home. Her physical condition had something to do with it, of course. When she was driven to take the step, she couldn't go back. She couldn't go to her mother. For fear you would find her. I'm sorry if that hurts. It's the truth. You see, she believed she had ruined your life and the right thing for her to do was to fade out of the picture. I'm not guessing now. She told me. Almost two years afterwards, that was."

For the first time, a shade of interest lighted Jonathan Farwell's eyes. Kelsey's steady voice went on.

"This will sound almost unbelievable. I can see now. It was fate. The same as my running across Dale last week. I was in Chicago on business. A friend and I dropped into a Loop restaurant for lunch. I saw Elaine waiting on tables. I could not believe my eyes. She had failed—very badly. I was afraid to let her see me, but I found her that night. This is going to hurt. She was working to support your baby."

"She made barely enough to keep herself and the baby, Dale. She was forced to live in one of those dingy rooming houses down near the Loop and the fact that she had to leave the baby during the day while she worked as a waitress didn't contribute any to her peace of mind. About the only real time she had to spend with the youngster was on Sundays when the restaurant was closed and then she was exhausted from standing on her feet all week. As far as she could see, the future was a stone wall.

"I'll cut it short for both our sakes. Elaine didn't have much resistance. The lake air had been doing her no good. I took her to her mother where she belonged. Then I began a search for you. You seemed to have dropped from sight. I stumbled across your trail once in 1915. Elaine had been dead several months. She hoped for you to the last. Wanted to put Dale in your arms where he belonged. Now it's your turn to help. Where were you?"

"Overseas."
"We weren't in the war then."
"I joined the Canadians. Forgetfulness was what I was seeking and I thought in furnace of battle and suffering there might be some tempering that would heal my soul."

"That explains it. I thought possibly you had gone over later. I took it up with Washington, but never got anywhere. Every time I had a chance to get to Middleton I did, for Mrs. Cameron's sake. On my last trip I found I had missed you. You found her dying and you took the boy away with you."

Farwell nodded helplessly. He did not trust himself to speak.

"I see it all now. Mrs. Cameron was not able to tell you what had happened. The neighbors did. They explained how I had come there with Elaine and Dale. That was enough for them—and you. I never dreamed that gossiping tongues and the circumstantial suggestion of my being with Elaine and the boy would make it seem that there had been something between us—something other than my heartfelt wish to help someone I deeply loved. Her cruel need naturally transcended everything else in my own mind. But I see it all now."

Kelsey's voice trailed away. There was silence in the room, a silence broken by the slam of a distant door. Farwell seized the arms of his chair in his two hands. He pulled himself erect. There was a stern quality in his deep voice.

"Is that the truth, Wade Kelsey?"
"You know that it is," was the quiet answer. "I always wanted to find you, I think. I told myself that I would some day. That, after all, you had the right to know that Elaine's last thought had been of you. I didn't know where you were. I lead a busy life and a lonely one. Then Dale walked into the room where I sat talking to John Payne. It was like looking into Elaine's eyes again. Everything came back. I had no rest until I came here. I only wish I had been in time to spare Dale. We must think of him now."

Farwell lurched forward suddenly. He covered his face with his hands.
"Elaine . . . Elaine . . ."
Kelsey relaxed in his chair. He found his own eyes suddenly wet. After a moment he crossed over and laid a hand on the other man's bowed shoulders.

"We've both been hurt, Jonathan. It's over now. It's up to us to help that boy. He'll come back when he gets over the shock. And now you'll be able to tell him it's all right. I'm going down to the hotel. I'll stay for a little. If you need me I'll be waiting."

There was another ringing of the parsonage bell in the early afternoon. A second and hesitating push of the button brought Jonathan Farwell to the door. He walked with a steady step, displaying his usual composure. His voice betrayed no surprise as he greeted the caller.

"Good afternoon, Miss Brady. Will you walk in?"

"Good afternoon, Doctor Farwell." Lee colored faintly under the steady scrutiny of the minister's dark eyes. She gathered herself together quickly, speaking in a voice that matched the man's fervor. "I would like to speak to Mr. Mulgrew if he is here."

"I am afraid Pinckney is out at present," was the grave reply. "Is there anything I can do for you? Perhaps you will come in."

"Just for a moment then." And, when the door had closed behind her: "I wanted to know if—if Pink had found Dale. He said he would. I didn't hear anything . . . Lee's voice trembled a little in spite of her effort to control it. "I couldn't bear it any longer." Her brown eyes looked up appealingly into Farwell's.

"I see. Please sit down." Lee shook her head, waited. "When was this, Miss Brady?" "Last night after dinner."

"Last night . . ." The minister repeated the words with an effort. "Then he must have told you."

"He did. Where is Dale? Hasn't he come back at all?" "Not yet. Pinckney must be searching. Something tells me he will bring Dale with him. I am waiting."

"Oh, if we only knew where he was! If he was all right!" Lee's small hands clenched helplessly. "It wasn't his fault. I'm so afraid he thinks he mustn't love me any more. He may even think that I don't love him now. And I do! I do!"

Farwell took a step nearer. One of his hands came out to rest on her shoulder.

"As much as that, my child?" "Of course," she told him, looking bravely into his eyes. "I will always love him."

"I believe you, Lee." His voice quivered a little as he said, "I never have known of a greater love. Save one. My dear, you will not be put to the test. Either of you."

"Oh, what . . . ?"
"I have learned the truth today. It might have been too late. But now I know that God will bring my son back to us. Will you wait for a little here? Wait with me? It will not be long."

"Oh, yes. Please let me stay."
Along the wooded slope of a high hill some five miles from Locust Hill a small figure was clawing its way doggedly through the heavy undergrowth, engaged in a zig-zag ascent. It was Pinckney Mulgrew.

"Queer how the kid ever found that trail," he muttered. "It must be around here somewhere." He squinted thoughtfully at the summit, revealed through an opening among the trees. "Must be," he repeated.

After a brief progress, his searching eyes were rewarded by a faint path leading in the desired direction. With an exclamation of relief, he followed it. Within a quarter of an hour he found himself nearing the final sheer ascent, a bald face of rock that rose almost perpendicularly. The explorer moved warily now, making as little noise as possible. From a thicket, he peeped cautiously across a small clearing.

There, propped against a boulder in the sunshine, was Dale.

"Hi," Mr. Mulgrew said casually, and stepped into the open.

Dale looked at him without speaking or stirring.

"I was out taking a stroll," Pink anticipated. "Thought I'd drop around this way. Nice little place you got here." His survey included a shallow cavern in the face of the rock and a small spring outside the entrance. "All set for housekeeping. What's the matter with that ankle?"

"Turned it on a rock. What do you want?"

"Shut up until I fix you." He knelt down and untied the soiled handkerchief Dale had bound about his bare ankle. "Wait . . ." Pink reached for his coat and tugged a parcel from one of its pockets. "Brought myself a sandwich, but I ain't hungry. You eat it."

"I don't care for it. Thanks."

"Eat it anyway."
Pink moved over to the spring and dipped the handkerchief in the icy water.

"Maybe that'll make her feel better, kid. You didn't have it tight enough nohow." He applied the bandage with practiced fingers.

"It's no good, Pink." Dale remarked wearily. "Why did you come all the way up here? What made you look for me here?"

"That Saturday afternoon you took me explorin'. You said if you ever was a hermit you'd come here. I figured it out." Pink, his ministrations finished, settled back on his heels. "Now, you and me's goin' to have a talk."

"No we're not. There's nothing to talk about."

"Lissen, kid. You're goin' to hear what I got to say because I got good news for you. It's . . . Everything's all right!"

"What do you mean?"

"The dominie—he had it all wrong, kid."

"Pink! Do you mean it! He—no, he couldn't be wrong."
"But he was, I'm tellin' you. It ain't so easy to wise a guy, but—oh, hell. He's your dad. That's what I'm tryin' to say. He always was. That bird Kelsey squared everything. He showed up this mornin'. Right after breakfast."

"Kelsey is here!" Dale said it unbelievably. "That's strange."

"Sure. He beat it down here right after you. I'd have got here sooner, but I wanted to hear what he had to say. I was sort of scared to leave him and the dominie together, everything considered. So I hung around to make sure they weren't goin' to mix things. I clamped my ear right to the door. When I was sure everything was on the up and up, I beat it."

"Tell me!"

"No, sir. I done my part. You want to hear that from your dad. And say, kid, when you and him get together, go easy. He's been hit longer and harder than you. And it wasn't his fault. I'd have done the same thing, I reckon. So would you. But you can take it from me, it's all right now. Next thing's to get you home."

"I can walk."

"Guess you'll have to. I didn't pass no cabs comin' up. I'll cut you a stick and help you. There's somethin' else I'd better tell you, maybe." Pink stood with his feet apart, slashing the branches from a substantial length of scrub oak. "Before I give you this stick."

"What?"

"It's about the girl friend. I seen her last night. She's waitin'. Made me promise I'd fetch you back."

"You mean . . ."

"Sure I told her. And, kid, I want to take back any knockin' I ever done about dames. That's all."

Dale half turned, sank down and buried his face against his arm. He lay prone, motionless. Pink remained where he was until he had the walking stick shaped to his satisfaction. Then he pocketed his knife.

"Guess we'd better trek, kid. It's goin' to be slow."

The journey back to Locust Hill was slow. Dale, his face set grimly, limped over the uneven ground with the aid of his cane and Pink's willing shoulder. Frequent halts for rest were made.

To add to Pink's uneasiness, the sun had disappeared. Clouds were gathering thickly, a threat of more rain in the air. It wouldn't do the kid any good to get wet. When they got nearer town, he'd figure out a short cut that would bring them in behind the burial ground. No use giving the villagers a treat.

The first big drops of rain were falling when Pink assisted his charge up the steps of the back porch. He flung open the door with a sigh of relief.

A swift little rush across the floor of the half-dark kitchen.

"Dale! Dale . . . You've come back!"

"Oh, Lady Lee!"

Pink made hasty exit into the dining room.

Lee was close in Dale's arms, her face buried against his shoulder.

"I waited and waited, Dale darling . . . I . . . I couldn't have stood it much longer. Are you all right?"

"Everything is all right now," he whispered, his cheek against her curls.

"I know. And it would have been all right. No matter what happened."

"Everything is all right now."

Don't you know it? Didn't you know!"

"I wasn't sure . . . I am now."

They clung to each other in silence after that, until Lee released herself gently and lifted her tear-wet eyes to Dale's. She tried to flash him her old-time smile.

"We're forgetting, dear. Your father. I talked to him this afternoon. You . . . Dale, please be kind."

Pink was descending the front stairs when Dale started his slow ascent. "Say, Kid . . . He's in your room."

Dale paused outside the closed door of his room for a moment. He drew a long breath, turned the latch softly. Entered.

He paused with a slight gasp, leaning heavily on his stick. The barren little apartment was lighted by an unfamiliar glow. Both candles of the shrine were burning. For the first time.

Jonathan Farwell, his rugged face gleaming strangely in the soft illumination, sat in a chair he had drawn directly before the shelf. A book lay on his knee, one finger marking the page where he might have been reading. Dale's glance shifted involuntarily. His mother's photograph lay between the candles.

"Father."

Farwell's head turned slowly. His black eyes seemed to be staring from a great distance. A man in a dream. With apparent difficulty he rose to his feet, still holding to his book.

"Dale." His lips moved stiffly to shape another word. "Son . . ."

"I've come back, father."

Neither man moved from his place. Farwell's tall form weaved slightly. The flickering lights laid his shadow on the wall. Huge, grotesque.

"Do you know, my son?"

Dale's oak stick clattered to the floor. His hands reached out.

"I know everything now . . . Dad."

Several Species of Chipmunks

There are some ten or more species of chipmunks in the United States and Canada. Those from the Northern states are attractive.

Their stripes, consisting of a single black one in the center and two white ones bordering—the Siberian chipmunk differs from the American variety in having four light-colored and finer stripes on the body—are more clearly defined; likewise, the fur is of a denser texture. In natural surroundings a chipmunk will seek a hole in some log or among the roots of a tree.

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM"

Fleeing a tornado near Clyde, Texas, parents of these babies were killed, their automobile tossed a quarter-mile away. Hours later a telephone lineman heard a child's whimper in a roadside ditch. There he found 3-year-old Jesse Donald Rutledge, water up to his chin, holding his 3-month-old brother Daryl's head above water. Relatives being unable to care for the orphans, Red Cross workers arranged a maintenance fund to support them until they are 16. A Texas college promised scholarships and ranchmen started a herd of cattle for their benefit. The Red Cross will help the boys make adjustments as they grow older.

The Campbells Are Coming

The song "The Campbells Are Coming" is supposed to have been composed on the imprisonment of Mary, Queen of Scots, in Loch Leven in 1567. Perhaps the tune may have been the Campbells' quick march for two centuries. Probably the song was written about 1715 on the breaking out of rebellion in the reign of George I, when John Campbell, duke of Argyle, was made the commanding officer of his majesty's forces in North Britain, and was the principal means of its total suppression.

Dairymen Trim Cows to 905,000

Dairying in Michigan is operating under trimmed sails but bidding strongly for national honors in adding to the Niagara of milk which flows annually into bottles and packaged products.

For national rank Michigan is in ninth place in fluid milk, fourth as a butter making state, eighth in cheese, sixth in evaporated milk, sixth in making ice cream and fourth in the production of dry milk. All this from 905,000 dairy cows. The figure is 9,000 more than a year ago but 10,000 less than in the last census.

A. C. Baltzer, extension dairyman at Michigan State College, is assisting in the drive to place dairying as a more profitable industry in the state. He estimates its importance in the fact that 80 per cent, or 160,000 Michigan farms, report having cows.

Where does the immense flow of milk reach?

In Michigan the 905,000 cows estimated for 1938 will produce this year 4,465,000,000 pounds of milk. Divided into forty-fourths, the disposition of this Michigan milk is as follows:

For fluid milk consumption will require 18 forty-fourths or 42 per cent. Seven per cent or 3 forty-fourths will be retailed as by-products. Sold as cream will be 36 per cent or 16 forty-fourths; the calves will get four per cent or two forty-fourths. Farmers will utilize 11 per cent or 5 forty-fourths on the farm in the form of milk, cream or churned into farm butter.

Even slight increases in milk and butter consumption could remove heavy surpluses from the market, stabilize returns to dairy farmers and still provide economical dairy products for the consumer, says Baltzer.

REMEMBER?

Just 20 years have passed since the world went wild with news of —ARMISTICE!

Just 20 years ago, on November 11, 1918, the order to "cease firing" sped from front to front on France's great battlefield. It marked an end to the greatest armed conflict in history. The world went deliriously happy but it did not forget the brave soldiers (above) who had learned the horrors of war and could now rest.

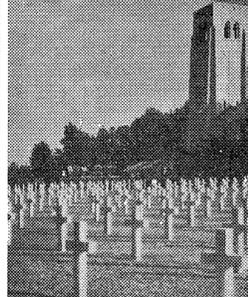

War's end came after Marshal Foch and his staff received the German plenipotentiaries at Rheims, France. On the exact spot where stood the railroad car in which peace was signed, France placed the above memorial stone.

The delirium of armistice returned a few weeks later when the doughboys came marching home. Thousands passed under the triumphal arch erected in New York city. A few days later they were mustered out and headed for home.

But some were not so fortunate. Twenty years later, veteran hospitals throughout the nation house invalids left by the World war, strong-willed men who are striving to "come back" in the face of physical and mental ravages left by gas and shrapnel. Many have succeeded, overcoming their handicaps and becoming useful citizens. They paid a high price to give the world peace.

Some paid an even higher price with their lives. In Flanders field the poppies still bloom over the graves of valiant American soldiers. Meanwhile, 20 years after armistice, too many of the World war's lessons have been forgotten. In remembering the sacrifices that gave us peace lies the world's only hope for continued peace.

When the Woods Begin to Call By HENRY DODGE. Along about this time o' year the woods begin to call; It's when the frost is on the fence and leaves begin to fall; It's then a man will find his nerves all frazzled to the quick; And tells his wife he almost knows that he is mighty sick. He tells about his aching bones and says they fairly hump, And thinks he'd better see the Doc' and find out what is trump. His wife don't worry, not a bit, to see him act so queer, She knows he always has it bad about this time o' year. The Doc' he is a wise old bird and knows just what to say; He tells him he is mighty bad and getting worse each day; And if he does not want the light to glimmer in his lamp, He'd better get a hunt permit and hike away to camp. That settles it! He tells his wife how bad he hates to go, (She knows that he is lying some but does not tell him so.) And soon he finds himself in camp upon a stormy day With three or four good friends of his who lied to get away. He has a coming appetite; eats everything in sight; And snores so the owls around can't hear themselves at night. He'll chase a deer out thru' the swamps and o'er the hills all day, Come home at night and tell the boys just how it got away. He'll spend two weeks up in the woods, come home all tan and dirt, He was so busy all the time he did not change his shirt. But he has had a dandy time; deny it if you can. Those hunting lies, so often told, are mighty good for man. To those who never took the trip and camped out in the woods, Who never saw the beauties there stored up as nature's goods, If you will try and take one trip you'll never count the cost, But get someone to kick your pants for all the fun you've lost.
